Let this BOOK be Printed.

HEN. BENNET.

An Advertiſement to the Reader concerning this large and exact Table, much wanted and deſired in the firſt and ſecond, and now annexed to the third and fourth Impreſſion of this Book.

HOw well it is obſerved, That Humane Induſtry cannot begin and finiſh any thing at one and the ſame time, this famous Book may be an inſtance; whoſe firſt Edition was but the Monogram, and rude draught, to a more exact Compoſure; the ſecond adding much Matter and Method to the firſt; and the third and fourth adding Matter, Method, and a moſt Exact and full Table of both, to the ſecond; containing all the Provinces, Kingdoms, States, Principalities, Continents, Iſles, Promontories, Iſthmus's, Seas, Rivers, Havens, Mart-Towns, Cities, Strong-holds,, with their Longitudes, Latitudes, Scituations, Plantations, Inhabitants, Ancient and Modern Names; and the Book and Page where they are ſatisfactorily diſcourſed of.

A Table (that notwithſtanding every Methodical Book, ſuch as this is, is its own Index: Every Great Memory, like that of Cæſar, carrieth a Table of all Books, in his Brain; and every hopeful Student makes his own Table to all Claſſical Authors) that carrieth with it its own Commendation. 1. To thoſe that have not time to read Books, but Indexes. 2. To thoſe that have not patience to go through the whole Body, and yet curioſity to obſerve the Remarkable parts of Geography. 3. To thoſe that would recollect what they have forgotten of their reading, 4. To thoſe that upon any emergent occaſion, would ſee the Scituation, Rivers, Havens, Strong-holds, Garriſons, Longitudes, Latitudes, Commodities, Products, Curioſities, Inhabitants, Genius, Condition, and Hiſtory of any place in the World. 5. To thoſe that read any Ancient or Modern Hiſtories, or other Authors, and would be ſatisfied in the Scene of the Actions they read of, and the ſcituation of the places there mentioned. 6. To thoſe that aiming at exactneſs this way, would compare all the Ancient and Modern Geographers. And 7 to all the Peruſers of this Book that complained of the intolerable defects of former Tables and Indexes; of which number, the Learned Compiler, of this Table, who drew it up for his own ſatisfaction, and publiſheth it for the Publick, is one who wiſheth others as much benefit in the eaſie way of Peruſing it, as he had in the more toilſom way of Collecting it.

The Matter added to this Impreſſion, is much; and all under the Author's own hand, not long before he dyed; putting to it (as he ſaid truly to his Friend that was with him in the peruſal of it) his laſt hand.

To the READER,

The AUTHOR rendreth this Account of his Undertaking and Performance in the following Work.

IT is a great complaint with many, That they want time, either to undertake great matters, or to accompliſh thoſe they have undertaken: Whereas it is more truly affirmed by Seneca, that we do not ſo much want, as waſte it. Non parum temporis habemus, ſed multum perdimus, as that Author hath it. We trifle out too much of our precious time, as he well obſerveth, Aut malè agendo, aut nihil agendo, aut aliud agendo; either in doing ill, or nothing, or elſe things impertinent: and then cry out, that we want things convenient to perform thoſe duties which are expected from us in our ſeveral places. Nor have we only time enough to ſpend, but ſome time to ſpare; ſome privacies and retreats from buſineſs; ſome breathing fits from the affairs of our Vocations: and even of them (thoſe times of leiſure and receſs) we are to render an accompt, in Cato's judgment. Otii reddendam rationem judicabit Cato, as we read in Tullie. In which accompt, as all men generally are concerned, ſo am I intereſſed therein as much as any. For being, by the unhappineſs of my Deſtiny, or the infelicity of the Times, deprived of my Preferments, and diveſted of my Miniſterial Function, (as to the ordinary and publick exerciſe thereof) I cannot chuſe but ſay, I have leiſure enough; the opportunity of ſpending more idle hours (if I were ſo minded) than I ever expected or deſired. And though, perhaps, I could have ſpent thoſe times of leiſure, which the change of my affairs hath given me, with greater benefit to my ſelf, and more to the advantage of my private fortunes: yet that of Cato did ſo over-ballance me, that I was willing to do ſomewhat which might witneſs to enſuing-times, how I had paſſed away thoſe hours, and employed that leiſure. And when I was conſidering of ſome particulars within the compaſs of my power, and anſwerable to that ſmall ſtock of Books which I had recruited, (mine own being taken from me, and diſpoſed of, contrary unto publick Order) I was requeſted by ſome friends, of no common quality, to review my Geographie; to make it more compleat and uſeful to an Engliſh Reader: my vacancy from buſineſs, uſed by them as an Argument to induce me to it. A motion looked on, when firſt made, with neglect enough; my deſuetude from thoſe younger Studies, my great want of Books, the ſad complexion of the times, and the unhandſom entertainment which my Endeavours for the Publick had lately met with, ſeeming ſufficient to diſſwade me from the Undertaking. Little encouragement, God wot, to write Books for others, when I could not be permitted to enjoy my own; or to employ my ſelf in order to a publick ſervice, when not alone my private Fortunes, but the publick Patrimony of the Church, was deſtroyed and diſſipated. But afterwards, being preſſed unto it by ſome Members of Parliament, whom I found loth to be denyed, and by ſome others of great Rank, but ſuch different Intereſſes, that I wondred how they could all center upon the ſame Propoſal: I thought it, at the laſt, a more Chriſtian duty, to ſatisfie the honeſt deſires of ſo many men, than to ſacrifice any longer to my own privacy and retiredneſs, to which I had intended to devote my ſelf. So I reſolved to venture on it, though well I ſaw that my condition in ſo doing might be reſembled unto that of the Iſraelites in the Land of Egypt; of whom the Task-maſters did expect the full tale of Bricks, and yet denyed them their accuſtomed allowance of Straw and Stubble. My caſe, in this, not much unlike unto that of the Duke of Alva; Who being under the diſpleaſure of the King of Spain, in quality of a Priſoner, without the leaſt aſſurance of recovering the King's favour, or his own liberty; and yet employed, in that Conjecture, for the conqueſt of Portugal, was wont to ſay, That he was ſent to conquer Kingdoms with his Fetters on.

And here I cannot but remember a pretty accident which befel me in the Month of January, Anno 1640, at what time it had been my ill fortune to ſuffer under ſome miſapprehenſions which had been entertain'd againſt me, and to be before before the Committee for the Courts of Juſtice, on the complaint of Mr. Prynne, then newly return'd from his confinement, and in great credit with the Vulgar. Heard by them, I confeſs, I was, with a great deal of ingenuous patience; but moſt deſpightfully reviled and perſecuted with exceſſive both noiſe and violence, by ſuch as thronged about the doors of that Committee, to expect the iſſue: it being as natural to many weak and inconſiderate men, as it is to Dogs, to bark at thoſe they do not know, and to accompany each other in thoſe kinds of clamours. And though I had the happineſs to come off clear, without any cenſure; and to recover by degrees, amongſt knowing-men, that eſtimation which before had been much endangered: yet ſuch as took up matters upon truſt and hear-ſay, look upon me as a perſon forfeited and marked out for ruine. Amongſt others, I was then encountred, in my paſſage from Weſtminſter to White-hall, by a tall big Gentleman, who thruſting me rudely from the Wall, and looking over his ſhoulder on me, in a ſcornful manner, ſaid, in an hoarſe voice, theſe words, Geography is better than Divinity; and ſo paſſed along. Whether his meaning were, That I was a better Geographer than Divine; or, that Geographie had been a Study of more credit and advantage to me in the eyes of men, than Divinity was like to prove, I am not able to determine. But ſure I am, I have ſince thought very often of it; and that the thought thereof had its influence on me, in drawing me to look back on thoſe younger Studies, in which I was reſolved to have dealt no more: and thereto, in the Preface to my Microcoſm, had obliged my ſelf.

And it is poſſible enough, that, in reſpect of that general promiſe, I may lie under the cenſure of inconſtancy, and breach of Covenant, in that I had ſolemnly declared in the aforeſaid Preface, that the Reader ſhould not fear any further enlargements, which might make him repent his (then) preſent Markets; that it had received my laſt hand; and that from thenceforth I would look upon it as a Stranger only. But it was meant withall, and expreſſed accordingly, unleſs it were for the amending of ſuch Errors, of which, by the ſtrength of mine own judgment, or any ingenuous information, I ſhould be convicted. And Errors, I muſt needs ſay, I have found ſo many on this laſt peruſal, and thoſe not only verbal, but material too, as did not only free me from that Obligation, but did oblige me to a further Review thereof. For being written in an Age, on which the pride of youth, and ſelf-opinion, might have ſome predominancies; I thought it freer from miſtakes, than I ſince have found it. And thoſe miſtakes, by running through eight Editions (ſix of them without my peruſal or ſuper-viſing) ſo encreaſed and multiplyed, that I could no longer call it mine, or look upon it with any tolerable degree of patience. So that, in caſe the importunity of friends had not enforced me, in a manner, upon this Employment, the neceſſity of conſulting my own fame, and leaving the Work fair behind me, to ſucceeding times, would have perſwaded me, in the end, to do ſomewhat in it. Which, though the laſt, was not the leaſt of thoſe enducements which enclined me to the undertaking of this preſent Work.

Having thus plainly and ingenuouſly laid down the reaſons which did induce, though not encourage me unto this performance; it is now fit I ſhould declare what I have done in it, and what the Reader may expect from ſo great Enlargements. And firſt, the Reader is to know, that my deſign originally, was only to look over the former Book, to give it a Review, to purge it of the Errors which it had contracted; and not ſo much to make a new Book, as correct the old. But when I had more ſeriouſly conſidered of it, I found ſufficient reaſon to change that purpoſe, to make it new both in Form and Matter; and to preſent it to the World with all thoſe advantages which a new Book might carry with it. The greater pains I took about it, the greater I conceived would be the benefit by which might from thence redound to thoſe who ſhould pleaſe to read it. And I would willingly ſo far comply with all expectations, that the ſhort Taper of my life ſhould give light to others, in the conſuming of it ſelf. Non nobis ſolùm nati ſumus, may well become a Chriſtian's mouth, though an Heathen ſpake it. But if all expectations be not ſatisfied in the compleatneſs of the Work, (as I fear they will not) I deſire it may not be aſcribed unto any neglect or fault of mine, but to the wants and difficulties which I was to ſtruggle with. Books I had few to help my ſelf with, of mine own; nor live I near ſo rich a Clergie, (moſt of the Benefices of theſe parts being poor and mean) as to ſupply my ſelf from them with ſuch Commodities. The greateſt helps I had, was from Oxford Library; which, though but nine or ten miles off from my preſent dwelling; yet the charge and trouble of the journey, with the loſs of time, made my viſits to that place leſs frequent; and conſequently, the Neighbourhood thereof leſs uſeful to me, than the generality of the Deſign might well comport with. So that when all things are conſidered as they ought to be, it rather may be wondred at, by an equal Reader, how I could come to write ſo much, with ſo little helps, upon a Subject of ſuch a large and diffuſed variety; than that in any part thereof, I have writ too little. And to ſay truth, the Work ſo proſpered in my hand, and ſwelled ſo much above my thought and expectation, that I hope I may, with modeſty enough, uſe thoſe words of Jacob, Voluntas Dei fuit, ut citò occurreret mihi quod volebam; The Lord God brought it to me, as the Engliſh reads it.

In the purſuance of this Work, as I have taken on my ſelf the parts of an Hiſtorian and Geographer; ſo have I not forgotten that I am an Engliſh-man; and, which is ſomewhat more, a Church-man. As an Engliſh-man, I have been mindful, upon all occaſions, to commit to memory the noble Actions of my Country, exploited both by Sea and Land, in moſt parts of the World; and repreſented on the ſame Theaters upon which they were acted. And herein I have followed the example of the great Annaliſt, Baronius, ronius; Who pretending, in that great and laborious Work, a ſincere Hiſtory of the Church, and no more than ſo; yet tells the Pope, in his Epiſtle, that he principally did intend the ſame, pro Sacrarum Traditionum Antiquitate, & Autoritate Romanæ Eccleſiæ; to manifeſt therein the Antiquity of ſuch Traditions, and for defence of that Authority and Power, which at this day are taught and exerciſed in the Church of Rome. And ſo much I may alſo ſay of my ſelf in this performance, though without any by-deſign to abuſe the Reader, That though the Hiſtory and Chorography of the World, be my principal buſineſs; yet I have apprehended every modeſt occaſion of recording the Heroick Acts of my native Soil, and filing on the Regiſters of perpetual Fame, the Gallantry and brave Atchievements of the People of England; Exemplified in their many Victories and ſignal Services in Italy, France, Spain, Scotland, Belgium; in Paleſtine, Cyprus, Africa, and America, and indeed, where not? Nor have I pretermitted their great zeal and piety, in converting to the Faith ſo many of the German and Northern Nations, Franconians, Thuringians, Haſſians, Saxons, Danes, Friſons; as alſo, amongſt the Scots and Picts; together with thoſe of Lituania, and the people of Norwey: by that means more enlarging Chriſt's Kingdom, than they did their own. And as I have been zealous to record the Actions, ſo have I been as careful to aſſert the Rights of the Engliſh Nation: inherent perſonally in their Kings, by way of publick intereſs in the Subject alſo; as the whole Body doth partake of that ſenſe and motion which is originally in the Head. And of this kind I reckon the true ſtating of the Title of the Kings of England to the Crown of France; demonſtrating the Vaſſalage of the Kingdom of Scotland to the Crown of England; vouching the legal Intereſs of the Engliſh Nation, in right of the firſt Diſcovery of Primier Seizure, to Eſtotiland, Terra Corterialis, New-found-Land, Novum Belgium, Guiana, the Countreys near the Cape of Good Hope, ſeveral of the Indian Iſlands, and ſome other places, againſt all Pretenders: inſinuating the precedency of the Engliſh Kings, before thoſe of Spain; their Soveraignty and Dominion in the Britiſh Ocean: with the great benefit which might from thence ariſe unto us, invaded and almoſt ingroſſed by the Hanſe and Hollanders. And yet there is another thing which ſpeaks me more an Engliſhman, than all theſe together; which I ſhall fall on ſoon enough, and indeed too ſoon, the ſadnes of the ſubject being well conſidered.

Next, as a Church-man, I have taken more eſpecial notice of the ancient and preſent face of Chriſtianity, in all parts of the World; the planting and Government of Churches, the Heterodoxies and opinions of thoſe ſeveral Sects into which it doth now ſtand diſmembred. By which it will appear moſt clearly, amongſt other things, that the Doctrine and Government of the Church, were of equal ſtanding; that this Government was no other than that of Biſhops; and that whereſoever Chriſtianity did find any admittance, Epiſcopacy was admitted alſo as a part thereof: the Goſpel being in moſt places firſt preached by Biſhops, or growing to eſteem and ſtrength under their Authority. And it is found on theſe Reſearches, that as Epiſcopacy was coæval with the Church it ſelf, ſo the Subordination of Biſhops to their ſeveral Primates, and the Co-ordination of thoſe Primates among themſelves in the common Government thereof, was of ſuch antiquity (as being ſetled and confirmed in St. Cyprian's time, who flouriſhed in the year 250) that it is hard to trace the beginnings of it. Debere Epiſcopos in commune Eccleſiam regere, is a noted Maxim, in St. Hierome; but practically true in the Communicatoriæ, and Formatæ, of the elder Ages: Which happy courſe, had it been preſerved, Epiſcopacy had been ſo far from being made a ſtirrup for Antichriſt to mount into his Throne, as the Smectymnuans falſly charge it; that it had ſerved rather as a Martingal to have kept him down from lifting up his head too high above the reſt of his Bretheren. And that this courſe was not preſerved, came not intentionally from the Popes, (for that by Antichriſt they mean the Popes of Rome, is a thing paſt queſtion) but from the Inundations of the barbarous Nations: though I confeſs the Popes were apt enough to make the beſt advantage of thoſe various Accidents, which the diſtreſſes of the Church did preſent unto them. For by the overflowing of the barbarous Nations, Chriſtianity was either quite extinguiſhed, or the Authority of the Primates trodden under foot; or that intelligence and commerce which had been anciently amongſt them, interdicted on good reaſons of State, by ſuch Heathen or Mahometan Princes, under whom they lived. And then, how eaſie was it for the Pope, in the new-planting of the Goſpel in theſe Weſtern parts, (done either by his Miniſters, or by his encouragement) to give unto the Biſhops, of his own appointing, ſuch a limited Power, as might make them more and more obnoxious unto his Commands, and afterwards to leſſen their Authority, as he ſaw occaſion, by granting large Exemptions to Monaſteries, Convents, and Cathedrals; with Juriſdiction over the Parochial Churches which belong'd unto them: So that it is moſt evident in the courſe of Story, that the Popes never came unto their height, nor could obtrude their Superſtitions and Novations on the Church of CHRIST; till they had weakned, by degrees, the Epiſcopal Power. Followed, in that deſign, though on different ends, by Wicliff, and ſome others in the Ages ſince; who have driven on their private projects under the colour and pretence of a Reformation. Epiſcopacy, as it was coæval with the Church of CHRIST, ſo was it the beſt and ſtrongeſt Buttreſs in that Sacred Building. The weakning or ſubverting of which Primitive Order, did either proſtitute the Church to the Luſt and Tyranny of that proud Uſurper, or expoſe the Patrimony thereof unto ſpoyl and rapine; or finally, ſubject it to the Anarchy and licentiouſneſs of Heterodoxies, and confuſed Opinions. But I fear I have digreſſed too far in this ſpeculation.

As a Geographer, I have been punctual and exact in giving unto every Province its peculiar bounds, in laying out their ſeveral Land-marks, tracing the courſe of moſt of the principal Rivers, and ſetting forth the ſituation and eſtate of the chiefeſt Towns; and did once think of beautifying the Work with as many Maps as the ſeveral States and Kingdoms which are here deſcribed. But upon further conſideration, how much it would encreaſe the Book both in bulk and price, and conſequently make it of leſs publick uſe than I did intend it; I laid by thoſe thoughts, and reſted ſatisfied with the adding of four Maps for the four parts of the World: by which the Reader may diſcern how each Countrey lies unto the other, though he find not each particular Province, and much leſs all the Towns and Cities which are here expreſſed: and, on the other ſide, may meet with many Towns of inferior note, which are here omitted. And herein I have took ſome pains in ſearching out the firſt Inhabitants of each ſeveral Countrey, as far as I could ſee by the light of Letters, or go by probable Conjectures, in finding out the place of ſuch ancient Cities as are now decayed, not eaſily viſible in their Ruins; and adding to ſuch Cities as are now in being (if of any Antiquity) their Original Names. A thing as neceſſary to the underſtanding of the Hiſtories of thoſe elder times, as the knowledg of the preſent names is to the more deligthful reading of our Modern Stories. And though I have not pretermitted any Town of note, fit to be ſpecified and inſiſted on in a Work of this nature; yet would I not have the Reader look for ſuch a punctual enumeration and deſcription of them, as he may meet withal in thoſe who have written the Chorography of ſome Countrey only; or think himſelf unſatisfied in his expectation, if he find not here the ſituation and affairs of each Town of War, or the Quartering-place of every Company or Troop of Soldiers, which are preſented to him in the Weekly News-books. In all Countreys there are many places which either by the advantage of their ſituation, or ſome preſent exigency of affairs, are fortified and made Towns of War; or otherwiſe remarkable for ſome ſignal Battel, in theſe late buſtles and commotions of the Chriſtian World; of which no notice hath been taken in former times, and conſequently not within the compaſs of this Diſcourſe: and yet perhaps may grow as famous and conſiderable in the times to come, as many of the mightier Cities now decayed and ruined. He that ſhall think the Work imperfect (though I confeſs it, to be nothing but imperfections) for ſome deficiencies in this kind, may be likened to the Countrey-fellow in Ariſtophanes, (if my memory fail not) who picked a great quarrel with the Map, becauſe he could not find where his own Farm ſtood. And ſuch a Countrey-cuſtomer I did meet with once, a ſervant of my elder Brother's, ſent by him with ſome Horſes to Oxon, to bring me and a friend of mine unto his Houſe. Who having loſt his way, as we paſſed through the Forreſt of whitchwood, and not able to recover any beaten Track, did very earneſtly entreat me to lead the way, till I had brought him paſt the Woods, to the open Fields. Which when I had refuſed to do, as I had good reaſon; alledging, that I never had been there before, and therefore that I could not tell which way to lead him: That's ſtrange, ſaid he; I have heard my old Maſter, your Father, ſay, That you made a Book of all the World; and cannot you find your way out of the Wood? Which being ſpoken out of an honeſt ſimplicity, not out of any pretence to wit, or the leaſt thought of putting a blunt jeſt upon me, occaſioned a great deal of merriment for a long time after: but I hope to meet with no ſuch Readers. The greatneſs of the Bulk, and conſequently of the Price, makes me ſomewhat confident, that none but men of Judgment and Underſtanding will peruſe theſe Papers: and ſuch as they, will look for no more particulars, than the nature of a general Diſcourſe will fitly bear. Perfection and Exactneſs is to be expected in each kind of Science, as is obſerved by Ariſtotle in his ſecond Book of his Ethicks, ἐφ' ὅσον ἡ πράγματος φύσις ἐπιδέχεται, as far forth as the condition of the Argument may be capable of it. And ſo much if I have attained unto, it is all which can with reaſon be expected from me. To look for more, were as improper and abſurd, (in the words of Ariſtotle) as for an Artiſt to expect Tropes of Rhetorick from a Mathematician, or Demonſtrations from an Orator.

Laſtly, as an Hiſtorian, I have traced the affairs of each ſeveral Countrey, from the firſt Inhabitants thereof, (ſuch as the Latins call Aborigines; and the Greeks, Αὐτόχθονες) till theſe later times. Which that I might be ſure to do on a good foundation, I have took more than common care, to ſettle all the firſt Adventurers (after the proud attempt at Babel) in their right Plantations; and that too in the way of an Introduction, that I might the better know where I was to find them, and to go on with their Affairs with the leſs diſturbance. The reſt of their Occurrences, I have ſummed into ſo ſhort an Abſtract, as may be uſeful to the Learned, in the way of a Remembrancer; to the leſs-knowing man, in the way of a Tutor: Brevity, in this kind, I have much endeavoured; but ſo as to avoid all obſcurity alſo. Nor have I only kept my ſelf to the ſtory of Kingdoms, or the greater Signeuries, Eſtates or Nations, which are or have been of the greateſt conſideration in the ſway of the World: but looked on the Eſtates of ſuck Dukes, Earls, and inferior Princes, as in their times have had the Government of thoſe parts which gave Title to them; whoſe Actions and Succeſſions are diſtinctly ſpecified, and all ſuch Alterations noted, as have hapned either in the ruin of ſuch Eſtates, or the tranſlating of them from one Houſe to another. The Catalogues and Succeſſions of which Royal and Illuſtrious Families, I have drawn down unto the year 1648; towards the expiring of which year, I began to ſet my ſelf upon this Employment. And there I fix, as on the top of ſome dreadful Precipice, which one can neither venture down without danger, nor look down without horror. Some things there are of ſuch a nature, that either to ſpeak of them, or to hold our peace, is alike unſafe. In ſuch a caſe it is beſt to keep at a diſtance. For though truth be the beſt Miſtreſs which a man can ſerve, (Magis amica veritas, ſaid the great Philoſopher) yet it is well obſerved withal, that if a man follow her too cloſe at the heels, ſhe may chance to kick out his teeth for his labour.

In this regard, as alſo out of that compaſſionate affection which a true Engliſh-man ought to bear his native Countrey, although in my approaches towards theſe preſent times, I have took notice, in ſome other places, of ſuch battels, ſieges, and ſucceſſes, in the chances of War, as have hapned in theſe later days: I have forborn to take the leaſt notice of thoſe Tragedies of Blood and Death which have been lately acted on the Stage of England. I cannot but with grief confeſs, that I might find variety of this kind enough, in the late Wars amongſt our ſelves: in which there have been more pitched-fields, more ſtrong pieces taken, more notable traverſes of State, and exploits of War, than all the World can parallel in an equal time. But I have too much Engliſh bowels to pleaſe my ſelf in the recital, or to look back on thoſe unfortunate Adventures, which I ſhould rather chuſe to cover with the Act of Oblivion, or bury in the grave of perpetual ſilence. How gladly I could have recorded theſe exploits of War, had they been exerciſed on a Subject more proper for them, my willingneſs to take notice, upon all occaſions, of the Actions and Atchievements of the Engliſh Nation, will bear witneſs for me. But the employing of that Valour againſt our ſelves, as if not to be conquered, but by one another, ſtrikes ſuch horror in me, that I cannot think thereof, without much affrightment; nor intimate thus much of it, without great reluctancies. I fear it may be ſaid too truly of our late embroilments, as the Hiſtorian of the Civil-Wars betwixt Cæſar and Pompey, Cauſa hujus Belli eadem quæ omnium, nimia felicitas; that they were principally occaſioned by a ſurfeit of too much felicity. But if we were grown weary of our own proſperities; and that prayer and paſſage in the publick Liturgy (Give Peace in our time, O Lord) did not reliſh with us: how happy had it been, if we had found ſome other Field to have tryed our Valour in? and made ſome Forrein Countrey that Aceldama, which ſo fatally was made at home? The diſhonour which we ſuffered in the Iſle of Rhee, when beat thence ingloriouſly by the French; the forcible and long detention of the Palatinate, by the Power of the Spaniard; the barbarous Butchery at Amboyna; and the beating up of the Spaniſh Fleet within the protection of our Caſtles, by thoſe of Holland; the Inſolencies of the Scots; and the Rebellions of the Iriſh, might well have ſtirred ſome indignation in an Engliſh breaſt. And had we fought upon thoſe ſcores, or on none but them, our Victories had deſerved the honour of a ſolemn Triumph, denyed by the old Roman Laws to a Civil-war: But our infelicity (as it ſeems) was like that of Rome, in following thoſe unnatural Wars with ſuch animoſities, when the unrevenged death of Craſſus, the blood of ſo many thouſand of their ſlaughtered Citizens, and the ſhameful loſs of ſo many of the Roman Enſigns, ſhould rather have invited them to the conqueſt of the Parthian Empire. Of which, thus feelingly the Poet:

> Cúmque ſuperba foret Babylon ſpolianda Trophæis,
> Bella geri placuit, nullos habitura Triumphos.

And when proud Babylon ſhould have been (conſtrain'd
To give us back our Enſigns lately gain'd:
We rather choſe ſuch Quarrels to purſue,
For which no Triumph could be juſtly due.

But ſuch is the condition and viciſſitude of human affairs, that there is nothing permanent, and much leſs of certainty. The greateſt Monarchies of the World, the Babylonian, Perſian, Grecian, Roman, have all had their periods, nothing remaining of them now, but the name and memory. And what is now become of thoſe mighty Cities of the Eaſt, Ninive, Babylon, Ecbatana, Suſa, with the reſt mentioned in the Scriptures, and in Claſſical Authors? Are not their very Ruins now become inviſible? Where are the puiſſant Families of the Achæmenides of Perſia, the Seleucidæ of Syria, the Pharaohs and Ptolemies of Egypt, the Cæſars of Italy, the Merovingians and Carolovingians of the Realm of France, and the Plantagenets of England? Are they not all extinct and gone, not to be found but by the benefit of ſtory, and ſome ancient Monuments? And if it be ſo, as it is, with the greateſt monarchies, the moſt mighty Cities of the World, we muſt not think that ſmaller Kingdoms and Eſtates can either be ſo evenly ballanced, or ſo ſurely founded, as not to be obnoxious alſo to the ſame viciſſitudes. And, being that ſaying of Optatus is moſt undoubtedly true, Eccleſia eſt in Republica, that the Church is but a part of the Commonwealth, we muſt not hope to find it in a better poſture than the Civil-State in which it is, and under the protection whereof it ſubſiſts and flouriſheth. The Church muſt needs miſcarry in the ruin of the Civil-State; and may miſcarry, many times, although the Civil-State receive no ſuch alterations. Compared, for this reaſon, to the Moon, by the ancient Fathers who had obſerved her in her Prime, in her Encreaſes, and her Full; and finally, had not only ſeen her in the Wane alſo, but ſometimes too under ſome horrible Eclipſes. Which various condition of the Militant Church, the Scriptures and ſucceeding Stories have ſet forth ſo fully, that there need no better nor no clearer demonſtrations of it. The Ark of God taken by the Philiſtins, the Temple deſtroyed by the Chaldæans, and profaned by the Syrians, the Apoſtaſie of ten Tribes at once from the Law of their God, and the extermination of the other two in a ſhort time after, abundantly declare the frail condition and eſtate of the Jewiſh Church. And find we not the ſame for the Chriſtian alſo, in the removing of the Candleſtick from the Aſian Churches; and making them, together with thoſe of Greece and Egypt, and all the flouriſhing Churches in the Eaſt and South, to languiſh and decay remedileſly under the mercileſs encroachments of the Turks and Saracens? He muſt be more than blind that ſees not, more ſavage than thoſe mercileſs men, that grieves not at their ſad condition: but a dead Member, at the moſt, of Chriſt's Myſtical Body, who feels not in himſelf the ſuffrings of thoſe wretched Chriſtians.

If now we look into the cauſes of that deſolation which hath hapned in the Civil-State of thoſe mighty Empires; to what can we impute it, but their crying-ſins? the Pride of the Babylonians, the Effeminacy of the Perſians, the Luxury of the Greeks: and ſuch an aggregation of Vices amongſt the Romans (or Weſtern Chriſtians) before the breaking in of the barbarous Nations, that they were grown a ſcandal unto Chriſtianity. In nobis patitur Chriſtus opprobrium, in nobis patitur lex Chriſtiana maledictum, as the devout Salvian then complained. Thus alſo in reference to the Church, did not the Idolaters of the ten Tribes haſten-in the Aſſyrians? The ſhedding of the Blood of ſo many Prophets by the other two, as much accelerate the coming in of the Chaldæans firſt, and the Romans afterwards? Do we not find the Arianiſm of the Eaſtern Churches to uſher in the inundation of the Saracens; the Donatiſm of the South, to have ſet open a wide Door to let in the Vandals? Did not the Saxons follow on the heels of Pelagianiſm, as ſoon almoſt as entertained amongſt the Britans? If ſo, as moſt undoubtedly it was in the days of old, why ſhould we think but that the Superſtitions and Corruptions of the Church of Rome, the Sacriledg and Faction of the Churches of the Reformation, ſhall at the laſt receive the like Retribution? Or, that the Divine Juſtice is ſo faſt aſleep, that our ſins muſt cry as loud as the Prieſts of Baal did unto their god, before it be awakened by us? Aſſuredly, we are no leſs ſinners than any of thoſe on whom the Tower of the Divine vengeance hath ſo heavily fallen; whoſe blood the Pilates of all Ages have mingled with their ſolemn and religious ſacrifices: and therefore have no cauſe to hope, but that unleſs we do repent, we ſhall likewiſe periſh.

The ſerious conſideration of all theſe particulars, hath made thoſe alterations both in Church and State, which have hapned here amongſt our ſelves, the leſs ſtrange unto me. For, is there any of theſe things, whereof it may be ſaid, Ecce hoc eſt novum, Behold this is new? Eccl. 1. 10. Have they not been already in the times before us? Do we not find it poſitively affirm'd by the wiſeſt man that ever was, That which hath been, is now; and that which is to be, hath already been: Nihil enim novum eſt ſub ſole, for there is no new thing under the Sun, Eccleſ. 3. 15. and 1. 11. And though I cannot tell what effect the reading of this following Book may produce in others, yet I can warrantably ſay thus much of my ſelf. That the obſervation of the fall of ſo many great and puiſſant Empires, the exſtirpation of ſo many mighty and renowned Families, the deſolation of ſo many flouriſhing Chriſtian Churches, as the compoſing of this Book did preſent me with, (though formerly no ſtrangers to me in the courſe of my Studies) did more conduce to the full humbling of my Soul under the mighty hand of God, than either the ſenſe of my own Miſfortunes, or any other moral conſideration which had come before me. And I could wiſh, the Reader may receive ſo much benefit by it, (beſides the profit and delight which Books of this nature carry with them) that the Mighty man may learn hereby, not to glory in his greateſt Strength, nor the Wiſe to glory in his Wiſdom, or in the cunning carrying on of his great Deſigns. Let the great Leaders of theſe times, in the Art of War, conſider the ſad ends of Joab, the General of David's Forces; and of Beliſarius, the Commander of Juſtinian's Armies: whereof the one was ſlain ingloriouſly at the Horns of the Altar, after all his Services; the other forced to beg his bread at the Gates of the Temple. Let the great Maſters of Wit, and State-craft, have before their eyes the unſucceſsful ends of Achitophel, the Oracle of the times he lived in; and of Cæſar Borgias, propoſed, by Machiavel, for the Pattern of a Politick Prince: of which, the one laid violent hands upon himſelf, becauſe his Counſel was not followed; the other, after the defailment of his Projects, and a long impriſonment to boot, forced to flye his Country, and ſlain obſcurely in an Ambuſh. Let all men lay unto their hearts the ebbs and floods, thoſe alternations and viciſſitudes, to which all Humane Power is ſubject; the ſlippery Foundations of that Might and Greatneſs which is not laid upon the Principles of Juſtice, and regulated by the Maxims of Chriſtian Piety; and, that even thoſe which have dominion over others, have a God too, above themſelves, to whom they are to render an accompt of all their Actions. Not ſuch a God as that of Lewis the 11th of France; of whom it is reported, that he wore a Leaden Medal in his Bonnet, in the form of a Crucifix: which, when he had cauſed any man to be killed, whom he feared or hated, he would take into his hands, and kiſs it, deſiring it to pardon him that one Murther more, and it ſhould be the laſt which he would commit. Such mockeries as theſe may be well put on a Leaden god; but the God of Heaven and Earth, will not be ſo mocked: who being totus oculus, and totum lumen, as the Father calleth him, can eaſily diſcern our intents and purpoſes, notwithſtanding thoſe diſguiſes which are put upon them; and ſee the nakedneſs of ſin in its ugliest ſhape, though apparelled with the Fig-leaves of the beſt pretences, which the ſelf-deceiving Wit of Man can patch up together. God is the ſame God now, as in former times, Primus ad extremum ſimilis ſibi, Yeſterday, and to day, and the ſame for ever; and will not put up thoſe affronts which the Impieties of men do afflict him with: though in regard of his great patience, and long-ſuffering, they may flatter their poor Souls, and ſay, Tuſh, God doth not ſee it.

Laſtly, I am to tell the Reader, that I have now no other Patron than himſelf, to whom to dedicate this Work, and from whom to receive protection and encouragement in it. The time was when I might have ſaid with Seneca, Unus mihi erat pro Populo, that one Man was to me inſtead of all men: the Powers of all the People being virtually united in him. But now, as the caſe ſtands, I muſt be fain to invert thoſe words, Populus mihi eſt pro uno; the Body of the Nation is to me, in this reſpect as the Head before. Unto them therefore I preſent it, and that not improperly: A General ſurvey of all the World, the Government, Affairs, and Succeſſes of it, requiring a more general Patron than particular Tractates. But becauſe all the People in the Body Collective have not abilities to read, and much leſs to judge; and that many of thoſe who can do both, may neither have the liſt nor leiſure to peruſe theſe Papers: I look on the Nobility, Clergy, Gentry, as their Repreſentatives in this kind; to whoſe favourable and ingenuous acceptance I ſubmit the ſame. Which if I can attain unto, it is all I aim at. And it will be no ſmall comfort to me in the midſt of ſo many ſorrows as are round about me, that I have been uſeful to the publick, or added any thing by my Studies unto the Honour and Content of the Engliſh Nation: whoſe peace and happineſs is heartily commended to Almighty God, by

to the following WORK:

Containing the Creation of the World by Almighty God, and the Plantation of the ſame by the Sons of Men; the neceſſary uſe of Hiſtory and Geography, as well for underſtanding the Affairs of the Ages paſt, as for converſe and correſpondence with the Nations preſent; together with a brief view of ſome General Præcognita which neceſſarily are required unto the Knowledge of each.

WITH great both Piety & Prudence did the Apoſtles in their Summary of the Chriſtian Faith, join our Belief in God the Father Almighty, with that clauſe or Article of making or Creating the Heaven and Earth. For as the name of Father doth imply a making (Is not he thy Father which hath made thee? ſaith the Prophet Moſes, Deut. 32. 6) ſo, Who but an Almighty Father could by his meer Word, without any pre-exiſtent Matter, create that goodly Edifice of Heaven and Earth, which we behold with ſo much wonder and applauſe? A work ſo full of wonder to the ancient Gentiles, that ſome of them made the World a God. Vis illum (i.e. Deum) mundum Vocare? non falleris; as it is in Seneca: others more rationally conceiving God to be the Soul of the World, as giving animation or beginning to it. And though they erred, as well in making the World a God, as God to be the Soul of the World, yet might they very well have ſaid as one ſince hath done, That the World is nothing elſe but God unfolded and manifeſted in the Creature. Nil aliud mundus univerſus, quam Deus explicatus, as Cuſanus a late Cardinal hath it. For certainly the ſpecial motives which did induce God unto this great work, were a deſire and purpoſe to manifeſt his Power, to exerciſe his Providence, and declare his Goodneſs. Not that God needed to have made the World in regard of Himſelf; for the World we know was made in the beginning of Time, but God is Infinite and Eternal before all Times: but that it ſeemed good to Him to create it laſt, as a thing moſt conducible to his praiſe and glory; the Heavens declaring the glory of God, and the Earth ſhewing his handy-work, ſaith the Royal Pſalmiſt. Some, meaſuring the God of Heaven by their own affections, and finding nothing ſo agreeable to their own diſpoſitions as to be in company, conceive that God being at laſt weary of his own Solitude, did create the World, that he might have the company of the Angels in Heaven, and make a ſtart into the Earth (when he ſaw occaſion) to recreate himſelf with the Sons of Men. Quæ beata eſſe ſolitudo quæat? What happineſs (ſaid Hortenſius) can there be in Solitude? To which Lactantius, Lib. 1. Cap. 7. not being furniſhed with a better, doth return this Anſwer; That God cannot be ſaid to be alone; habet enim Miniſtros quos vocamus Nuncios, as having the ſociety of the Angels. But then Lactantius muſt ſuppoſe that the Angels were co-eternal with God himſelf, (which were to make all Gods, and no God at all; or elſe his Anſwer is no Anſwer, as to that Objection. How much more oppoſitely might he have thus replyed unto Hortenſius, That the ſupream contentment poſſible to Almighty God is by reflecting on Himſelf, and in Himſelf contemplating his own infinite glories: which being co-eternal with Himſelf, even from all Eternity, he needed no more company before the World was made, than he hath done ſince. Lactantius being himſelf a man of a very great reading, (though indeed a better Humanitian than Divine) could not but know thoſe ſweet delights which a man habited in Learning takes in Contemplation, and the good ſociety he hath of his own dear thoughts, when he is moſt retired from the ſight of men. And if the wiſe Gentile could affirm ſo ſadly, Nunquam minus ſolus quam cum ſolus eſſet, that he was never leſs alone than when he was by himſelf, what need can any rational man ſuppoſe in Almighty God, of having more company than Himſelf, to delight Himſelf in? If this ſuffice not for an Anſwer to that needleſs queſtion, What God did before he made the World; let him take that of Auguſtine on the like occaſion: who being troubled with the like curious and impertinent Caption, is ſaid to have returned this Anſwer; Fabricaſſe inferos curioſis, that he made Hell for all ſuch troubleſome and idle Queſtioniſts. Which reſolution of that Father is by Sabinus, a late Dutch Poet, moulded into this handſom Epigram.

Dum Chriſtum Libycis Pater Auguſtinus in oris
  Aſſerit, & peragit munus in æde ſuum;
Dum miranda refert populo primordia mundi
  Eſſe docens verbo cuncta creata Dei:
Impius aſſurgit, verbiſq; procacibus, Afer,
  Ergo Opifex rerum quid faciebat? ait;
Aut, Quibus intentus fallebat tempora curis,
  Mundus adhuc nondum cum fabricatus erat?

Præſul ad hæc Libycus, Fabricavit tartara, dixit,
His quos ſcrutari talia mente juvat.

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words:

When Reverend Auſtin did in Africk preach,
And in Gods Houſe the ruder people teach,
As he the Worlds Creation prov'd and taught
That God made all things by his Word, of nought:
A ſawcy Swain upſtarting needs would know,
How God before that did his time beſtow:
And what to ſpend his thoughts upon, he had,
When neither Heaven, nor Earth,nor Seas were made:
To which the Father tartly thus; He then Made Hell for thee, and ſuch audacious men.

But not to ſpend more time in anſwering ſo vain a caption, ſuffice it us to know, that it pleaſed God at laſt when it ſeemed beſt unto his infinite and eternal Wiſdom, to create the World, and all things viſible and inviſible in the ſame contained. A time it had, in which it firſt began to be, which before was not; This Moſes calls Principium a beginning ſimply. In the beginning, God created the heaven and the earth, in the firſt words of the Book of Geneſis: which is all one as if he had ſaid, the Heaven and Earth had a beginning; or that this unformed Maſs or Chaos which he entituled there by the name of Heaven and Earth, was the beginning or firſt draught of thoſe ſeveral things which after were created in their proper times; that is to ſay, the firſt in order of time, becauſe made before them, not in order of cauſality, as the cauſes of them. Cælum & terra, in principio, i. e. ante omnia facta ſunt, ſaith Simon Pottius in his Scholies on St. John's Goſpel. So that whether we do expound thoſe words, that the Heaven and Earth had a beginning; or that Moſes by theſe words did mean, that out of that Matter which he calls Heaven and Earth, as out of the beginning, or firſt matter, all things were created, it comes all to one; becauſe it is thereby acknowledged that the firſt Matter was created by Almighty God, and therefore of neceſſity to have a beginning. And to this truth we have not only the anthority and conſent of Scripture, but of the greateſt part of the old Philoſophers; guided thereto by this impoſſibility in nature, that any viſible work, whether it be natural or artificial, ſhould either give it ſelf a being, or have that being which it hath from no cauſe precedent. For from that Principle Tully argueth very rightly in his moſt excellent Book De Natura Deorum, that as a man coming into a goodly houſe, in which he found nothing but Rats and Mice, could not conceive that either the houſe had built it ſelf, or had no other maker but thoſe Rats and Mice which were neſted in it; ſo neither can it be imagined, that either this World ſhould be eternal, or a ſelf-exiſtency; or was compoſed by any natural Agent of what ſort ſoever. And this is that which is more briefly and expreſly ſaid by the Apoſtle, viz. That every houſe is built by ſome man, but he that built all things is God, Heb. 3. 4. It is true, that Ariſtotle being a very great enquirer into the works of Nature, conceiv'd the World to be eternal; and yet not always conſtant unto that opinion. But then it is as true withal that there was ſomething elſe that inclined him to it, than a meer admiration of the works of Nature. Democritus and ſome others had been of opinion, that the World was made in the beginning, fortuitis atomorum concurſionibus, by the accidental union or conjunction of thoſe ſeveral parcels, of which the Univerſe conſiſted; and that man himſelf was but voluntaria elementorum concretio, a voluntary mixture of all the Elements, as Minutius hath obſerved out of their Writings. To which abſurd opinion (as it was no better) though it found a general imbracement amongſt many of the old Philoſophers, when Ariſtotle knew not how to ſubmit his moſt exquiſite judgment; and yet was deſtitute of ſuch further light, as might more fully have inſtructed him in its true Origiginal: he rather choſe to grant, the World to be eternal, than to be made of ſuch ridiculous, and unſound, though eternal Atoms. Et maluit hanc pulchram mundi faciem ab æterno eſſe, quam aliquando ex æterna deformitate emerſiſſe. Valeſius in his Book de Sacra Philoſophia ſo pleads the caſe in his behalf; and I thank him for it: who am (I muſt confeſs) a great friend of Ariſtotle's, whom ſome account for the Præcurſor of our Saviour Chriſt in rebus naturalibus, as John the Baptiſt was in divinis.

Nor doth the Scripture and the light of Reaſon tell us only this, that the whole World had a beginning; but, by the help of Scripture, and the works of ſome Learned men, we are able to point out the time when it did begin; or to compute how many years it is preciſely from the firſt beginning, without any notable difference in the calculation. For though it be moſt truly ſaid, Citius inter Horologias quam Chronologias; that Clocks may ſooner be agreed than Chronologers, yet moſt Chronologers in this point come ſo near one another, that the difference is ſcarce obſervable. From the beginning of the World to the Birth of Chriſt, in the accompt of Beroaldus, are 3928 years; 3945 in the computation of the Genevians; 3960 in the eſteem of Luther; and 3963 in the calculation of Melanchthon: between whom and Beroaldus (being the leaſt and the greateſt) there is but 35 years difference, which in ſo long a courſe of time can be no great matter. Now if unto the Calculation made by Beroaldus, which I conceive to be the trueſt, we add 1648 ſince the Birth of Chriſt, the total of the time ſince the Worlds Creation, will be 5576 years, neither more nor leſs. A thing which I the rather have inſiſted on, becauſe that from this Epoche or Æra of the Worlds Creation, we ſhall compute the times of ſuch Kings and Princes, as reigned and flouriſhed in the World before the Incarnation of our Lord and Saviour.

It being then reſolved as a thing undoubted, that God made the World, and that He made it in ſuch time as Himſelf pleaſed; let us next look upon the matter and the method which it pleaſed the Divine Majeſty to make uſe of in this wondrous work.

Firſt, for the matter, out of which all things were created, I take it, as before was ſaid, to be that which Moſes in the firſt words of Geneſis calls the Heaven and the Earth, becauſe they were ſo in potentia; but after telleth us more explicitely, that that which he calleth Earth, was inanis & vacua, without form and void; and that which he calleth Heaven was but an overcaſt of darkneſs, or tenebræ ſuperfaciem Abyſſi, as the vulgar reads it. Of which Chaos or confuſed Maſs we thus read in Ovid, who queſtionleſs had herein conſulted with the works of Moſes, being before his time communicated to the learned Gentiles:

Ante mare & terras & quod tegit omnia Cælum,
Unus erat toto naturæ vultus in Orbe,
Quem dixere Chaos, rudis indigeſtaq; moles,
Nec quicquam niſi pondus iners, congeſtaq; eodem
Non bene junctarum diſcordia ſemina rerum, &c.

Which I ſhall Engliſh from G.S. with ſome little change.

Before the Earth, the Sea, and Heaven were framed,
One face had Nature which they Chaos named;
An indigeſted lump, a barren load,
Where jarring ſeeds of things ill-join'd abode.
No Sun as yet with light the World adorns,
Nor new Moon had repair'd her waining horns:
Nor hung the ſelf-poiz'd Earth in thin Air plac'd,
Nor had the Ocean the vaſt Shores embrac'd.

Earth, Sea, and Air, all mixt; the Earth unſtable,
The Air was dark, the Sea unnavigable.
No certain form to any one aſſign'd;
This, that reſiſts; for in one body joyn'd
The cold and heat, the dry and humid fight,
The ſoft and hard, the heavy with the light.

Out of this Chaos or firſt matter, did God raiſe the World according to thoſe ſeveral parts and lineaments which we ſee it in, not as out of any pre-exiſtent matter which was made before, and had not God for the Author or firſt Maker of it; but as the firſt preparatory matter which himſelf had made, including in the ſame potentially both the form and matter of the whole Creation, except the Soul of man only, which God breathed into him. And therefore it is truly ſaid, that God made all things out of nothing; not out of nothing as the matter out of which it was made, for then that nothing muſt be ſomething; but as the terminus à quo, in giving them a real and corporal being which before they had not, and did then firſt begin to have by the meer force and efficacy of his powerful Word. And though it be a Maxim in the Schools of Philoſophy, Ex nihilo nil fit, that nothing can be made of nothing; that every thing which hath a being doth require ſome matter which muſt be pre-exiſtent to it, yet this muſt either be condemned for erroneous Doctrine in the Chair of Divinity, or elſe be limited and reſtrained to Natural Agents which cannot go beyond the Sphere of their own activity. Inviſible and ſupernatural Agents are not tied to Rules, no not in the production of the works of Nature; though Nature, conſtituted and eſtabliſhed in a certain courſe, work every thing by line and meaſure as a certain Rule. And ſo it was with God in the Worlds Creation; he did not only make the World but he made it out of nothing, by his word alone: Dixit & facta ſunt, He ſpake the word and they were made ſaith the royal Pſalmiſt, Pſal. 33. v. 9. There went no greater pains nor matter to the whole Creation, but a Dixit Deus: And this not only ſaid by Moſes, but by David too, Verbo Domini firmati ſunt Cœli, & ſpiritu oris ejus omnis virtus eorum, v. 6. i.e. By the Word of the Lord were the Heavens made, and all the Hoſts thereof by the breath of his mouth. In which it is to be obſerved, that though the Creation of the World be generally aſcribed to God the Father, yet both the Son and the Holy Ghoſt had their parts therein; Verbo Domini, by the word of the Lord were the Heavens made, ſaith the Prophet David. In the beginning was the Word; all things were made by him, and without him was nothing made, ſaith S. John the Apoſtle. The Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, ſaith Moſes in the Book of the Law: Et ſpiritu oris ejus and by the breath (or Spirit) of his mouth were all the Hoſts of Heaven created, ſaith David in the Book of Pſalms, Made by his Word, and yet not made together in one inſtant of time. In the firſt day he laid the foundation and no more; in the five next, he raiſed the building: and this he did, to teach us men deliberation, in our words and actions; and to ſet forth withal unto us, both his Power and Wiſdom. His Power he manifeſted in the Method of the whole Creation, in that he did produce what effects he pleaſed, without the help of natural cauſes: as giving Light unto the World before he had created either Sun or Moon; making the Earth fruitful, and to bring forth Plants, without the influence or motion of the Heavenly bodies. And for his Wiſdom he expreſſed it in as high a degree, in that he did not create the very Beaſts of the field before he had provided them of fodder & ſufficient herbage; nor made man after his own Image, before he had finiſhed all the reſt of his works, fitted his Houſe, and furniſhed it with all things neceſſary both for life and pleaſures.

But all things being fitted and prepared for him, at laſt comes Man into the World: and he doth make his entrance with a greater pomp than any of the reſt of the Creatures which were before him. They came in with no other Ceremony, than a Dixit Deus; but in the Workmanſhip of Man, there was a Conſultation held by the bleſſed Trinity. It is there, Faciamus Hominem, Let us make man; each Perſon contributing ſomewhat (as it were) to his compoſition. For God the Father as the chief Workman, or principal Agent, gave him form and feature; in which he did imprint his own heavenly Image. The Son, who is the living and eternal Word, gave him voice or ſpeech, that ſo he might be able to ſet forth Gods praiſes. The Holy Ghoſt, the Lord and giver of Life, (as the Nicene Fathers truly call him) breathing into his noſtrils the breath of life, whereby he became a living Spirit. In this one Creature, was amaſſed whatever thing was excellent in the whole Creation; the quantity or ſubſtance of Inanimate Creatures, the life of Plants, the ſenſe of Beaſts, and the underſtanding of Angels. In this one Creature did God ſhew the excellency of his power and wiſdom, in printing on him his own Image, and giving him dominion over all the works of his hands; which Image of God they look for it in a very wrong place, who hope to find it in mans Body, though of a gallant compoſition, and erected ſtructure. The Heathen Oratour was able in this point to enform ſome erroneous Chriſtians. Ad Divinam imaginem proprius accedit humana virtus quam figura, Man doth approach more near to the Image of God, in the endowments of his Mind, than in the ſtructure of his Body, as divinely Cicero. And as for that dominion which God gave him over the works of his hands, the Patent is at large laid down in the firſt of Geneſis. For God no ſooner ſaid, Faciamus Hominem, Let us make Man after our own Image, but preſently he adds this Charter of Supreme Authority, And let him have dominion over the Fiſh of the Sea, and over the Fowls of the Air, and over the Cattel, and over all the Earth. A more particular explication of thoſe ſeveral points, wherein that Image and this Power do conſiſt eſpecially, I ſhall not take upon me or endeavour now; as being not of this place and purpoſe: Which only is to ſhew, that as man in the very act of his Creation participated more of the Divine Image, than all other Creatures: ſo was he by Gods ſpecial grant enfeoffed with a larger power, than any of the reſt could pretend unto. Man, though made lower than the Angels, is in this above them; that all the Creatures of the World were made to be his ſervants, and to attend upon his pleaſure. And yet this great and mighty Prince, this general Lord of all the World, and the Creatures in it (ſetting aſide the dignity of his firſt Creation) doth come into the world in a worſe condition, than any of the Creatures which were made to ſerve him, naked, and impotent, and ſpeechleſs, without uſe of reaſon; neither of power to help himſelf, or ask help of others. Whereof Lactantius, in my mind, gives a very good reaſon, who telleth us, that God ſends man into the world, nudum & inermem, naked, and weak, and undefenced againſt all violences and dangers; whereas all Creatures elſe, munita indumentis naturalibus & armata ſunt, are naturally both armed and cloathed, and able to relieve themſelves. And this he doth unto this end, that man being naturally deſtitute of thoſe outward helps, might make uſe of his inward faculties of judgment, wit and underſtanding, in furniſhing himſelf with that which he wants by nature. For hereunto the firſt original of all Manufactures and mechanick Arts is to be referred, as is moſt plain and evident from the Book of God, in which we ſee, that preſently upon the procreation of Mankind, Abel betook himſelf to keeping ſheep, and Cain to husbandry; Jubal to handle the Harp, Organ, and ſuch Muſical Inſtruments; and Tubal Cain to work upon Braſs and Iron, two metals very neceſſary to moſt kind of Trades. The like may be ſuppoſed in all other Myſteries and Arts of living, though there be no expreſs mention of them in thoſe early days; except it be the Art of Building, or the Carpenter's Trade, which no queſtion is as old as any, as by the building of Cain's City, and Noah's Ark is moſt clearly evidenced. God made the World, and fitted it with all things neceſſary for the life of man, leaving man to provide himſelf of ſuch additions, as rather ſerve for comforts and conveniences in the way of his living, than the neceſſities of his life.

Here then we have the works of God, and the works of men to be conſidered, in purſuit of our preſent Argument. The works of God, in ſhadowing the Earth with Trees and Foreſts, interlacing it with Criſtal ſtreams, and capacious Rivers; inriching it with fruitful and delicious Vales, adorning it with lofty Mountains, and ſtocking both the Hills and Vales with all ſorts of Cattel. But nothing more ſets forth the Power and Wiſdom of Almighty God, as it relates to theſe particulars, than that moſt admirable intermixture of Want with Plenty, whereby he hath united all the parts of the World in a continual Traffick and Commerce with one another: ſome Countrys being deſtitute of thoſe Commodities, with which others abound; and being plentiful in thoſe, which the others want. Inſomuch, that as in the body of man, that Microcoſm, or little World, the Head cannot ſay, that it hath no need of the Foot, nor the Foot of the Hand, nor other members of the reſt: ſo neither in the Body of the World, can Europe ſay to Aſia, or Spain to England, I have no need of your Commodities; or am not wanting in thoſe things, whereof thou boaſteſt an abundance. Something there is in every Country which may be ſpared to ſupply the defect of others; and are accordingly vented in the way of Merchandiſe: Of which, thus Du-Bartas in his Colonies,

> Hence come our Sugars from Canary Iſles;
> From Candie, Currans, Muſcadels, and Oyls.
> From the Moluccoes, Spices; Balſamum
> From Egypt; Odours from Arabia come.
> From India Gums, rich Drugs, and Ivory;
> From Syria, Mummie; black, red Ebony
> From burning Chus; from Peru, Pearls and Gold;
> From Ruſſia Furrs to keep the rich from cold.
> From Florence, Silks; from Spain, Fruit, Saffron, Sack;
> From Denmark, Amber, Cordage, Firrs, aud Flax,
> From France and Flanders, Linen, Wood, and Wine;
> From Holland, Hops; Horſe from the banks of Rhine.
> From England, Wool. All lands, as God diſtributes,
> To the Worlds treaſure pay their ſundry tributes.

This, as Du-Bartas ſpeaks of the preſent times, ſo queſtionleſs the ſame, or the like Commerce held good in the firſt Ages of the Worlds Creation; God furniſhing all Countrys from the firſt beginning with ſome Staple-Commodities, for the benefit of themſelves and others; for the maintaining of that intercouſe between Nation and Nation, which makes them link the cloſer in the bonds of Amity. And to this end alſo ſerve thoſe ſeveral Manufactures wherewith ſome Countrys do abound in reſpect of others; but looked on, in the preſent Book, as the works of men. And of this kind alſo are the ſeveral Polities and forms of Government. For, though all Magiſtracy in it ſelf be from God originally, and that the Monarchical-form comes neareſt to the Government uſed by God himſelf: yet being that ſome Polities are meerly but humane inventions, all Government or Magiſtracy is called an Ordinance of man in holy Scripture, 1 Pet. 2. *v.*13. But thoſe particular works of men, which are the moſt conſiderable part of our preſent ſubject, are Caſtles, Towns, and Cities of moſt eminent note, which thrive and proſper in the World, according as they do partake of thoſe Conveniences, which conduce moſt to their Magnificence & Greatneſs. Of theſe Boterus gives us many (relation being had to the time he lived in) but of thoſe many we ſhall touch upon the principal only, paſſing by thoſe of leſſer note, as pleaſantneſs of Sight, fruitfulneſs of Soil, ſalubrity of Air, and ſuch like obvious Obſervations. Firſt then, there is required to the Magnificence and Splendour of Cities, a Navigable River, or ſome ſuch eaſie paſſage by Sea, which will bring thither a continual concourſe and trade of Merchants; as at Venice, London, Amſterdam. Secondly, ſome Staple-Manufactures or Commodities, which will draw the like reſort of Merchants, though the conveniency of Sea or Rivers invite them not; as in Nuremberg in Germany, a dry Town, but mightily Traded. Thirdly, the Palace of the Prince; For, ubi Imperator, ibi Roma, where the Court is, there will be a continual confluence of Nobles, Gentry, Merchants, and all ſorts of Trades: And by this means, Madrid, not long ſince a poor beggarly Village, is grown the moſt populous City in all Spain. Fourthly, the Reſidence of the Nobility, beautifieth a City with ſtately and magnificent Buildings; which makes the Cities of Italy ſo much excell ours in England; their Nobles dwelling in the Cities, and ours for the moſt part in their Country-houſes. Fifthly, the Seats, or Tribunals of juſtice, on which both Advocates and Clients are to give attendance; as in the Parliamentary Cities in France, and Spires in Germany. Sixthly, Univerſities and Schools of Learning, to which the Youth from all parts are to make reſort; which hath been long the chief cauſe of the flouriſhing of Oxford, Cambridge, Bononia in Italy, and other Cities of good note beyond the Seas. Seventhly, Immunity from Tolls & Taxes; moſt men being moſt deſirous to inhabit there, where their In-come will be greateſt, their Priviledges largeſt, and their Diſburſements leaſt: So Naples, Florence, Venice, having been deſolated by Plagues, were again ſuddenly re-peopled, by granting large Immunities to all comers-in. And laſt of all, the opinion of Sanctity, either for the Reliques of Saints, or ſome noted Shrines, or the reſidence of ſome famous man, or the Seat of Religion, is not the leaſt Adamant which draws people to it, to the great enriching of ſome Cities. And of this, Rome it ſelf can give us two moſt pregnant evidences: The one in reference to the Popes, and theſe latter times; that famous Town not otherwiſe ſubſiſting now, than by the conſtant reſidence of the Popes and Cardinals; whoſe abſence while the Papal Sea was kept at Avignon, had made it over-grown with Briars and Brambles, and buried it almoſt in its own ſad ruines. The other, in the perſon of Titus Livius the Hiſtorian; to ſee which man there came ſo many from the Coaſts of France and Spain, that St. Hierom elegantly ſaith, Quos ad ſui contemplationem Roma non traxerat, unius hujus hominis fama perduxit; qui jam urbem tantam ingreſſi, aliud extra Urbem quærerent.

Such are the cauſes of the Greatneſs and Magnificence of Cities, when they are once built; none of all which might poſſibly be looked at by the firſt builders of Cities,

I

I mean by Cain before the Flood, and by Nimrod after; who aimed more at the love of Empire, and ſelf preſervation, than at the general good of Mankind, or the particular wealth of thoſe amongſt whom they lived. Of Cain it is affirmed expreſly in the Book of God, That being poſſeſſed with this fear, that every one that found him would lay hands upon him and ſlay him, in revenge of the blood of Abel; He builded a City and called it by the name of his ſon Enoch. Gen. 4. 17. Builded a City? For what reaſon? To fortifie and ſecure himſelf againſt all revenge, as the Text doth intimate; or thereby to oppreſs his Neighbours, as Joſephus witneſſeth. Neither was this the only City of the firſt Ages, though none but this be mentioned in the Book of God. That which the Scripture ſaith of Jubal, that he was the Father of ſuch as dwell in Tents, and of ſuch as have Cattel; that is to ſay, he was the firſt of thoſe which lived upon Paſturage, and followed their Cattel up and down with their moveable Tents, not having any certain home or habitations, as the wild Arabes now, and the ancient Nomades; is proof ſufficient, that the reſidue of all Mankind lived a more civil kind of life in their Towns and Villages. And if Pomponius Mela be of any credit (as in theſe things, I think he is) he will inform us, that the City of Joppa was built before the Flood; that the King thereof was named Cepha; and that his name, and the name of his brother Phineas, together with the Grounds and Principles of their Religion, were found graven upon certain Altars of ſtone. But whether this be ſo, or not, certain it is, that as well Canaan in the Weſt, whereon Joppa ſtood, as the Land of Nod on the Eaſt ſide of Paradiſe, where Cain built his City, were peopled long before the Flood; and ſo were moſt of the other parts of the World beſides: And if well peopled in all, or moſt parts thereof, no doubt but they had Villages and Towns, yea and Cities too, as well for neceſſary habitation, as for ſtrength and ſafety. Now that the World was throughly peopled before the Flood, ſeems clear to me by that great and univerſal Deluge, which God was pleaſed to bring upon the Face of all the Earth: For what need all the Earth be buried in that Sea of waters, if all the Earth had not been peopled, and all the people of it guilty of oppreſſion, in the ſight of God? Beſides, it is expreſly ſaid in the holy Scripture, that in the time of Abraham, who lived about 350 years after the Flood in the largeſt account, and not 300 in the ſhorteſt; there were Kings of Egypt, and of the Philiſtims, Kings of the Canaanites, of Shinaar, Ellaſar, Ellan, and of the Nations who queſtionleſs had their Lands well peopled: that both Chaldea, and Meſopotamia, in the time of Abraham had their ſeveral Cities; as Ur in the one, and Haran, or Charan, in the other; and that Damaſcus the chief City of Syria was then founded alſo: Not to ſay any thing of the building of Babel, Erech, Accad, and Chalneh in the Land of Shinaar (or Babylonia) nor of the building of Ninive, Reſen, Rehoboth, and Chalah in the Land of Aſſyria, mention whereof is made in the 10 of Geneſis. And it is found, in good and credible Authors, that Ninus the third Aſſyrian Monarch (who lived before the birth of Abraham) having ſubdu'd the Kings of Media and Armenia, invaded Bactria with an Army of 1700000 Foot, and 200000 Horſe, and 10600 armed Chariots; and was encountred by Zoroaſter the King thereof with an Army of four hundred thouſand. The credibility whereof, if it were diſputed, might be affirmed by the like numerous Army brought by Xerxes againſt the Greeks, though in times long after following. And if we will give credit unto Diodorus Siculus, who voucheth Cteſias for his Author, Semiramis, the Wife of Ninus, invaded India with an Army of three Millions of men and upwards; and yet was over-matched, and ſlain by an Indian King. If then within the ſpace of four hundred years, we find the Eaſtern parts to be ſo well planted, ſo many Kings poſſeſſed of their regal Thrones, and many of them able to impreſs ſuch infinite Armies; why may we not conclude, that in the courſe of 1656 years (for ſo long it was from the Creation to the Flood) the whole World was inhabited and planted in all parts thereof; eſpecially conſidering the long lives of men, amounting to eight hundred, or nine hundred years; and conſequently the long time they had to apply themſelves to the act of Generation. And though I have no certain ground for it in the Book of God, yet I am apt enough to be of Mercator's opinion; who placing the 16 Dynaſty of the Kings of Egypt (where Euſebius begins to calculate the Egyptian times) at the firſt planting of that Country by the Sons of Noah; reckoneth the former fifteen to have been before the Flood, and to reach very near the times of the firſt Creation. That, Miſraim the Son of Ham was poſſeſſed of Egypt within two hundred years after the Flood, is a truth undoubted. Nor ſee I any cauſe to doubt, but that in the like ſpace of time from the firſt Creation, it might be planted alſo by the Sons of Adam: conſidering, as we ought to do, that in the Infancy of the World, when the bodies of men were moſt perfect, and of greateſt vigour, they obſerved no degree of Kindred or Conſanguinity, nor tied themſelves ſo ſtrictly to one woman, as they ſhould have done. And for the names of all the Kings of thoſe ſeveral Dynaſties, either they might be left engraven upon Pillars, ſuch as that of Seth; or upon Altars of ſtone, as in thoſe of Joppa; or Miſraim might have them by Tradition from the hands of Noah; and ſo deliver them by tale unto his poſterity: the Egyptians being generally very good Heralds, and ſtanding very much on their own Antiquity. And if this may be ſaid of Egypt (as for my part I ſee no reaſon but it may) then may the like be ſaid of all Countrys elſe, that they had their ſeveral Kings and Rulers, and ſet-Forms of Government: The Fathers of Families in thoſe times, having the command and ſovereignty over all that deſcended of them. Nor make I any queſtion of it, but they had ſeveral Languages and forms of Speech, at leaſt to the Dialect and pronunciation; although the Radicals of the Language might remain the ſame. But being there are no Remainders of this firſt Plantation, (unleſs we will give credit to ſome Jewiſh Fablers, who tell us of ſome Giants who ſaved themſelves upon Mount Sion; or that of Nicholus Damaſcenus, who ſpeaks of ſome that ſaved themſelves on an high Hill called Baris, in ſome part of Armenia); I ſhall the leſs inſiſt upon it. Nor had I ſtood ſo long upon theſe firſt Ages; which Moſes paſſeth over with ſo ſhort a Narrative; but that is affirmed by Pererius, a right learned Jeſuite, that neither Egypt nor Aſſyria, nor the reſt of the World was planted and inhabited before the Flood; and that upon no ſtronger reaſon, for ought I can find, but that it is affirmed in the laſt words of the tenth of Geneſis, That, by theſe (that is to ſay, by the poſterity of the Sons of Noah) were the Nations divided in the Earth after the Flood. Out of which words he thus concludeth, Quo ſignificatur, talem diviſionem non fuiſſe ante Diluvium; By which it doth appear (ſaith he) that in the times before the Flood was no ſuch diviſion.

'Tis true, that this diviſion of the World by the Sons of Noah, hath the beſt evidence in Scripture, becauſe there is expreſs Text for it, which is not for the firſt Plantations. But looking on the great encreaſe of mankind before the Flood, that Saying of Beroſus will prove tantamont to a Text of Scripture, Ad comparandas novas ſedes neceſſitatem compuliſſe, that they were driven by neceſſity to ſeek new dwellings, the neceſſity of providing victuals for themſelves and their Families, being as ſtrong a motive unto ſuch diſperſions, as the Confuſion of Tongues was afterwards. The difference is, that that which ſuch neceſſity would have done in long tract of time, the confuſion of Tongues did in an inſtant: not only making thoſe proud Builders to give over the finiſhing of the Tower which they had begun; but to unite themſelves with ſuch, whoſe language came moſt near to that which themſelves were Maſters of. It was high time, no queſtion, to deſiſt from this proud Attempt, when the Labourer underſtood not what the Workman called for, but brought him things quite contrary to his expectation. But becauſe ſome Plantations had no reference to the Confuſion of Tongues, but were made before it, or on the ſending out of ſuch Colonies as were neareſt to the place where the Ark did reſt, I think it not amiſs to reſolve that queſtion touching the reſting of the Ark, on which the Plantations of the Eaſt have ſo great dependence. All that the Scripture telleth us of it, is, that the Ark reſted on the Mountains of Ararat: but where thoſe Mountains are, that it telleth us not. I know Joſephus and ſome other of more eminent note, (but ſuch as ground themſelves upon his authority) affirm, thoſe Mountains of Ararat to be the hills of Armenia. Which they do chiefly on theſe Reaſons: Firſt, becauſe Armenia is called Ararat in the Book of God, as it is confeſſedly; and ſecondly, becauſe of an old Tradition, countenanced by Beroſus, and ſome others of the ancient Writers cited by Joſephus, affirming, that on the Gordiæan Mountains in Armenia major, ſome of the reliques of the Ark were remaining in their times and uſed as a preſervative againſt Inchantments. Which notwithſtanding, I incline rather to the opinion of Goropius Becanus, (who amongſt many ſtrange whimſeys broached ſome notable truths) by whom the Ark is ſaid to reſt on the top of Mount Caucaſus in the Confines of Tartary, Perſia, and India. His Arguments are many, but I look on two as of greateſt conſequence: the firſt whereof is grounded upon evident reaſon; the ſecond on plain Text of Scripture. That which is grounded upon reaſon, is, the exceeding populoſity of thoſe Eaſtern Countries, into which none of thoſe by whom the World was planted after the Confuſion of Languages, are yet reported to have travelled with their ſeveral Colonies, by any who have took moſt pains in this diſcovery. Thoſe infinite numbers which Staurobates, one (and but one of many) of the Kings of the Indians brought into the field againſt Semiramis; and the vaſt army of Zoroaſter the King of Bactria, conducted out of that one Province againſt Ninus; are proof enough, that thoſe Countries were of an elder Plantation, than to be a ſecond or third Caſtling of ſome other Swarm ſetled in Perſia, or Aſſyria after the Confuſion. For Ninus, who was the Husband of Semiramis, was but the Grandchild of Nimrod; and I muſt needs look upon it, as a thing impoſſible, that thoſe vaſt Armies which Semiramis was able to raiſe out of all her Dominions, ſhould be encountred by one King with an equal force, and that of his own Subjects only; if that one King, and thoſe his Subjects had been ſome late Colony of thoſe new Plantations, and not poſſeſſed of a Country peopled and inhabited before that Confuſion. Nor was it but upon ſome good ground, that the Scythians (who inhabited on the North of Mount Caucaſus) were generally eſteemed the moſt ancient Nation in the World; and carried it away from the Egyptians, Phrygians, and all other Competitours with this publick Verdict, Scytharum gens ſemper antiquiſſima: which ground could be no other, but the neighbourhood of the Ark unto them (though perhaps that ground long ſince forgotten, was not ſtood upon) and the dwelling of Noah and his children near the place of the Ark, till numbers, and neceſſity compelled them to enlarge their Border. And in the enlarging of their Borders, I ſhall make no queſtion, but that ſuch parts as lay neareſt, were peopled and poſſeſſed before thoſe which lay furtheſt off; according to the method of Plantations in all Ages ſince. This, though it be to me a convincing Argument, yet it falls ſhort of that which comes from the Text it ſelf, both in authority and weight; where it is ſaid of the heads of thoſe ſeveral Families which afterwards joyned together in the building of Babel, that, As they went from the Eaſt, they found a Plain in the Land of Shinaar, and there they abode, Gen. 11. v. 2. If then they came from the Eaſt to the Land of Shinaar, as the Text ſaith plainly that they did; it might well be, that they came from thoſe parts of Aſia, on the South of Caucaſus, which lye Eaſt of Shinaar, though ſomewhat bending to the North; impoſſible they ſhould come from the Gordiæan Mountains in the greater Armenia (ſuppoſed to be the Hills which the Ark did reſt on) which lye not only full North of Shinaar, but many degrees unto the Weſt. For Babylonia, or Shinaar, is ſituate in the Latitude of 35, and the Longitude of 79, and 80. The Latitude of the Gordiæan Mountains, in 41, and their Longitude in 75. By which accompt thoſe Mountains are 6 Degrees more Northwards, and 5 Degrees more Weſtwards than the Land of Shinaar: by no means to be reckoned on the Eaſt of that Valley, except we make Moſes (whoſe hand God guided in his Books) to ſpeak God knows what, or, in plain terms, to ſpeak plain non-ſenſe. And though the Scripture be ſo clear, that it needs no commentary, yet the perplexities I find amongſt thoſe of the other opinion, in ſifting out of the authority of ſo plain a Text, do add in my conceit ſome moment and weight unto it. For ſome will have the Mountains of Ararat to be indeed on the North of the Land of Shinaar, but with ſome bending towards the Eaſt; which were it true, as nothing is more truly falſe, Moſes had never told us that they came from the Eaſt; but from ſome Countries of the North, which lay towards the Eaſt. Others will have a double progreſs of the heads of thoſe ſeveral Families: Firſt, from the Mountains of Ararat, or the Plains of Armenia, to the Fields of Aſſyria, and Suſiana; And ſecondly, from thence to the Land of Shinaar. But of this firſt journey, there is ne gry quidem, not ſo much as any one ſyllable in all the Scripture; beſides the needleſneſs of making them go ſo far about, and to croſs over the great Rivers Euphrates and Tigris; whereas they had a ſhorter, and an eaſier paſſage. Capellus, ſingular by himſelf quarelleth with the Tranſlation (received without diſpute by all other Criticks) and will not have the Hebrew Kedem, to be rendred Eaſt, but to ſignifie that Region, whatſoever it was, which was inhabited by Kedem the ſon of Iſmael, of whom we find mention, Gen. 25. 15. But then, beſides his quarrel with all other Tranſlations, he ſuppoſeth a former progreſs from the Mountains of Ararat to that Land of Kedem; and conſequently falleth into a part of the Errour before refelled. Bochartus finding (if not fancying) that the Aſſyrians called all thoſe parts of their Empire beyond Tigris, the Eaſtern, and thoſe on this ſide of it, the Weſtern; would thence conclude, that theſe Heads may be ſaid by Moſes to have come from the Eaſt, becauſe they came from one of the Eaſtern Provinces of the Aſſyrian Empire.

Every way faulty in this point: For, beſides that the greateſt part of Armenia lieth on the North of Tygris, and the leaſt part of it on the Weſt, and therefore not within the compaſs of the Eaſtern Provinces; and that Bochartus hath not proved (nor indeed can prove) that this diviſion was in uſe in the time of Moſes; we may as rationally conclude, and with leſs abſurdity, that the firſt Inhabitants of Britain, might have been ſaid by Ammianus Marcellinus, or any Writer of that time, to come out of the Weſt (though he well knew they came from Gaul, which is plainly Eaſt of it) becauſe Gaul in his time was a Province of the Weſt parts of the Empire.

Having thus fortified our opinion both with Scripture and Reaſon, the Arguments produced againſt us will be eaſily anſwered. For though Armenia be granted to be the Country of Ararat; yet the Mountains of Ararat may extend beyond the Country. That mighty Ridge of Mountains which beginning in Aſia the leſs, run as far as India (by the Ancients commonly called Mount Taurus) might very well be called by Moſes the Mountains of Ararat, becauſe that was the firſt Country of the greater Aſia by which they paſſed; and where they were of greater note than they had been formerly. Juſt as the Adriatick Sea took that name from Adria, then the chief Port of it, though it waſhed many Shores beſides: Or as ſome Hills with us are called Malvern Hills, becauſe they are higheſt near that Village, though they extend themſelves into other Lordſhips. And as for the Authority of Tradition, and the Teſtimony of humane Writers, which (as before was ſaid) are brought in for an help, touching ſome Reliques of the Ark to be ſeen on the Gordiæan Mountains; I look upon it as an Argument of no weight at all. For firſt Beroſus (followed herein by all the reſt) reports it only on the ground of uncertain hear-ſay; which is a weak ſtaff for ſo heavy a cauſe to rely upon. Secondly, to balance the Authority of Beroſus (if of any credit in this caſe) we have the teſtimony and authority of Portius Cato, as ancient almoſt as he, affirming poſitively, In Scythia Saga renatum eſſe mortale genus, that Mankind was repaired in that part of Scythia, which after was poſſeſſed by the Sacans: and they, we know, dwelt in thoſe parts of Scythia which lay next to Bactria, a Province of the Perſian Empire, and not far from the branches of Mount Caucaſus. And Thirdly, unto one Tradition to oppoſe another; thoſe of Mount Caucaſus do aver, that a large Vineyard in Margiana, near the foot of that Mountain, was of Noah's Plantation: Of which we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Tartary.

It is now time I ſhould go forwards with the Builders of Babel, and their wide diſperſions; for whom it was high time, to conſort themſelves with ſuch as they could underſtand; the neceſſity of diſcourſe and conference on that fatal Accident, making them lay aſide their old acquaintances, and joyn themſelves to others of their own new Language. I know that many Learned men according to the number of names laid down in the tenth of Gen. being 70, have made ſo many Languages to have been ſpoken upon that Confuſion: And that of thoſe, 26 being the Poſterity of Sem, diſperſed themſelves about Aſia the greater, 30 others of the loins of Cham, peopled Africk, Arabia, and Syria; and that the 14 which remain, being the iſſue of Japhet, withdrew themſelves towards Europe, and the leſſer Aſia. But this, as to the number of Languages, I take to be but a vain conceit; though many, more improbable, have paſſed for currant. It being plain, that Canaan and his Sons, eleven in all, had but one Language amongſt them, which was the Hebrew, or the Language of the Land of Canaan. And as for Joctan and his Sons, being 13 in number, conſidering that he was the younger brother of Phaleg, in whoſe time this Confuſion hapned; it is moſt probable, and avowed for a certain truth, that either none of them were born, or, if they were, yet they were all of them too young to have an hand in the deſign for the building of the Tower of Babel; and conſequently could not be within the curſe of confounded Languages. So, here is near a third part of the ſeventy to be taken off; as poſſibly might all the Sons of Miſraim be, if it were worth the while to inſiſt upon it. This then I take but for a fancy. And as for that, of the diſperſion into the ſaid three parts of the (then) known World, I take it to be true enough in long tract of time; but falſe enough, if underſtood of any preſent ſeparation of the Sons of Noah into parts ſo far remote and diſtant from one another. For what needed any ſuch remote Plantations be, as long as they had room enough to live one near another, and ſo enjoy that civil entercourſe, and mutual ſociety which the nature of Mankind doth moſt delight in? And therefore I conceive it to be far more probable, that they who met together for the building of Babel, joining themſelves to men of the ſame Language with them, did firſt ſet down upon the places near the Valley of Shinaar: and from thence propagated and diſperſed themſelves into further Countries, as either the neceſſity of providing of Victuals; or ſeeking better and more fruitful habitations for themſelves and theirs; or the deſire of being out of the reach of ſome potent Neighbours, whoſe yoak they found too heavy for their necks to bear, did enforce them to it. And being ſo ſetled to their minds, the addition of a few more years brought the like neceſſity of ſending Colonies further off, as they grew more or leſs populous in their generations: It being in Plantations of Men, as in that of Bees, amongſt whom one Swarm ſends out another, that begets a Caſtling, till the whole ground or Garden grow too ſmall to hold them. For thus (to ſeek no further for an inſtance of it) the Gauls firſt planted Britain, the Britains Ireland, the Iriſh Scotland, and the Iſles. Thus the Helvetians finding their old dwellings both too barren to ſuſtain, and too narrow to contain their multitudes, anguſtos ſe fines habere arbitrantes, as in Cæſar's Commentaries, intended to plant themſelves in Gaul. And thus the Syrians and Pœnicians flying the dreadful ſword of Joſhuah the Son of Nun, ſought them out dwellings further off from the preſent danger, whereof we ſhall ſpeak more in its proper place. On the like motives and inducements did the firſt people after the Flood, diſtribute and diſperſe themſelves into ſeveral parts, as their poſterities have done ſince, and will do to the end of the World, in all probability: Giving their own names, or ſome names of their own impoſing, upon the Countries planted or diſcovered by them. And though the length, and conſuming nature of time, hath either changed or worn out the names impoſed by the firſt Adventurers, I mean the firſt Planters after the Flood: yet all the Footſteps of Antiquity are not ſo defaced, but that ſome Nations and Cities have preſerved the memory of their firſt Founders and true Parents. In the diſcovery whereof, as Joſephus in his Book of Jewiſh Antiquities did firſt lead the way, and gave good light to thoſe who have travelled in it; ſo a more notable proficiency hath been made therein by Junius in his Notes on the tenth of Geneſis, Sir Walter Rawleigh in his excellent Hiſtory, and lately by Bochartus a French Writer in his Book called Geographia Sacra. Out of whoſe learned labours, and ſome Animadverſions of mine own, I ſhall here ſay ſomewhat concerning the Plantation of the World by the Sons of Noah; leaving the more exact and punctual deſcription of it unto the Hiſtory of thoſe ſeveral Lands and Countries which were planted by them.

Firſt therefore to begin with the poſterity of Sem, as thoſe who fixed themſelves in Aſia, without wandring further, we find Sem to have had five Sons, that is to ſay, Elam, Aſſur, Arphaxad, Lud, and Aram; of whom there is no iſſue on Record in holy Scripture, but only of Arphaxad and Aram; and of theſe two there are four Sons given to Aram, viz, Vz, Hull, Gether, and Meſech, and but one to Arphaxad, which was Selah. To Selah was born Heber; to Heber, Phaleg, the Anceſtor of Abraham, and Jocktan, the father of thoſe thirteen ſons, whoſe names we ſhall rehearſe hereafter, if occaſion be. From Elam who is firſt named, did deſcend the Elamites, a people bordering on the Medes, and therefore oft-times join'd together in the Sciptures, as, Go up, O Elam, Beſiege O Media, *Eſ.*21,2. And all the Kings of Elam, all the Kings of the Medes, *Jer.*25.25. And in the ſecond of the Acts, Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, march in rank and file, as being Nations bordering upon one another. The principal City of this people was called Elymais, mention whereof is made in the ſecond of *Macab. cap.*6.*v.*2. ſufficiently famous for the rich and magnificent Temple which was there conſecrated to Diana. A City ſeated on the Banks of the River Euleus, and neighbouring cloſe to Suſiana, which therefore is ſometimes included in the name of Elam, as Dan. 8. 2. I was (ſaith he) in the Palace of Suſa, in the Province of Elam: where Elam is not taken for the Province of the Elamites only, but as it gave denomination unto all thoſe Nations whom they after maſtered. The ſecond Son of Sem is Aſſur, of whom there is no queſtion made amongſt the Learned, but that he was the Father of the Aſſyrians, called Aſſyres in ſome old Greek Writers: Not of the whole people of that great and unweildy Empire, who ſometimes generally paſs by the name of Aſſyrians; but of the people of Aſſyria ſtrictly and properly ſo called, as it denotes the Country about Ninive (the Regal City of that Empire) which after was called Adiabene. Juxta hunc circuitum Adiabene, Aſſyria priſcis temporibus vocata, as in Ammianus Marcellinus, Lib,33. Arphaxad comes next after Aſſur, and him Joſephus makes to be the Father of the Chaldæans, called anciently Arphaxadæi, if he tell us true. But others tell us, and that more probably perhaps, that he planted in that part the Aſſyria which was firſt called Arphaxitis, afterwards Arrapachitis; by which name it occurreth in the Tables of Ptolomy. Lud the fourth ſon is generally ſaid to be the Father of the Lydians, a people of Aſia the leſs; the names of Lud, and Lydi (or Λύδοι as the Græcians call them) being much alike. And it is poſſible enough that ſome of the poſterity of this Lud might afterwards ſettle in thoſe parts, and call the Country by the name of Lud, their common Anceſtor; as the poſterity of Abraham took unto themſelves the name of Hebrews from Heber, one of the Progenitors of their Father Abraham. But that Lud ſhould in perſon go ſo far from the reſt of the Sons of Sem, I cannot eaſily imagine. For, Aram the fifth and laſt (as they ſtand in order of the Text) ſets himſelf down cloſe by his Brethren in the Land of Syria, which in the Hebrew is called Aram, and from thence the name of Aramites was given to the Inhabitants of it. Of which, and of the ſeveral Provinces which were hence denominated, we ſhall hereafter ſpeak more fully, when we come to Syria. Only take now this teſtimony & acknowledgment from the pen of Strabo. Quos nos Syros vocamus, ipſi Syri Aramenios & Arameos vocant. Thoſe (ſaith he) which we now call Syrians, do call themſelves Arameans. or Aramenians. In, and about the ſame parts, did the four ſons of Aram ſet themſelves and their Families; Vz in that part of Syria which is called Syria Damaſcena, or Aram Dammeſek: the building of the great City of Damaſcus being generally aſcribed unto him: and the Land of Vz, bordering South upon Damaſcus, taking denomination from him. The like did Hull, or Chull, the next ſon of Aram, whom both Joſephus and St. Hierom ſettle in Armenia, or Aramenia, as in Strabo: and that not improbably, conſidering that there is a Region in Armenia, which Stephanus calls Cholobetene; and divers Cities in that tract, which ſtill preſerve the Radicals of Hull, or Chull, as Cholus, Cholnata, Cholimna, Colſa, and Colana, whereof mention is made in the Tables of Ptolomy. For, Gether, the third ſon of Aram; it is not yet agreed on where to find his dwelling. Joſephus, contrary to all reaſon, placeth him in Bactria; and Mercer, with as little, in Caria, a Province of the leſſer Aſia, and Acarnania of Greece. Junius ſets him down in the Province of Caſſiotis, and Seleucis, near his Father Aram, where Ptolomy placeth Gindarus, and the Nations called by Pliny, Gindareni: Bochartus on the banks of the River Centrites, which divides Armenia from the Carduchi, as it is in Xenophon. Which River, if it were called originally Getri, as he conjectureth it might be, the controverſie were at an end. But being that we find in Ptolomy, a City of Albania, (which bordereth on Armenia) called Getara, and a River of the ſame Country called Getras; I ſee no cauſe why we ſhould ſeek further for the ſeat of Gether; though the Greek Copies (more ſubject to corruption in the times of ignorance, than the Latin were) inſtead of Getara read Gagara. But if this be too far to ſet him, we ſhall find Mas or Meſch, the laſt Son, planted nearer hand, even in the Northern parts of Syria, towards Meſopotamia, near the Hill called Maſius: at the foot whereof there is a people, which Stephanus called Maſieni; and thereabouts a River, which in Xenophon is named Maſca. Both which do evidently declare from what root they come.

Come we next to the ſecond branch of the houſe of Sem, derived from Arphaxad; whom we left ſetled in the Region of Arrapachitis, in, or near Aſſyria. Not far from which, in Suſiana, a Province of the Perſian Empire, there is a City of chief note called Sela; mention of which is made both in Ptolomy's Tables; and the 23 Book of Ammianus Marcellinus. Add unto this the authority of Euſtathius Antiochenus, who briefly thus, Σάλα ἀφ' ȣ̓ Σȣσιανὸι, The People of Suſiana came from Sala. But this as I conceive, muſt be underſtood only of that part of this people, which lived in and about the City of Sala, and not of the whole Nation of the Suſians, or Suſiani, which borrowed their denomination from another root. To Sela was born Heber, from whom the people of the Hebræi, or Hebrews, do derive their name. And to him Phaleg his firſt born, who in all probability gave name to the Town called Phalga, ſituate on the River Euphrates, not far from Seleucia: Mention whereof is made by Stephanus in his Book de Urbibus, and by Ptolomy in his Geography; where it is placed right on the banks of Euphrates, where the River Chaboras mingles waters with it; but there corruptly called Pharga, inſtead of Phalga.

But the great increaſe of Sem's poſterity came by Joktan, the ſecond Son of Eber, the Father of no fewer than thirteen Sons, whoſe names are on record in the tenth of Geneſis, where it is ſaid, that their dwelling was from Meſha, as thou goeſt to Sephar, a Mount in the Eaſt. And here I muſt crave leave to differ from Bochartus, who hath thronged Joktan and his Sons into a little corner of Arabia Fœlix, where I can find no room for them, and leſs reaſon to place them. For being that Chus the Son of Cham, and the Chiefs of his poſterity, eight in number, were planted in Arabia, as himſelf confeſſeth, it muſt needs be, that they had ſpread themſelves over all the Country, before any of the ſons of Joktan were of age ſufficient to be the Fathers of Families, and lead Colonies thither. Joktan is credibly ſuppoſed not to have been born when ſuch of Noahs poſterity as are mentioned Gen. 10. diſperſed themſelves into new Plantations; but it is evident from the Text, that none of his children were then born, if their Father were. And this Bochartus doth acknowledge in two ſeveral places. Firſt, granting that neither Phaleg, nor Joktan were preſent at the building of Babel, multo minus Joktanis filii poſt aliquot annos geniti; much leſs the ſons of Joktan begot many years after; Lib. 1. cap. 16. And ſecondly, affirming that Joktan and his children came not within the curſe of Confounded Languages, quia nondum erant geniti, becauſe then unborn, Cap. 15. Hereupon I conclude it to be very improbable that Joktan & his children ſhould find room in the beſt parts of Arabia Felix, which Chus and his poſterity had inhabited ſo long before. And as it is improbable that the ſons of Chus would plant themſelves in the worſt part of the Country for ſo many Ages, and leave the beſt and richeſt of it for ſome new adventurers: So it is impoſſible that the ſons of Joktan ſhould either be removed ſo far from the reſt of the houſe of Arphaxad, who were all planted on the Eaſt of the River Tygris, as was before ſhewed: or that they ſhould be able, had they been ſo minded, to break through the whole Countries of the Aſſyrians, Chuſites, and other Nations, to come unto the utmoſt corners of Arabia Felix. He that believes they did, or could, muſt have a ſtronger Faith than mine; but it ſhall never conduce any thing to his juſtification. Nor am I moved at all at that which ſeems to me to be his weightieſt Argument, namely, that the Arabians, particularly Joſeph Ben Abdallatif, and Mahomet Ben Jacob, two of their chief Writers affirm, that Joktan was the Founder of their Tongue and Nation; no more than I am moved to think that the Saracens are derived from Sara the Wife, and not from Hagar the Concubine and ſervant of Abraham; becauſe that people ſo report it for their greater glory.

And for the ſeveral Nations of Arabia Felix, whoſe original he aſcribes to the ſons of Joktan, I ſee ſo many tranſpoſitions of Syllables, alterations even of Radical Letters, ſuch and ſo many wreſted Originations, as by the like liberty of making quidlibet ex quolibet, it were no difficult matter to find place for them in any Country whatſoever. For how extorted and unnatural are the derivations of the Allnmæote from Almodad, of the Manitæ from Abimail, of the Jobarite from Jobab? How impoſſible is it that Jarech ſhould give name to the Iſle which Ptolomy calleth Νῆσος Ἱεράκων, Inſula Jeracuma or Accipitrum, as the Latine hath it, that is to ſay, the Iſle of Hawks, from the abundance of Hawks which were therein bred: There being another Iſland of the ſame name near unto Sardinia (ſo called for the ſelf ſame reaſon) and a Town called Jerax in Hammoniaca a Region of Egypt, to which Jarach might as well lay claim (if that would carry it) as to this Jeracum, or Acciptrum, in the Gulf of Arabia? How improbable that Ophir ſhould give name to Urphre, a poor Iſle of the Red Sea, Obal to Sinus Avalites in Æthiopia, on the other ſide of that Gulf? Or that Dicla muſt be fixed in Arabia, for no other reaſon, but becauſe the word ſignifieth a Palm-tree, of which that Country yields good plenty, as if ſome other Countries did not yield as much? Theſe and ſome other reaſons hereafter following have made me bold to differ from that learned man in this particular, whoſe induſtry and abilities I do otherwiſe honour; and rather to look for Joktan, and his ſons in the Eaſt part of the World, where the Scriptures place them; than in the South (with reference to the Wilderneſs, or Land of Madian, in one of which the Book of Geneſis was written) where Bochartus placeth them. Yet ſo far I muſt yield to that learned man, that ſome of the Deſcendants of Joktan in long tract of time, moved with the rarities of the place, might come from India, and plant themſelves upon the Sea-Coaſts of Arabia Felix; as the Arabians at this day, moved with the Wealth and Trade of India, have poſſeſſed themſelves of many of the Ports and pieces on the Shores thereof.

Now the Text telleth us of the Sons of Joktan, that their dwelling was from Meſha, as thou goeſt to Sephar, a Mount of the Eaſt; ſo that by theſe two boundaries, Meſha and Sepher, their habitation muſt be found. I know, Bochartus would have Meſha to be Muſa, a noted Port-Town on the South-weſt of Arabia Felix, and Sephar to be the City of Sephar in the South-eaſt of that Country; that City giving name to ſome Mount adjoining. But being they both lye directly South of the place in which Moſes wrote, I cannot ſee how this poſition can agree with the word of Scripture; and therefore we muſt look for both in ſome other place. And firſt to find out Meſha, we need go no further than Bochartus himſelf, who maketh Meſh; the laſt of the Sons of Aram, the Son of Sem (according to the general opinion of moſt writers elſe) to be planted in the Mountainous tracts of Meſopotamia, from him called Mons Maſius, more of which before. And then for Sephar, which the Text calleth a Mount of the Eaſt; if it be the Southern part of Mount Imaus, by Ptolomy named Bitigo, by the Moderns Gates extending from Mount Caucaſus to the Cape Comari in the hither India, as Poſtellus a right learned man doth conceive it to be; We have without more difficulty found out the dwellings of the ſons of Joktan according to the bounds laid down in holy Scripture. But for fear this may not ſatisfie, for want of ſome Seconds to Poſtellus (if Truth needs a Second) we have Siphare a City of Aria, directly Eaſt from Mons Maſius, or the dwellings of Meſh; both in the Eaſt parts of the World, with reference unto the place in which Moſes writ: Mons Maſius being placed by Ptolomy in the 74 degree of Longitude, and the 37 of Latitude; and Siphare 36 degrees more toward the Eaſt, but with no more than two degrees of Latitude ſuper-added to it. And this agreeth to the poſition aſſigned to the ſons of Joktan by Joſephus, Euſebius, and St. Hierome; the emendation of Bochartus coming in to help. It is affirmed by Joſephus that the Joktanites poſſeſſed all that Tract, ἀπὸ Κωφῆνος ποταμοῦ τῆς Ἰνδικῆς, καὶ τῆς πρὸς αὐτοῦ Σύρας τινὰ, which lieth about Kophenus a River of India, together with ſuch parts of Syria as did border near it. Theſe words being borrowed from Joſephus both by Euſebius & S. Hierome; the firſt inſtead of Syria reads Seria, and the other Jeria, but neither rightly: there being no ſuch place in the world as Jeria; and Syria & Seria (or the Country of the Seres) lying too far off to border on Cophenus a River of India. Bochartus therefore helps them out, conceiving (I think right enough) that for Syria we ſhould there read Aria, and withal granting, as he may, that Aria in the largeſt latitude and extent thereof, comprehending Parapomiſus & Arachoſia, extendeth as far Eaſtward as the River Cophenus. So that we have found out a dwelling for the ſons of Joktan, betwixt Mons Maſius & Siphare, a Town of Aria: which probably might give name to ſome Mount adjoining, as Saphar by Bochartus is ſuppoſed to do to ſome of the Arabian hills bordering near unto it. And as theſe ſituations do agree exactly with the meaning of thoſe antient Writers, ſo is it alſo very ſutable to the other Plantations of the ſons of Arphaxad. For this I look on as a matter out of all diſpute, that Phaleg and Joktan being both too young to go upon any new Adventures, when ſo many of the reſidue of Noah's poſterity removed toward Shinaar; kept themſelves under the tuition of their Grandfather Noah; or at leaſt wandred not from the Plantation of their Father Arphaxad: till Joktan's Sons, being grown to be Fathers of Families, were forced to caſt about for new habitations. And when neceſſity compelled them to ſeek new ſeats, I would fain know why they ſhould think of making to themſelves a way to Arabia Felix, through Countries peopled and poſſeſſed a long time before; when they had Elbow-room enough on the Eaſt of Tygris, and the unpeopled Countries of ſome parts of India lay ſo near at hand.

Nor want we as good evidence and as little forced for ſome of their Plantations in the Eaſtern parts, as Bochartus hath fancied for them in Arabia: For Almodad might probably be the Founder of Almodena, the Metropolis of Meſopotamia, not far from Meſia or Mons Maſius the Weſtern Boundary: and Jarad of the Nation of the Arachoſians inhabiting near Siphare the Eaſtern limit, aſſigned unto the Sons of Joktan. With what an eaſie change might Obal or Chobal be ſuppoſed to be the Father of the Cabolites of Paropamiſus? Hadoram of the Orites, an Indian people near unto the other? But theſe North-Eaſtern parts being peopled, or not very pleaſant, how many of the Sons of Joktan ſhall we find in the Southern parts of India? Bochartus himſelf confeſſeth that the Land of Ophir (another of the Sons of Jocktan) was a part of India, but whether Sumatra, Taprobane, or Aurea Cherſoneſus, I diſpute not here. Like evidence there is for Saba, remembrances of whoſe name are found in Sabalaſſa one of the mouths of the River Indus, Sabana, a City of the Golden Cherſoneſe, a River in the ſame Tract named Sabanus, and a City called Sabe: beſides the whole Nation of the Sabæi mentioned by Dionyſius in his Periegeſis. And though ſome late Criticks read it Siba inſtead of Sabæi, (as that there was an Indian Nation called Sibæ, is confeſſed on all ſides:) yet ſeeing Euſtathius finds the Sabæ in this Country alſo, I cannot ſee but that there ſhould be room enough in India for both people to dwell in. For Abimail another of the Sons of Joktan; we find more evident footſteps of him in the Mali or Malli an Indian people, in Maleta & Maliba two Towns of India, in Malæus an Indian Mountain, and finally in Malæi Colon a Promontory of Aurea Cherſoneſus, than in the Manitæ of Bochartus. For if Abimail ſignifie the Father of the Mali as he ſaith it doth; he was more like to be the Father of the Mali commonly and literally ſo called, whom we find in India; than that we ſhould be forced to look for them in the Manitæ, or look for the Manitæ in the houſe of Abimail. If Dicla muſt be planted in Arabia Felix for no better reaſon, than becauſe the word ſignifieth a Palm, whereof there is plenty in that Country; I doubt not but to find as many Palms to plant by amongſt the Indians, as Bochartus doth among the Arabians. And finally, if Chatramis, or Chatramatitis an Arabian Region, have ſuch reſemblance to the name of Chatſarmaveth, as to take that Appellation from him, as Bochartus telleth us it did: we may conclude with equal, if not better reaſon, that the Chadramatitæ an Indian people, ſeated upon the mouth of the River Indus, upon whoſe ſtreams ſome of the reſidue of his Brethren had their habitations, had their firſt Original from that Chatſarmaveth. For Havilah or Chavilah; the Ancients generally ſet him in the Indies alſo, not far from Saba and Ophir two of his Brethren: to whoſe authority I ſubmit, becauſe I find a Province in the Golden Cherſoneſe, called the Kingdom of Ava, and thought to be ſo called from this very man. And I conceive the like alſo of the reſt of the Joktanites whoſe habitations might be found in India, or near Meſh and Sepha, if one would take that liberty of Criticiſing, altering and tranſpoſing letters, as Bochartus doth, only to fix them in a place where they never were. Suffice it that this ſhort Eſſay may inform the Reader, that Bochartus was too confident a lover of his own opinion, where he affirms, Nec locum alium Sephar nomine, nec ulla poſterorum Joktan in Aria aut India veſtigia jam ſupereſſe; that is to ſay, that there is no ſuch place as Sephar, nor any track or footſtep of the Sons of Joktan to be found in Aria, or the Indies. The contrary whereof is ſo clearly evidenced.

Theſe were the Generations and diſperſions of the Sons of Sem, contracted in a narrower compaſs than either the poſterity of Cham or Japhet: of whom the firſt, beſides the great footing which he had in Aſia, did poſſeſs all Africk, and the other, beſides his ſhare in the greater Aſia, filled almoſt all the leſſer Aſia, and the whole Continent of Europe with the Iſles thereof, with his fruitful Progeny. And firſt beginning with Cham, we find him the Father of four Sons, that is to ſay, Cuſh, Miſraim, Phut, and Canaan; of which, only Phut the third Son hath no iſſue aſſigned him. To Cuſh the eldeſt Son were born Seba and Havilah, and Sabtah, Nimrod, Sabtecha, and Raamah, who was the Father of Sheba and Dedan. And unto Mizraim the ſecond Son were born Ludim, and Amamim, Læhabim, Napthuhim, Pathruſim, Capthorim, and Caſluhim, who was the Father of Philiſtim. Of Canaan and his iſſue we ſhall ſpeak of hereafter. In the mean time we will diſpoſe of theſe firſt branches of the ſtock of Cham, beginning firſt with Chus the eldeſt, and ſo deſcending to the reſt of this firſt Line. And firſt for Chuſh, though it be generally ſaid both by the Greek and Jewiſh Writers, that he was the Father of the Æthiopians in the heart of Africa; yet upon better ſearch he is found to have gone no further than Arabia, poſſeſſing himſelf of a good part of that which is called Petræa, and ſome part of Arabia Felix. For whereas Zippora the wife of Moſes, was daughter unto Jethro the Prieſt or Prince of Madian, Exod. 2. v. 16, &c. and yet is called an Æthiopian woman, in the 12. of Num. v. 1. It muſt needs be, that by Æthiopian in the laſt place, muſt be meant an Arabian: for Madian doubtleſs was a City of Arabia near unto the Red Sea, as is apparent by Joſephus for the Jews, Ptolomy for the Græcians, and S. Hierom for the Latine Writers. But we ſhall canvaſs this more throughly in its proper place: the ſtrength of reaſon ſerving for a ſupplement of that one defect, which is, that there is no remainder of the name of Chus in any of the Cities, Promontories, Hills or Rivers of all that Country, by which his planting there might be made more evident. Seba, the eldeſt Son of Chus, ſets himſelf down on the ſhores of the Red Sea, , as near his Father as he could; becoming the Original of the great and wealthy Nation of the Sabæans: the ſo much celebrated City of Saba, memorable for abundance of the beſt Frankincenſe, being their Metropolis or head City. A Nation ſeated in the moſt Southern part of this Peninſula, ſubject in Solomon's time to that famous Lady called in the old Teſtament from her Country, the Queen of Sheba; and in the new Teſtament from the ſituation of it, the Queen of the South: the holy Spirit in both places giving her an ample and remarkable teſtimony.

For Havilah or Chavilah the ſecond of the Sons of Chuſh moſt probable it is that he poſſeſſed himſelf of that part of Arabia, which lay neareſt unto Babylonia, and that he gave name to that Land of Havilah, which the River Piſon is ſaid to encompaſs, Gen. 2. v. 21. Some footſteps of his name remain in the Chaulotæi of Eratoſthenes, the Chaulaſii of Feſtus Anienus, but more plainly in the Chavelei of Pliny; being all three but one people, though thus diverſly named; and all of them planted towards the Perſian Gulf, and ſo to Babylon. On the ſame ſhore of the Perſian Gulf, we are to look for Sabta the third Son of Chus, where Ptolomy informs us of a City called Saphta, and of an Iſland in the ſame Gulf called Sophta alſo. From whence in probabillity ſome of this people might paſs over into Perſia, on the other ſide of the Gulf, and there give names to the Sabtæi, which by the tranſpoſition of the letter T, are by Ptolomy called the Stabæi. That Nimrod the fourth Son of Chus did firſt plant himſelf in Babylonia, the Scripture is ſo plain and poſitive, that nothing need be added to it. Of Sabteca the fifth Son, I confeſs I can find no track in any of the ancient Authors. For why we ſhould admit of ſo great a change, as firſt, of B into M, and then of T into D, (which could not eaſily be done by very careleſs Tranſcribers) and ſo find Stabeca in Samidace, a City or Country of the Carmanians on the Perſian ſide of the Gulf, I can ſee no reaſon: And therefore rather chuſe to mingle him and his Poſterity with the Son of Sabta, and the children of his brother Regma, all planted on the ſame ſhore of the Perſian Gulf. For that Regma (our Engliſh Bibles call him Raama) was ſetled on the banks of the Bay of Perſia, hath ſo good authority, that there is no diſpute to be made of that: Ptolomy placing there the City of Regma (Regama it is called in the Latin Tranſlation) by which name it occurreth in Stephanus alſo in his Book De Urbibus, Καὶ Ρῆγμα περὶ τὸν Περσικὸν κόλπον. And Regma, on the Perſian Gulf, as his words there are. And not far from thence we are to look for his Son Sheba; both being joyned together in the Book of God; and both there are ſaid to buſie and employ themſelves in the Trade of Merchandizing; The Merchants of Shebah and Raamah (ſaith the Text) they were thy Merchants; they occupied in thy Fairs with chief of all Spices, and with all precious Stones, and Gold, Ezek. 27. 22. So that the Nations of the Sabæans, though deſcended at the firſt from ſeveral Parents, inhabited the lower parts of Arabia Felix from one Sea to the other; as evidently appeareth by thoſe words of Pliny; where he informeth us moſt truly, that the Sabæans, an Arabian people, well known for their abundance of Frankincenſe, ad utraque maria porrectis gentibus habitare, had ſpread themſelves over all the Country, even from the Red Sea to the Gulf of Perſia. Finally, in the ſame track we find Dedan the other Son of Regma, and the laſt of all the Sons of Chus: there being on the mouth of the Perſian Gulf (but on the Arabian Coaſt thereof) not only a City, but a Province called by the name of Dedan, which both Ortelius, and ſome other late Geographers do take notice of. And more than ſo, the Prophet Ezekiel joyns him with his brother Sheba, and makes them both to follow the ſame trade of Merchandiſe; The men of Dedan were thy Merchants, Chap. 27. 15. Sheba and Dedan, and the Merchants of Tarſhiſh. Cap. 38. 13. They brought thee horns of Ivory, and Ebony, ſaith the Prophet in the former Text.

The head of the next houſe of the race of Cham, was Miſraim, the ſecond Son, of whom it is generally affirmed, that leaving his elder brother Chus and his poſterity, in the rich and delectable Countries of Arabia Felix, and the next parts to Babylonia, or the land of Shinaar, he went with his own Son and his brother Phut, into Africa, and there planted Egypt. Of this there is no queſtion amongſt the Learned, though all the tracks and footſteps of Miſraim be quite worn out: unleſs any thing of it were preſerved in the word Meſori, by which the Egyptians anciently called the firſt Month in the year; or in that of Meſre, by which name the Arabians call Egypt, to this day: But being Egypt is called Miſraim in the Hebrew Bibles, that only is ſufficient without further evidence. And therefore leaving him in Egypt, let us look after his Son Ludim, whom he ſent to people Æthiopia, the next Country to him. For that this Ludim, was the Father of thoſe Æthiopians, many good reaſons are alledged. Firſt, from the Texts of Eſaiah, Chap. 66. 19. and Jer. 46. 9. where Lud is ſaid to be very ſkilful in drawing the Bow; which agrees punctually with the Character given unto the Æthiopians by Strabo, Herodotus, Diodorus Siculus, and others of the ancient Writers. Secondly, from the joyning of the children or people of Ludim with thoſe of Phul, in the place of Eſaiah before cited: which Phul may very probably be the City which the Græcians call Phylæ, ſituate not far from Syene, on the very borders of Æthiopia, and antiently inhabited both by the Æthiopians, and Egyptians, as Strabo, and ſome others of the Antients witneſs. Thirdly, from the conjunction of the Children of Lud or Ludim, with thoſe of Chus, on the Gulf of Arabia, and thoſe of Phut, or Lybians, on the other ſide of Mount Atlas, both next neighbours to them; as in Ezek. 30. 5. and that of Jer. above mentioned; (where our Engliſh very ſtrangely rendereth Ludim by the name of Lydians) which dwell too far off both from Chuſh and Phut, to be joyned together in one action. But of this, more than enough already, the Arguments being ſo ſtrong, and ſo moſt demonſtrative. I go on thereſore to the next; only obſerving by the way, that the Æthiopians mentioned in the Texts of our Engliſh Bibles, are not theſe of Africa, but the Chuſites of Arabia Fælix; our Tranſlators always rendring Chus by Æthiopia. The Anamim, who come next, I know not where to find, or in what place to look for them, unleſs they were the ſame with the Amantes of Solinus, and the Hammanientes of Pliny, a people ſeated on the Sea-ſide near the greater Syrtis, to which the neighbourhood of the Lehabim may give ſome countenance; who ſeem to be the ſame with the people of Lybia, a Province ſeated betwixt Egypt and Cyrenaica, and were called Lybiægyptii by the old Geographers, to difference them from the Inhabitants of the greater Lybia, whereof more hereafter. For the Napthuhim, I am alſo at a loſs, unleſs we find them ſomewhere in Cyrenaica; and that ſome remnant of the name be in Aptuchi fanum, which occurrs in Ptolomy. But for the Pathruſin, I think no queſtion need be made, but that they were the people of that Province of Egypt, which in divers places of the Scripture is called Pathros, as Eſai. 11. 11. Jer. 44. 1. Ezek. 29. 14. and ſeems to be that part of Egypt, which is called Thebais, where Ptolomy placeth Pathyris, an In-land Town not far from Thebe, (And Pathuris the Greek or Septuagint term that, which in the Hebrew is called Pathros.)

Hitherto we have found the Nations which deſcended from the Sons of Miſraim, in Egypt, and the Countries adjoyining to it. And there, or thereabouts, we are to look for Cophtorim, and Caſluhim, the two Sons remaining. I know there hath been great pains taken to find the Caſluhim in Colchis, and the Cophtorim in Cappadocia, or Pontus, not far from Trabezond, where notwithſtanding there is no track of the names remaining. But this being ſo far off from Egypt, in, and near which both Miſraim himſelf, and all the reſt of his Sons were planted, I can by no means yield to it, though to content ſuch learned men as would fain have it ſo, I think it poſſible enough that ſome of the Egyptians in ſucceeding times, moved with the Fame of that great wealth which Colchis was ſuppoſed to yield to ſome Adventurers; might leave their native ſoil to inhabit there. And therefore I think rather, with the learned Junius, that the Caſluhim were firſt planted in the Region of Caſſiotis (not far from Damiata, a chief Town of Egypt) which retains ſomewhat of the name, and ſo doth Coptus, an old City of Egypt, of the name of Cophtorim. Or if it did not, as it doth, why the name of Cophti, which at this day is given to the Chriſtians of Egypt, may not be thought to have its firſt riſe from Cophtorim, rather than that they are ſo called quaſi Ægophti, corruptly for Ægyptii, I muſt needs ſay I am not ſatisfied. Beſides, it being clear in Scripture, that the Caſluhim and Cophtorim dwelt near together, and that the Philiſtins are ſaid to deſcend from Caſluhim, if Caſluhim ſhould go for Colchis, and Cophtorim for Cappadocia, we muſt firſt carry them I know not how far off from the reſt of their Brethren, againſt the method of all Plantations; and then bring the Philiſtins back again from Colchis, to find a dwelling on the borders of the land of Egypt, from whence their Anceſtors and Allies were ſo far remote. Whereas by ſetling theſe two Nations amongſt the reſt of their Brethren, the journey of the Philiſtins unto Canaan, and ſetling themſelves in the poſſeſſions of the Avim (a Canaanitiſh people) whom they had ſubdued, Deut. 2.25. is both eaſie and natural. But before we follow theſe Philiſtins further in their new Plantation amongſt the Canaanites, we will firſt ſee what became of Phut, the third ſon of Cham. And if we guide our ſelves in this Labyrinth by the clew of Antiquity, we ſhall find him ſetled Weſt of his Brother Miſraim, and ſo the Atlantick Ocean, the Lake of Tritonis parting their Dominions. Some Relicts of the name there were in the time of Joſephus, who telleth us of a River of Mauritania, which in his time retained the name of Phut: Pliny makes mention of it, alſo Ptolomy takes notice of a River in thoſe parts called Pthuth, which comes very near it. And ſo doth Iſidore Origin l. 2. But St. Hierome in my mind puts it out of doubt, whoſe words I ſhall put down, and ſo leave Africa; Phut Lybiæ, a quo & Mauritaniæ fluvius uſque ad præſens Phut dicitur, omniſque circa eum Regio Phytenſis; cujus rei multi Scriptores tam Græci quam Latini teſtes ſunt. Where we have not only a River, but a Province of the name of Phut, and many ancient Writers both Greek and Latine called to witneſs to it.

And now we ſhould proceed to Canaan and his Sons (eleven in all) being the fourth and laſt branch of the houſe of Cham. But being they all kept together in or near the land of Canaan, we ſhall find him there; or meet with them in ſuch Plantations and Colonies as they ſent abroad, under the title of Phœnicians. And therefore go we next to Japhet, whoſe Tents God promiſed to enlarge, as indeed he did; ſpreading his branches over Europe, the leſſer Aſia, and a great part of the geater alſo. To him were born ſeven Sons in all, that is to ſay, Gomer and Magog, Madai and Javan, Tubal Meſech, and Thyrus: Of which the iſſue of two only are upon record, viz. Aſchenaz, Riphath, and Togarma, the Sons of Gomer; Eliſha, Tarſhiſh, Kittim, and Dodanim, the Sons of Javan. And firſt for Gomer and his Sons, the firſt poſſeſſed themſelves of convenient dwellings in the greater and the leſſer Aſia: Gomer himſelf firſt planting in the mountanous places of Albania, where the Mountains called Cimmerini long retained his name; and after changing that unpleaſant and unfruitful dwelling for the Plains of Phrygia, in which the City Cimmeris, in the days of Pliny, did preſerve his memory. For that the poſterity and people of Gomer, called at firſt Gomerians, came to take the name of Cimmerians, as of Cimbri afterwards, is generally agreed upon amongſt the Learned. Now then, as Gomer fixt himſelf in the Greater Phrygia, ſo did his eldeſt ſon Aſchenaz in Phrygia minor, and the Country of Troas, ſpreading himſelf along upon the Helleſpont, and thoſe Greekiſh Seas, as far as Bythinia. In all which places there were left ſome memory of this Plantation. For in Bithinia there is a Bay called Sinus Aſcanius, together with a River and a Lake of the ſame name alſo. And in the Leſſer Phrygia, and the Country of Troas, there was both a City and a Province adjoyning, anciently known by the name of Aſcania; and the Aſcaniæ Inſulæ alſo on the coaſt thereof. Nor is it any thing unlikely, but that in honour of this Aſchenaz, the Kings and great men of thoſe parts, took the name of Aſcanius. Of which name, beſides Aſcanim the ſon of Æneas, we find a King mentioned in the ſecond of Homers Iliads, which came unto the aid of Priamus at the ſiege of Troy. In the ſame quarters of the World we find Ripath alſo, the founder of the Riphei, a people dwelling in the Eaſt parts of Bithynia, and ſpreading alſo over Paphlagonia: In both which Provinces there are ſome remnants of his name to be found amongſt the Antients. For, beſides that Joſephus ſaith expreſly, that the Paphlagonians antiently were called Rephei; there is mention in Appollonius's Argonauticks of the River Rhebæus, which riſing in Bithynia, emptieth it ſelf into the Pontus Euxinus, near to Paphlagonia; of which River Pliny alſo doth inform us: and Stephanus doth not only acquaint us with the River it ſelf, but tells us alſo of a Region on the ſame name, and of a people thereabouts, which are called Rhebæi. Nor need we look much further to find out the ſeat of Togarma the third ſon of Gomer, whom the Prophet Ezekiel not only joyneth with his Father as two neighbouring Nations, but makes both of them to lie Northwards of Judæa; Gomer and all his bands, the houſe of Togarma in the North quarters, and all his bands, cap.38.6. So that they do not gueſs amiſs, who place Togarma and his Progeny in Cappadocia: a Country not only bordering near to the Plantations of Gomer, and lying on the North of the land of Canaan, but very well ſtocked with an excellent breed of Mules and Horſes, as Strabo teſtifieth in the eleventh Book of his Geography; with which commodities they traded at the Fairs of Tyre, as the ſame Prophet tells us of them, Chap. 27. 14. But for a more evident proof of this, that Togarma's dwelling muſt be found in Cappadocia; we muſt firſt know that the Greek Tranſlators call him generally by the name of Togarma; and then, that antiently there was a people in Cappadocia and Galatia, whom Strabo calleth Trocmi, and Tully Trogmi; by Stephanus they are named Trocmeni, and Trogmades in the Council of Chalcedon, in which Cyriacus Biſhop of the Trogmades (Κυριακὸς Ἐπίσκοπος Τρογμάδων) is often mentioned.

Having thus done with Gomer, and the ſons of Gomer, we will next purſue the reſt of the ſons of Japhet, except Javan only, whom with his four ſons we will keep together. And the next ſon of Japhet is Magog, concerning whom there hath been much diſpute and difference amongſt our Antiquaries, ſome making him the Father of the Scythians, and ſome of the Goths, and others finally of the Tartars; all of them thinking that ſuch terrible names as Gog and Magog, could not belong to any but ſuch terrible Nations. And poſſible enough it is, that ſome of his poſterity in ſucceeding times, finding their own ſeats too narrow for them, might remove further Northwards, and be the founders of ſome Scythian and Tartarian Nation; but that Magog himſelf in his firſt Plantation, ſhould wander ſo far out of the way from the reſt of his Brethren, when he had elbow-room enough amongſt them, I cannot eaſily imagine. When therefore I find a Region in Stephauus called Gogareus, betwixt Iberia and Cholchis; and read in Pliny, that the City of Cœlo-Syria, which the Græcians call Hierapolis, was by the Syrians themſelves called Magog; I ſhall not trouble my ſelf to look for Magog any where elſe, than in thoſe Countries where they have left ſuch evident

Land-marks to diſcern themſelves by. But this we ſhall the better ſee by looking out the dwellings of his two brethren, Meſech and Tubal, who being joined together with Gog and Magog, Ezek. 38. 2. and 39. 1. are very unlike to have their dwellings far aſunder: or that they could concur in any publick Action againſt the Jews, according to the ſcope and purpoſe of the holy Prophet. Now it is probable (if not more) that Meſech, whom the Antients named Moſoch, ſeated himſelf on the North and North-Eaſt of Syria, in the confines of Colchis and Armenia, and ſo unto the Caſpian or Hyrcanian Sea. For all along that Tract runs a ridge of Hills, which Pliny, Ptolomy, and Pomponius Mela call Montes Moſchici, diſterminating Colchis from Armenia, and both from Iberia; and moſt like to be the dwelling of Meſech or Moſoch, and to take denomination from him. And this I am the rather induced to think, becauſe Tubal, whom the Scriptures generally join together with Meſech, is by moſt Writers ſaid to have ſetled himſelf in Iberia, the next Province to it. Joſephus alſo telling us, that antiently the Iberi were called Theobeli, though called Iberians afterwards on ſome new occaſion. And hereunto the conſtant tradition of the Spaniards gives ſome good authority, who boaſt of their deſent from Tubal; which can no otherwiſe be granted, than as they were a Colony of theſe Iberians, from whence the Continent of Spain was once called Iberia; and where one of the principal Rivers is ſtill called Iberus. For Madai, the third Son of Japhet, it is moſt plain by the authority of Scripture (were there no proof elſe) that he was the Father of the Medes; who in the book of Daniel, and that of Heſter, are repreſented to us by no other name than that of Madai.

Thus having took a view of thoſe who fixt themſelves in either, or in both the Aſia's; let us look on Thyrus, Javan, and the Sons of Javan, who not contented with their dwellings in the leſſer Aſia, filled all Europe by degrees with their numerous progenies. And firſt beginning with Javan as the Elder Brother, moſt Authors make him the Original of thoſe Greek Nations which paſs under the general names of Iones; and there is very good ground for the aſſertion, conſidering that the Greek Tranſlators of the Bible inſtead of Javan, read Jovan, and that all thoſe who elſewhere ordinarily are called Iones, are by Homer, one of the ancienteſt of the Greeks, named Iaones. Now Javan and Jaon ſound ſo like each other, that one may very well conclude, that they were the ſame. A name not only proper to the Athenians, and their Colonies, (though probable enough firſt belonging to them of Attica) but comprehending the Bœotians and Achæans alſo; yea, and extending alſo into Macedonia, as appears Dan. 8. 21. where Alexander the Great, in the Hebrew is called King of Javan, which we Engliſh Græcia. Nor do we much diſ-joyn Javan from the reſt of that ſtock, by carrying him croſs the Seas into another part of the World; for he might go along with Gomer in his ſecond Plantation; and, leaving him well ſetled in the greater Phrygia, and his Son Askenaz in the leſſer; might then with very little trouble (and no improbability at all) paſs over the Helleſpont, and plant himſelf in Attica, called at firſt Ionia, ſaith Plutarch in the life of Theſeus. Or if any one notwithſtanding conceive this for too great a leap, and will rather think with Hecatæus, that the Iones came out of Aſia into Greece (as Strabo cites him to that purpoſe) I ſhall not much contend againſt that opinion; ſo it be alſo granted on the other ſide, that Javan, not having room enough on the ſhores of Aſia, paſſed over into Greece, as a Land unoccupied. With Javan went Eliſha his eldeſt Son, the Father of the Æoles, or Æolians, on the Aſian ſide, as Joſephus hath it; and the Founder of Elis in Peloponneſus, and Planter of the Græcian Iſles, which by the Prophet Ezekiel 27. 7. are called the Iſles of Eliſha. And it agrees exceeding well with the Iſles of Græce, what by the Prophet is affirmed of the Iſles of Eliſha; namely, that the Inhabitants thereof did trade to Tyre with Blew and Purple in which ſome of the Græcian Iſles were ſuch excellent Artiſans, that Carpathus had the name of Porthyrie, and Cithera was called Πορφυροῦσα; only from the abundance of Purple, which they had amongſt them. Not to ſay any thing of Coos, Niſyrus, and Gyarus, and ſome other of the Cyclades, renowned in good Authors, for that Commodity.

A ſhorter Journey, but withal a far ſhorter Territory, fell to the lot of Tarſhiſh the ſecond Son; whom Javan, when he travelled further upon new diſcoveries, left ſetled in Cilicia, a Province of the leſſer Aſia; where either he, or ſome of his Poſterity, in honour of him, built the City of Tarſus, the principal City of that Province. For that Tarſhiſh in thoſe early days ſhould go into Spain, and there build Tarteſſus, I take to be a ſtrange (if not idle) Romance; that Town being built by the Phœnicians, many Ages after, without relation unto Tarſhiſh, or his memory either. What Voyages or Plantations thoſe of Cilicia or Tarſus made in times ſucceeding, as I no where find, ſo it is not material to my preſent purpoſe; which principally is to ſettle the Sons of Noah in their firſt habitations. On therefore unto Cittim, the third Son of Javan, whom Joſephus ſetleth firſt in the Iſle of Cyprus, where he finds a City called Citium, the birth-place of Zeno the Stoick, thence ſurnamed Κιτιεὺς. Joſephus is herein followed by St. Hierom in his Notes on Geneſis, in whoſe time (as Pintus telleth us in his Comment on Ezekiel) the Town of Citium was ſtill ſtanding; ſo do Euſtathius in his Hexameron, and divers others. The Author of the Book of Maccabees ſets him further off, giving the name of Cittim unto Macedonia. After that (ſaith the Author) Alexander the Son of Philip, went forth of the land of Chethim, and ſhew Darius King of the Perſians and Medes, Cap. 1. 1. And after in the 8. Chapter of the ſame Book, verſ. 5. Perſeus King of Macedon is called King of the Cittims. But this doth no way contradict that of his firſt planting in Cyprus, where it is very probable that he made his dwelling for a time, by reaſon of the neighbourhood of his Brother Tarſhiſh (Cilicia and the City of Tarſus lying near unto it,) But finding in time that Iſland to be either too barren, or too ſmall for his people; and that the other parts both of Græce and Aſia were taken up already by the firſt Adventurers, he might finally fix himſelf, or ſome of his poſterity, in Macedonia, as a ſpare place which no body could lay claim unto. That either he or any of his Sons did plant firſt in Italy, which I ſee Bochartus would fain have, were againſt the method of Plantations; and he muſt give them wings to fly that conveyeth them thither, when as yet Mankind was not taught the uſe of ſhipping, or not accuſtomed at leaſt to make long voyages. But that in courſe of time, as the World grew fuller, and that Greece was not able to contain its multitudes, ſome of the race of Cittim might paſs over into Italy, the paſſage thither from ſome of the Ports of Greece being ſhort and eaſie, I am apt enough to believe, and in its proper place ſhall declare my ſelf for it. Nor can I otherwiſe agree with him, as concerning Dodanim, whom againſt all right and reaſon he hath placed in Gaul; making the River Rhodanus, one of the principal of that Country, to be named of him; whom the Greeks, miſtaking the letter Daleth for that of Reſh (as indeed the letters are ſo like, that one may very eaſily be miſtook for the other) moſt commonly preſent unto us by the name of Rhodanim. Admitting which, it is more proper, in my mind, to ſettle Rhodanim for a while in the Iſle of Rhodes, lying ſo near the dwellings of his other brethren; till wanting room for the increaſe of his poſterity in ſo ſmall an Iſland, he might coaſt along the ſhores of Peloponneſus, and fix himſelf finally in Epirus by his brother Eliſha; where in the Province of the Moloſſians, we ſhall find a City called Dodona, without any ſuch miſtake or change of letters, as before is mentioned. For that the three furtheſt parts of Europe in reſpect of Aſia, ſhould be planted all at once by theſe ſons of Javan, is ſo incredible an imagination, that he muſt have a very ſtrong fancy or be of very light belief, which can entertain it. Finally as for Thyras the laſt ſon of Japhet. having accompanied his brother Javan to the ſhores of Aſia, and ſeeing him paſſed over the Seas to Greece, he took the opportunity of the next Strait or Fretum (ſince called Thracius Boſphorus) and fixed himſelf in Thrace, which Country he gave name unto, as moſt Writers teſtifie. Nor want there ſuch apparent footſteps of the name of Thyras, beſides the name of Thracia (as ſome ſpell the word) which may add good authority to this general teſtimony; there being both a River and an Haven-town not far from Bizantium, which Pliny, Ptolomy and Mela call Athyras; a River and Town called Tyras in the Province of Moeſia, bordering next to Thrace, whereof moſt of all the old Geographers have taken notice; and finally the Thracians calling their God, Mars, by the name of Thyras. Not to ſay any thing of Tereus, Therops, and ſome others of the Kings of Thrace, whoſe names come very near unto that of Thyras, as the firſt founder of their Nation.

Thus have we ſeen the ſeveral Generations and Diſperſions of the Sons of Noah, ſo far forth as their names are regiſtred in holy Scripture: theſe being the Heads and Leaders of thoſe ſeveral Tribes which joyned together in the project of the building of Babel, and afterwards diſperſed themſelves, as before was ſhewn. But that no more than theſe (I mean heads of Families) deſcended in ſo long a time from the loyns of Noah; that they ſhould have towards the new peopling of the world, in an hundred years (for ſo long it muſt be at leaſt from the Flood to the building of Babel) no more than ſixteen Sons in all; and ten of thoſe ſixteen go childleſs alſo to the grave, is not a thing to be imagined. Nor is it to be thought, that all the people which were born ſince the Flood till then, could meet together at one place as by inſpiration; or being met, would joyn together in a work of ſo little profit; or, that if Noah or Sem had been there amongſt them, they would not have diſſwaded them from that fooliſh enterpriſe. And therefore I ſhould rather be of their opinion, which think that Noah fixed himſelf in thoſe parts, which lay neareſt to the place where the Ark took land: and having planted as far Eaſtward as he thought convenient, ſent out the ſurpluſage of his people under the Conduct of one or more of theſe Undertakers; directing them perhaps to the land of Shinaar, where himſelf had dwelt before the Flood. Where being come, and deſtitute of graver and more ſober counſels, they fell upon that vain attempt, which became their ruin; and made them ſcatter and diſperſe themſelves into ſo many Companies. For in my mind Sir Walter Rawleigh pleads the point exceeding ſtrongly, that it muſt needs be that Noah was ſetled in the Eaſt, and had well peopled all thoſe parts which lay neareſt to him, before he ſent his Troop abroad upon new diſcoveries. For being it is expreſly ſaid in holy Scripture, that as they went from the Eaſt, They found a plain in the Land of Shinaar; it muſt needs follow without controverſie, that they came from the Eaſt Countries into Shinaar or Babylonia, and not from any part of Armenia (as the vulgar opinion is) which lay North thereof. Now that the Countries whence they came were not left utterly deſolate upon this remove, but very ſufficiently provided both of men and Cities, appeareth by thoſe huge Armies which Zoroaſter the King of Bactria, and Staurobates a King of the Indians, were able to bring into the field. Of whom the firſt being invaded by Ninus the Aſſyrian Monarch, encountred him with an Army of 400000 fighting men; the other on the like occaſion out-vied Semiramis for numbers: and yet her Army did conſiſt, as we read in Diodorus Siculus, of three millions and a half of men, beſides 10000 armed Waggons; whereof if we believe but the third part, it may ſerve to prove that the Eaſt muſt needs be planted before this Expedition towards Babylonia. For conſidering that Ninus the husband of Semiramis was but the third in deſcent from Nimrod, (that is to ſay, the ſon of Belus, the ſon of Nimrod) it had been a moſt impoſſible thing that ſuch a vaſt increaſe ſhould be made only out of Colonies in ſo ſhort a time, as needs muſt be between the planting of the Countries before ſpecified, and theſe two great actions; unleſs God raiſed them out of ſtones, or by ſome ſuch miracle, to abate the pride of theſe Uſurpers over other Nations. Without a miracle of this nature (which I conceive no wiſe man would expect to find) it is, I ſay, a thing impoſſible that Staurobates ſhould exceed Semiramis in number of men, as Diodorus ſaith he did; he being but a Caſtling of a ſecond Swarm, and ſhe the great Commandreſs of that part of the world from whence he came upon a ſecond or a third Plantation. Add unto this, that thoſe who have recorded the Acts of Alexander the Great, aſſure us that he found more Cities, and ſumptuoſities in that little Kingdom of Porus, which lay ſide by ſide to the Eaſt of the River Indus, than in all his other travels and undertakings: And this may ſerve inſtead of a further evidence, that the Eaſt Countries were not planted after this diſperſion, but built, and peopled, and reduced under forms of Government, as ſoon as any in the World. Nor know I elſewhere to find either Noah himſelf, or Sem and Japhet, unleſs they ſtaid behind with their Father Noah, or were diſpoſed of by themſelves in their ſeveral quarters: there being none of thoſe, though moſt diligent men, who have writ of the Plantations of the World upon this diſperſion, that either ſpeak of any Nations planted by them, or of their ſetling in the Colonies of any one of their deſcendants. Which is to me a very ſtrong Argument that they came not with the reſt to the Plains of Shinaar, but tarried ſtill in thoſe Habitations wherein God had placed them.

Againſt this I can ſee but two Objections of any moment; one from the Text, the other from an old Tradition amongſt the Jews. That from the Text is gathered from thoſe words of Moſes, where having made his Catalogue of the Families of the Sons of Noah, he adds, And by theſe were the Nations divided in the Earth, after the Flood, Gen. 10. v. ult. But theſe words, as I take it, do relate only unto that diviſion which was made upon occaſion of the Confuſion of Languages, when they were forced to give over their work, and ſort themſelves into ſeveral Companies: and not to ſuch Plantations as were made before: who being all of one tongue, though in divers dwellings, could not be looked upon as ſeveral and divided Nations. For the Tradition of the Jews, 'tis this, that from the beginning of the World to the building of Babel, that language which in after-times was called the Hebrew, was the the common language of Mankind; and that it did continue uncorrupt in the houſe of Eber; (whence it had the name) becauſe he joined not with the reſt in that proud and ungodly undertaking. Hence it may poſſibly be objected, that if there were any others of the off-ſpring of Noah, which came not with the reſt to the Plains of Shinaar, and conſequently had no hand in that vain attempt, they could not come within the curſe of Confounded Languages, but muſt needs ſpeak the Hebrew Tongue, as well as thoſe deſcended of the Loins of Heber. But againſt this Tradition, and the conſequents of it, there are ſome things to be objected. For firſt it is but a Tradition, and therefore of no ſure foundation to build upon. And ſecondly, it is ſuch a Tradition as holds no good co-herence with the truth or ſtory; it being a moſt clear and demonſtrative truth, that the Hebrew Tongue was not the Language which Abraham brought with him out of Chaldea and Meſopotamia, but that which he found ſpoken in the Land of Canaan at his coming thither, to which both he and his Poſterity did conform themſelves. Or had it been the Language of Heber, as they ſay it was, (but moſt undoubtedly was not) yet, thirdly, had this been a priviledge conferred on Heber, that he and his Poſterity ſhould ſpeak the Original Language without alteration or corruption, it muſt have been extended to all thoſe of the houſe of Jocktan, which deſcended from him; as alſo to the houſe Laban in Padan-Aram, and to the Moabites and the Ammonites as the ſeed of Lot; and finally to the Iſhmaelites & Idumeans, deſcended of Abraham and Eſau; and not be limited and confined only to the houſe of Jacob. Either all theſe muſt be partakers of ſo great a priviledge, becauſe their Father Heber had obtained it for himſelf and his; or elſe it was not ſuch a priviledge, or given ſo univerſally and incommunicably to the houſe of Heber, as they ſay it was. So the Tradition falls to ground, as to this particular. And then admitting it for true, that thoſe who ſtaid behind with Noah ſpake the ſame Language which was common to the Fathers before the Flood, (be it the Hebrew, or what elſe ſoever it was) I ſee no reaſon to the contrary, but that it might in time be branched into ſeveral Languages or Dialects of the ſame one Language, by the commerce and intercourſe which they had with Nations of a different ſpeech; as well as thoſe of Judah, in ſo ſhort a time as the Captivity of Babylon, had loſt the purity of that Language which they ſo much brag of; and could not underſtand their own Bibles at their coming home, but by an Interpreter. Of which ſee Neh. 8. 7, 8.

But to proceed: On this diſperſion of the Families of the Sons of Noah, it came to paſs, that though they all deſcended from one common Root, yet by the ſituations of their ſeveral dwellings, they came to be of ſeveral tempers and affections; in which they were ſo different from one another, that it might ſeem they had been made at firſt out of ſeveral Principles, and not at all derived from one common Parent. Of which thus Du Bartas.

O ſee how full of Wonders ſtrange, is Nature!
Sith in each Climate, not alone in ſtature,
Strength, colour, hair; but that men differ do,
Both in their humours, and their manners too.
The Northern man is fair, the Southern foul;
That's white, this black; that ſmiles, and this doth ſcoul.
Th'one's blith and frolick, th'other dull and froward;
Th'one's full of courage, th'other a fearful coward, &c.

The ground or reaſon of which difference is to be attributed to the different tempers of thoſe Countries in which they live, and to the different influences of the Heavenly Bodies on thoſe ſeveral Countries which do continue ſtill the ſame, though many times the Countries do ſhift and change their old Inhabitants. Hinc illa ab antiquo vitia, & patria ſorte durantia, quæ totas in hiſtoriis gentes aut commendant aut notant, ſaith a Modern but judicious Author. Two or three evidences of this truth will make it clear and evident to a practical judgment, which otherwiſe might appear obſcure in the ſearch of cauſes. Florus hath told us of the Gauls, Primum eorum impetum eſſe majorem quam virorum; ſecundum minorem quam fœminarum. Which is the ſame which Rob. Dallington hath told us of the Modern French, That he begins an action like Thunder, and ends it in a ſmoke. Ut ſunt Gallorum ſubita ingenia, ſaith Cæſar of the ancient Gauls: and I believe the preſent French are altogether as raſh and hair-brain'd, as the other were. Gallia fœcunda Cauſidicorum, was part of the Character of the Gauls in the time of Juvenal; and it is told us of the French by ſome late Obſervers, that there are commonly more Law-trials amongſt them in one year, than have been in England ſince the Conqueſt. And yet the old Gauls in a manner are wholly rooted out of the Country, the ſeveral Nations of Franks, Burgundians, Britans, Normans, and Goths, being in poſſeſſion of their ſeveral dwellings. Thus alſo it is ſaid by Tacitus of the ancient Germans, Diem noctemque continuare potando, nulli opprobrium; that it was no diſgrace to any, to ſpend the whole day and night in drinking; and more than ſo, De jungendis affinitatibus, de bello denique & pace, in conviviis conſultare; that they conſulted over their Cups of their weighty buſineſs. Since which time though all Germany hath ſhifted almoſt all her old Inhabitants, and taken in new Colonies of Swedes, Avarers, Thuringians, Danes, Sclaves, Hunns, Saxons, and other Nations; yet ſtill thoſe ill cuſtoms are as much in uſe amongſt them, as ever formerly. To go a little further off; The old Philoſopher Anacharſis tells us of the ancient Græcians, that at the beginning of their Feaſts they uſed little Goblets, πλη-ϑέντες δὲ ἐν μεγάλοις πίνωσι, and greater towards the end, when they were almoſt drunken: which cuſtom ſtill remains amongſt them, as G. Sandys obſerveth, notwithſtanding the great length of time, and all the other changes of ſtate and people, which have hapned ſince. I ſhall not ſpeak here of the effeminateneſs of the Aſiatick, or the cruelty or implacableneſs of the African Nations, being as great now as in any of the former times, notwithſtanding the great and numerous Plantations of the Greeks, Romans, Vandals, Sarazens, Turks, and Tartars, ſucceſſively, and reſpectively in theſe ſeveral Countries. And therefore I conclude this point in theſe words of Barclay, Hæret itaque in omni gente vis quædam inconcuſſa, quæ hominibus pro conditione terrarum in quibus naſci contigerit, ſua fata diviſerit.

Nor is this all the conſequent of this diſperſion of the Families of the Sons of Noah; the ſeparation of their perſons producing, firſt, an alteration of affections, and that engendring natural Animoſities: which ſeconded by their ſeveral intereſſes and Reaſons of State, hath left almoſt no people without ſome ſuch enemy which doth particularly & perverſly croſs them in all their Counſels. Concerning which, take here the Obſervation of that notable Stateſman and Hiſtorian, Philip de Comines: which though it be with reference to the Meridian of his own time only, yet it may be accommodated generally to all States and Ages, "In rebus humanis ita comparatum eſt, "ut nullus fere ſit populus quem non æmulus aliquis exer-"ceat, &c. It is (ſaith he) ſo ordered in the ſtate of "humane affairs, that there is almoſt no Nation without "a more particular Enemy. The Engliſh are enemies

“ to the French, the Scots to the Engliſh; the Portugueze
“ have the like inveterate hatred againſt the Spaniards.
“ The Princes of Italy enjoy great poſſeſſions without “ any good title; but are continually oppoſed by the “ more potent Cities of Venice, Florence, Genoa, and Luca.
“ The Aragonian Kings of Naples, have found perpetu“ al Enemies of the Dukes of Anjou; as have the Dukes
“ of Millain, of the houſe of Orleans. The Princes of “ Italy, and the Florentines, have a ſtitch at Venice; as “ the States of Genoa, and Sienna, have againſt the “ Florentines. In Germany the animoſities have been “ great and of long continuance, between the Houſes
“ of Auſtria, and Bavaria; the hatred grown beyond
“ all hopes of reconciliation which is between the Swit- “ zers, and the Auſtrian Family. The Dukes of Cleve, “ and Gulick, are always upon ill terms with their “ Neighbours of Gelderland: and in the North, the “ Cities on the Baltick Seas have their continual quarrels
“ with the Kings of Denmark. Nor are the enmities “ any thing leſs, if they be not greater, which are “ diſcernable amongſt the people of Aſia and Africk, “ than thoſe that are above remembred. So far and to “ this purpoſe ſaith that notable and judicious “ Writer.

The conſideration of which points, if there were no other, were of it ſelf ſufficient to ſhew the neceſſary uſe of Hiſtory and Geography, as well for the underſtanding the affairs of the Ages paſt, as for commerce and correſpondency with the Nations preſent. For had no Hiſtories been written in the former times, in what dull ignorance had we lived of all thoſe occurrences which do ſo much concern the whole ſtate of Mankind, and are our principal directors in Life and Action? in which reſpect the Orator moſt truly calleth it, Magiſtram vitæ. For upon the credit of this Hiſtory, the examples of our Anceſtors, the grounds of civil prudence, and the fames of men do moſt eſpecially depend. And certainly to draw back the mind to the contemplation of Matters long ago paſſed; to ſearch out with diligence, and to deliver with faith, freedom, and the life of expreſſion, ſuch things as are found out on a diligent ſearch; to repreſent unto our eyes the changes of Times, the Characters of Perſons, the uncertainties of Counſels, and the Conveyances of Actions, the ſubtilties of Pretenſions, and the Secrets of State; muſt of neceſſity be a work of as publick uſe, as it is of great both pains and judgement. Beſides, it gives a kind of eternity to all ſuch men, who by their Counſels or Atchievements have deſerved nobly of thoſe Kingdoms, and Commonwealths, wherein they lived. And thereupon the Orator doth not only call it, Magiſtram vitæ, but Lucem veritatis, Teſtem temporis, Nuntiam vetuſtatis, & Vitæ memoriam. According to which Character I find theſe Verſes ſet before a Chronicle of ſome Kings of England (more worth than all the Book beſides;)

For though in theſe days Miracles be fled,
Yet this ſhall of good Hiſtories be ſaid,
They call back time that's paſt, and give life to the dead.

Nor want there other motives to endear unto us the uſe of Hiſtory, beſides the light it gives unto all the remarkable Actions of preceding times; and the eternity (if I may ſay ſo) which it conferreth on the Actors themſelves, by the preſervation of their names from the ruins of time, and the pit of Oblivion. For firſt, it ſtirreth men to Virtue, and deters them from Vice, by ſhewing forth the glorious memories of vertuous men and the ill ſavour which is left behind men of ungodly life; and eſpecially keeps perſons of moſt eminent place from letting looſe the reins unto all licentiouſneſs, by repreſenting this to their conſideration, That all their Actions ſhall be laid open one day to the view of the Vulgar. Secondly, it hath been a principal Conſerver of moſt Arts and Sciences, by keeping on Record the Dictates and Opinions of ſo many of the old Philoſophers; out of which, a perfect body of Philoſophy, and others of the Liberal Arts hath been collected and digeſted. Thirdly, it is the beſt School-maſter in the Art of War, and teacher of Stratagems; and in that can practically afford more punctual directions, than can be otherwiſe obtained; and is withal the beſt Aſſiſtant to the Stateſman or Politician, who from hence draw their Obſervations and Concluſions; and become thereby ſerviceable to their Prince and Country, though never travelled more than amongſt their Books. So Archimedes in his ſtudy, and Demoſthenes in his Orators Gown, endangered more the enemies of their ſeveral Countries, than the Athenians, or Syracuſans, did by dint of Sword. And laſt of all, beſides theſe civil benefits and conſiderations, and the great help which it affords in the way of diſcourſe; there is no particular branch of knowledge more uſeful for the true and perfect underſtanding of holy Scripture, than that of Eccleſiaſtical and Profane Hiſtory; or which gives clearer light to many dark paſſages thereof, eſpecially in the Prophetical Writings of either Teſtament.

This, as it ſhews the neceſſary uſe and benefit which redounds from Hiſtory, ſo doth it ſerve to uſher in that commendation which belongs to the ſtudy of Geography alſo; without ſome knowledge wherein, the ſtudy of Hiſtory is neither ſo pleaſant, nor ſo profitable, as a judicious Reader would deſire to have it. 'Tis true, Geography without Hiſtory hath life and motion, but very unſtable, and at random; but Hiſtory without Geography, like a dead carkaſs, hath neither life, nor motion at all, or moves at leaſt but ſlowly on the underſtanding. For what delight or ſatisfaction can any man receive from the reading of Story, without he know ſomewhat of the places, and the conditions of the people, which are therein mentioned? In which regard Ammianus Marcellinus the Hiſtorian, hath deſerved very well of all his Readers; premiſing to the Actions of every Country ſome brief Deſcription of the place and chief Towns therein. For though the greatneſs of the Action doth ennoble and adorn the place; yet it is the knowledge of the place, which adds delight and ſatisfaction unto the reading of the Story, which conveighs it to us. Hiſtory therefore and Geography, like the two Fires or Meteors, which Philoſophers call Caſtor and Pollux, if joined together, crown our reading with delight and profit; if parted, threaten both with a certain ſhipwrack; and are like two Siſters dearly loving, not without pity (I had almoſt ſaid impiety) to be kept aſunder. So as that which Sir Philip Sidney ſaid of Argalus and Parthenia,

Her being was in him alone,
And ſhe not being, he was none;

may be as juſtly ſaid of Hiſtory and Geography, as of thoſe two Lovers. And yet this is not all the benefit which redounds from the ſtudy of Geography, which is exceeding uſeful to the reading of the holy Scriptures, as in diſcovering the ſituation of Paradiſe, the bounds and borders of thoſe Countries which are therein mentioned; eſpecially with relation to the travels of the Patriarchs, Prophets, Evangeliſts and Apoſtles, yea of Chriſt himſelf; not otherwiſe to be comprehended and underſtood, but by the help of Geographical Tables and deſcriptions. Beſides this, it is uſeful to moſt ſorts of men, as to Aſtronomers, who are hereby informed of the different appearances of Stars in ſeveral Countries; their ſeveral influences and aſpects, their riſing and ſetting, according to different Horizons. Secondly, to Phyſitians, who are hereby acquainted with the different temper of mens bodies, according to the Climes they live in; the nature and growth of many Simples, and Medicinal Drugs, whereof every Country under Heaven hath ſome more natural and proper to it ſelf, than to any others. Thirdly, to States-men, who from hence draw their knowledge of the nature and diſpoſition of thoſe people with whom they are to negotiate; the bounds and borders both of their own Kingdoms, and the Neighbouring Countries, with the extent of their reſpective Dominions by Sea and Land; without the exact knowledge of which, there would be a perpetual Seminary of Wars and diſcord. Fourthly, to Merchants, Mariners, and Souldiers; the ſeveral Profeſſors of which kinds of life, find nothing more neceſſary for them in their ſeveral callings, than a competent knowledge in Geography; which preſents to them many notable advantages, both for their profit and contentment. Finally, by the ſtudy of Geography, a man that hath not opportunity nor means of travelling, may with as much benefit, but far leſs danger and expence, acquaint himſelf with the particular deſcriptions of Kingdoms, Provinces, Cities, Towns and Caſtles, with all things conſiderable in the ſame, together with the cuſtoms, manners, and diſpoſitions of all Foreign Nations: and that too in as full a manner, as if he had ſurvey'd the one, and obſerved the other, by a perſonal viſit of the places repreſented to him.

Such is the neceſſary uſe which men of ingenuous ſtudies, and profeſſions, do, and may make of Hiſtory and Geography, in the courſe of their callings and imployments. And there are ſome things alſo neceſſary to the knowledge of each, that we may ſtudy them with the greater benefit and contentation. To Hiſtory, it is only requiſite that it be defined, diſtinguiſhed from ſuch writings as do ſeem to challenge the name of Hiſtories; and that ſomewhat be premiſed of thoſe ſeveral Epoches, from which all people do begin their computations. But to Geography it is needful not only that we do define it, but that we explicate thoſe Terms, or ſecond Notions, which are not obvious to the underſtanding of every Reader. Firſt then for Hiſtory, if we conſult the name or Quid nominis of it, it is derived ἀπὸ τοῦ ἱϛορεῖν, i. e. videre; and therefore properly doth ſignifie a relation of ſuch remarkable actions at which the Author was an Eye-witneſs, if not an Agent, Apud veteres enim (ſaith Iſidore) nemo ſcribebat Hiſtoriam, niſi is qui interfuiſſet, & ea quæ ſcribēda eſſent vidiſſet. But now the cuſtomary uſe of the word hath taught it a more ample ſignification. Hiſtory being defined to be A Perfect Relation of all Occurents obſervable, hapning in the State whereof it is written, deſcribed by the Motives, Pretexts, Conſultations, Speeches and Events; a ſpecial care being had both of Time and Place.

As for the writings which do challenge the name of Hiſtory, but indeed are really diſtinguiſhed from it, they are Commentaries, Annals, Diaries, or Journals, and Chronologies. Firſt, Commentaries ſet down only a naked continuance of Events & Actions, without the Motives and deſigns, the Counſels, Speeches, Occaſions and Pretexts of buſineſſes. So that Cæſar with more modeſty than true propriety of ſpeech, applyed the name of Commentaries to the beſt Hiſtory in the World, A Hiſtory commended by King James to his Son Prince Henry, above all other prophane Authors, both for the ſweet flowing of the ſtyle, and the worthineſs of the matter it ſelf. For I have ever (ſaith he) been of this opinion, that, Of all Ethnick Emperors or great Captains, he hath fartheſt exceeded both in his practice and in his precepts, for Martial affairs. Which makes me the more wonder at the ſtrange and unjuſt cenſure of Juſtus Lipſius who calls them Nudam & ſimplicem narrationem, for being intituled Commentaries, they do (ſaith he) nil polliceri præter nomen; with pride and arrogance enough. 2. For Annals next; they are a bare recital only of the Actions happening every year, without regard had to the cauſes and pretexts, or any of the chief Ingredients required in Hiſtory. So that Tacitus had no other Reaſon to give the name of Annals to his excellent Work, than that it is diſtinguiſhed by the years of the Conſuls. Otherwiſe there is no great difference as unto the matter betwixt an Hiſtory and an Annal, the ſubject of them both, being matter of State; and not ſuch trival things as Triumphs, Pageants, and ſuch like, which ſtand not with the gravity and authority of Hiſtorical Annals: betwixt which and a Diary, the ſame Tacitus (ſpeaking of ſome magnificent ſtructures which were built that year) doth make this difference, Res illuſtres Annalibus, talia diurnis Urbis actis mandari, that matters of the greater moment were committed to Annals, and unto Diaries the Acts & Accidents of a meaner nature. 3. But Diaries, beſides this difference in point of matter are diſtinguiſhed from Annals alſo in point of time; a Diary or Journal, as the name imports, containing the Actions of each day; of which kind was the Chronicle called for by Ahaſuerus, in which the Actions of his Court were referred to Journals, and in the which he found the relation of the treaſon intended againſt him by his Eunuchs. And of this kind was that of King Edward the ſixth, mentioned in the Hiſtory of his life, by Sir John Hayward. 4. Laſt of all for Chronologies; they are only bare ſupputations of times, with ſome brief touch upon the Actions therein hapning, ſuch as are thoſe of Euſebius, Functius, Calviſius, and Helvicus; of which laſt I dare give that teſtimony which Paterculus affords to Ovid, viz. that he is perfectiſſimus in forma operis ſui; though he and all the reſt are debtors to Euſebius for the incredible pains taken by him in his excellent Chronicon. Out of theſe four, as out of the four Elements, the Quinteſſence of Hiſtory is extracted: borrowing from Annals time, from Diaries and Commentaries matter, from Chronologies conſent of time and co-etanity of Princes; and thereto adding of her own all ſuch other Ornaments in which theſe four are found defective.

That which remains is to premiſe ſomewhat of theſe ſeveral Epoches, from whence particular States, Nations and People, make their computations. Theſe have been very different in former times, according to the ſeveral occaſions took in ſeveral Countries. The Jews had ſeveral Epoches peculiar to themſelves alone, and one in common with their Neighbours. Thoſe which they had amongſt themſelves were firſt from the Creation of the World, or the beginning of time; Secondly from the univerſal Deluge, which hapned, A.M. 1656. Thirdly, from the Confuſion of Tongues, A.M. 1786. Fourthly, from Abrahams journy out of Chaldæa into Canaan, A.M. 2021. Fifthly, from their deliverance out of Egypt, A.M. 2453. Sixthly, from the firſt year of Jubilee, A.M. 2499. Seventhly, from the building of Solomons Temple, An. 2932. And laſtly, from the Captivity of Babylon, An. 3368. That which they had common with other Nations, was the Æra or Epoche of the victory of the Greeks, which took beginning on the firſt Victory which Seleucus had againſt Antigonus, which was in A. M. 3637. an Accompt much uſed by the Jews, Chaldeans, Syrians, and other Nations of the Eaſt.

But the Chaldæans alſo had their own Epoche or Accompt apart, reckoning their time from the firſt year of Nabonaſſer (Salmonaſſer he is called in Scripture) which being 438 years before this of Seleucus, muſt fall in A.M. 3201. Next for the Græciani, they reckon'd a long while by Olympiades, the firſt of which is placed in the year of the World, 3174 (of which more hereafter.) But this Accompt periſhing under the Conſtantinopolitans, they reckoned after by Indictions (an accompt diviſed by Juſtinian:) every Indiction containing 15. years, the firſt beginning A. Chr. 513. which amongſt Chronologers is ſtill uſed. The Romans reckoned firſt from the foundation of their City, which was A.M. 3213. and afterwards from the ſixteenth year of Auguſtus his Empire, (being that which is properly called the Roman Æra) A.M. 3936. An accompt uſed by the Spaniards (where it firſt began) till the reign of Pedro the fourth of Aragon, who abrogated it in his Dominions, A. Chr. 1350. followed therein by John the firſt of Caſtile, An. 1383. and then at laſt by the King of Portugal alſo, 1415. The Chriſtians generally do reckon from the birth of CHRIST, but this they did not uſe till the year 600. following in the mean time the Accompt of the Empire. And finally the Mahometans begin their Hegira (for ſo they call the time of their Computation) from the flight of their Prophet Mahomet from Mecca, when he was driven thence by the Phylarchæ, which hapned A.Chr. 617. Of theſe we ſhall make uſe generally but of two alone, thoſe namely of the Worlds Creation, and our Saviours Birth; and of the building of Rome, and the flight of Mahomet, in things that do relate to thoſe ſeveral States.

Next for Geography we will firſt define it, and after explicate ſuch terms or ſecond notions, as are not obvious to the underſtanding of every Reader. Firſt for the definition of it, it is ſaid by Ptolomy to be a deſcription of the whole Earth, or the whole Earth imitated by writing and delineation, with all other things generally annexed unto it. Ἡ Γεωγραφία μίμησις ἐστι διὰ γραφῆς (and not διαγραφῆς as it is commonly but corruptly read) τοῦ κατειλημμένου τῆς ἐγῆς μέρους ὅλου μετὰ τῶν ὡς ἐπίπαν αὐτῷ συνημμένων, as his own words are. In which we look not on the Earth ſimply as it is an Element, for ſo it belongeth to Philoſophy; but as it is a Sphærical body proportionably compoſed of Earth and Water, and ſo it is the ſubject of Geography.

Firſt for the Earth, which is the firſt part of this body, it is affirmed by the beſt Writers to be 21600 miles in compaſs; which is demonſtrable enough. For being there are in every of the greater Circles 360 degrees, every degree being reckon'd at 60 miles: let 360 be multiplied by 60 and the Product will be 21600 as before is ſaid. So that if it were poſſible to make a path round about the Earth, an able Footman going conſtantly 24 miles a day, would compaſs it in 900 days.

The Earth is divided, In reſpect of men, into the right hand and the left; In reſpect of it ſelf, into parts Real and Imaginary.

To Poets which turn their faces towards the Fortunate Iſlands (ſo memorized and chanted by them) which are ſituated in the Weſt; the North is the right hand, and the South the left.

To the Augures of old, and in our days to Prieſts and men in holy Orders, who uſually in their Sacrifices and divine Oblations, convert themſelves unto the Eaſt; the South is the right hand, and the North the left.

To Aſtronomers, who turn their faces towards the South, becauſe that way the motions of the Planets may be beſt obſerved, the Weſt is the right hand, and the Eaſt the left.

Finally, to Geographers, who, by reaſon they have ſo much to do with the Elevation of the Pole, do turn their faces towards the North; the Eaſt is the right hand, and the Weſt the left.

The Real parts of the Earth are divided commonly into Continents, Iſlands.

A Continent is a great quantity of Land, not ſeperated by any Sea from the reſt of the World, as the whole Continent of Europe, Aſia, Africa; or the Continents of France, Spain, Germany.

An Iſland is a part of Earth invironed round about with ſome Sea or other; as the Iſle of Britain, with the Ocean; the Iſle of Sicily, with the Mediterranean: and therefore in Latine it is called Inſula, becauſe it is ſituate in ſalo, as ſome derive it.

Touching the Continent I have nothing in general to inlarge, till we come to the particular Chorography and deſcription of them. But for Iſlands (leaving the diſquiſition of their being, or not being before the Flood) there are four caſes to which they may be thought to owe their Original. 1. an Earthquake, which works two ways towards their production: Firſt, when by it one part of a Country is forcibly torn away from the other; and ſo Eubœa was divided from the reſt of Attica: and ſecondly when ſome vehement wind or vapour being ſhut up in ſuch parts of the Earth as be under the Sea, raiſeth the Earth above the Water; whereunto the Original of moſt of thoſe Iſlands, which are far remote from any part of the Continent, is probably to be referred. 2. Great Rivers at their entry into the Sea carry with them abundance of gravel, dirt, and weeds; which, if the Sea be not the more working, will in time ſettle to an Iſland. So the Corn which Tarquinius ſowed in the Campus Martius, being Cut down by the people and caſt into Tiber, ſetled together, and made the Holy Iſland. So the River Achelous cauſed the Echinades, as we ſhall more at large declare; and ſo the Iſland of Loanda in the Kingdom of Congo, is ſaid to have been made out of the Sands of the Ocean, and the Mire of the great River Laanza, caſt into an heap, and at laſt formed into an Iſland. 3. The Sea violently beating on ſome ſmall Iſthmus, weareth it through, and turneth the Peninſula into a compleat Iſle. Thus was Sicily divided from Italy, Cyprus from Syria, England from France, and Wight from the reſt of England. And 4. ſometimes as it eateth and worketh on ſome places, ſo it voluntarily leaveth and abandoneth others, which in ſome time grow to be Iſlands, and firm land under foot. So it is thought the Iſles of Zealand have been once part of the main Sea: and Verſtegan proveth it, becauſe that the Husbandmen in tilling and manuring the ground, find ſometimes Anchors here and there fixt, but very often the bones of huge and great fiſhes, which could by no accident come hither. To theſe kind of Iſlands, Pythagoras in Ovid alluding, ſaith,

——Vidi factas exæquore terras,
Et procul a pelago conchæ jacuere marinæ,
Et vetus inventa eſt in montibus anchora ſummis.

Oft have I ſeen that earth, which once I knew
Part of the Sea; ſo that a man might view
Huge ſhels of Fiſhes in the upland ground;
And on the Mountain-tops old Anchors found.

As concerning the ſituation of Iſlands, whether commodious or not, this is my judgment. I find in Machiavel, that for a City whoſe people covet no Empire but their own Towns, a barren place is better than a fruitful; becauſe in ſuch ſeats they are compelled to work and labour, by which they are freed from idleneſs, and by conſequence from riotouſneſs: but for a City whoſe Inhabitants deſire to enlarge their Confines, a fertile place was rather to be choſen than a ſteril, as being more able to nouriſh multitudes of people. The like I ſay of Iſlands. If a Prince deſire rather to keep than augment his Dominions, no place fitter for his abode than an Iſland; as being by it ſelf and nature ſufficiently defenſible. but if a King be minded to add continually to his Empire, an Iſland is no fit ſeat for him; becauſe partly by the uncertainty of Winds and Seas, partly by the longſomneſs of the ways, he is not ſo well able to ſupply and keep ſuch forces as he hath on the Continent. An example hereof is England, which hath even to admiration repelled the moſt puiſſant Monarch of Europe; but for the cauſes above mentioned, cannot ſhew any of her winnings on the firm land, though ſhe hath attempted and atchiev'd as many glorious exploits, as any Country in the World.

The Continent and Iſland are ſub-divided into Peninſula, Iſthmus, Promontorium.

Peninſula, quaſi pene Inſula, is a tract of land, which being almoſt encompaſſed round by water, is joined to the firm land by ſome little Iſthmus; as Peloponneſus, Taurica, and Peruana.

Iſthmus is that narrow neck of land, which joineth the Peninſula to the Continent; as the Straights of Dariene in America, and of Corinth in Greece.

Promontorium, is a high Mountain which ſhooteth it ſelf into the Sea, the utmoſt end of which is called a Foreland, or Cape, as the Cape of Good Hope in Africk, Cape Comari in India, &c.

The Imaginary parts of the Earth are ſuch which not being at all in the Earth, muſt yet be ſuppoſed to be ſo, for the better teaching and learning this Science; and are certain Circles going about the Earth, anſwerable to them in Heaven, in name.

Theſe Circles are either the Greater, or Leſſer: in both which, there are 360 Degrees, which in the greater Circles are greater than thoſe in the leſſer; and every Degree in the greater is 60 miles.

The greater Circles are either Immutable, as the Æquator. Mutable as, as the Horizon, Meridian.

The Æquator is a great Circle going round about the Terreſtrial Globe from Eaſt to Weſt. It paſſeth through Habaſſia, Sumatra, Guiana, &c. The uſe of it is to ſhew the Latitude of any Town, Promontory, &c. Now the Latitude is the diſtance of a place South or North from the Æquator, or middle of the World; and muſt be meaſured on the Globe by the Degrees in the Meridian.

The Meridian is a great Circle rounding the Earth from Pole to Pole. There are many Meridians, according to the divers places in which a man liveth; but the chief and firſt Meridian paſſeth through the Iſland St. Michael, one of the Azores. The uſe of it is to ſhew the Longitude of any place. Now the Longitude of a City, Cape, &c. is the diſtance of it Eaſt and Weſt from the firſt Meridian, and is uſually meaſured on the Globe by the Degrees of the Æquator.

The Horizon is a great Circle, deſigning ſo great a ſpace of the earth, as a quick ſight can ken in an open field. The uſe of it is to diſcern the divers riſings and ſettings of the Stars.

The leſſer Circles either are noted with ſome name, as Tropical of Cancer, Capricorn; Polar, either Artick, Antartick; Noted with no diſtinct name, and are the Parallels.

The Tropick of Cancer (ſo called of the Cœleſtial Sign Cancer) is diſtant from the Æquinoctial 23 Degrees Northward, and paſſeth through Barbary, India, China, and Nova Hiſpania.

The Tropick of Capricorn, equally diſtant from the Æquator Southward, paſſeth through Æthiopia inferior, and the midſt of Peruana. And this is to be obſerved in theſe Tropicks, that when the Sun is in the Tropick of Cancer, our days are at the longeſt; and when he is gone back to the Tropick of Capricorn, the days are at the ſhorteſt. The firſt they call the Summer, the laſt they call the Winter Solſtice; the firſt happening on, or about St. Barnabies day in June; the laſt on, or about St. Lucies day in December.

The Artick Circle (ſo called for that it is correſpondent to the Conſtellation in Heaven called the Bear, in Greek, Arctos) is diſtant from the Tropick of Cancer 45 Degrees, and paſſeth through Norway, Muſcovy, Tartary, &c.

The Antartick (ſo called becauſe oppoſite to the other) is as much diſtant from the Tropick of Capricorn, and paſſeth through Terra Auſtralis Incognita. The uſe of theſe four Circles is to deſcribe the Zones.

The Zones are ſpaces of Earth included betwixt two of the leſſer nominated Circles. They are in number five; one over-hot, two over-cold, and two temperate.

The over-hot, or Torrid Zone, is betwixt the two Tropicks, continually ſcorched with the preſence of the Sun.

The two over-cold, or Frigid Zones, are ſituate between the two Polar Circles, and the very Poles; continually wanting the neighbourhood of the Sun.

The two Temperate Zones, are betwixt the Tropicks of Cancer, and the Artick; and twixt the Tropick of Capricorn, and the Antartick Circles; enjoying an indifferency between heat and cold; ſo that the parts next the Torrid Zone are the hotter, and the parts next the Frigid Zone are the colder.

Theſe five Zones are diſpoſed according to the order of the Zones in Heaven; of which thus Ovid Metamorph. 1.

Utque duæ dextra cœlum, totidemq; ſiniſtra
Parte ſecant Zonæ, quinta eſt ardentior illis;
Sic onus incluſum numero diſtinxit eodem
Cura Dei, totidemq; plagæ tellure premuntur.
Quarum quæ media eſt, non eſt habitabilis æſtu;
Nix tegit alta duas: totidem inter utramq; locavit,
Temperiemq; dedit, miſta cum Frigore Flamma.

And as two Zones do cut the Heavens right-ſide,
And likewiſe other two the left divide,
The midſt in heat excelling all the reſt;
Even ſo it ſeem'd to the Creator beſt,
That this our World ſhould ſo divided be,
That with the Heavens in Zones it might agree.
The midſt in heat; the outward moſt excell
In Snow and Ice, ſcarce fit for men to dwell.
Betwixt theſe two Extreams, two more are fixt,
Where heat with cold indifferently is mixt.

Parallels, called alſo Æquidiſtants, circle the Earth from Eaſt to Weſt, and are commonly ten Degrees aſunder: Such are the Parallels which are ſet down in our Maps and Globes. But there are another ſort of Parallels, two of which go to a Clime. Theſe are called Artificial Parallels, becauſe they ſhew the difference of the Artificial days; and are of an unequal breadth, as we ſhall ſee in the Table following. The uſe of theſe leſſer Parallels is to ſhew the Climates.

Now a Clime, or Climate, is a ſpace of the Earth contained betwixt three Parallels, the middlemoſt whereof divideth it into two equal parts; ſerving for ſetting out the length and ſhortneſs of the days in every Country. For under the Æquator the days are of the juſt length of 12 hours; but afterwards they encreaſe the length of half an hour for every Clime, till they come to the length of 24 hours, without night at all; which length attained, they encreaſe no more by hours, but by weeks and months, till they come to the length of half a year. So that we are to reckon 24 Climes Northward, and as many Southward: Thoſe Northward known by the proper name of the place or City over which the middle Parallel of the Clime doth paſs, as Dia Meroes, Dia Sienes, &c. Thoſe on the South by the ſame names, with the condition of Anti-Dia-Sienes, Anti-Dia-Meroes, &c. 'Tis true, the ancient Coſmographers made but ſeven Climes in all; at the moſt but nine. Nor needed they to add more, as the cauſe ſtood with them; the extent of the habitable World towards each of the Poles, not being ſo fully known to them, as it is to us.

And here; becauſe thoſe Climes are not of equal breadth or extent of Latitude, but grow narrower and narrower towards each Pole; in which regard, it is impoſſible to deſcribe them under any Rule: I have thought fit to add this enſuing Table, partly framed out of the Commentaries of Clavius on the works of John de Sacro Boſco and partly out of Hues his Book, Of the uſe of the Globes. The whole divided into 7 Columes. In the firſt whereof is ſhewed what Climes are inhabited by the Amphiſcii, Periſcii, and Heteroſcii, which terms we ſhall anon expound; in the ſecond, is ſet down the number of the Climes themſelves; In the third the number of the Parallels; In the fourth, the length of the days in Summer; In the fifth, the diſtance of every Clime and Parallels from the Æquator; In the ſeventh, the name of the Town or place, through which the middlemoſt of the three Parallels doth paſs in this manner following.

Here followeth the Table of the Climes.

A ſecond uſe of theſe Parallels and other Circles; is for diſtinction of men in their ſeveral dwellings, who are (according as they are treated of in Geography) divided in reſpect of their ſhadows into Amphiſcii, Periſcii, Heteroſcii; and in reſpect of their ſite and poſition, into Antœci, Periœci, and Antipodes. 1. Amphiſcii are ſuch as dwell between the two Tropicks; ſo called, becauſe their ſhadows are both ways: ſometimes (when the Sun is North) to the South; ſometimes (when the Sun is South) to the North.

2. Periſcii are ſuch as dwell beyond the Polar Circles ſo called, becauſe their ſhadows are on all ſides of them.

3. Heteroſcii are ſuch as dwell in either of the two temperate Zones; ſo called, becauſe their ſhadows reach but one way; viz. in our Zone, to the North only; as in the other, to the South only.

4. Antœci are ſuch as dwell under the ſame Meridian, and the ſame Latitude or Parallel equally diſtant from the Æquator; the one Northward, the other Southward: the days in both places being of a length? but the Summer of the one, being the others Winter.

5. Periœci are ſuch as dwell in the ſame Parallel, on the ſame ſide of the Æquator, how diſtant ſoever they be Eaſt and Weſt: the ſeaſon of the year, and the length of days being to both alike; but the ones midnight, being the others noon.

6. Antipodes are ſuch as dwell feet to feet, ſo as a right line drawn from the one unto the other, paſſeth from North to South, through the Center of the World. Theſe are diſtant 180 degrees, which is half the compaſs of the Earth. They differ in all things, as ſeaſons of the year, length of days, riſing and ſetting of the Sun, with the like. A matter reckoned ſo ridiculous, and impoſſible (if not ſomewhat worſe) in the former times, that Boniface Archbiſhop of Mentz hapning to ſee a Tractate written by Virgilius Biſhop of Saltzburg, touching the Antipodes; and not knowing what damnable Doctrine might be couched under that ſtrange name, made complaint firſt to the Duke of Bohemia, and after to Pope Zachary, An. 745. By whom the poor Biſhop (unfortunate only in being learned in ſuch a time of ignorance) was condemned of Hereſie. But Boniface might the rather be excuſed, in regard that many of his betters fell alſo on the ſelf-ſame error. For venerable Bede, a man whoſe Books Arch. Boniface was not worthy to carry, eſteemeth the opinion touching the Antipodes, to be no better than a Fable; neq; enim Antipodarum ullatenus eſt fabulis accommodandus aſſenſus, in his Book de Ratione temporum, cap. 32. And yet the marvel is the leſs, conſidering that he lived in the darker times of the Church, when the ſtate of learning was in its declination; when S. Auguſtine and Lactantius, and ſome others of the Ancient Writers, who lived when learning was at the very height, condemns this point of the Antipodes, for an incredible ridiculous Fable: whoſe words I could put down at large, did I think it neceſſary. So that we of theſe Ages have very good cauſe (to uſe the words of the late L. Verulam) to congratulate the preſent times, in that the World in theſe our days, have through-lights made in it, after a wonderful manner; whereby we clearly ſee thoſe things, which either were unknown, or but blindly gueſſed at by the Ancients.

But to proceed, the ſecond part of the Terreſtrial Globe is the Water, which making but one Globe with the Earth, is yet higher than it. This appears, firſt, becauſe it is a body not ſo heavy; Secondly, it is obſerved by Saylors that their Ships move faſter to the ſhore than from it; whereof no reaſon can be given but the height of the water above the land. Thirdly, to ſuch as ſtand on the ſhore, the Sea ſeems to ſwell into the form of a round hill, till it puts a bound upon our ſight. Now that the Sea hovering thus over and above the Earth, doth not over-whelm it, muſt be aſcribed only to his Power and Providence, who, hath made the waters to ſtand on a heap, who hath ſet them a bound that they ſhould not paſs, nor turn again to cover the Earth. The other affections and properties of the Sea, as motion, ſaltneſs, and the like, I willingly omit, as belonging rather to Philoſophers, than this preſent Argument.

The Sea or Water is divided into 1. Oceanus. 2. Mare. 3. Fretum. 4. Sinus. 5. Lacus. 6. Flumina.

Of which and other Waters thus ſaid Ovid in his Metamorphoſis.

Tum Freta diffudit, rapidiſq; tumeſcere ventis
Juſſit, & ambitæ circundaræ littora terræ.
Addidit & Fontes, & Stagna immenſa, Lacuſq;
Fluminaq; obliquis cinxit declivia ripis, &c.

Which may be Engliſhed to this purpoſe.

He ſpread the Seas, which then he did command
To ſwell with winds, and compaſs round the Land:
To thoſe he adds Springs, Ponds, and Lakes immenſe,
And Rivers, which their winding Borders fenſe.
Of theſe not few Earths thirſty jaws devour,
The reſt their ſtreams into the Ocean pour;
When in that liquid Plain with freer Wave,
The foamy Cliffs inſtead of Banks they lave.

And

And firſt Oceanus, the Ocean, is that general Collection of all waters, which encompaſſeth the Earth on every ſide. A point which Ovid hath determined right enough, but laught at by Herodotus in the former times; who counted it a groſs abſurdity for any man to relate or write, that the Earth was round, or encompaſſed about with the main Ocean. But Modern Navigations have found that to be true, which he held ridiculous; and which the moſt learned in thoſe times knew rather by conjecture than by demonſtration. Nor were thoſe Ages ſo acquainted with thoſe ebbs and flowings of the Ocean, and all thoſe other Seas and Rivers which have intercourſe with it, as the meaneſt Sailor at the preſent. The natural cauſes of the which ſeeming ſo full of difficulty to the beſt of the Ancients, Experience hath taught us to aſcribe wholly to the Moon; at whoſe Full and Prime the Tides are ever higheſt, and the Sea moſt furious. For as ſoon as the Moon cometh forth from under our Horizon, the Sea beginneth to ſwell, and floweth towards the Eaſt, (as it were to wait upon her, or bear her company) till ſhe come unto the height of our Meridian: after which till her ſetting or Weſtern fall, the Sea abateth or decreaſeth, which we call the Ebb. And when ſhe paſſeth out of our Horizon towards the Antipodes; the Ocean begins to ſwell till the height of Midnight, and coming towards our Hemiſphere doth again abate. In brief, from the New Moon till the firſt quarter the Sea decreaſeth; from the firſt quarter to the full it is ſaid to ſpring: from the full to the laſt quarter it is ſaid to nepe; and from the laſt quarter to the prime it ſprings again. As for the uncertainty of the Tides, varying every day, it is not ſo perplexed and intricate, but that they which live on the Banks or Shores thereof know well when to look for it; the next days Tide coming for the moſt part, one hour ten minutes after the time it hapned on the day fore-going.

2. Mare, the Sea, is a part of the main Ocean, to which we cannot come but through ſome Fretum or Straight; as Mare Mediterraneum. And it takes name, Firſt, either from the adjacent ſhore, as Mare Adriaticum, from the City of Adria; Mare Terrhenum, from the Coaſt of Tuſcany: Or, Secondly, from the firſt Diſcoverer, as Mare Magellanicum, from Magellanus, who firſt found it; Or, Thirdly, from ſome remarkable Accident, as Mare Icarium, from the drowning of Icarus, the ſon of Dædalus.

3. Fretum, a Straight is a part of the Ocean, penned within narrow bounds, and opening a way into ſome Sea, or out of ſome Sea into the Ocean, as the Straight of Helleſpont, Gibralter, Fretum Davies, &c.

4. Sinus, a Creek or Bay, is a Sea contained within a crooked or circling ſhore, wherewith it is almoſt environed; as Sinus Perſicus, Corinthiacus, &c. and this is ſometimes called a Gulf, as the Gulf of Lepanto.

5. Lacus, a Lake, is a great body or collection of waters, which hath no viſible intercourſe with the Sea, or influx into it; as the Lake of Thraſymene in Italy; the Lacus Aſphaltites, or the Dead Sea, in the Land of Canaan, And of this kind properly is the Mare Caſpium, though by reaſon of the greatneſs of it, it is called a Sea.

6. Flumina, or Fluvius, is a Watercourſe continually running, whereby it differeth from Stagnum, or a ſtanding Pool, iſſuing from ſome Spring or Lake, and emptying it ſelf into ſome part of the Sea or ſome other great River; the mouth or out-let of which is called Oſtium: Tiberinaque longe Oſtia, as the Poet hath it. Theſe are conceived in the Earth, and derive both their birth and continual ſuſtenance from the Air; which piercing the open chinks or Chaſma's of the Earth, and congealed by the extream cold of that Element, diſſolves into water (as we ſee the Air in winter-nights to be melted into a pearly dew, ſticking on our glaſs windows): and being grown to ſome quantity, will (like Hannibal in the Alps) either find a way, or make a way to vent its ſuperfluity. Which beginning is ſeconded by the Ocean, which running through the hidden paſſages of the Earth, joineth it ſelf with this aerial vapour, and continueth the begun current. This Sea-water (though in it ſelf of a ſalt and brackiſh ſavour, yet) paſſing through divers windings and turnings of the Earth, is deprived of all unpleaſantneſs; and by how much the ſpring-heads of Rivers are remote from the Sea, by ſo much uſually are their waters affected with a delightful reliſh. Rivers having thus entred themſelves into a good courſe, are never without the aſſiſtance of neighbouring ſprings and waters; by whoſe addition they augment their ſtreams, till they diſchanel themſelves into the Sea. Now there is of Rivers a treble uſe: Firſt, that out of them Drink may be afforded to man and beaſt; Secondly, that running through the Earth, as blood through the body, by interlacing it, and ſometimes overwhelming it, it might make the Earth able to produce thoſe fruits which are neceſſary for the life of man. The laſt uſe of Rivers, is, eaſineſs and ſpeedineſs of conduct; and hereto are required four conditions: Firſt the depth, becauſe deep waters ſuſtain the bigger burdens, and on them navigation is more ſafe. Secondly, pleaſantneſs, whereby the paſſage is eaſie both with the ſtream and againſt it: whereas in Rivers of a violent current or ſuch as fall down by great Locks or Cataracts, the ſailing or rowing up the water is as dangerous as laborious. Thirdly, the thickneſs of the water; for by how much the more ſlimy and groſs a water is, by ſo much can it carry the heavier burdens. So Tiber, a River of more fame than depth, or breadth, is better for navigation, by reaſon of its fatneſs, than the pure and thin waters of the large and excellent River Nilus. Fourthly, the broadneſs of the Chanel, that Ships and other Veſſels may conveniently winde and turn, and give way to each other. Some of the old Philoſophers reputed this conduct ſo dangerous, that one of them being asked whether he thought the living or the dead were the greater number, would not declare himſelf, becauſe he knew not in which rank to place ſuch as were at Sea. And Cato Major thought that men never committed greater folly in their lives than in venturing to go by water, when they might have gone by land. I am none of that Sect, yet I cannot but hold with him that ſaid, Dulciſſima eſt ambulatio prope aquas, navigatio juxta terram.

The chief Rivers of Europe, are Danubius, and the Rhene; of Affrica, Nilus, and Niger; of Aſia, Ganges, and Euphrates; of America, Orenoque, and Maragnan. Of which and others, more in its proper place.

Thus have we gone over theſe particulars both of Earth and Water, which are conſiderable in Geography, and come within the compaſs of thoſe Annexaries of each which Ptolomy calleth τὰ συνημμένα: And having ſo done, may diſcover where the difference lieth between Geography and Chorography; which to ſome men, not rightly looking into the nature of both, ſeem to be the ſame. For howſoever a Chorographer doth deſcribe a Country by the bounds, Rivers, Hils, and moſt notable Cities; yet it is ſtill but the deſcription of ſome place or Country, and not of the whole Earth univerſally, which is the proper work of a Geographer. So that Chorography differeth from Geography as a part from the whole: that being as Ptolomy doth very handſomly expreſs it, like the painting of an eye or an ear, or ſome other member; this, as the picturing of the head, or whole body of Man. But Geography in its full latitude comprehendeth not Chorography only, but Topography & Hydrography alſo:

Of theſe the laſt is the delineation of the Sea by its ſeveral Names, Ports, Promontories, Creeks, and other affections; as alſo of great Lakes and Rivers: which is moſt neceſſary for the uſe of Mariners, and is beſt done by Petrus de Medina, Peter Nonnius in his Regula Artis Navigandi, and Johannes Aurigarius in his Speculum Nauticum; the chief Writers in the Art of Pilotiſm.

2. Topography is the deſcription of ſome particular place or City; of which kind was the Book of Stephanus, περὶ πόλεων, or de Urbibus, among the Antients; and the Theatrum Urbium written by Bruinus in theſe later times; Stows Book of the Survey of London, the French Antiquities de Paris, and ſuch as theſe. And of this kind is the deſcription of the Vale of Tempe, in the greater Ortelius; and thoſe of the Elyſian fields, the gardens of Alcinous, and the Heſperides in the antient Poets.

3. Chorography (as before was ſaid) is the exact deſcription of ſome Kingdom, Country, or particular Province of the ſame; unleſs this laſt may fall more properly under the notion of Topography. Of this kind the deſcription of the ſeveral eſtates of Greece written by Pauſanias, is of moſt uſe & reputation of all the Ancients: as that of Cambden Clarenceux, for the Iſle of Britain; of Lewis Guicciardine, for the Low-Countries; Leander for Italy, &c. are amongſt the Modern.

4. Geography, finally is an aggregate of all theſe together, borrowing from Hydrography the deſcription of Seas and Waters; From Topography, that of Towns, Cities, and particular places; and from Chorography, the delineations of Regions, Provinces, and Kingdoms, which brought into body, make up that Portraicture or Picture of the whole Earth, and every conſiderable part thereof, in writing; which, according to Ptolom's definition before mentioned, is properly and truly called Geography. In the advancement of which ſtudies, thoſe which have took moſt pains, with the greateſt benefit to Poſterity, are the ſaid Ptolomy, Pliny, and Strabo for the elder times; Mercator, Maginus, and Ortelius, for the later Ages. Of which the two firſt lived in the times of Antonius Pius, the Roman Emperor, An. Chr. 141. or thereabouts; the other in the reign of Tiberius Cæſar, the unworthy Succeſſor of Auguſtus: the three laſt flouriſhing in the days of our Fathers, about ſome 80 years ago.

Thus have I briefly ſummed up thoſe general Præcognita, which I conceive are neceſſary to the knowledge and underſtanding as well of Hiſtory as of Geography. Out of which two compounded and intermixt, ariſeth that univerſal Comprehenſion of Natural and Civil ſtory, which by a proper and diſtinct name may be termed Coſmography. And this may well be reckoned amongſt mixed ſtories; for it hath from Natural Hiſtory or Geography, the Regions themſelves, together with their Sites, and ſeveral Commodities; from Civil Hiſtory, Habitations, Governments, and Manners; and from the Mathematicks, the Climates and Configurations of the Heavens, under which the Coaſts and Quarters of the World do lie. Of the Utility and Excellency of which ſtudy I need ſay no more, than what hath been already ſpoken of the ſeveral parts, whereof this is only the Reſult, deſiring pardon of the Reader, that I have Chriſtened theſe imperfect and unworthy Papers by ſo noble a name; which I deſire they may deſerve, though I fear they will not. However I will give the venture, and make as ſpeedy and as profitable a diſcovery, as the times enable me, of the whole World, and the moſt obſervable things therein; according to the beſt light which the reading of Hiſtories and Geographical diſcourſes hath ſupplied me with; beſeeching him who made the World, and ordereth all the Governments and Affairs thereof as to him ſeems beſt, to bleſs me in the undertaking; and furniſh me with fit Abilities both of ſtrength and judgment to go through with it. Ipſe enim eſt qui operatur in nobis & velle & perficere; as the Scripture hath it: And ſo on in God's name.

COSMOGRAPHY:

The Firſt Book,

Containing the CHOROGRAPHY and HISTORY of ITALY, the ALPINE Provinces, FRANCE, SPAIN, and BRITAIN, with the ISLES thereof.

OF THE WORLD:

EUROPE.

OF the Creation of the World by Almighty God, and the Plantation of the ſame by the Sons of Men, ſufficient hath been ſpoken already. We are to look upon it now, as perfected and peopled in all parts thereof, but all thoſe parts united into one Compoſitum; called therefore by the Græcians, Τὸ Πᾶν, and Τὸ Ὅλον, becauſe the Summa Totalis, and general comprehenſion of all things exiſtent. In which reſpect 'tis called by the Latins, Univerſum, a name of multitude, but of a multitude united (Univerſi qui in uno loco verſi, ſay the old Grammarians.) The great body of the World, like the body of Man, though it have many parts and members, is but one body only. A body of ſo perfect & exact a form, of ſo compleat a Symmetry in reſpect of the particular parts, and all thoſe parts ſo beautified and adorned by the God of Nature; that from the elegancy and beauties of it, it was called Κόσμος by the Græcians, and Mundus by the Latins; both names declaring the Compoſure of it to be full of Ornament; and all thoſe Ornaments conducting Mankind to the knowledge of God. For (as the Chriſtian Advocate reaſoneth very ſtrongly), As he which comes into an houſe, and ſeeth all things in it ordered in a beautiful and comely order; utriſq; præeſſe crederet Dominum, &c. muſt needs conceive, both that the houſe had ſome wiſe Lord and Maſter who had ſo contrived it, and that ſuch Lord and Maſter of it was of more worth and excellency than the houſe and furniture: So (ſaith he) whoſoever doth obſerve the moſt eminent beauties of the Heaven and Earth, muſt needs conceive there is ſome great and more glorious power who did firſt create it; diſpoſing of all things therein in ſuch excellent manner.

This Contemplation, together with the notions of a Deity, which naturally are ingraffed in the ſoul of man; hath trained up all men in the practice of ſome Religion, though few (comparatively) ſo happy as to be practiſed in the true. For though the knowledge and worſhip of the true God, by reaſon of ſome acceſſions in America, and the Indies, be more generally diffuſed than in former times; yet is the leaſt part of the World poſſeſſed by them who make profeſſion of that Worſhip. For dividing the whole World into thirty parts, it hath been found by ſuch as have laboured in this ſearch, that nineteen of them are inhabited by Idolaters, who either know no God at all, or worſhip ſtocks and ſtones for gods, even the work of mens hands. Of the 11 parts which are remaining, ſix are poſſeſſed by Jews, Turks, and Sarazens; who though they have the knowledge of the God that made them, yet abnegating, or not worſhipping the Lord that bought them, they have no part or portion in the true Religion. Then for the five which are behind, two are conceived to be of the Greek Communion; the other three being divided betwixt thoſe of the Church of Rome, and ſuch as otherwiſe differing in ſome opinions, paſs generally by the name of Proteſtant or Reformed Churches, Which as it ſheweth how ſmall a portion of the World is poſſeſſed by Chriſtians, who only (though not all of them) have reaſon to pretend to the true Religion: So doth it ſhew (I note this only by the way) how falſly thoſe of Rome make multitude of Profeſſors to be a ſign of the True Church; and then conceive themſelves to be ſuch a multitude, as correſponds unto that ſign. Faulty, alike both in the Poſition and the Application. For if the multitude of Profeſſors be a ſign of the Church, the true Church ſhould be found rather amongſt the Heathens or Mahumetans, than amongſt the Chriſtians: or if they do reſtrain their meaning (as I hope they do) to thoſe who make profeſſion of the Chriſtian faith: thoſe of the Greek Communion, poſſeſſing two whole parts of five, will be found more numerous than the members of the Church of Rome, though poſſibly of leſs eſteem in the eye of the World. So infinitely vain was that brag of Bellarmine (though otherwiſe more modeſt than the reſt of the Jeſuits) affirming poſitively and expreſly, Romanam Ecceſiam univerſum plane orbem poſſidere, i. e. That the Church of Rome is fully of as large a latitude as the World it ſelf. This I have noted by the way, intending to take a more ſpecial notice of the ſtate of Religion in the ſeveral Provinces of the World, to which now I haſten; premiſing firſt this ſcheme of thoſe ſeveral parts, into which it doth now ſtand divided.

The World is divided into two parts; Unknown, or not fully diſcovered; and is divided commonly into Borealis and Auſtralis: the laſt taking up the whole Southern Continent; the other lying on the North of Europe and America; whereof we ſhall ſay ſomewhat at the end of this Work.

Known, either {Anciently, as {Europe. Aſia. Africa.
Lately, as America.

Europe is joined to Aſia, by that ſpace of Earth which is between the heads of Tanais and Duina; Aſia is joyned to Africk, by the Egyptian Iſthmus; America is divided (as moſt conjecture) from all of them. Europe is ſeparated from Aſia, by a line drawn from the Bay of St. Nicolas, to the head of Tanais, from thence by that River it ſelf all the length of his courſe; then by Palus Meotis, the Euxine Sea, the Thracian Boſphorus, the Propontis, the Helleſpont, and the Ægæan. Aſia is parted from Africk by the Red-Sea, or Gulf of Arabia: and Africa from Europe by the Mediterranean. Africa is greater than Europe, Aſia than Africk, America than Aſia.

They which have entertained a fancy of reſembling every Country to things more obvious to the ſight and underſtanding, have likened Europe to a Dragon; the head of which they make to be Spain; the two wings Italy, and Denmark. In like manner they have been curiouſly impertinent, in reſembling France, to a Lozenge or Rhomboides; Belgium to a Lion; Britain to an Ax; Ireland to an Egg; Peloponneſus to a Plantane leaf; Spain to an Ox-hide ſpread on the ground; Italy (which indeed holdeth beſt proportion) to a mans Leg; with divers the like Phantaſms of a capricious brain; theſe Countries no more reſembling them, than pictures made when painting was in her infancy, under which they were fain to write, This is a Lion, and this is a Whale, for fear the ſpectators might have taken one for a Cock, and the other for a Cat.

EVROPE, though the leaſt (as being in length but 2800, in breadth but 1200 miles) is yet of moſt renown amongſt us. Firſt, becauſe of the temperature of the Air, and fertility of the ſoyl; Secondly, from the ſtudy of Arts, both ingenious and mechanical; Thirdly, becauſe of the Roman and Greek Monarchies; Fourthly, from the purity and ſincerity of the Chriſtian Faith; Fifthly, becauſe we dwell in it, and ſo firſt place it.

EVROPE is generally ſaid to be ſo called from Europa, the daughter of Agenor, King of the Phœnicians, brought thence by Jupiter (as the Poets feign) in the ſhape of a Bull; or as ſome Hiſtories ſay, by a Cretan Captain named Taurus: as others in a ſhip whoſe beak had the portraiture of a Bull upon it. But why the bringing of that Lady into the Iſle of Crete, ſhould give denomination to the whole Continent of Europe, whereof that Iſland is ſo inconſiderable, and ſo ſmall a part, I muſt confeſs I ſee no reaſon. Goropius Becanus, who holds the high Dutch to be the primitive language, which was ſpoke in Paradiſe, and loves to fetch all names from thence; not thinking it convenient, that Europe being firſt inhabited by Gomerians or Cimbrians, ſhould be beholding to the Græcians for its name; will have it called Europe, quaſi Ver-hop, by the tranſpoſition of the two laſt letters, Ver, ſignifying excellent, and hop a multitude (whence we uſe to ſay, as thick as Hops) becauſe Europe contains a multitude of excellent people. And on the other ſide, Bochartus, a French Writer, loving as much to bring all names from the Phœnician or Punick tongue, will have it called Europe from Ur-appa, which ſignifieth in that language, a beautiful Countenance, becauſe the Europæans much excelled the Africans in whiteneſs of skin, and clearneſs of complexion. But in my mind Herodotus hath beſt determined of the controverſie, who telleth us plainly, Ὁκόθεν τὸ ὄνομα τοῦτο, οὔτε ὅςις ἦν ὁ θέμενος, &c. That it is utterly unknown, both whence it had the name of Europe, and who firſt called it ſo. And yet conſidering there is a Province in Thrace called Europe, (whereof more hereafter) why might not the Aſiaticks give the name of Europe to this part of the World, according to the name of that Province which lay neareſt to them? as the Romans did the name of Africk to the other part of the World, after the name of that particular Province or part thereof, which they firſt brought under their obedience? Or as the Europæans gave the name of Aſia, to the greateſt of the three known parts of the World; which properly and originally belonged unto Aſia Minor (as it ſince was called); or rather to thoſe parts thereof which lay next to Greece; as ſhall be ſhewn hereafter in convenient place.

The firſt inhabitants of Europe, as hath been ſhewn in part already, and ſhall be ſhewn more fully in its proper place, were the Sons of Japhet; amongſt whom, as the Scripture telleth us, The Iſles of the Gentiles were divided, Gen. 10. 5. which includes all the Continent of Europe, and the Iſles adjoining. For beſides, that it is compaſſed about with the Cyclades and other Iſles in the Seas of Greece, together with the Iſles of Candy, Sicily, Sardinia, Corſica, the Iſles of Britain and Zealand, with their young ones adjacent; Europe it ſelf was formerly taken for an Iſland; as being invironed round with water, ſaving where it is joined on the North-Eaſt to Aſia the great, which very few of the Antients were acquainted with. And what are the great Countries of Anatolia, Greece, Spain, and Italy, all which did fall to the poſterity of Japhet, but ſo many Peninſula's, or Demi-Iſlands, invironed almoſt round with one Sea or other? Nor was the name and memory of Japhet ſo much forgotten by the Children which deſcended of him; but that the Greeks, who were the firſt of their Europæan Plantations, retained it a long time in their Japetus, whom they make to be the ſon of Cœlum and Terra, and the father of the wiſe Prometheus, whom Ovid therefore calleth ſatus Japeto, in the firſt Book of his Metamorphoſis. So that we ſee how punctually the firſt part of Gods bleſſing was fulfilled upon him; which was, that he would inlarge the borders of Japhet, Gen. 9. 27. The ſecond part thereof, that he ſhould dwell in the Tents of Sem, though it was long before it came to the accompliſhment, yet it came at laſt; and that both in the literal and myſtical ſenſe. Firſt, in the literal, when the poſterity of Japhet, both Greek and Romans, made themſelves Maſters of Judæa, or the Land of Canaan, and the Eaſtern parts, promiſed to, and poſſeſſed by, the ſeed of Sem: Next in the myſtical, when God was pleaſed to break down the partition-wall, and to incorporate the Gentiles of the houſe of Japhet, into the body of the Church: which for a long time was reſtrained to the Line of Sem, Europe may be conſidered as it ſtands divided into the Continent, and the Iſlands: the Continent lying all together; the Iſlands as they are diſperſed in the Greek, Ægæan, Cretan and Ionian Seas, the Adriatick and the Mediterranean, and in the Britiſh & Northern Ocean. But in this work we ſhall diſcover them, and diſcourſe of them in this following order, dividing Europe into 1 Italy, 2 the Alps, 3 France, 4 Spain, 5 Britain, 6 Belgium, 7 Germany, 8 Denmark, 9 Swethland, 10 Ruſſia, 11 Poland, 12 Hungary.

gary, 13 Sclavonia, 14 Dacia, and 15 Greece; and ſpeak of the ſeveral Iſlands, as they relate to ſome or other of theſe greater Countries.

In all which Countries and Iſlands belonging to them, beſides the Latine Tongue which is now rather Scholaſtical, than National; and beſides the Italian, French, and Spaniſh, being but as ſo many corruptions of the Latine: and beſides the Engliſh which is a Compound of Dutch, Latine, and French; there are in all fourteen Mother-Tongues, which owe nothing at all to the Roman; that is to ſay, 1 Iriſh, ſpoken in Ireland, and the Weſt of Scotland; 2 Britiſh, or Welch, in Wales, and ſome parts of Cornwal; 3 Cantabrian, or Baſquiſh, in Biſcay, about the Pyrenæan Hills, and near to the Cantabrian Ocean; 4 Arabick, in the Mountains of Granada, called Alpuxarras; 5 Finnick, in Finland and Lapland, Provinces of the Crown of Sweden; 6 Dutch, (though with different Dialects) in Germany, Belgium, Denmark, Norway, Swethland; 7 Cauchian, which the Eaſt-Friezlanders (or Cauchi) ſpeak amongſt themſelves, though to ſtrangers they ſpeak the Common Dutch, 8 Sclavoniſh, in Sclavonia, Poland, Hungary, and almoſt all the parts of the Turkiſh Empire; 9 Illyrian, on the Eaſt ſide of Iſtria, and the Iſle of Veggia; 10 Greek, in moſt Provinces and Iſles of Greece, by the Greeks themſelves; 11 Hungarian, and 12 Epirotique, in the mountanous places of thoſe Countries; 13 Jazygian, on the North-ſide of Hungary, betwixt Danubius and Tibiſcus, and 14 Tartarian, in the Taurca Cherſoneſus, and other Europæan parts of that barbarous people. And this ſhall ſerve for Europe in the general notion. Deſcend we now to the particular Kingdoms, Regions, and Iſlands of it; beginning firſt of all with Italy, contrary to the uſage of moſt Geographers; who commonly begin with Spain, or Ireland, as being the furtheſt Countries Weſtward, and conſequently neareſt to the firſt Meridian, from whence the Longitude was reckoned. Which we ſhall do by reaſon of that great influence which the Romans had in moſt parts of Europe, and many parts of the World beſides, in matters as well Civil and Eccleſiaſtical, which much depended on the power of that Empire, formerly, and on the uſurpations of that Church in the later days.

ITALY once the Empreſs of the greateſt part of the (then known) World, is compaſſed with the Adriatick, Ionian, and Tyrrhenian Seas, except it be towards France and Germany, from which it is parted by the Alps; ſo that it is in a manner a Peninſula or Demi-Iſland. But more particularly it hath on the Eaſt, the lower part of the Adriatick, and the Ionian Sea, by which it is divided from Greece; on the Weſt the River Varus, and ſome part of the Alps, by which it is parted from France; on the North, in ſome part the Alps which divide it from Germany; and on the other parts the Adriatick, which divides it from Dalmatia; and on the South the Tyrrhenian or Tuſcan Seas, by which it is ſeparated from the main land of Africa.

It containeth in length from Auguſta Prætoria (now called Aoſt) at the foot of the Alps, unto Otranto in the moſt Eaſtern point of the Kingdom of Naples, 1020. miles: in breadth from the River Varo, which parts it from Provence, to the mouth of the River Arſia in Friuli, where it is broadeſt, 410 miles; about Otranto where it is narroweſt, not above 25 miles; and in the middle parts from the mouth of Peſcara in the Adriatick or upper Sea, to the mouth of Tiber in the Tuſcan or Lower Sea, 126 miles. The whole compaſs by Sea, reckoning in the windings and turnings of the ſhore, comes to 3038 miles; which added to the 410 miles which it hath by Land, make up in all 3448 miles. But if the Coaſt on each ſide be reckoned by a ſtraight Line, then it falls very ſhort of this proportion, amounting in the total, as Caſtaldo computes it, to no more than 2550 miles. The whole Country lyeth under the fifth and ſixth Climates of the Northern temperate Zone, which it wholly taketh up: ſo that the longeſt day in the moſt Northern parts is fifteen hours, and three fift parts of an hour, the longeſt in the Southern parts, falling ſhort a full hour and no more of that length.

But theſe dimenſions muſt be underſtood of Italy in the preſent latitude, and extent thereof, and not as it was called and counted in the times of the Romans, neither in the growth nor flouriſhing fortunes of that State; the bounds of Italy on the Weſt, and North-weſtern parts being then the River Rubicon, which runneth into the Adriatick, not far from Ravenna, and the River Arno, which runneth into the Tyrrhenian Seas, by the Port of Ligorn. All that lay Weſt-wards towards the Alps, as it was poſſeſſed by the Gauls, ſo it had alſo the name of Gallia, and, for diſtinctions ſake, of Gallia Ciſ-Alpina, and Togata, whereof we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Lombardy. And it continued, (though a Province of the Roman Empire) diſtinct from Italy, until the Empire of Auguſtus; who dividing Italy for the better Government thereof into eleven Provinces or Regions, divided Gallia Ciſ-Alpina into ſeveral parts, (whereof more anon) and reckoned them as Provinces or Members of the body of Italy.

The names hereof ſo bounded as before, are ſaid to have been very many, according to their ſeveral Nations which were anciently of moſt power and authority in it; or to the ſeveral fancies of the Name-giver: whereof ſome being the names only of particular Provinces, were by a Metonymy, taken for, and applyed to the whole. Of this laſt ſort, to omit others of leſs note, were Latium, and Auſonia; the Auſones being a people dwelling about Cales a Town of Campania; and Latium, that particular Province which lyeth on the Eaſt of Tiber, ſo called, as moſt Writers are of opinion, a latendo, from hiding; becauſe Saturn being driven from Crete by Jupiter, hic latebat abditus, did here live concealed;

Maluit, his quoniam latuiſſet tutus in oris, as the Poet hath it

Nor was this Virgils fancy only, but a Tradition generally followed and allowed of by the greateſt Writers, as by Eutropius, and Herodian and by Minucius Felix alſo, though Varro pretending to more than ordinary knowledge in Antiquity, would have it called Latium, quod lateat inter præcipitia Alpium & Apennini, as Servius in his notes on Virgil, becauſe it lyeth hidden (as it were) under the Præcipices of the Alps and Apennine hills; which cannot poſſibly be ſaid of Italy properly and antiently ſo called, no part whereof came near the Alps. The more generall names of the whole Country, were, 1. Heſperia, from Heſperus the ſon of Atlas, as the Poets ſay, or rather, as Macrobius is of opinion, from Heſperus the Evening Star, as being ſeated Weſtward in regard of Greece. 2. Oenotria, either from the abundance and excellency of the Wines, Wine being called οἶνος by the Grecians; or, as moſt think, from Oenotrius an Arcadian King, one of the firſt Planters of the Country: And 3. Italia, the name at firſt of that part of this Continent which was afterward called Calabria; ſhut up firſt between Golfo de Chilaci (called antiently Sinus Scylleticus) on the South; and Sinus Lameticus, part of the Bay or Golf of Tarentum, on the ſouth ſide of it, For ſo ſaith Ariſtotle in the ſeventh Book of his Politcks, Cap. 10. Τὴν ἀκτὴν ταύτην τῆς Εὐρώπης Ἰταλίαν τοῦ ὄνομα λαβεῖν,&c. That is to ſay, That part of Europe which lieth between the Bay Scylleticus and the Bay Lameticus, took the name of Italie, the Golfs being diſtant from each other about half a days journey. And this Tradition he received (as he there affirmeth) from the beſt Antiquaries of that Country. The like occurs in Dionyſius Halicarnaſſeus, out of Antiochus Syracuſanus, a more antient Author; the like in Strabo, lib. 6. So named from Italus, a chief Commander of ſome Nations; who firſt ſetled here, and by degrees communicated to the reſt of this Continent. Of theſe three laſt, thus the Poet Virgil.

> Eſt locus, Heſperiam Graii cognomine dicunt,
> Terra antiqua, potens armis, atq; ubere gleba,
> Oenotrii coluere viri; nunc Fama, minores
> Italiam dixiſſe, ducis de nomine, Gentem.

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words;

> That which the Greeks Heſperia call'd, a place > Great both in Arms and Wealth, firſt planted was
> By the Oenotrians: ſince, if Fame not lie,
> Was from their Chieftain's name call'd Italie.

Who and from whence this Italus was, we ſhall ſee ere long. Mean time we will take notice of the concent or harmony, which is betwixt Ariſtotle and this Poet: it being ſaid by Ariſtotle in the ſeventh of his Politicks, cap. 10. that Italus having taught the Oenotrians the Arts of Husbandry, who before were wandring Shepherds only, he cauſed them by his own name to be called Italians. Let us next take a view of thoſe honourary Attributes which have been given unto this Country, ſo denominated from him; by Æthicus, called Regina Mundi, the Queen or Empreſs of the World; by Mamertinus one of the old Panegyriſts, Gentium Domina, the Miſtreſs of the Nations; by others, Paradiſus Mundi, the terreſtrial Paradiſe. But what need more be ſaid than is ſpoken by Pliny, who hath adorned Italy with this following Panegyrick? Italia terrarum omnium alumna, eadem & parens, numine Deum electa quæ Cœlum ipſum clarius faceret; ſparſa congregaret imperia, ritus molliret, tot populorum diſcordes linguas ſermonis commercio ad colloquia diſtraheret, & humanitati hominem daret. Italy (ſaith he) the Parent, and withal the Foſter-child of all other Nations, was elected by the Providence of the Gods, to make (if poſſible) the very Heavens themſelves more famous: to gather the ſcattered Empires of the World into one body, to temper the barbarous Rites of uncivilized people, to unite the diſagreeing languages of ſo many men by the benefit of one common tongue; and in a word, to reſtore man to his humanity. A very high Encomion doubtleſs; and yet not much more than the place deſerves, with reference to the times when the Author lived.

The People antiently, (and to this day they ſtill partake ſomewhat of thoſe qualities) were wary of behaviour, ſparing of expence, and moſt greedy of glory, according unto that of Tully, Semper appetentes gloriæ præter cæteras nationes ſunt Romani: by which he doth not mean thoſe only who lived within the walls of the City of Rome, but alſo their Italian neighbours and aſſociates, Romans by priviledge and freedom, though not by birth. They have twice given the Law to the faireſt, and moſt puiſſant parts of the World; once by their Valour, when the greateſt part of the (then known) World was brought under the obedience of the State of Rome, the ſtanding body of whoſe Armies was principally compounded of Italian bands: And ſecondly by their Wit, by which they have ſubdued a great part of Chriſtendom, to the obedience of the Pope and Court of Rome, the ſtanding body of whoſe Council (though he have Miniſters of all tempers and Nations) do ſpecially conſiſt of Italian Heads. In former times here lived the renowned Captains, Camillus the Sword, and Fabius Maximus the Buckler of Rome; the two Scipioes, one of which ſubdued Africk, and the other Aſia; Pompey the great, who extended the Roman Empire Eaſtwards to the banks of Euphrates; Cæſar, the greater of the two, enlarging it Weſtward to the Britiſh, and the Belgick Ocean; beſides infinite others of leſs note in reſpect of theſe, though moſt deſerving in themſelves. Here flouriſhed alſo the famous Orators, Cicero, Hortenſius, and Antonius; the renowned Hiſtorians, Livy, Tacitus, and Saluſtius; the memorable Poets Virgil, Ovid, Catullus, Tibulus, and Propertius; Plautus, and Terence the Comedians; the Satyriſts, Horace, Juvenal, and Perſius. So equally were they favoured both by Mars and the Muſes, that it is not eaſie to determine whether they were moſt eminent in Arts or Arms. What men of ſpecial eminence it hath ſince produced, we ſhall ſee hereafter, when we are come to take a view of Italy as it ſtands at preſent; and to that place we ſhall defer our Obſervations of the Air, and diſpoſition of the Soil, with ſuch other particulars as have received little or no alteration in the change of times.

Italy was antiently divided, as moſt Countries elſe, into Tribes and Nations, as the Latines, Sabines, Tuſcans, Samnites, Campani, Picentini, Piceni, Ligures, Tarentini, Lucani, and others of inferior note; whom we ſhall meet with in the deſcription of thoſe ſeveral States into which it doth now ſtand divided. But all thoſe Nations being ſeverally vanquiſhed by the Roman puiſſance, and made up into one body, whereof Rome was the head; it pleaſed Auguſtus to divide it into eleven Regions, as before was ſaid, that is to ſay, Liguria, Hetruria, Latium, Campania, Vmbria, Samnium, the Picenum, Gallia, Italia, Tranſpadana, Venetia, and Hiſtria. In the time of the Emperour Antoninus, the Provinces of Italy were encreaſed to ſixteen, the bounds of the former Regions being ſomewhat altered; and the three Iſles of Sicily, Corſica, and Sardinia, with the two Rhætia's, firſt and ſecond, added to the number. But this diſtribution alſo received ſome change in the time of Conſtantine the Great who altering both the names and bounds of the former Provinces, and adding one more to them, made ſeventeen in all, that is to ſay, 1. Tuſcia and Vmbria, 2. Picenum Suburbicarium, 3. Campania, 4. Apulia and Calabria, 5. Valeria, 6. Samnium, 7. Lucania and the Brutii, 8. Sicily, 9. Corſica, and 10. Sardinia, which made up the præfecture of the City of Rome; 11. Flaminia and Picenum Annonarium, 12. Venetiæ, 13. Æmylia 14. Liguria, 15. Alpes Coctiæ, 16. Rhætia prima, and 17. Rhætia ſecunda, which made up the Dioceſe of Itay, properly and eſpecially ſo called, whereof Millain was firſt the Metropolitan City, Aquieleia afterwards.

The Language heretofore was divers, according to the ſeveral Provinces and people of it. In Apulia, they uſed the Meſſapian tongue, in that which is now called Calabria, they ſpake the Greek; in Hetruria, they uſed the Tuſcan; and the Latin in Latium: which laſt ſo altered in ſhort time, by reaſon of the commerce they had with the conquered Nations, that the Articles of the Peace made between the Romans and Carthaginians, at the expulſion of the Tarquins, could not be underſtood (as Polybius ſaith) by the beſt Antiquaries of his time. And yet the time between the making of thoſe Articles, and the time of Polybius, who was contemporary porary with Scipio Africanus, paſſed not above 300 years. That the Latin tongue was afterwards at any time ſpoke generally in all parts of the Roman Empire, or of Italy it ſelf, as I ſee ſome hold, I can by no means be perſwaded; it being by ſpecial favour granted to the Cumans, dwelling but an hundred miles from the Walls of Rome, that they ſhould uſe the Roman Language: which had been a meer mockery, and no mark of favour at all, if the Italian people dwelling out of Latium had uſed it formerly. And yet this hapned not above 140 years before the times of the Emperors, at what time the Romans were Lords of Italy, Sicily, Sardinia, Corſica, and a great part of Spain. It's true, the Latin tongue in ſucceeding times came to be underſtood in moſt parts of Italy, by reaſon of the Roman Colonies which were planted among them (being in all no fewer than 150) and their continual reſort to Rome on their ſeveral buſineſſes: it being a great point of the Roman State, not only to have their Laws written, and judgment pronounced by the Prætors for the ſeveral Provinces, in the Latin only; but to give audience in the open Senate to none who came thither from the ſubject Nations, ſave only in the Latin tongue, their own proper language. Yet for all this, it never grew to ſuch extent as to be the Language of the whole Empire, no nor of Italy it ſelf, no more than the Engliſh tongue is natural or national to the Welch, or Iriſh; though it be generally underſtood (for the very ſame reaſons) by all of the better ſort both in Wales and Ireland. In which regard I am not of their opinion, who think that the Italian (as the French and Spaniſh) are nothing but corruptions of the Latin tongues, occaſioned by the inundations of the barbarous Nations: But rather that the Latin words which occur therein, proceeded from that weak impreſſion which the Latin tongue had made amongſt them, whilſt they were under the obedience of that puiſſant Empire; and that the Italian tongue, as it is now ſpoken, could not receive ſo great a change from the Barbarous Nations, none of which tarried long amongſt them, but the Goths, and Lombards; nor they ſo long (the Lombards not at all in the Eaſtern parts) as to be either the occaſions or authors of the alteration. So that the preſent language of Italy is a decompound, made up epecially of Latin and the old Italian: ſome notions of the Lombard being mixt with it in the North, and Weſt, ſome of the Gothiſh, in the middeſt, about Rome it ſelf, and not a little of the Greek, in the Eaſt of Naples.

And as the Language ſo the Religion of the Country, hath received ſome change. The Chriſtan Faith was firſt preached in Rome it ſelf, and in Rome firſt preached by Saint Peter, who came thither in or about the beginning of the Empire of Claudius. The two Apoſtles Peter and Paul are generally ſaid by the antient Writers, to be the firſt who preached the Goſpel in that City. A duobus Apoſtolis Petro & Paulo, Romæ fundata & conſtituta eſt Eccleſia, ſaith the old Father Irenæus, Lib. 4. Cap. 3. To one of theſe, the firſt preaching of the Goſpel there is to be referred; both being Biſhops of that City: That is to ſay, St. Peter of the Churches of the Circumciſion; St. Paul of thoſe which conſiſted ſpecially of the Gentiles. Now that the Goſpel was preached there before Paul's coming, is evident by his Epiſtle written to the Romans, at Cenchrea the Port-Town of Corinth, ſix years at leaſt before his being brought to Rome; in which he teſtified that their Faith was famous over all the World; and therefore could not count him who had never been there, for the planter of it: And as St. Peter was the firſt Preacher of the Goſpel at Rome, ſo ſent he his Diſciples to promulgate it in moſt parts of Italy. The Roman Martyrologies reckon up eight Biſhops of St. Peter's making, for ſo many of the principal Cities of this Country: that is to ſay, Epaphroditus (not he whom St. Paul ſpeaks of in his Epiſtle to the Philippians) for Terracina, of old called Anxur, Hirmagoras for Aquileia, Paulinus for Luca, Apollinaris for Ravenna, Marcus for Atina, Proſdocimus for Padua, Marcianus for Syracuſe, and Pancratius for Tauromenium in the Iſle of Sicily. But whether St. Peter planted it, or St. Paul watered it, certain I am that GOD only gave it the increaſe. It could not elſe have proſpered under ſuch a Tyranny, as many, if not moſt of the Roman Emperors did earneſtly endeavour to ſuppreſs it with. But Sanguis Martyrum ſemen Eccleſiæ; the watering of it with the blood of ſo many Martyrs, made it grow the faſter. And this ſmall grain of Muſtard-ſeed waxed ſo great a Tree, as over-ſhadowed all the Provinces of that mighty Empire; and did not only ſtand it out againſt all Tempeſts, but in concluſion did ſuppreſs that Superſtition and Idolatry, for whoſe ſake all thoſe Princes, till the time of Conſtantine, did more or leſs, labour to deſtroy it. How much it had receded ſince thoſe times from its primitive purity, and how it did degenerate into Worldly pomp, and Secular policy, by the deſign and arts of thoſe who boaſt themſelves to be Succeſſors to that great Apoſtle, ſhall be a little touched at, in the ſtory of the Roman Papacy. Suffice it in this place to ſay, that all the people of this Country, partly in reference to the Pope, partly for fear of the Inquiſition, and partly by being kept in ignorance of the Proteſtant Doctrine (of which they are taught to believe many monſtrous things) are all of the Religion of the Church of Rome.

But though the Fountains of the waters of Eternal life, have either been ſtopped, or elſe corrupted by the Popes of Rome; the Rivers which do water this moſt flouriſhing Garden, ſtill preſerve their beds, and run unmixed and uncorrupted in the ſame Chanels, as before they did. And of theſe Italy hath as many as any one Country, but none of any long courſe, by reaſon that all parts of it are ſo near ſome Sea; moſt of which riſing from the Alpes, or the Apennine Hills, by melting of the Snows in Winter and caſualty of Land-floods at other times of the year, do often overflow the Country, and for the moſt part leave an ill Air behind them. Thoſe of chief note are, 1 The River Po or Padus (the Greeks call it Eridanus) into which Phaeton is ſaid to have been drenched when he fell from Heaven. It ariſeth in the Alpes, runneth through Lombardy, which it divideth into Ciſpadanam and Tranſpadanam; and having taken in thirty leſſer ſtreams, falls with ſeven mouths into the Adriatick Sea not far from Venice. 2 Rubicon, now called Piſſatello, anciently the North-bound of Italy; Hic fluvius quandam Italiæ finis, as it is in Pliny. It runneth into the Adriatick Sea not far from Rimini, or Ariminum, now the Port-town to Ravenna, the Haven of Ravenna being long ſince choked; but of this River more in another place. 3 Arnus, which riſing in the Apennine falleth in to the Tuſcan Sea, and anciently divided Italy on that ſide from the Ciſalpine Galls: on the banks hereof ſtandeth the fair City of Florence. 4 Ticinus, which gave name to the City of Pavy called of old Ticinum; it riſeth in the Alpes, and emptieth it ſelf into the Lake called Lacus Verbanus. 5 Liris now called Gariglia, ſtained with the blood of French and Spaniards, in their quarrels for the Realm of Naples, and no leſs unfortunately memorable for the drowning of Peter de Medices. 6 Cuique fuit rerum promiſſa potentia, Tibris.

And Tiber, unto which was given
The power of all things under Heaven.

It riſeth from the Apennine Hills, not far from Aretium (now Arezzo) a Town of Tuſcany (which it parted from the Roman Latium, and the Land of the Sabines) and gliding gently near Cita de Caſtello, Perugia, and the old Ocriculum, paſſeth by Rome, and falleth into the Tuſcan or lower Sea, at Oſtia. Here is alſo, 7. The Lake of Thraſymene, near which Annibal defeated Flaminius the Conſul and his whole Army, opening thereby his paſſage to the gates of Rome; and 8. The famous River of Metaurus, where the Romans overcame Aſdrubal the Brother of Annibal, and thereby made a way to the ruin of Carthage. Others of leſs note ſhall be mentioned in their proper places.

As for the Mountains of this Country, thoſe of moſt note are the Alps, and the Apennine, of which the reſidue in a manner are but ſpurs and branches. Of theſe the Alps being alſo appertaining to France and Germany, or rather containing many large and entire Provinces which belong to neither, deſerves a Tractate by it ſelf. The Apennine, being proper only to this Country, but ſo that it relates to many and particular Provinces of it, ſhall be ſpoken of here. A ledge of Hills which take beginning near Savona, a Town of the Commonwealth and Country of Genoa, ſituate on the Mediterranean, and fetching a little compaſs Northwards, extend to the furtheſt part of Italy, dividing it almoſt in the very midſt: that part thereof which lyeth towards the Tyrrhenian, or Tuſcan Sea, being called Ciſapennina; Tranſapennina, that which lies towards the Adriatick. Paſſing in one entire body as far as Aſcoli, a Town of Marca Anconitana (a Province belonging to the Pope) where they are at the higheſt; it is there parted into two horns or branches, whereof one runs out to the mount of Gargano, and ſo unto the Land of Otranto; the other ſpreadeth it ſelf as far as Calabria, thoſe being the moſt Eaſtern Provinces of this noble Continent. Called the Apennine as ſome ſay, a Penna, by which word the Latins uſed to ſignifie the top or ſummit of an Hill; by reaſon of the height and ſharp points thereof; as others ſay, quaſi Alpes Pœninæ, becauſe firſt overcome by Annibal and his Carthaginians, whom the Roman Writers call by the name of Pœni. The Inhabitants hereof by Virgil named Apennicolæ. But otherwiſe reducible to ſome of the neighbouring Provinces. Of this large Mountain moſt of the Hills of Italy from Savona Eaſtwards, are but the excurſions; which being of leſs note, ſhall be ſpoken of as they lie before us in the way.

To proceed now to ſo much of the Hiſtory of Italy, as concerns the general; we are to know that the firſt Inhabitants of it (not to ſay any thing of the fictions of Frier Annius under the name of Beroſus, who will needs have Noah himſelf come hither ſhortly after the Flood) were doubtleſs of the race of Cittim or Kittim the fourth ſon of Javani, one of the ſons of Japhet. Who being planted by their Father in that part of Greece, which was ſince called Macedon, and after ſpreading themſelves further as their numbers increaſed, peopled Ætolia and the Countries adjoining to it: From whence, deſirous of a warmer and more fertile ſoil, they came in tract of time to the Coaſts of Dalmatia, and thence to this Country ſince called Italy. That they did ſpring originally from the ſeed of Cittim (or Kittim, as the Greek pronounce it) wants not very good Authors. For thus Euſebius, Κίτιοι ἐξ οὗ Λατῖνοι καὶ οἱ Ῥωμαῖοι, that is to ſay, from the Kitians, or children of Kittim, deſcended the Latins and the Romans. The ſame occurs alſo in the Chronicon of Alexandria. So alſo ſaith Cedrenus in his Annals, but with more punctuality. Telephus (ſaith he) the ſon of Hercules, raigned in Italy, and after him his ſon Latinus, ὃς τοὺς Κηταίους ἐπωνόμασε Λατίνους, from whom the Keteans were named Latins. The ſame in other words ſaith Suidas. Nor want there ſome remainders of this name in approved Writers, beſides theſe authorities; there being a Town in Latium called Ketea, metioned in Dionyſius Halycarnaſſeus, and a River named Ketus not far from Cumæ, whereof Ariſtotle ſpeaketh in his book de Mirabilibus. And that they came immediately from the Ætolians, beſides the other Arguments which Reinecceus uſeth in this point, the nearneſs, or identity rather of the names doth ſeem to intimate. For Ætolia being written in the Greek Aitolia, and the letter O being changed into A according to the Æolick Dialect, which was that uſed by the Ætolians; the alteration of the name from Aitolia and Aitolians, to Italia and Italians, will be thought very eaſie, if not natural; the rather in regard there is an Iſland near Italy, in the Tuſcan Sea, peopled originally by theſe very Ætolians, which in ancient times was called Æthalia. And if by ſuch an eaſie alteration of one Letter only, Italy may derive its firſt plantation from the Ætolians, as no doubt it may; then may that Italus, the Chieftain of whom Virgil ſpeaks, be no other than Aitolus, ſome man of principal mark and eminency, amongſt that People, who had the Conduct of this Colony, when they came for Italy. And this I ſhould believe much rather, than that this Italus was the name of a King of Sicily: It being more probable that Sicily ſhould borrow its firſt Planters out of Italy, than Italy ſhould borrow either Name or People from ſo ſmall a Kingdom; eſpecially conſidering that the name of Aitolus was famous in thoſe parts of Greece, ever ſince Aitolus the ſon of a King of Elis, was Founder of the Ætolian Kingdom. The way thus ſhewn, and the paſſages into Italy laid open, it was not long before the Pelaſgi, another Greek Nation, found the way into it: after whom Saturn out of Crete, and Evander out of Arcadia, with their ſeveral followers, came and ſetled there. Not to ſay any thing of thoſe ſeveral Colonies, which coming out of Peloponneſus, and the parts of Achaia, planted themſelves ſo thick in the Eaſt of Italy, now called Calabria, that of long time it had the name of Magna Græcia. So that the Græcians made the main groſs or body of the Italian people: to which the coming of ſome Tuſcans under the conduct of Tyrrhenus, a Prince of Lydia, in Aſia minor, ſerved but as an Acceſſary, and altered nothing of the Principal. The laſt that ſetled here, were ſome of the Relicts of Troy, under the conduct of Æneas: who flying from their Native Country, and enraged Enemies, were firſt caſt upon the Coaſts of Africk; where having ſtaid a while to refreſh his Companies (we ſhall hereafter take an occaſion to conſider of the Fable of his loves with Dido) he ſet ſail for Italy, being the place aſſigned him by the Gods for his Seat and Empire, whither he came with fifteen Ships, which might contain, according to the rate which Thucydides alloweth to the Veſſels then uſed, to the number of 1200 men. And there he landed, as it proved in an happy hour: For he was no ſooner arrived, but he was lovingly cheriſhed and entertained by Latinus King of the Latins, or of Latium; whoſe chief City or Seat-Royal was then called Laurentum; who much eſteeming of this Stranger, as a man whoſe fame had been his Harbinger, thought he could neither manifeſt his love ſufficiently, nor bind him faſt enough unto him, but by betrothing him unto Lavinia, his only daughter. Hence grew the Wars betwixt Æneas, and Turnus King of the Rutuli, a former Suiter, which being ended in the death of the Rutulian Rival, confirmed Æneas and his Trojans in a ſure poſſeſſion. For now growing with the Latins, or Laurentini, into a more conſtant bond of Friendſhip, by many inter-marriages, and mutual kindneſſes, they built the Town

Town of Lavinium, called ſo in honour of their Queen, intending it for the Seat-Royal of the Princes of the Trojan line. But long it did not hold that ſtate. For Aſcanius the ſon of Æneas by his former Wife, to avoid all occaſions of contention with his Mother-in-Law, left her (Æneas being dead) in poſſeſſion of Lavinium, and built Longa Alba; which being ſurrendred by Julus the ſon of Aſcanius to his half brother Silvius, became the conſtant habitation of the Silvian Kings, till the building of Rome, and final ending of the race of the Latine Kings. The names of whom (for there occurs little of their actions) we are next to ſhew; taking along with us thoſe few Kings which reigned in thoſe parts of Italy, before the coming of Æneas.

A. M. The Kings of Italy of the Aborigines.

2637. 1 Janus, the firſt King of the Aborigenes, who lived in the ſame time with Boaz and Ruth; He received Saturn flying out of Crete from Jupiter, and left him his Kingdom at his death. He is ſaid to be the Founder of the City of Genoa, and to have given name to the Hill in Rome called Janiculus, on which it was ſuppoſed that he had his dwelling.

2 Saturn, who taught the people the uſe of dunging of their Lands, and for that cauſe was honoured by them as a God, under the name of Stercutius, as St. Auſtine hath it. He reigned firſt together with Janus, and afterwards by himſelf alone: the whole time of both their reigns was 33 years.

2670. 3 Picus, well-skilled in divination by the flight and chattering of Birds, and therefore feigned by the Poets to be turned into a Pye. He entertained Evander and his Arcadians, giving them the Hill (called after Aventine) to build upon, 37.

2707. 4 Faunus, the ſon of Picus, and the Husband of Fatua, in whoſe time Hercules came into Italy, vanquiſhed the Giants of Cremona, and killed the Giant Cacus, who had fled from him out of Spain, 44.

2751. 5 Latinus, the ſon of Faunus, who entertained Æneas coming from the Wars and deſtruction of Troy, and gave him his daughter Lavinia to wife, with his Kingdom after him in Dower, 36.

2787. 6 Lavinia, daughter to Latinus, and Queen of the Latins married to Æneas whom ſhe outlived, he being ſlain in his Wars againſt Mezentius, the King of Tuſcany; the ſon or ſucceſſor of that Mezentius (an ungodly Tyrant) whom Æneas had before ſlain in his War with Turnus and the Latins, 7.

A. M. Kings of the Latins of the Trojan or Silvian Race.

2787. 1 Æneas the ſon of Anchiſes, and Husband of Lavinia, ſlain in his Wars againſt Mezentius King of the Tuſcans or Hetrurians, as before is ſaid, 3.

2790. 2 Aſcanius, the ſon of Æneas by Creuſa his former wife: for fear of whom, Lavinia being great with child, fled into a Wood, and was there delivered of a ſon called Silvius. He removed the Seat Royal from Lavinium to Longa Alba, a City of his own building, 38.

2828. 3 Silvius Poſthumius, the ſon of Æneas by Lavinia, preferred to the Kingdom by the love of the people, before Julus the ſon of Aſcanius (the Founder of the Julian Family) from whom all the Kings of this race had the name of Silvii; Julus being honoured with the chief Prieſthood (an Office next in dignity to that of the King) which he tranſlated afterwards unto his Poſterity, 29.

2857. 4 Æneas Silvius, 31.

2888. 5 Latinus Silvius, 50.

2938. 6 Alba Silvius, ſo called becauſe of his beautifying and repairing the City Alba, then in ſome decay: or probably, becauſe there he had his birth, 39.

2977. 7 Capetus Silvius, 24.

3001. 8 Capys Silvius, ſaid to be the Founder of the City of Capua; which ſhews that he extended his dominion farther than the Province of Latium, 28.

3029. 9 Capetus Silvius, 13.

3402. 10 Tiberinus Silvius, from whom the River Tiber derives that name, being formerly called Albula, 8.

3050. 11 Agrippa Silvius, 40.

3090. 12 Alladius Silvius, who to make himſelf the more terrible to his Subjects, ſtudied a way to imitate the Thunder; but was killed at laſt by a real Thunder-clap from Heaven, 19.

3109. 13 Aventinus Silvius, who gave the name to the Hill Aventine, 37.

3146. 14 Procas Silvius, 23.

3169. 15 Amulius Silvius, the younger ſon of Procas, ſetting aſide his Brother Numitor, obtained the Kingdom for himſelf; ſlain at laſt by Romulus, and Numitor ſetled in the Throne, 42.

3211. 16 Numitor, the 21 King from Janus, and the laſt King of the Latins, reſtored by Romulus to the Throne; and after the ſhort raign of one year only, deprived by him both of life and Kingdom. After whoſe death the Latins, or Albans, had no more Kings, but kept themſelves as a Free Eſtate till ſubdued to Rome, 1.

Concerning this it is to be underſtood, that Amulius having chaſed his eldeſt Brother Numitor out of the Country, and poſſeſſed himſelf of the Throne, cauſed his Brothers daughter Rhea (for preventing an iſſue by her) to be ſhut up in the Temple of Veſta. Where ſhe proving the mother of two ſons, was according to the Law buried quick, and her children by the cruel Tyrant caſt out to be devoured of Wild beaſts. They were found by Fauſtulus the Kings Shepherd, nurſt by his Wife, for her infamous life called Lupa (whence came the Fable, that they were ſuckled by a Wolf) and being grown to mens eſtate, ſlew the Tyrant Amulius, placing their Grandfather Numitor in the Royal Throne; whom not long after they deprived both of life and Kingdom. Of theſe the eldeſt was named Romulus, and the younger Rhemus, who leaving Alba to the ſhort poſſeſſion of their Grandfather Numitor, laid the foundation of the moſt famous City of Rome; which Romulus firſt hanſelled with the blood of his Brother Rhemus, who had diſdainfully leapt over the Walls of his new City. This City he made an Aſylum or place of Refuge for all comers, of what deſperate eſtate ſoever, and having ranked them into order, made himſelf their King. A people of ſo baſe a nature, that their neighbours refuſed to give them any of their daughters in marriage: So they were deſtitute of wives, and conſequently not like to continue a people long; till on a Proclamation made of ſome Plays and Paſtims, many of the Sabine women flocked thither to behold the ſports, whom the Romans ſeized on, and forced an unwilling conſent from them, to become their Wives. From ſuch a baſe and low beginning did this City riſe to be the Empreſs of the World.

The Kings of Rome.

A. M.

3213. 1 Romulus, the Founder of Rome; he made peace with Tatius King of the Sabines, coming againſt him to revenge the raviſhment of their Women; incorporating him and his into his new City, and by that means adding thereto a fair and goodly Territory, 37.

3251. 2 Numa, the firſt Author of the Roman Ceremonies, 43.

3294. 3 Tullus Hoſtilius, who enlarged the borders of Rome by the Conqueſt of Alba, the mother City of the Latins, and vanquiſhed the Fidenates, 32.

3326. 4 Ancus Martius, who built Oſtia on the mouth of Tiber, to be an Haven to the City, 24.

3350. 5 Tarquinius Priſcus, who ſubdued many of the Tuſcan Nations, encreaſed the number of the Tribes and Senators, and added the triumphal Ornaments, 38.

3388. 6 Servius Tullus, who firſt cauſed the people to be inrolled, and brought into cenſe 44.

3432. 7 Tarquinius Superbus, ſon to the former Tarquinius. He vanquiſhed the Gabii, and took the Towns of Ardea, Ocriculum, and Sueſſa Pometia: but for his own inſolent behaviour, and a Rape committed on Lucretia the Wife of Collatin by his ſon Sextus, he and his whole Race were driven out of the Town, Anno Mund. 3457. V. C. 268.

After this, the Romans loathing the name of King, cauſed two Officers to be choſen out of the Patricii, or chief Citizens, to whom they gave the name of Conſuls, a conſulendo, from counſelling of, and conſulting the good of the Commonwealth, ut conſulere ſe ſuis civibus meminerint, ſaith the Hiſtorian, their name being a Memento of their charge or duty. And in this Office they reſolved to have always two, and thoſe but only for a year, Ne vel ſolitudine vel mora poteſtas corrumperetur. And though ſome had the fortune to be Conſuls two or three years together, yet every new year they were anew choſen, and ſo their Offices reckoned as ſeveral; neither do we find any to have been elected for leſs than a year, unleſs upon the death or depoſition of a former, until the Civil Wars. But then, cum belli civilis præmia feſtinari cœperunt, when the ſervices done in the Civil Wars required a quicker turn in requital, the Conſulſhip was given only for ſome part of the year, and ordinarily for two Months: the firſt Conſuls being named Ordinarii, in whoſe names the writtings made for the whole year were dated; the other Minores, or Honorarii, which only ſerved to make up a number. For ſo ambitious were the Romans of this honour, that when Maximus died in the laſt day of his Conſulſhip, Caninius Rebilus petitioned Cæſar, for that part of the day that remained: whence that ſo memorated Jeſt of Tully, O vigilantem Conſulem, qui toto conſulatus ſui tempore ſomnum oculis non vidit! And when Cecina was by the Senate degraded from this honour on the day in which he was to have reſigned it, one Roſcius Regulus obtained the Office from Vitellius for the day remaining: but as the Hiſtorian noteth, magno cum irriſu accipientis, tribuentiſque. Now as the Romans did thus exceed the firſt number of Conſuls, ſo ſometimes fell they ſhort of it. The firſt that was ſole Conſul was Pompey in the beginning of the Civil Wars, viz. A.V.C. 403. The next, one Varanes, V. C. 410. This Office, from the firſt Inſtitution to the final period of it, continued at the leaſt in name (for the Emperors had of long time aſſumed the Power and Prerogatives appertaining to it) the ſpace of 1084 years though not without many intermiſſions of the name and Title, by the ſeveral interpoſings of the Decemviri, the Dictators, and the Conſular Tribunes, of which more anon. The laſt Conſul was one Baſilius, in the time of Juſtinian, A.Chr. 542. The two firſt, Collatinus the husband of Lucretia, and Junius Brutus, by whoſe inſtigation the people had took Arms againſt the houſe of the Tarquins. A man ſo zealous in defence of the common liberty, ſo reſoutely bent to make good what he had begun, and ſo extreamly oppoſite to the Royal Race, that he not only cauſed Collatine to reſign his Office within the year, becauſe he was of the blood of the Tarquins, but executed his own ſons for holding correſpondence and intelligence with them. But though the Government were changed, the old deſign was followed, which the Kings had laid for the enlarging of their Empire; but followed with ſo ſlow a pace, by reaſon of their factions and diviſions, that it was full 500 years before they could be Maſters of Italy. A matter not unworthy of our conſideration, that the Italians ſhould hold out ſo long a time againſt the puiſſance of the Romans; when in leſs then half that time enſuing, they did poſſeſs themſelves of almoſt all Europe, and many goodly Kingdoms and Provinces both in Aſia and Africk. So difficult a thing it was (as is ſaid by Florus) dare caput Italiæ, to contract the many limbs of Italy into one body, and unite them under one head.

But to proceed, after Italy was fully conquered by them, they fell upon the Carthaginians, as their neareſt neighbours; whoſe overthrow in the end of the firſt Punick War, A. V. C. 512. gave them the full poſſeſſion of Sicily, (except the State of Syracuſa) and the Iſle of Sardinia. After that being moleſted in their Trade by the Illyrian Pirates; and finding them countenanced therein by the Queen of that Nation, they made a fortunate War againſt her, and brought that puiſſant people to become their Tributaries, A.V.C. 525. The ſecond Carthaginian War, managed by Annibal in the bowels of Italy, had almoſt put a period to the glories of their Commonwealth. But that being alſo ended to their advantage by the conqueſt of Spain, they quarrelled Philip King of Macedon, who had aided Annibal, compelled him to accept of peace on their own terms, and after outed his ſon Perſeus of all his Dominions, making Macedon a Province of Rome, and all the reſt of Greece but their Tenants at will. Nor was it long before they picked a quarrel with Antiochus the great King of Syria, made him abandon his poſſeſſion of the Leſſer Aſia; and finally prevailed ſo ſucceſsfully in all their actions, that there was neither King nor Commonwealth that could ſtand in their way, until the State being burthened with its too much greatneſs, began to totter of it ſelf.

Two things there were, which much conduced to the advancement of the Romans to their power and greatneſs, beſides the Providence of God which had ſo diſpoſed it: which were the great encouragements which they gave their Souldiers, and the Triumphant manner of reception which they uſed to beſtow upon their Generals when they returned home with honour and victory. For when any of their Generals did ſo return, he was permitted to enter ſitting on a glorious Chariot, the ſpoils which he had got in War being carried before, the Priſoners he had taken following bound at the heels of his Chariot; his Souldiers compaſſing him about with their ſeveral Crowns according to the quality of their well-deſervings, and all the Fathers of the City, attended by the Prieſts and principal Ladies going out to meet him. The firſt begining of which cuſtom is aſcribed to Romulus, who in the War with Acron King of the Ceninenſes made againſt him in revenge of the rape committed by the Romans on the Sabine women, ſeeing his people give ground, called for help to Jupiter, and vowed if he overcame King Acron, to offer up his Armour to him. Acron being vanquiſhed, the Conqueror cutteth down a fair young Oak and hangeth on it all the Armour of the vanquiſhed King: then girding his Gown cloſe unto him, and putting on his head a Garland of Lawrel, he laid the Oak upon his ſhoulders and marched towards the City, his Army following, and ſinging an Epinicion, or ſong of victory. To this we muſt refer the original and beginning of Triumphs. But, Nihil eſt inventum & perfectum eodem tempore, as the ſaying is. Tarquinius Priſcus long after Romulus, added hereunto the purple Robe, and the triumphant Chariot drawn with four horſes. The other pomps came afterwards, as they grew both in power and pride. Now of theſe Triumphs there were two ſorts; the Greater, which was properly called a Triumph, and the Leſſer, vulgarly called the Ovation, which differed from one another in many circumſtances. For, 1. The Triumpher made his entrance in a Royal Chariot, and was met only by the Senators in their Robes; but the Ovator made his entrance on foot, and was met only by the Knights and Gentlemen of Rome. 2. The Triumpher had a Laurel Crown, and entred with a noiſe of Drums and Trumpets; but the Ovator had only a Garland of Firr, with Flutes and Haultboys playing before him. 3. The Triumpher was attired in a Garment of State, which they called Veſtis Trabeata, but the Ovator in a plain purple Gown only. 4. In a Triumph, the Souldiers cried out, Io Triumphe; but in an Ovation they ingeminated only O, O, O, from the often doubling of which word, it had (as ſome think) the name of an Ovation. 5. And laſtly the Triumpher uſed to ſacrifice a certain number of Oxen; but the Ovator a Sheep only, from whence the name is properly to be derived.

Now there was three caſes in which the Conqueror was to be content with this leſſer Triumph. 1. If the number of the enemies whom the ſlew in battel exceeded not 5000 men; or that he had not ſo much overcome them by force, as by perſwaſion or ſubtilty. 2. If the War had been ſlight, curſory, or not lawfully managed. And 3. If it were againſt an Ignoble Enemy. And of this laſt we have a fair inſtance in P. Rupilius, who having got the victory in the Servile war, (a victory of great importance to the State of Rome) was yet content with an Ovation, ne Triumphi dignitatem Servili inſcriptione violaret, as it is in Florus. As for the greater Triumphs, they were indeed very full of magnificence; the pomp whereof, who liſt to ſee, may find it in the Triumph of Paulus Æmilius deſcribed by Plutarch; though by that which hath before been ſaid, we may conjecture ſomewhat at the glories of it.

And yet this Honour was not always vouchſafed to thoſe who had beſt deſerved it, there being many ways whereby it might be forfeited or denied in a factious State, and jealous of the over-greatneſs of the men of War. For, 1. Sometimes it was denied a victorious General, by the ſtrength of a contrary Faction; and ſo Pompey denied Metellus the honour of a Triumph for the conqueſt of Crete: 2. Sometimes the Conquerer himſelf is willing to decline it, for fear of envy: And ſo Marcellus in Plutarch, after his conqueſt of Sicily, having triumphed twice before, refuſed that honour: his reaſon was, ϗ φθόνον εἶχεν ὁ τρίτος θρίαμβος, for fear his Third Triumph might become a matter of envy, 3. Sometimes the Souldiers, having been ill paid, or otherwiſe not well treated by their Commanders, oppoſed them in their ſuit for it: and this was the caſe of Paulus Æmilius, who queſtionleſs had miſſed this honour for not dividing amongſt them the ſpoils of Greece, as he once had promiſed if Servilius and others of the Senate, making it their own caſe, had not ſtickled hard for him with the Souldiers. 4. It was ſometimes denied, becauſe the General had born no publick Office in the Commonwealth: for ſo, in Livy, when Lentulus coming Proconſul out of Spain required a Triumph, the Fathers anſwered, that he had indeed done things worthy of that honour, but that they had no precedent for it, ut qui neque Conſul, neque Dictator, neque Prætor Res geſſiſſet, Triumpharet. 5. Sometimes the Generals themſelves omitted it for the furtherance of ſome of their other purpoſes: And ſo Cæſar coming towards Rome a Victor, at the ſame time the Conſuls were to be choſen, laid aſide his demand of the Triumph to ſue for the Conſulſhip; it being the cuſtom that ſuch as demanded the Triumph ſhould abide without the City, and ſuch as ſued for the Conſulſhip muſt of neceſſity be within. 6. Sometimes it was denied, when the War had been undertaken without the Command of the Senate: in which reſpect the Triumph was denied unto Manlius on the conqueſt of Galatia by him, to the great enlargment of their Empire, quia cauſam Belli Senatus non approbavit, becauſe he had no Commiſſion from the Senate for it. 7. There was no Triumph granted if the War had been Civil, becauſe in all ſuch Wars whoſoever was Conqueror, the Commonwealth was a loſer by it. And therefore Pompey and Metellus having vanquiſhed Sertorius and his party in Spain, would have it called a Foreign, nor a Civil War, becauſe they would not loſe their Triumph. Externum magis id bellum quam Civile videri voluerunt, ut triumpharent. 8. If the Victory had not been obtained without great loſs on the Romans ſide; in which regard Valerius after his conqueſt of the Galls was denied this honour, quia magis dolor civibus amiſſis, quàm gaudium fuſis hoſtibus prævaluit, ſaith Alexander ab Alexandro. 9. And laſtly, the Triumph was denied a General, if the ſervice had not been performed in his own Province: And ſo we find that when Livius and Nero, being Conſuls, had vanquiſhed Aſdrubal, Livius only had the Triumph, though Nero was the man that had won the day, becauſe the field was fought in the Province of Livius, to which Nero came but as an Acceſſary, or aſſiſtant to him.

And theſe are all, or at the leaſt the principal cauſes of hindering or omitting this great Honour, indeed the greateſt that the Free-State could be capable of. But after when the Commonwealth was changed into a Monarchy, it began to be laid aſide for altogether, as too great for ſubjects; and was firſt purpoſely neglected by Veſpanius Agrippa, the Eſtabliſher of Auguſtus in the Roman Empire, who when he had a Triumph decreed unto him, for quenching certain Rebellions in Aſia, and his quiet ſetling of that Country; to give Poſterity an example, refuſed to accept it. And this example being (as it were) a rule to others, occaſioned that this cuſtom was in ſhort time quite laid aſide; and that no man under the degree of an Emperor triumphed ſolemnly; all others from thenceforth, being content with the Triumphal Ornaments, μόναις ταῖς ἐπινικίαις τίμαις, in the words of Dion. And though Beliſarius having ſubdued the Kingdom of the Vandals in Africk, is ſaid (600 years after the death of Agrippa) to have had the honour of a Triumph; yet in propriety of ſpeech, it was nothing but an honourable preſenting of himſelf and his priſoners before the Emperor; and was ſo far from the magnificence of a Roman Triumph, that it wanted many of the ſolemnities uſed in an Ovation. Nor did the Emperors themſelves much affect this honour, either becauſe too popular, or too chargeable, or that they they thought it was beneath the Imperial Majeſty; the laſt (as I remember) that made uſe thereof to ſet forth his glories, being Valerius Probus, after his victories over the Germans, and the Blemyæ, a people of Africk, in or about the year 284 of our Saviour's birth.

In the next place look we on the incouragements and rewards of the Common Souldiers: For, beſides the ſetting out of Lands and dwellings for the poorer ſort, in which they might reſt themſelves when they were paſt ſervice; and beſides the large donatives which the General in his Triumph did beſtow upon them; they had their mural Crown for him that firſt ſcaled the Walls, a naval Crown for him that firſt boarded the Enemies ſhips, a Camp Crown, or Corona Caſtrenſis, for him that had forced a way into the Tents or Camp of the Enemy; a City Crown, or Corona Civica, for him that had preſerved the life of a Roman Citizen. Not to ſay any thing of thoſe Chains and Bracelets which Souldiers of inferiour merit were adorned withal. By which encouragements, and the good conduct of their Counſels in the Senate, the Roman affairs ſucceeded ſo proſperouſly, and their Dominions were enlarged ſo immenſly, that never any Common-wealth had ſo large a growth.

And yet the greatneſs of this State is neither totally, nor only to be attributed to the Conſular Government. For through the Walls of this great building were raiſed by the Conſuls, yet the foundation of the ſame was laid by the Kings, and the roof thereof laid on by the Emperours. Nay, be it ſpoken to the honour of Monarchical Government, whenſoever any great and imminent danger did ſeem to threaten them, they were fain to lay aſide their confidence in the rule of their Conſuls, and betake themſelves to the Command of one Soveraign Officer, whom they called Dictator. Of which, and other the changes hapning in the State of Rome, take this ſhort abſtract from Corn. Tacitus. “ Urbem Romam “ a principio Reges habuere,&c. “ The City of Rome was “ in the beginning governed by Kings. Liberty and the “ Conſulſhip L. Brutus brought in. The Dictators were “ choſe but for a time: The Decemviri paſſed not two “ years, neither had the Conſular authority of the Tribunes of the Souldiers any long continuance, nor Cinna's nor Sylla's dominion. Pompey and Craſſus quickly “ yielded to Cæſars forces; Lepidus and Antony to Auguſtus. So Tacitus in brief of theſe publick changes: Of which, as to the Decemviri, which were inſtituted only on a particular occaſion for the reforming of the Laws by thoſe of Athens; and the Military Tribunes of Conſular Authority ordained to divert common people from ſeeking after the Conſulſhip; I ſhall here ſay nothing. But as for the Dictators, being Officers of a Supreme power, and ſuch as made way for the Eemperors in the cloſe of all; I ſhall enlarge a little further. They were called Dictators a dictando, becauſe they preſcribed what they pleaſed unto the people; which they were bound to execute and not diſpute. Hence that memorable jeſt of Julius Cæſar, who being told that Sylla had reſigned his Dictatorſhip though by the decree of Senate made perpetual to him; returned this Anſwer, that Sylla was an unlearned man, dictare neſciit, and therefore knew not how to dictate; or to play the Dictator. They were alſo called Populi Magiſtri, or the peoples Maſters, becauſe from them lay no appeal unto the people (as did from all the reſt of the Roman Magiſtrates) during the whole time of their Command, which ordinarily continued for ſix months; yet ſo, that if they did in the mean time ſettle the affairs of the Common-wealth, they reſigned it ſooner; if the neceſſities of the State required a longer continuence in it, they were choſen again. The names of as many of them as I have met withal, I have here ſubjoyned together with the ſervices they did the Publick, in the time of their Office.

The Dictators of Rome.

A.V.C.
253.	1	Titus Largius, choſen upon occaſion of a general War made by the Latins upon Rome; the firſt that ever had this Office.
257.	2	Aulus Poſthumius, choſen to purſue that War, Which he ended with the ſlaughter of 30000 of the Latins.
295.	3	L. Quintius Cincinnatus, choſen to this Office from the Plough, overcame the Volſci, choſen again An. V. C. 314. to ſupreſs the ſedition raiſed by Sp. Melius.
318.	4	Æmilius Mamercus, overcame the Veientes and the Fidenates, and was thrice in eleven years called unto this Office.
338.	5	Pub. Servilius, who finally vanquiſhed the Fidenates and the Lavicani.
354.	6	Furius Camillus, who finally deſtroyed the City of the Veti, and being choſen a ſecond time, A. V. C. 362. preſerved his Country from the Galls: thrice choſen after this upon new occaſions.
375.	7	Tit. Quinctius Cincinnatus, choſen in the War againſt the Latins.
385.	8	L. Manlius, elected in the time of a grievous peſtilence, to find a way for the appeaſing of the gods.
396.	9	C. Sulpitius.
418.	10	Martius Rutilius, the firſt Dictator choſen out of the Commons.
	11	L. Papyrius, ſubdued the Samnites.
438.	12	Coſſus, by whom the Samnites were again vanquiſhed.
	13.	Æmilius, who alſo overcame the Samnites.
	14	Lentulus, who triumphed alſo over the Samnites.
451.	15	I. Bubulcus, who finally ſubdued the Æqui and the Volſci.
	16	Corn. Rufinus.
467.	17	Q. Hortenſius, choſen for appeaſing a difference betwixt the Senate and the Commons, who had fortified himſelf in Janiculus, one of the Hills whereon Rome ſtood.
505.	18	Cl. Glizias, forced to reſign his Office to
	19	Atilius Colatinus, the firſt that exerciſed his Office out of Italy: he was choſen in the firſt Punick War.
536.	20	Fabius Maximus, choſen in the War againſt Annibal.
537.	21	M. Junius, choſen upon the great defeat which the Roman Forces had at the battel of Cannæ.
545.	22	L. Manlius Torquatus, choſen upon the death of Marcellus Conſul ſlain by Annibal.
672.	23	L. Sylla, (deſcended from that Corn. Rufinus, who had been formerly in this Office) having by force of Arms ſuppreſſed the Faction of Marius and Cinna, made himſelf Maſter of the City, and cauſed himſelf to be choſen Perpetual Dictator, after the Office had been intermitted, for the ſpace of 127 years: which Office having exerciſed with a great deal of cruelty, he reſigned with as great a confidence.
707.	24	C. Julius, Cæſar deſcended from Julus the ſon of Aſcanius, who was the ſecond King of the Trojan race, having conquered Britain, and added all Gaul Tranſalpine to the Roman Empire; and finding himſelf unworthily requited by the Faction of Pompey, paſſed with his Army after him into Greece: and having vanquiſhed him in the fields of Pharſalia, and made himſelf abſolutely Maſter of the Roman Empire; took to himſelf the ſupreme Government thereof, under the Title of Dictator; which having managed for the ſpace of five years, he was murthered in the Senate-houſe by Brutus and Caſſius.

Before the time of theſe perpetual Dictators, the Romans having ſome enemies or other that oppoſed the progreſs of their fortunes, had not the leiſure to contend with one another in a publick way; or if they did, their differences and ſeditions were ſoon compoſed. But being grown ſo great as to fear no Enemy; and the Eſtate ſo vaſt, that it was grown too mighty for a popular Government; then they began to practiſe on the peoples patience, and to project the ſharing of the Empire amongſt the great-Ones. Concerning which, take here this ſhort Epitome, which I find in Tacitus. “Rebus modicis æqualitas facile habebatur, &c. While (ſaith he) “our Dominions were but ſmall, Equality was eaſily “maintained among us. But after we had ſubdued “the World, and deſtroyed all Kings and Cities that “ſtood in our way, or might work our annoyance; “when we had leiſure to ſeek after Wealth without “peril, there aroſe hot contentions betwixt the Nobility and Commons. Sometimes the factious Tribunes carried it away, ſometimes the Conſuls had the better: “and in the City and common Forum, ſome little ſkirmiſhes (the beginning of our Civil Wars) were “ſometimes ſeen. Afterwards, C. Marius one of the “meaneſt of the Commonalty, and L. Sylla the moſt “cruel of all the Nobility, by force of Arms overthrowing the Free-Sate reduced all to an abſolute Government. To them ſucceeded Cn. Pompeius, a little “cloſer in his projects, but nothing better minded to “the Common-wealth: Et nunquam poſtea niſi de Principatu quæſitum; and never after that was any other “point debated, than who ſhould get the Soveraignty “unto himſelf. So Tacitus: and he ſtateth it rightly. For after Pompey had revived the controverſie, and had found Cæſar a better Diſputant than himſelf; Auguſtus, Antonius, and Lepidus (on the death of Cæſar) made good the Argument, attracting all power unto themſelves by the name of Triumviri: till Auguſtus having out-witted Lepidus, and vanquiſhed M. Antony at the battel of Actium, became ſole Soveraign of the State, by the name of Prince; Et cuncta bellis civilibus feſſa, nomine Principis ſub imperium accepit, as that Author hath it.

But touching theſe great alterations in the State of Rome, the contentions for the chief command, and the Reduction of it to a Monarchy by Auguſtus Cæſar, I publiſhed a Diſcourſe in the year 1631. (but written many years before) under the title of AVGVSTVS, or an Eſſay of thoſe Means and Counſels whereby the Commonwealth of Rome was altered, and reduced to a Monarchy. Which being but ſhort, ſo pertinent to the Preſent buſineſs, and ſo well entertained when it came abroad; I hope it will not be improper or unprofitable to ſubjoyn it here. The Reader may either peruſe it, or prætermit it, as his phanſie guides him. And here it followeth in theſe words.

THey which have heretofore written of Commonwealths, have divided them into three Species: 1. The Government of the King, ſecondly, of the Nobles, and thirdly, of the People. Either of theſe is again ſubdivided into good and evil: The evil from being only the good corrupted; the good nothing elſe but the bad refined. So is the Government of a King divided into a Monarchy, and a Tyrany: Of the Nobles, into Ariſtocracy, and Oligarchy: Of the People, into a Republick, and Democraty. All theſe, as well in general, as in the ſeveral couplets, have a ſecret inclination to change the one into the other; and to make a Pythagorical tranſmigration (as it were) into each others Being. I need not ſtand on many inſtances. The Common-wealth of Rome (into whoſe ſtories whoſoever looketh, will judge them rather to contain the acts of the whole World, than a particular Nation) will ſerve for all. Romulus at the foundation of his City, reſerved unto himſelf the chief Soveraignty, leaving it entire to his ſucceſſors. Numa, Ancus, Tullus, Tarquin the Elder, and Servius, governed themſelves ſo moderatly, and the People ſo juſtly, that they affected not Tyranny, nor the Commons Liberty. They appeared more deſirous to fill the Coffers of their Subjects than their own Treaſuries: And when neceſſity compelled them to a Tax, they rather ſeemed to ſheer their ſheep than fleece them. But Tarquin the ſecond, commonly called Superbus, a man of inſupportable Vices, having by violence enthronized himſelf in that Chair of State, which (had not his ambitious ſpirit been impatient of delay) would have been his rightful Inheritance, made his government anſwerable to his entrance, cruel and bloody. How many men, eminent as well by their own Vertue, as their Parents Nobility, did he cut off? How many did he for no cauſe promote to make their fall the more remarkable? What part of the Senate was free from ſlaughter? What corner of the City from lamentations? Yet this was not all. The miſerable Romans were viſited with three Plagues at once; Pride in the Father, Cruelty in the Mother, and Luſt exorbitant in their ſon Sextus, a true Copy of the old Originals. Either of theſe had been more than enough to exerciſe the peoples patience. But meeting all at one time, it ſeemed that nothing could now be added to the wretchedneſs of the one, and the wickedneſs of the other. Brutus (a name fatal to Tyrants) did eaſily perſwade the Commons to ſhake off this yoke. For they, as well deſirous of Novelties as ſenſible of Oppreſions, had long ſince murmured at the preſent State; and wanted nothing but a Head to break out into actual Rebellion. So the People got the Freedom, and the Kings loſt the Soveraignty of the City.

2. Brutus, although he wanted no fair title to the Crown, yet either perceiving how odious the name of King was grown; or perhaps willing to be rather the firſt Conſul than the laſt Prince, inſtituted a new form of Government: Wherein the ſway of all was referred to the Fathers of the City; out of whom two were annually choſen as chief of the reſt. And herein certainly he dealt very adviſedly. For had he ſought to confirm himſelf in the Kingdom, what could men judge, but that not love to his Country was the cauſe that ſtirred him to take Arms, but deſire of Rule? Again beſides that ſecure Privacy is to be preferred before hazardous Royalty; What hope had he to keep the ſeat long, having by his own example taught the people both the Theory and Practice of Rebellion? Under this new Ariſtocracy the Roman affairs ſucceeded ſo proſperouſly, their dominions were inlarged ſo immenſly, that it may well be queſtioned whether the Roman Fortune cauſed their greatneſs, or their valour commanded their fortune. For the Governours not ſeeking wealth but honour, or not their own wealth, but the publick, did ſo demean themſelves both in Peace and War, that there was between all a vertuous emulation who ſhould moſt benefit his Country. An happineſs which was too great to continue long. The people had as yet no written Laws: Cuſtom bearing moſt ſway, the reſt of the Law locked up in the breſt of the Judges. To avoid ſuch inconveniencies as might hence enſue, there were ſome men, conceived to be as ſound in judgment, as honeſt in their actions, deputed by a general Commiſſion, to take an abſtract of the Grecian Laws: according to the tenour whereof, the people were to frame their lives, the Judges their ſentences. Here followed the Oligarchy or Decemvirate State of Rome, but long it laſted not. For theſe new Lords joining forces together, made themſelves rich with the ſpoil of the people, not caring by what unlawful means they could purchaſe either profit or pleaſure. Appius Claudius, one of the Decemviri, was the break-neck of this Government. He, unmindful of Lucretia and the Tarquins, luſted after Virginia, a woman though of low condition, yet ſuch a woman in whom Beauty and Vertue ſtrove for the preheminence. The iſſue was, that ſhe (to ſave her honour) was ſlain by her own Father in an open Aſſembly of the People; Appius forced to make away himſelf in Priſon; and the reſt of that Magiſtracy abdicating their Offices, the Conſuls were for a time reſtored.

3. The People fleſhed with this victory, and calling to mind how their Anceſtors had in like manner baniſhed the Kings, began to know their own ſtrength, and ſtomached it exceedingly, that they on whoſe ſhoulders the frame of the State was ſupported, ſhould be ſo much under the command of others; that they who were Lords abroad, ſhould be below the condition of Slaves at home. Hereupon they raiſe a tumult under the Conduct of their Tribune, Canuleius. Nor could they by any perſwaſions be induced to lay down Arms till they had obtained a Decree, That from thenceforth the Nobles and the Commons might promiſcuouſly be married. And this was the firſt ſtep to the Republick. The gaining this new priviledge, put them in poſſibility of obtaining greater. They now ſue to be capable of the Conſulſhip. The Fathers conſulting of this demand, wiſely foreſaw, that to grant their Petition, or to deny it, was alike dangerous. For were it utterly daſhed, it was to be feared the people would again forſake the City; and yet make their ſtay more inſolent & inſupportable, if it were granted. C. Claudius, one who by his honourable behaviour, was by both parties had in an equal degree of reverence, quickly propoſed a middle courſe, whereby the fury of the multitude might be appeaſed, without blemiſh to the Conſular dignity. He conſtituted ſix Annual Officers, equally choſen out of the People and the Nobles, calling them Tribuni Militum Conſularis poteſtatis. This Office continued, but not without many Interſtitiums, the ſpace of 78 years. Which time expired, and ſome experience being had of the Peoples Government, the Lords of the Senate did decree, That one of the Conſuls ſhould from thenceforth be choſen by, and out of the Commons; that they ſhould be capable of all Magiſtracies, yea, even of the Dictatorſhip. So that now Vertue was as ſpeedy a Ladder to climb unto Honours, as Nobility of Birth; and a Good man as much reſpected as a Great. A rare felicity of the times.

4. The People being thus mixt with the Nobles, as well in Marriages as Honours; one would have thought that this Common-wealth, being thus equally poiſed, had been immortal. But as in the Natural Body there can be no exact and Arithmetical proportion of the humours and elements, without ſome predominancy; ſo in the Body Politick can there be no equal mixture of Plebeians and Patricians, without the ſupremacy of the one or the other. The People had, preſently after the inſtitution of the Conſuls, raiſed a Commotion, and withdrew themſelves into Mount Aventine. Nor could they be intreated to return into the City, till there were granted unto them peculiar Officers called Tribuni Plebis, or Protectors of the Commons. Theſe being not long after by the Common-Council pronounced to be Sacroſancti, and inviolable, began to heave the Popular State too high, and thruſt the Ariſtocratical too low; not regarding to loſe the love of the one, ſo they might get the applauſe of the other. Inſomuch, that matters of judgment were devolved from the Fathers to the Commons; and the authority of the Senate trod under foot by the People. Nay, they proceeded ſo far, that Marius being Tribune, threatned to ſend Cotta the Conſul unto priſon. And Sulpitius in the ſame Office, made the Conſuls forſake the Senate-houſe, and ſlew one of their ſons, whoſe heels were not nimble enough to flie away. And now were the Romans governed by that form of rule, than which there is no lower. So that as well by an inevitable neceſſity in Nature, as the ordinary courſe of Policies, there muſt be a reverting to the firſt, and Monarchical Authority. For queſtionleſs it fareth many times with a Common-wealth as with the Sun, which runneth through all the ſigns of the Zodiack, till it return to the place where its motion firſt began. And the Platonick year of reducing all things to the ſame beginning, continuance, and period, how falſe ſoever in the Books of Nature, is in ſome ſort true in the change of Government.

5. The way down hill is eaſie and ordinary, but to aſcend unto the top requireth both wit to frame the ſteps, and courage to give the attempt. So was it here alſo with the Romans: They had naturally, and almoſt inſenſibly faln from a Monarchy to a Populacy, or Democracy: But to aſcend from a Populacy to a Monarchy, required many ſteps and degrees in many, much induſtry in all. Marius and Sylla, well skilled in feeding the humours of the People, were the firſt that attempted, and ſeverally mounted to ſuch a height of command, as never durſt any promiſe to them, nor they hope for themſelves. Marius was of an harſh and ſtern nature, equally cruel to the Enemies in War, and the People in Peace; one whoſe birth the Romans might have had juſt cauſe to curſe, had he not ſaved them from the Cimbri. Sylla was one whoſe carriage none could enough commend before, or ſufficiently condemn after his proſperity. A man whoſe Peace was far more bloody than his Wars; a better Subject than a Prince.

Theſe two gave way each to other, and both to death. Next theſe, as well in factions and deſigns, as blood and alliance, ſucceeded Cæſar and Pompey: Two men never truly parallel'd ſince their own times. Cæſar had a wit to invent ſo pregnant, a heart to execute ſo ſtout, and to both a Fortune ſo favourable, that he durſt undertake what no man dared; and his performances commonly were anſwerable to his undertakings. Pompey, a man greater than his own or his friends wiſhes, had triumphed over all the parts of the known World; and could he but have brooked an Equal, he had never met Superiour. Had theſe two lived in divers Ages, or exerciſed their valour on the common Enemy, the World had been too little to yield them employment. But turning their forces one againſt the other, Pompey overthrown in the Field, was baſely murthered in Egypt: and Cæſar, victoriouſly conqueror in Theſſaly, was barbarouſly maſſacred in the Capitol. And though none of theſe four Worthies could ſettle the Monarchy in himſelf, yet this ſhall be to their eternal memory recorded, that they firſt opened a paſſage to others, and firſt moved the ſtone, which rowling along, tumbled the People out of the Government.

6. After the overthrow of Pompey, and death of Cæſar, the Common-wealth might have recovered Liberty, if either Cæſar had left no heir, and Pompey no children: or rather, if Antonius, a man of an unquiet and turbulent ſpirit, had not begun new troubles. For he knowing the affection of the common people unto young Octavius, Cæſar's heir; and hearing the continual report of his approach to Rome for his inheritance, did by Decree of the Senate reſtore Sextus the ſon of Pompey to his blood and honours; Hoping that they two, inheriting their Fathers hatreds, would like Pellets in a Boys Pot-gun drive out each other; and ſo he might remain Lord of the whole. But young Octavius was too old to be ſo fetcht over, and had moreover more deſire to revenge his Fathers death on Brutus and Caſſius, than turn himſelf upon an Enemy that neither had done, nor could do him any hurt. At his firſt entrance into Rome he declared himſelf Cæſars heir, though ſome regarding more his welfare than honour, diſſwaded him from it. His retinue at his entrance was but ſmall, his behaviour gentle and courteous, ſo that all had cauſe to love him, none to fear him. His firſt buſineſs was to Antonius, then poſſeſſed of all Cæſar's eſtate. His words as modeſt as his Petition juſt. Antonies anſwer ſomewhat churliſh, forbidding him to meddle in matters of State, adding that he was too young to take upon him the name of Cæſar, and ſo diſmiſſed him unſatisfied, and with diſcontentments. AVGVSTVS (for by that name we mean to call him, though he was not yet ſo called) perceiving that Antonies anſwer, though in ſhew but a delay, was in effect a denial, inſinuated into the acquaintance of Cicero, then potent among the Senators, and a capital Enemy of Antony; by whoſe means the Lords of the Senate began to caſt great affection towards him. Next in a ſolemn Oration to the People, he let them know, how he intended to have diſtributed his Fathers wealth among them; and how Antonius did unjuſtly detain it from them both. Certainly, there is not any thing prevaileth ſooner with the ignoble Man than hope of gain. No ſooner had he finiſhed his ſpeech, and given away that to them, which he thought impoſſible to get for himſelf, but all was in a tumult. None was ſo ſparing of his words, but he had ſome curſe in ſtore for Antonius: every one vowing the deſtruction of that man, whom they ſuppoſed to deprive them of AVGVSTVS donative.

7. In this hurly burly Antony quits the Town, and is by the general voice of the Houſes declared an Enemy to the State. An Army is given to Hircius & Panſa, then Conſuls: AVGVSTVS, aged but 18 years, being proclaimed Imperator, and made head of the League againſt the common Foe. AVGVSTVS, as he loved not to abſent from a neceſſary war, ſo he always uſed to reſerve himſelf from the dangers of it; and therefore he committed the whole enterpriſe unto the Conſuls: well knowing that though the Officers & Souldiers took moſt pains to get the Victory, yet would the honour of it be referred to him, as Imperator; Whereas if any thing fell out to the Army not well, his being a Non-agent in the buſineſs, would bring his honour off without ſtain. The Conſuls therefore proceeded in the War againſt Antony: who ſeeing little poſſibility of prevailing, reſolved to ſell the loſs of his own liberty and his Souldiers lives, at a dear rate. And indeed the fortune of the day was ſo equally ſhared, that as the Conſuls might boaſt of the vanquiſhment of Antony, ſo Antony might triumph in the death of the Conſuls.

AVGVSTVS had now as much as he could deſire, more than he expected; a victorious Army at his ſervice. He therefore applies himſelf ſo to them, that giving that among them which he had in preſent; and promiſing them greater favours, according as his fortune and their valour ſhould advance him; he bound them unto him in an eternal bond of allegiance, and made them the firſt ſtep by which he aſcended the Royalty. The Lords of the Senate hearing of the young mans fortune, thought it beſt to ſtrangle theſe hopes even in their Cradles, and to that end, decree the honour of overcoming Antony, not to belong to AVGVSTVS, but to Decius Brutus; for whoſe defence (being beſieged by Antony in Mutina) their Army had been levied. Nor did they think this froſt of unexpected unkindneſs ſufficient to nip the bloſſom of his hopes; but they denied him the Conſulſhip. Theſe harſh proceedings compelled AVGVSTVS (his honour now lying at ſtake) to enter Rome as Conquerour, and force the Fathers to grant him his deſires. Having thus gotten what for the time he aimed at; he generally ſhewed himſelf grateful to all, and particularly to ſome of the Souldiers, paying them what was behind by promiſe, and openly proteſting that without their aid he durſt not have adventured into the Capitol. So by keeping his day with the Military men, and ſhewing his noble and generous nature in a thankful commemoration of their ſervice; he added ſtronger bonds to ſuch as were already his own, and won many daily to his ſide, which before were either neutral, or adverſaries.

8. Antony in the mean time was not idle, but knowing that Lepidus was beyond the Mountains with a puiſſant Army, he poſted thither, and ſo far prevailed with the Souldiers, that he was admitted into the Camp; where the General entertained him with all expreſſions of love and welcome. Antony perceiving the facile nature of Lepidus, ſoon perſwaded him to lead his forces into Italy; promiſing him no leſs than the Lordſhip of the World, if he durſt but ſhew his face to the Romans. AVGVSTVS having continual news of this combination, and fearing much the prowe ſs of Antony, now ſtrengthened; conceived no courſe ſo fitting and convenient to his ends, as to join friendſhip, and to enter into confederacy with them. And this he did, not for any good will to either, but becauſe being deſtitute of means to reſiſt them, and alſo to revenge the death of his Father Julius, which he much laboured; he might with their forces oppreſs Caſſius and M. Brutus, and, as occaſion fell out, deal with them being ſevered. This League was ſolemnly confirmed by a bloody Proſcription immediately following. Wherein, to be revenged on their Enemies they betrayed their Friends. A lamentable and ruthful time; good and bad, rich and poor, being alike ſubject to the ſlaughter. Now was the time of Julius Cæſars Government thought to be the Golden Age; and every one began to curſe Brutus and Caſſius as the Authors of theſe preſent miſeries; whom they but lately honoured as the Reſtorers of the Common liberty. Nay the very Kings were deemed tolerable, and ſuch as lived in their days, happy. The poor Romans had not changed the Tyranny, but the Tyrants: Yea, they had three for one into the bargain. Such is the condition of us men, that we know not our own happineſs in the fruition, but the want. Two of theſe Triumviri glutted themſelves with blood, taking pride in hearing the lamentable cries and groans of the People. Auguſtus on the contrary, ſhewed himſelf much grieved at this barbarous cruelty; ſo that his conſent ſeemed rather forced than voluntary. But this Proſcription, though in it ſelf cruel and tyrannical, produced ſome good and profitable effects in the Republick. For when by this Proſcription and the enſuing Civil War, the ſtouteſt of the Nobles and Commons were made away, few being left which durſt endeavour to recover the old Liberty; Auguſtus did the more eaſily eſtabliſh his Monarchy, and reſtore peace to the City. Moreover the proſecution of this cruelty ſo incenſed the people againſt Antony and Lepidus, that Auguſtus, whom moſt held excuſable, found them always his faſt friends, if not for love to him, yet in ſpight to them.

9. But to proceed; Antony and Auguſtus leaving the guard of the City to Lepidus, with joint-forces march againſt Brutus and Caſſius, both overthrown by Antony; whom AVGVSTVS did thereefore put upon that ſervice, as well to diminiſh Antonies forces, as to keep his own entire. As for himſelf, either he in policy ſuffered himſelf to be driven out of the field by Brutus, to make Antony more work; or elſe indeed durſt not abide the Battel. Such end had Brutus and Caſſius, two men whom fortune ſeemed to be in love with on the ſudden, and did as ſuddenly forſake them. Brutus the more accompliſhed man; Caſſius the more expert Souldier. I paſs over AVGVSTVS Wars in Italy, Antonies in Aſia, the diſcontents between them, and their reconciliation by the means of Octavia, ſiſter to the one, and wife to the other Emperour. As alſo how joining forces together to oppreſs Sextus, then Lording it over the Sea, and proud with the conqueſt of Sicilia; they received him into the Confederacy, and joined the Iſland of Sardinia to his other conqueſts. To recompence which kindneſs, Sextus invited the two Generals aboard his Admiral-Gally: and after a bountiful entertainment, returned them ſafe to their Camps. I ſcarce have ever heard of ſo great an over-ſight among ſo many able Politicians. And much I marvel with my ſelf, upon what confidence AVGVSTVS and Antony durſt ſo far truſt their perſons to a reconciled Enemy: or on what reaſon Sextus having both of them in his power, would let ſlip ſo ſlightly that advantage, greater than which was never offered to a diſcontented and ambitious perſon. This I am ſure of, that he afterwards repented it, and could have wiſhed that he had hearkned to the voice of Menas his old ſervant, who had perſwaded him to make his beſt of that opportunity. The Kings of France and Aragon, of old Enemies made new Friends, had the like enterview at Savonæ: which that notable Hiſtoriographer and States-man Guicciardine deſcribeth with much wonder and commendation. Yet, in the like caſe, have many, and, as I think, worthily condemned Lewis the 11. of France, and Charles of Burgundy, the Arch-politicians of thoſe days, in that Lewis at Peronne put himſelf into the hands of Charles his Enemy, who alſo after a ſhort reſtraint, diſmiſſed him.

10. Theſe ſolemn expreſſions of amity between the three Generals being thus ended, and Antony gone for Egypt, AVGVSTVS then began to contrive his eſtabliſhment in the State, though with the ruin of his Colleagues. He beginneth firſt with Sextus, having by gifts and promiſes drawn Menas unto his ſide; who by reaſon of his inwardneſs with his Maſter, knew moſt of his deſigns. By the directions of this Menas, and the aſſiſtance of Lepidus, he quickly overthrew Sextus; who flying death in Europe by the hand of AVGVSTVS, found it in Aſia, by the command of Antony. After this victory, AVGVSTVS, either having, or pretending a quarrel againſt Lepidus, entreth into his Camp, ſeizeth his perſon, and depriving him of all honours, confineth him to Rome. A man that half againſt his will, ſtumbling upon the Government, had beyond any deſert of his, enjoyed ten years continuance of Empire and proſperity. An action of a very high nature, and ſuch as AVGVSTVS durſt not have ventured on, if Antony had been in Italy. He therefore adviſedly removed him out of his way, before he would attempt the ſame. It hath been ever a chief Maxim in Court-policy, to remove that man out of the way, under pretence of ſome honourable charge, whom we intend either to caſt from his preſent honours, or elſe to make leſs potent with Prince and People. For which cauſe alſo AVGVSTVS perſwaded Antony's abſence from the City, to bring him at the laſt into diſcredit and contempt. For well he knew that his dotage on Cleopatra, could not but draw him into many inconveniencies: neither could his neglecting the State, to riot with his Lemman, be other than diſtaſteful to the Lords and People. Next, he commanded his ſiſter Octavia to leave her husband Antony's houſe; yet privately he perſwaded her to live there ſtill, and bring up his children; that ſo the Romans ſeeing her noble demeanor and love to her husband, might the more heartily deteſt him, who ſo ignobly and unkindly had rejected her. To add more fuel to this flame of hatred, he readeth Antony's Will unto the people, in which many of the Roman Provinces were bequeathed to Cleopatra's children, and other things ordained to the common prejudice. Antony likewiſe preferred many Bills againſt AVGVSTVS, as that he had depoſed Lepidus from the Triumvirate; that he had divided Italy among his own Souldiers only, that he had not reſtored the Ships borrowed to make War againſt Sextus.

11. Theſe diſcontents ſeconded with an ambitious hope of prevailing, made them both reſolute to refer all to the deciſion of a Battel. Antony had a Fleet conſiſting of 500 Ships, high built, and trimmed up rather for a Triumph than a Fight. His Land Forces conſiſted of 100000 Foot, and 12000 Horſe. AVGVSTVS had the like number of Horſemen, 80000 Foot, and 250 good Men of War, ſnug and cloſe, built more for uſe than oſtentation. The Rendezvouz is Actium, a place ſeeming to be marked out for notable deſigns: here being fought alſo in our Fathers days, that famous battel, wherein the Venetians gave the World to underſtand, that the Turks Forces by Sea were not invincible. Antony was on the Offenſive ſide, and therefore much doubted whether it were better to give the Onſet by Sea or by Land. Cleopatra, whoſe words were Oracles, perſwaded him to the Sea-fight; not that ſhe thought it more ſafe, but that, if Antony loſt the day, ſhe might with more facility eſcape. To this reſolution, when moſt of the Captains had for fear agreed; one of the old Souldiers thus bluntly gain-ſaid it. "What a miſerable ſecurity art thou poſſeſſed "with, moſt noble Emperor? Where is that ancient fore-"ſight wherewith thou haſt formerly prevented all diſa-"ſters, & turned the Enemies devices on their own heads? "Conſider with thy ſelf, moſt noble General, what un-"certain friends the Wind & Sea are? To how fickle an "Element thou doſt truſt thy fortunes? Let the Egypti-"ans and Phœnicians, old Mermaids, born and nurſt up in "the Sea, follow this kind of Warfare. But let us thy true "Roman ſpirits trie our valour on the firm Land, and "there fight for thy Empire, and our own Lives. Per"haps thou doſt miſtruſt our faith; Look here, Anthony, (with that he opened his boſom) and thou ſhalt ſee many an honourable ſcar got in thy ſervice. We are now too old to learn new Treaſons: Alter therefore thy reſolution, and, to pleaſe a woman, caſt not away ſo many of thy faithful Followers. Certainly the unreſiſtable powers of Heaven when they decree a mans deſtruction, overthrow thoſe Counſels by which he ſhould eſcape it. Antony turns his deaf ear to this Souldier's wholeſome advice, and borrowing from Cleopatra two or three kiſſes (as if from the Fountain of her lips he had derived all his courage) without any more ceremony prepareth himſelf unto the battel.

12. AVGVSTVS on the other ſide, ſeeing a neceſſity of a Sea-fight, was yet in this comforted, that his Veſſels were more uſeful and better manned, though fewer than his Enemies: that his men to him were faithful, and, by reaſon of their many Victories, in good heart: From Antony were daily revolted ſome Kings and Captains of note, to the great encouragement of the one ſide, and diſheartning of the other. The whole charge of the War he committed to M. Veſpanius Agrippa; who failing in no duty of a good Captain, took from his Gallies whatſoever might be impediments to the valiant, or ſhelter for the cowardly; all that was cumberſom to his own men, or advantagious to the Enemy. Things thus ordered, and the battels ready to join, Auguſtus Cæſar ſtanding where he might ſee and be ſeen of all, is ſaid to make this or the like Oration. "Fellows & Companions in Arms, I ſuppoſe it needleſs to hearten you, which never were acquainted with fear; or bid you overcome, which never yet knew what it was, not to vanquiſh. Conqueſt hath always ſat upon the edges of your ſwords, and victory been written in your foreheads. Be not now backward to add this one to your other Triumphs. When after the death of my Father Julius of famous memory, I firſt dealt in matters of War, I rather found than made you good Souldiers. And during this twelve years ſervice under me, neither have you been wanting in the duty of faithful followers; nor I (I hope) of a vigilant and grateful Leader. Sure I am, I expreſſed my ſelf as far as I could, and more I would, had I been able. Let not the number, nor the greatneſs of the adverſe Gallies any ways affright you. The hugeneſs of their Bulks maketh them unapt for employment; and the multitude, one clogging and hindring the others, may as much further our Victory as theirs. They exceed us in multitudes of Men, we them in number of Souldiers. The meaning of the word Pilot is unknown among them. And for their Mariners, the beſt of them are but Carters, Reapers, and Harveſt-men, raked out of the field; the reſt, the excrement of common Priſons, wherewith their Veſſels are loaded, not manned. The General is indeed a fit Captain for ſuch a ſelected Company. It is the ſame Antony, whom you once drave out of the field, before Mutina. I verily perſwade my ſelf, that neither he dares think of recovering, or you of loſing your former glories. It is the ſame Antony, who being ſhamefully chaſed out of Parthia; only in that he was not vanquiſhed, proclaimed himſelf Victor. It is the ſame Antony, who intended to make Rome ſubject to the Egyptians; and to diſtribute the Provinces purchaſed with the blood and vertue of our Anceſtors, amongſt Iras and her fellow Chamber-maids. Nay indeed, it is not Antony at all, but the ſhadow only of that ſubſtance, which now is hid in Cleopatra's Cabbin. Courage then brave men of Arms; be, as you have ſtill been, Conquerours. To ſpeak more, were to detain you from victory. Only this, Call to mind your ancient valour. Remember that I am Cæſar, you Romans.

13. This ſpeech animated the new Souldiers, and confirmed the old; ſo that with a general acclamation they gave the aſſault. Death, wounds, and blows, diſhed in divers faſhions, and ſerved in by ſeveral men, were the beſt delicates prepared for theſe unwelcome viſitants. Cleopatra beholding the Battel, and doubting the ſucceſs, through the thickeſt of Antonies Fleet, made away with the 60 Gallies appointed for her Guard. This diſorder made the breach, at which the Victory entred. Antony ſeeing her flight, left his Squadron alſo; and being taken into her Gally, hoyſed ſail for Egypt: Herein playing the part of a cowardly Souldier, whilſt each of his Souldiers executed the office of a couragious General. For they ſo abſolutely perſiſted in the fight, that AVGVSTVS was fain to offer them mercy ſooner than they would demand it, and divers times before they would accept it. At laſt they all ſware allegiance unto him. The Victory being thus gotten, AVGVSTVS (no loſer of advantages) ſpeedeth into Egypt, which he reduceth into the form of a Province; making the people pay, for fine, twenty millions of Gold. By receiving this mony, he ſo weakned them that they had no ability to raiſe an after-war; and by diſtributing part of it among his Souldiers, he confirmed them in obedience. As for Antony, he ſeeing his fortunes deſperate, redeemed the honour loſt in his life, by a noble and heroick death. And Cleopatra ended her life not long after alſo. A woman more well-favoured, than fair; well-ſpoken, rather than either. Antonies Courtiers had ſeen many Ladies more lovely, none more prevailing; men being chained to her by the ears, rather than by the eyes.

14. I willingly omit AVGVSTVS entry into Rome, as alſo the ſtate and magnificence of his Triumph. His Victory he uſed ſo juſtly, that none felt the fury of the War, but ſuch as were ſlain in the Battel. To aſſure himſelf of Antonies adherents, was his firſt care: to which end he burnt in the Common Forum, the Coffers of Antony, unopened; wherein all his Letters from his friends in Rome had been incloſed: well-knowing that as long as any thought themſelves ſuſpected Adverſaries; they would never ſhew themſelves true Friends. To the Senators and Magiſtrates he made ſumptuous feaſts; to the Common People he exhibited magnificent and pleaſing Stage-Plays; and, with all variety of pleaſure, baniſhed from both, as well ſorrow for the old Proſcription, as fear of a new. But this was only as a preparation to his main deſign. There were two men moſt dear unto him, and privy to his Counſel, Mecænas & Agrippa; which in the object of their love, differed only in this; Mecænas was a lover of AVGVSTVS, Agrippa of the Emperour. Mecænas was of the rank of Knights, a man of good and bad parts equally compounded; when his buſineſs required care, vigilant and circumſpect; at leiſure time, exceſſively riotous. Agrippa was the firſt of his houſe; a man alike fit for Camp and Counſel; one neither careleſs of a good name, nor covetous of a great. For although he only was the man which vanquiſhed Sextus, and Antony; yet well ſkilled in the humours of Princes, he gave AVGVSTVS the honour of all his Conqueſts; making the vertue not the reward, the end of his actions. So by doing nobly, and ſpeaking modeſtly of it, he was without envy, but not without glory. With theſe two, AVGVSTVS withdrew into a private Cloſet, and then ſpake unto them in this ſort. He made firſt unto them a long diſcourſe of the Civil Wars; then added, "That having by his fortune, and the valour of his Souldiers, put an end to the troubles; he was unreſolved what to do; Whether to reſign the Empire to the People, or retain it ſtill in his own hands: That in a buſineſs of ſuch importance, he durſt not relie altogether on his own wiſdom; That he had made them his Judges, as men that could ſpeak ſoundly, and durſt ſpeak freely: That he knew them to have more care of his honour, than profit; but of the Common-wealth, more than both: That his Counſels, which courſe ſoever he took, would not be by them eliminated. He therefore intreated them to conſider what was to be done, and to give up their opinions in it.

15. Agrippa after a ſhort ſilence thus began. ‘I know, thou canſt not but marvel, O Cæſar, that I who under thine Empire, am ſure to be beyond preſident exalted, ſhould perſwade thee to live private. But I eſteem more thy honour, than my profit; the publick good, than my particular preferment. And yet perhaps my Counſel ſhall be as profitable, if not as plauſible as the contrary. I know thee to be no way delighted with lies and flattery, and will therefore deal with thee freely and plainly. Thou haſt indeed put a period to the Civil Wars, but to what end, unleſs thou doſt reſtore unto the Common-wealth that Liberty for which the Wars were raiſed? What benefit can the people reap from thy Victory, if thou doſt uſe it only as an inſtrument, for their greater bondage? Doſt thou think that the Romans having ſo many hundred years maintained their Liberty, will now be willing to forgo it? No, Cæſar, no, Flatter not thy ſelf with theſe hopes. Marius the younger, and Sertorius, were quickly cut off, when their ends were once known; and Julius thy Father of happy memory, did not long live, after his actions ſeemed to bring the Common liberty in hazard. And ſhall we think that there is no true Roman ſpirit ſurviving? no Brutus, living to attempt the like againſt thee? Believe me, Cæſar, believe me, it is far better not to medle with the Empire at all, than to be forced to abandon it. But ſay, Divine Providence will ſo protect thee, that thou mayeſt out-live ſuch pactices; ſhalt thou alſo not out-live thy glories? This preſent age perchance will not cenſure thine actions, becauſe it dares not: But Poſterity, free from all reſpects of love or hatred, cannot but call them into queſtion, and brand thy enterpriſe with Ambition, and perhaps Tyranny. If thy deſigns proſper they will judge thee to have riſen unjuſtly; if otherwiſe, to have fallen deſervedly. How much better then were it, now when thine honour is without blemiſh, and thy reputation unſtained, to reſign thy authority? Indeed when Sextus lorded it over the Sea, and Antony over Egypt, it might have been thought want of ſpirit, to have depoſed thy ſelf from the Government. But now to do it, when thou art without Rival in the Empire; now when thou art ſole Commander of the Worlds Forces; now when the People and Senate lie proſtrate at the feet of thy mercy; were to ſtrike dumb detraction, and to make future Ages admire thy Temper. Thou art at this preſent the joy and comfort of the World; there is wanting to thee neither Wealth nor Fame. Here then fix thy foot. For go but one ſtep beyond this Non ultra, and thou wilt run into a boundleſs Ocean of perils, which have no end, but the end of thy life and reputation.

16. ‘Not ſo, excellent Agrippa, replyed Mecænas. I never heard good Pilot find fault with Sea-room, or of more veſſels caſt away in the Ocean, than in the Straights, and narrow paſſages. Our Republick is a Ship fraught with divers Nations. She hath been long toſſed on the waves of Civil diſſenſions, long driven up and down with the Wind of ambition; and there is now no place ſo fit for her ſafety, as the unlimited Ocean of one mans power. This Empire at firſt-riſing, ſeemed not to require a Monarch; but it is now grown too unwieldy, to be without one. Take then upon thee, O Cæſar, this Empire; or, to ſay better, do not forſake it. I ſhould never thus adviſe thee, did I conceive any poſſible inconveniencies. The Senate doth allow thee a competent guard of valiant and faithful Soudiers; whom then ſhouldſt thou fear? Nay, ill may I proſper, If I ſee any cauſe of fear, were thy Guard caſhiered. Enemies thou haſt none. For ſuch as were, are either already ſlain by thy valour, or made thy faſt friends, by thy bounty and clemency. To omit Marius and Sertorius, I will a little touch at thy Father Julius. He, too good a Souldier to be a Statiſt, was too heady and violent in eſtabliſhing his government. Nor could he cunningly temporize, and ſuffer the people inſenſibly, and by degrees, to drop into bondage; but oppreſs them all at once. Again, he committed a great Solæciſm in State, when diſcharging his Guard, he ſought to retain that Empire by fair means, which he had gotten by violence. I know thee, O Cæſar, to be of a more wary and cunning behaviour. Learn alſo to work out their own ſafety, by Pompey's misfortunes. He after the finiſhing of the Pontick War, at Brunduſium, diſbanded his Army; and thereby merited to be accounted an honeſt and moderate man. Certainly, he ſhowed himſelf in the courſe of this action, rather vertuous than fortunate or politick. For preſently he began to be contemned, and by his improvident weakning of himſelf, made an open paſſage to his own ruine. I commended his modeſty, more than his brain; neither did he himſelf, on better conſiderations, approve his own doings: and therefore he reſolved, had he been Victor in Pharſalia, never to have committed the like overſight. So it is, and ſo it will fall out with thee, O Cæſar, if in this action thou propoſe him to be thy pattern. It is not ſafe, Agrippa ſaith, to take the Empire; leſs ſafe it is, to refuſe it. A ſetled and innative vice it is in man, Never to endure that any not above our own rank ſhould over-top us. Romes ſecond founder Camillus; Scipio, that ſcourge of Carthage, were diſgraced; and M. Coriolanus baniſhed by our Anceſtors: only becauſe their worth had lifted them above the ordinary pitch of Subjects. Do not thou hope to fare better than thy Predeceſſors. Heretofore, perchance, thou mighteſt have ſought the Empire, to ſatisfie thy ambition: The Empire muſt now be thy refuge and Aſylum. Credit me, The Lords of the Senate, after ſo many years of Obedience, know not how to Govern; neither canſt thou, having ſo long been a Governour, learn Obedience. True it is, that in matters of domeſtical buſineſs, a man may ſtop and deſiſt where he will: But in the getting of an Empire, there is no mean between the death of an Enemy and the life of a Prince. Thou haſt already gone too far to retire. Now thou muſt reſolve to be Cæſar or Nothing. To ſay more were ſuperfluous. Thine own diſcretion will ſuggeſt unto thee better Arguments. Only this I know, that thou haſt in thee too much Julius,’ not to be an Emperor.

17. AVGVSTVS ſeemed to incline to this latter opinion, whether moved with Mecænas Oration, eſpecially his inſtance in Pompey, or that he was before reſolved to follow that courſe; is uncertain. Howſoever, ſeeming with great attention to obſerve their ſpeeches, and gathering their ſeveral reaſons and motives together; he made this reply. ‘A moſt hard thing it is, for a divided mind to make a well-joyn'd Anſwer. Divided I am, and troubled between your two opinions; loth to follow either, ſithence in ſo doing I muſt offend one. Yet ſithence there is a neceſſity of Reſolution, I intend, though I like well of thy advice, Agrippa, to “follow thine, Mecenas. In doing which, I am but an “inſtrument of the Deſtinies, to put their wills in “execution. Often have I heard my Father Octavius “report, how Nigidius, famous for his ſkill in Judiciary “Aſtrology, told him once in open Senate, That he had “begotten an Emperor for the Romans. As alſo, how “M. Cicero, ſo renowned for Wit and Eloquence, “dreamed, that he ſaw Jupiter place me on the top of the “Capital, with a Whip in mine hand. Certainly, if the “Powers of Heaven promiſe me ſo great an Empire, I “will not be wanting to my ſelf; but will add by my “induſtry, to their influence. To further my deſigns, I “do deſire you, nay I conjure you both, that as you “have been ever ready in your Counſels, ſo you would “not now be backward in any neceſſary Aſſiſtance. This ſaid, they preſently enter into a new conference, how to manage a buſineſs of this weight; what Senators to acquaint with their intent, how to diſpoſe of the Army, not yet caſhiered: with what Plummet it were beſt to ſound the minds of the common people, and to oblige all ſorts unto him. This Conſultation ended; AVGVSTVS continued his affability to the People, and reſpect to the Nobles. An opportunity he had to expreſs himſelf to both. There was at that time a Famine, which ſhrewdly raged among the Commons. To the poorer ſort, he diſtributed Corn, gratis; to others, at a mean price. Riches and honours he communicated to both ſorts; the better to wipe out of their memories, the antient freedom. Such parts of the City as were deſtroyed by caſualty of fire, ruined by length of time, or defaced during the Civil Wars, he re-edified. Houſes of Common-aſſemblies he repaired, Temples, conſecrated to the gods, he ſpared no coſt to adorn and beautifie. And finally, ſo freely, diffuſed his bounty, that there was no part or member of the City which had not ſome taſte of it. Next, he diſmiſſed his Souldiers, aſſigning them Lands and habitations in divers parts of Italy: That ſo the People might conceive his Reſignation to be real; and yet, if need were, his forces might be quickly re-aſſembled. Nor were Agrippa and Mecenas wanting for their parts, to promote the cauſe: but carefully acquainted ſome of the Senate with it, who ſtood well affected to them; and cunningly prepared others, who had ſtood indifferent.

18. The foundation thus laid, and the Senate ſate; AVGVSTVS roſe from his ſeat, and ſpake to this, or the like effect. “When I conſider with my “ſelf the infinite extent of the Roman Empire; I “proteſt I ſtand at a maze: marvelling how ſuch, as “heretofore have raiſed combuſtions in the State, durſt “undertake the ſole adminiſtration of it. What Nation “in the World hath not either begged their Peace at “our Gates; or felt the fury of our Wars at their own? “What Countries have we not harried with Fire and “Sword; making the riſing and ſetting of the Sun “the bounds of our Dominions? It muſt queſtionleſs “proceed from an over-weaning conceit in them, of “their own abilities; who thought themſelves ſo fit to “undergo that burthen, which none but the immortal “gods can carry. Of my ſelf I will not ſay much: “Only, I hope I may ſay with modeſty, that I am not “inferior to Cinna, nor it may be to Sylla: Yet have I found “in my ſelf, by late experience, how unable I was to “manage the affairs of State, even then when I had “two Co-adjutors. There is no Atlas of ſtrength “ſufficient to bear up this Heaven; No Star of influence “ſufficient, to animate this Sphere; Nor one form of “vertue ſufficient, to actuate this matter. Neither “indeed is it fit, that the Republick which ought to be “immortal, ſhould depend only on the life and welfare “of one man. There never was, ſince the beginning of “time, a City repleniſhed with greater ſtore of worthy “and able men, either to conſult or execute. Never “was there ſeen ſo grave and diſcreet a Conſiſtory; “Never ſo many of both ſorts, ſo fit to govern. I have “by your Directions, and the Valour of your Souldiers, “put an end to all home-bread quarrels. I have been “your inſtrument to reduce Peace internal and “external, to your City; and deſire now no other Guerdon “or recompence, for any former ſervices, than a quiet “and a private life; free from all ſuch dangers and “inconveniences, as are inſeperably annexed to the “Soveraignty. Now therefore, (and may my action be “auſpicious and fortunate to my Country) do I reſign my “authority; committing my ſelf, and the “Commonwealth into the hands of the Senate and People of Rome.

19. This Oration ended, there followed a ſoft and ſilent buzzing in the houſe. Some ſuppoſed this ſpeech not to have ſo much truth, as art and cunning; yet ſmothered their conceits for fear of after-claps. Others were creatures of his own making, and they hoping to riſe in the fall of their Country, would not hear of a Reſignation. Some few of the wiſer ſort thought it not expedient, to put the Reins again into the hands of the Multitude. The reſt out of a ſluggiſh and Phlegmatick Conſtitution, choſe rather the preſent eſtate with ſecurity, than to ſtrive to recover the old with danger. All therefore with a joint-conſent proclaim him ſole Emperor; and ſolemnly entreat him to ſave the Commonwealth, otherwiſe running to inevitable ruin. He for a while, as vainly denied to accept the Government, as they vainly perſiſted to deſire him. At laſt, wearied with the clamours of all in general, and importunity of ſome in particular; he by little and little yielded to their requeſts, taking upon him the Empire for ten years: with this Proviſo, That if before that time expired, he could fully ſettle and order the preſent State, he would give up his charge. This he gave out, not with a purpoſe of performance, (for at the end of every Decennium he renewed his Leaſe of the Government); But that the people ſeeing ſo nigh a poſſiblity of regaining their Liberties, might not practiſe againſt him. Whereas, had he for term of life received the ſupream Authority, he had no doubt haſtned his own overthrow. For well he knew, that not the Title of Dictator, but the Epithete Perpetual, was the deſtruction of CÆSAR: And yet a great reſpect was had alſo in the choice of the Title. The name of King he refuſed, as being odious unto the Citizens. Neither would he be called Romulus, though he much deſired it; leſt they ſhould ſuppoſe that he did affect the Tyranny. When the people called him Dictator, he rent his Garments; deſiring them to diſcharge him of a name ſo hated: and being once called Lord, (Dominus) he forbad all that Title by publick Edict. Princeps Senatus was the only Title he admitted: well knowing, that the like glorious attributes were heaped on his Father Julius by them which leaſt loved him, only to this end, that growing more and more into hatred, he might the ſooner be diſpatched. Nor was he ignorant, that the Common People, led more by appearances than truth, diſcerned names more plainly than execution: and that the only courſe to make greatneſs ſtand firmly, was to receive extraordinary power under a Title not offenſive. The name alſo of AVGVSTVS conferred upon him by the Senate, (as if there had been ſomething in him more than mortal) he refuſed not; as a Title expreſſing more dignity and reverence than authority. And having pleaſed himſelf in the choice of his Title, he next proceeded to the eſtabliſhment of his power, which he thus purſued.

20. When firſt at the hands of the Lords of the Senate, he had for ten years received the Government; there was appointed unto him two Cohorts of Prætorian Souldiers for the guard of his perſon; to whom the Senate allowed the double wages of a Legionary Souldier, to make them more vigilant and heedful in their charge. Over theſe he appointed two Prefects or Governors, (Captains of the Guard we may beſt term them.) To commit the charge to one only, might breed danger; to more, confuſion. Agrippina, to ſettle Nero in the Empire, prevailed with Claudius, to make Burrus, whom ſhe had at her devotion, the ſole Captain: and Nimphidius, fallen from his hopes of ſetting Galba beſides the quiſhon; deſired the command of the Guard, as the next ſtep to Soveraignty. In choice of theſe Captains, he obſerved two Rules: Firſt, he ever choſe them, ex ordine Equeſtri, not Senatorio; leſt that, ſo high a dignity joyned to ſo high a birth, might ſtartle their reſolutions to ſome deſigns againſt his quiet. Secondly, he made choice of two ſuch, as were of contrary humours, and ſomewhat at odds, that ſo the ill intents of the one (if they ſhould harbour any) might be thwarted and revealed by the other; and both, in a noble emulation, ſhould contend to be moſt forward in his ſervice. The next courſe which he took for his own ſecurity, was a law he made to curb the wills and attempts of the great ones. For whereas it hath been formerly unlawful to queſtion a Bondman, in matters concerning the life and death of his Lord; AUGUSTUS paſſed an Act, that all ſuch Bondmen ſhould be firſt ſold to him, or the Commonwealth. By means whereof he kept the Lords, before preſuming on the ſecreſie of their ſlaves, from all cloſe and private Conſpiracies againſt him. Having thus ſtrengthened his perſon, he aſſumed to himſelf the Imperial, Cenſorial, and Tribunitian authority, together with the Sacerdotal dignity. As Emperor and General of the Men of War, he could preſs Souldiers, raiſe Taxes, proclaim Wars, make Peace; yea, and put to death the very beſt and ſtouteſt of the Senators. As Cenſor, it was in his power to reform corrupt manners, enquire after mens carriages, to take in and put out of the Senate whom he liſted; to pleace and diſplace the people from a more honourable Tribe, to a leſs honourable. Yet would he not be called Cenſor as a name too inferiour; but accepted the Prerogatives of it, after the ſurrendry of Minutius, and his Aſſociate, two men ſo unfit for that Magiſtracy, that they could object no crime to old or young, of which themſelves were not guilty. The Tribunitian authority enabled him to hinder any thing attempted againſt his liking. It preſerved his perſon from all contumely and injury; giving him power to puniſh, as an execrable perſon, (yea, and without any formality of the Law) whoſoever had offended him either in word or deed. As for the Pontifical Dignity, it made him a little more reverenced, not more potent. Only it added to his title the ſtile of Pontifex Maximus, or Chief Biſhop; and made him of authority amongſt the Prieſts, and in ſacred matters, things that concerned Religion. The light of Reaſon taught him, that it was convenient for him, being a Prince, to have command on all his people; He had been elſe but half a Monarch, ſuch as ſome Princes are with us; who quit their Clergy to be governed by a Foreign Head.

21. Theſe ſeveral Prerogatives annexed together, ſeem not yet ſufficient: and therefore he ſo cunningly dealt with the Senators, that they gave him a general Exemption from the Co-active power of the Law. Which once obtained, he ſeriouſly bends his thoughts to ſettle the Common-wealth; and ſo to ſettle it, that by uniting all parties, and giving ſatisfaction to all Intereſſes, it might not be obnoxious to ſuch frequent and tumultuous alterations, as it had been formerly. But herein when he had conſulted the ancient Platforms, he found no ſmall difficulty. The form deſcribed by Plato, ſhewed rather how a City ought to be governed, than how it may be. Ariſtotle, though bred in the Free States of Greece, was a friend to Monarchy; but his diſcourſes dark, and ſpeculative, and not eaſily reduced to practice. Solon afforded the People too much Authority the Nobles too little, the King none. The old Carthaginian Legiſlators attributed too much to Riches, too little to Vertue. The Perſian Law-makers indulged to the King too much, to the Subject nothing. And on the other ſide, Lycurgus in his modelling of the State of Sparta, aſcribed too little to the King, and too much to the Senate. Zaleucus was rather the Author of ſome particular Laws, than the Framer of a Commonwealth. Phaleas, and Hippodamus, as unimitable altogether as Plato. Seeing therefore that none of the old Patterns did come home to his purpoſe; and withal conſidering with himſelf, that the unmixt Forms of Rule were not equally ballanced, and by conſequence ſubject unto change: he reſolved to frame his Common-wealth out of the perfections of the three good Forms, their imperfection being rejected; reſerving to himſelf the Supreme Majeſty, to the Senate eminent Authority, to the People convenient Liberty, all in a juſt and fit proportion. And to ſay truth, he did ſo mix the Soveraignty of one, with the Liberty of all; that both the Lords and People, without fear of bondage or ſedition, enjoyed their accuſtomed Freedoms. The Conſuls and Nobles of the City aſſembled as formerly they uſed; matters of State they handled by themſelves; Ambaſſadors of foreign Nations they heard, and diſpatched. The Commons did aſſemble in the Comitia, to enact Laws and elect Magiſtrates, as in the free Common-wealth; Yet ſo that nothing was done without the conſent and privity of the Prince, who for the moſt part nominated the ſucceſſive Magiſtrate, leaving the confirmation of him to the people. So that the change, as he contrived it, was not violent and at once, but by degrees, and by the ſilent approbation of both Eſtates, as ſeeming to conſiſt more in the alteration of the Magiſtrate, than of the Laws.

22. But (to proceed more particularly) the firſt care he took, was to confirm Religion in the ſame ſtate in which he found it. I mean Religion, as the Romans uſed the word, for thoſe particular, though Idolatrous Forms of Worſhip, which to their ſeveral gods had been uſed among them. This, though he might have changed, as the Pontifex Maximus, or chief Biſhop of the City; yet very wiſely he forbare it. It is not ſafe for Princes that are ſetled in a long deſcent of Government, to be too active in ſuch changes: But it is dangerous to attempt it in a green State, and in an Empire not well quieted, and inured to bondage. Men are more ſenſible of the ſmalleſt alterations in the Church, than greater changes in the State, and raiſe more frequent broils about it. The Romans ſpecially were exceeding tender in this point. The ancient Ædiles formerly received it into their charge, that they permitted no external either Gods or Ceremonies, to be introduced into the City. And by Æmilius it was enacted for a Law, That none ſhould offer ſacrifice in any publick place, after a new and Foreign faſhion. Excellent therefore was the counſel which Mecenas gave him when he firſt undertook the Empire, viz. 'That he ſhould follow conſtantly the Religion 'which he found eſtabliſhed, and compell others alſo 'to do the like. For, Foreign and ſtrange Rites (ſaith 'he) will offend the people, work many inconvenient

“ alterations in the Civil State; yea and moſt likely “ will occaſion many both ſeditions and conſpiracies.
Words which he ſpake not to the air, but to a Prince exceeding apprehenſive of the beſt advice. Nor did AVGVSTVS ever ſhew himſelf more careful in any one Art of Empire, than he did in this. That which Mecænas noted, we find true in theſe later Ages; in times more skilful of obedience, than the moſt quiet hour of AVGVSTVS Government. No one thing more hath cauſed ſo frequent and ſo general Rebellions in the States of Chriſtendom, than alterations of this nature. I cannot therefore but commend it, as a pious reſolution in a late mighty Monarch: Better ſome few corruptions ſhould be ſuffered in a Church than ſtill a Change.

23. Religion thus eſtabliſhed, in the next place the welfare of the whole Empire conſiſted chiefly in reforming of the City; from which, as from the heart, life was conveyed to all the Provinces abroad. And in the City the corruption was moſt apparent in the Senate it ſelf. With them therefore he beginneth, well knowing that crimes in men of eminent place end not in themſelves; but by degrees become diffuſed among their Clients and Followers. Now in the Senate were many and deſertleſs men, who had been taken into it during the Civil Wars; as they could court the People, and humour ſuch as were moſt potent. Of theſe he expelled none by his own power; but making a ſpeech to them in the Senate, of the ancient order and preſent confuſion of the houſe, he firſt exhorted them to look back on their former lives, and to judge of their own abilities and merits, for ſo honourable a room. Then he deſired ſome of them to pick out ſuch among them, as were in diſpoſition factious, and in life faulty, but loth to conceive ſo ill of their own actions; which they did accordingly. Yet as it often happeneth, that the great Thief leadeth the leſs to the Gallows; and as Commines obſerveth, that after the Battel of Montliberry, Offices were taken from many for flying away, and conferred on ſuch as ran ten miles beyond them: So remained many in the Senate, neither leſs vicious, nor leſs violent; only more potent to maintain their doings, than ſome others whom they had removed. AVGVSTVS therefore joyning to him Agrippa, proceedeth to a new review: And certainly it much concerned him in the ſetling of his affairs, that none ſhould have a voice in that famous Council, but ſuch as were of able judgments, honeſt repute, and well affected to his Service and the Common-wealth. An enterpriſe which he eſteemed ſo dangerous, that he permitted entrance to no Senator till he were ſearched: himſelf wearing a Brigandine under his Gown; and being invironed with ten of the moſt courageous and beſt beloved of the whole company. Such as he found in either kind inexcuſable, he diſcharged from their attendance; electing ſuch in their places, which were either ennobled for their wiſdom, or noted-moderation, or otherwiſe ſtrong in their dependants. Yet ſo that greatneſs of Revenue was eſteemed neither a fit Patronage for any, if they were offenſive; nor a juſt cauſe to challenge intereſt in the houſe. Such of them as were rich rather in the gifts of the mind, than thoſe of fortune, he relieved with honourable Penſions; and finally he beſtirred himſelf ſo reſolutely, that all confeſſed that they had need of ſuch a wiſe Phyſician, to cure that dull Conſumption, whereinto the Common-wealth was fallen.

24. In other things he ſeldom did proceed againſt them, as of himſelf; but when that any of them had conſpired his ruin, he referred them to the judgment of their fellows. And this he did partly to reſerve unto the Court the ancient Prerogative; partly not to be Judge and Party in his own cauſe: but principally following the example of his Father Julius, who counterfeiting a wretchleſs contempt of his adverſaries, uſed, when he was leaſt ſuſpected, under hand, and by publick Officers, to work their deſtruction. Many alſo of them whom the Senate had condemned he would freely pardon: Conceiving truly, that the queſtioning of men of high calling, would produce as much terror, though it argued not ſo much rigor as the puniſhment. Yet if extremity of law was uſed towards ſome few, it was to ſettle quietneſs in the whole; and as it were a particular blood-letting for the general health. Thoſe who had followed the Factions of Brutus and Antony, he forgave freely. And not ſo only, but by manifeſting his works by his deeds, and adding truſts and honours to his pardons; he made his Chair of State more ſetled, and immoveable. So Cæſar, by erecting the faln and broken Images of Pompey, made his own ſtatues ſtand more firmly. But the chief Act by which he bridled the Nobles, was an Edict by him promulgated, forbidding any of them, his leave not granted, to travel out of Italy. For well he knew, that an Empire unſetled, and Provinces not quieted; the preſence and authority of men of that rank, might raiſe greater troubles, than could be eaſily ſuppreſſed. Examples he wanted not, that eſpecially of Cato; who after the overthrow of Pompey, ſtirred ſuch a War againſt Cæſar in Africk, that he never bought Victory at a dearer rate. Yet not altogether to impriſon them, he licenſed them at their pleaſure, to viſit Sicilia, and Gaul Narbonoyſe, Provinces cloſe to the Continent of Italy, altogether unfurniſhed for Wars; and indeed ſuch, as by reaſon of the variety of pleaſures in them uſed, were more likely to weaken their minds, than to arm their bodies.

25. Now to give the Senate ſome ſweet meat to their ſowre ſawce; he as much honoured and reverenced that Order, as ever it was in the Free-ſtate: ſubmitting himſelf to their Judgments and appearing of his own accord, at moſt of their days of Seſſion. Out of thoſe he choſe fifteen alterable every half year, to be of his Privy Council; but then changing them for others: that ſo all of them might participate of that honour; and yet none of them be acquainted with too many of his Secrets. At his entrance into the Senate, he uſed courteouſly to ſalute the Lords; and ſo likewiſe at his departure. He knew full well that it was noted for great pride in his Father Julius, ſo much to ſleight the Lords of that Houſe, as he always did: never making to them any obeiſance; no not then, when they came to tell him what honours were decreed unto him. This Reformation of the great Ones, ſoon made the lower ſort more careful; both to obſerve good order, and to learn obedience. Yet did not AVGVSTVS refer all to Preſident, but ſomewhat to Precept. The Roman Knights he enforced to yield an account of their lives; a courſe full of health and wiſdom: Idleneſs being the root of all private vices, and publick diſorders. To the Commons in their Comitia and other meetings, he preſcribeth Laws and Orders as himſelf liſted. The old authority of the Tribunes, daſhed in the Dictatorſhip of Sylla, he would not reſtore. He ſuffered them to intercede for the People, but not to prefer or hinder any Bill, to the advancement or the prejudice of their Eſtate. Without this Curb, the Common ſort would never have ſuffered him to ſit faſt in the Saddle For had the people had their Tribunes and had the Tribunes, had their ancient dignity and power, which they had uſurped; there had been little or no hope of altering the form of Government. So different are the ends of the Common-people, eſpecially if nuzled in a factious Liberty, from the deſigns of Soveraign Princes.

26. The City thus reformed in the principal errors and defects of it; he again exhibiteth unto them divers pleaſures; as ſhews of Fencers, Stage-plays, Combats of Wild beaſts, publick Dancing, with variety of other delightful Spectacles. And this as well to breed in them a good conceit of the change; as fearing leſt their cogitations, for want of other objects, would fix themſelves upon his actions, and the old freedom. And therefore when ſome of his more ſevere and rigid Counſellors adviſed him to interdict all ſuch publick paſtimes, alledging, that the meetings of the people at thoſe ſports, and in ſo great numbers might at laſt end in ſome great tumult and ſedition to the endangering of his perſon, and deſtruction of his whole Eſtate; it was thus over-ruled by Mecænas (his moſt truſty Favourite) Expedit tibi, O Cæſar, plebem ſic occupatam eſſe, That it beſt agreed with his affairs, to have the minds of the people taken up with theſe ſports and paſtimes, by which being ſweetned and appeaſed, they were the leſs ſenſible of the yoke he had put upon them. But as for Horſe-races, Tilts, and Turnaments, as he gladly cheriſhed them, ſo he permitted them only to the Inhabitants of Rome: That ſo that City being the Seat-Town of his Empire, might be ſtored with good Horſes, and expert Riders. Such of the Commons as were behind hand, he relieved: and when that many of them had made him Heir to their goods, he well knowing that no good Father did appoint to his Heir any Prince but a Tyrant, preſently reſtored to the Children of the deceaſed the whole Patrimony. An action truly worthy of AVGVSTVS; as true a Guardian of Orphans, as a Father of his Country. Such Princes as gape covetouſly after other mens poſſeſſions, ſeldom enjoy the benefit of their own. The Treaſures of Kings are then greateſt, not when their own Coffers are full only, but their Subjects rich. Yet one thing more he ſeemed to leave unto the people, which they thought moſt pleaſing, Liberty of Speech: Wherein ſometimes they were ſo licentious, that they ſpared not Agrippa himſelf, ſo potent with the Emperor. But he, good man, never uſing the Prince's favour to the prejudice of any, ſeemed not to mark their taunts and ſlanders; whether with greater moderation or wiſdom, I cannot tell. Neither did AVGVSTVS ſcape their fooliſh Paſquils and infamous Libels. All which he winked at, knowing that contumelies of that nature ſlighted and contemned, ſoon vaniſh of themſelves; but if repined and ſtormed at, ſeem to be acknowledged. A temper which he learnt of his Father Julius, who was perfect at it. And certainly it was a notable point of Wiſdom in both of them. It is the miſery of the beſt Princes, even when they do well to be ill ſpoken of. And therefore many times ſuch follies are with more policy diſſembled than obſerved, by the greateſt Kings.

27. As for this laviſhneſs of the tongue, it is a humour that ſpringeth for the moſt part, rather from a delight in pratling, than any malice of the heart: and they which uſe it are more troubleſom than dangerous. Julius feared not the fat men, but the lean and ſpare. And ſo AVGVSTVS thought, that not men liberal of ſpeech, but ſilent, cloſe and ſparing of their words, were moſt likely to raiſe tumults. Moreover, as long as the Common People retained this Liberty of Speech, they were the leſs ſenſible of the loſs of Liberty in State. Whereas in the days of Domitian, when not only they were prohibited to commune together, but even their ſecret ſighs and tears were regiſtred, then began they to look back with a ſerious eye on the old & common Liberty. Neglect is the beſt remedy for this Talking vein. When the humour is ſpent, the People will ceaſe on their own accords: till then, no forces can compell them. Tacitus taxeth Vitellius of great folly, for hoping, by force to hinder the continual reports of Veſpaſians revolt; that being the only way to increaſe, not diminiſh the rumour. And as much he extolleth (I will not ſay how fitly) the Reign of Prince Nerva; wherein it was lawful for the Subject to think what he would, and ſpeak what he thought.

28. Theſe courſes though he took to rectifie the Senate, and content the people, yet he ſtayed not here. There were too many of both ſorts, dangerous and unquiet ſpirits, who ſtomached his proceedings; and under pretence of the ancient Liberty, were apt to any bold attempt, and ſudden alteration. Theſe as he winked at for the preſent, ſo he imployed them (as occaſion ſerved) in his foreign Wars. Wherein he followed the example of his Father Julius, who when his Souldiers had diſpleaſed him, in their Mutinies and Tumults, would lead them preſently unto ſome deſperate and dangerous ſervice: So weakning both his Foes which lay next unto him, and puniſhing thoſe Souldiers which had diſobeyed him. For, though AVGVSTVS had thrice ſhut the Temple of Janus, and cheriſhed Peace, no Emperor more, of ſo large a Territory; yet when he ſaw his times, and that mens minds were active, and their thoughts diſquieted; he could find preſently occaſion for ſome new imployment. In this a Body Politick may be compared moſt fitly to the Body Natural. When we are full of blood, and our ſpirits boyling, there is not any Phyſick better than Phlebotomy. But if a vein be broken in us, and we bleed inwardly, our eſtate commonly is dangerous, and almoſt incurable. So Princes, when their people are tumultuous and apt to miſchief; or that their thoughts are working, and hearkning after action: do commonly imploy them in ſome ſervice far from home; that there they may both vent their Anger, and imploy their Courage. For let them ſtay at home to confirm their practices, and grow at laſt into a Faction; the State will ſuffer in it, if it be not ruined. We cannot have a fairer inſtance of this truth, than the proceeding of our fifth Henry, and the times next following: Whoſe foreign Wars kept us all quiet here at home, waſted thoſe humours, and conſumed thoſe fiery ſpirits, which afterwards, the Wars being ended, inflamed the Kingdom.

29. But his main work was to content the Souldiers, and to make them ſure. Some of which he diſperſed as before I ſaid, all about Italy, in thirty-two Colonies; as well for the defence of the Country, as for their more ſpeedy re-aſſembly, if need ſhould require. Abroad amongſt the Provinces were maintained upon the common charge twenty-three Legions with their aids; beſides 10000 of his Guard, and thoſe which were appointed for the bridling and ſafety of the City. As to all of them he ſhewed an excellent thankfulneſs for their faithful ſervices: ſo in particular to Agrippa, and to one other, whoſe name the Hiſtories of that Age have not remembred. This latter had valiantly behaved himſelf at the battel of Actium: and being ſummoned to appear before the Lords of the Senate, in a matter which concerned his life, cried to AVGVSTVS for ſuccour; who aſſigned him an Advocate. The poor fellow not contented with this favour, baring his breaſt, and ſhewing him the marks of many wounds; Theſe (quoth he) have I received, AUGUSTUS, in thy ſervice never ſupplying my place by a Deputy. Which ſaid, the Emperor deſcending to the Bar, pleaded the Souldiers cauſe, and won it. Never did Soveraign Prince, or any that command in Chief, loſe any thing by being bountiful of favours to their men of War. For this act quickly ſpreading it ſelf over all the Provinces, did ſo indear him to the Military men, that they all thought their ſervices well recompenſed, in his graciouſneſs to that one man. And now were they ſo far given over to him, that the Honours conferred on Agrippa, could not increaſe their love; well it might their admiration. Agrippa was of a mean and common Parentage. But ſupplying the defects of his Birth with the perfections of his Mind, he became very potent with AVGVSTVS; who not only made him Conſul, but his companion in the Tribunitian Authority, and Provoſt of the City. So many titles were now heaped on him, that Mecænas perſwaded the Prince, to give him his Daughter Julia to Wife: affirming it impoſſible for Agrippa to live ſafe, conſidering how open new Creatures lie to the attempts of malicious men, unleſs he were ingraffed into the Royal Stem of the Cæſars. On which cauſe queſtionleſs, for the ſtronger eſtabliſhment of his new Honours; Sejanus afterward attempted, but not with the like ſucceſs, the like match with Livia, Tiberius Daughter-in-Law.

30. The Senate, People, and Men of War, thus ſeverally reduced to a Mediocrity of power and content, the next labour is to alter the old, and eſtabliſh a new Government of the City it ſelf. To effect which, he daſhed all former Laws, by which the Allies and Confederates of the State were made free Denizens of the Town. That he conceived to be a way to draw the whole Empire into one City; and by the monſtrous growth and encreaſe of that, to make poor the reſt. Therefore this priviledge he communicated unto a few only: partly that in the times of dearth, the City might not ſo much feel the want of ſuſtenance; and partly that ſo ancient an honour might not be diſ-eſteemed; but principally leſt Rome repleniſhed with ſo huge a multitude of ſtirring and unruly ſpirits, ſhould grow too headſtrong to be governed in due order. The greateſt and moſt populous Cities, as they are proneſt unto faction and ſedition; ſo is the danger greateſt, both in it ſelf, and the example, if they ſhould revolt. This provident courſe notwithſtanding there were in Rome men more than enough; and among them not a few male-contents, and murmurers at the preſent ſtate, ſuch as contemned the Conſuls, and hated the Prince. To keep theſe in compaſs, AVGVSTVS (it being impoſſible for him to be ſtill reſident at Rome, and dangerous to be abſent) conſtituted a Provoſt of the City for the moſt part choſen out of the Senators: aſſigning him a ſtrength of 6000 men, called Milites Urbani, or the City-Souldiers. To him he gave abſolute and Royal authority, both in the Town and Territory near adjoining, during his own abſence. To him were appeals brought from the other Magiſtrates; and finally to his Tribunal were referred all cauſes of importance, not in Rome only, but the greateſt part of Italy. Meſalla was the firſt Provoſt; but proof being had of his inſufficiency, the charge was committed to Agrippa: who did not only ſettle and confirm the City, but did the beſt he could to free the adjoining parts of Italy from Thieves & Robbers; and ſtopped the courſes of many other troublers of the preſent State. And yet he could not with that power either ſo ſpeedily, or ſo throughly reform all thoſe miſchiefs; which in the late unſetled times were become predominant, as he did deſire.

31. It is recorded that in the Civil Wars of Marius and Sylla, one Pontius Teleſinus of the Marian Faction, told his General, That he did well to ſcour the Country, but Italy would never want Wolves as long as Rome was ſo fit a Foreſt, and ſo near to retire unto. The like might have been ſpoken to Agrippa; That he did well to clear the common Rodes and Paſſages, but Italy would never want Thieves, whilſt Rome was ſo good a place of Refuge. For though he did, as far as humane induſtry could extend, endeavour a general Reformation both within the City and without; yet neither could he remedy, nor foreſee all miſchiefs. Still were they many, and thoſe great diſorders committed in the night ſeaſon; when as no eye, but that to which no darkneſs is an obſtacle, could diſcern the Malefactors. For in the firſt Proſcription, many men uſed to walk the Streets well weaponed; pretending only their own ſafety, but indeed it was to make their beſt advantage of ſuch men, as they met either in unfrequented Lanes and Paſſages, or travelling as their occaſions did direct them, in the Night. To repreſs therefore the foul inſolencies of theſe Sword-men, AVGVSTVS did ordain a Watch, conſiſting of 7000 Free-men, their Captain being a Gentleman of Rome. In the day time, the Guard of the Town was committed to the Provoſt, and his City Souldiers; Theſe Vigils reſting in their ſtanding Camps. In the night ſeaſon, one part took their ſtations in the moſt ſuſpicious places of the City; another, in perpetual motion traverſed the ſtreets; the reſt lying in the Corps du Guarde, to relieve their Companions. By which means he not only remedied the preſent diſorders, but preſerved the City from danger of Fire alſo: Yea, and ſecured himſelf from all Night-tumults, which carry with them (though but ſmall) more terror and affrightment, than greater Commotions in the day. Never till now were the common people Maſters of their own, both Lives & Subſtance. And now was travel in the Night, as ſafe, though not ſo pleaſant, as at Noon.

32. The People and City thus ſetled, his next ſtudy is to keep the Provinces in a liking of the Change. But little Rhetorick needed to win their liking, who had long deſired the preſent form of Government: miſtruſting the Peoples Regiment, by reaſon of Noblemens factions, covetouſneſs of Magiſtrates, the Laws affording no ſecurity, being ſwayed hither and thither by ambition and corruption. Theſe Provinces when he firſt took the Government, he thus divided. Aſia, Africa, Numidia, Betica, Narbonenſis, Sicilia, Corſica, Sardinia, all Greece, Crete, Cyprus, Pontus, and Bithynia, being quiet and peaceable Provinces, of known and faithful obedience, he aſſigned unto the Senate. But the new conquered Regions, ſuch as had not digeſted their loſs of liberty, with whom any Rebellion or War was to be feared; he retained under his own command. Such were Tarraconenſis, Luſitanica, Lugdunenſis, Germany, Belgica, Aquitanica, Syria, Silicia, Egypt, Dalmatia, Myſia, Pannonia, &c. And this he did, as he gave out, to ſuſtain the danger himſelf alone, leaving unto the Senate all the ſweets of eaſe: but the truth was, to keep them without Arms, himſelf always ſtrong, and in a readineſs. The notable effects of which Counſel did not diſcover themſelves only by the eſtabliſhment of the Empire in his own perſon during life, and the continuance of it in the houſe of the Cæſars (though men of moſt prodigious Vices) after his deceaſe: but in ſome of the Ages following alſo. For when the Family of the Cæſars was extinct in Nero, the Imperial Provinces being ſo ſtrong, and perceiving the Conſular ſo weak; aſſumed to themſelves the creating, and eſtabliſhing of the following Princes. Thus Galba was made Emperor by the Spaniſh and French Legions, Vitellius by the Germans, Veſpaſian by the Syrian and Pannonian: The Conſular Provinces never ſtirring, either to prevent their attempts, or to revenge them. And when they adventured once to advance Gordian to the Throne, all they could do, was but to betray the poor old man and all his Family to a tragick end. And yet he did not ſo appropriate thoſe Provinces to the Senate, but that they alſo (as well as thoſe which he reſerved unto himſelf) were ſpecified particularly in his private Regiſter. In which (the better to manage the affairs of the Empire) he had ſet down what Tributes every of them paid, what Preſents they ſent in, what Cuſtoms in them were levyed. That Book alſo comprehended the wealth of the publick Treaſury, and neceſſary charge iſſuing out of it: What number of Citizens and Allies there were in Arms; what ſtrength there was by Sea: with all other circumſtances, the extent, ſtrength, riches, and particulars of his eſtate. William of Normandy did the like at his firſt entrance into England, when he compoſed that Cenſual Roll of all this Kingdom, which we call Doomſday Book, or the Roll of Winton; according unto which, Taxations were impoſed, and Aids exacted. The greateſt Princes have not thought it a diſparagement to be good Husbands; to know the riches of their Crowns, and have an eye to their Intrado.

33. Britain was left out of this Bead-Roll, either becauſe from thence there neither was much hope of profit, nor much fear of hurt; or elſe becauſe being more deſirous to keep than inlarge the Monarchy, he thought it moſt expedient to confine it within the bounds appointed by Nature. Danubius on the North, Mount Atlas on the South, Euphrates on the Eaſt, and the main Ocean on the Weſt, did both bound his Empire and defend it. Some Kingdoms have their limits laid out by Nature, and thoſe which have adventured to extend them further have found it fatal. The Perſians ſeldom did attempt to ſtretch their Territory beyond Oxus, but they miſcarried in the action. And what was that poor River, if compared unto the Ocean? Many who loved action, or expected preferment by the Wars, incited him unto the conqueſt and Plantation of theſe Countries. Affirming, "That the barbarous people were naturally bad Neighbours; and though for the preſent not very ſtrong, nor well skilled in Arms, yet might a weak Enemy in time gather great ſtrength: that he ought to purſue the War for his Father Julius ſake, who firſt ſhewed that Iſland to the Romans: that it yielded both refuge and ſupply to Malecontents of Gaul, and Enemies in Germany: that he would loſe the benefit of a wealthy Country; ſtored with all manner of proviſion; and the command of a valiant Nation, born (as it were) unto the Wars. That it was an apoſtatie from honour, to lie ſtill, and add nothing to the conqueſt of his Anceſtors: That he was in all equity bound, as far as in him was, to reduce to Civility from Barbariſm, ſo many proper and able men. But to theſe motives he replyed, "That he had already refuſed to wage War with the Parthian, a more dangerous Neighbour, and far worſe Enemy than the Britains: That he had waſte & deſert ground enough in his own Dominions, for many a large Plantation, when he ſaw it needful: That he had conſtantly refuſed, though with great facility he might, to conquer any more of the Barbarous Nations: That, as in the Natural body, a ſurfeit is more dangerous than faſting; ſo in the Body Politick, too much is more troubleſom than too little: That the Roman Monarchy had already exceeded the Perſian, and Macedonian; and to extend it further, was the next way to make it totter and fall by its own weight. That he had learned in the Fable not to loſe the ſubſtance by catching at the ſhadow. And finally, that many puiſſant Nations lay in and about Britany, againſt whom Garriſons muſt be kept, and he feared the Revenues would not quit the coſt. And ſo the enterpriſe of Britain was quite laid aſide.

34. For the aſſurance of the Provinces already conquered, he diſperſed into them 23 Legions, with their Aids; whoſe pay only, beſides proviſion of Corn, and Officers wages, amounting to five Millions and an half of our Engliſh pounds, and ſomewhat more, were ſo duly paid unto the Armies, that we read ſeldom in the Hiſtories of that Empire, of any Mutiny amongſt the Souldiers, for want of pay. An happineſs, whereof theſe ages have been little guilty. For the amaſſing of this treaſure, and defraying of this Charge, AVGVSTVS made not uſe only of his own Revenue. Wars which are undertaken, and Souldiers that are levyed for the common ſafety, ought in all reaſon to be maintained on the Common purſe. The Grandeur and ſecurity of an Empire, concerns in all reſpects, as much the People as the Prince. For which cauſe he erected an Exchequer in the City, which was called Ærarium militare, or the Souldiers Treaſury; whereto the twentieth part of every mans Eſtate was brought, according to the true and perfect valuation. This was eſteemed an heavy burden at the firſt; and indeed it was, but that the people felt the ſweetneſs and effects of it in the Common ſafety. In that reſpect, the Intereſt was greater than the Principal. Subjects that have a care either of the common peace or honour, will not repine at payments and taxations, though more than ordinary. It is a poor conceit to think that Princes either are able or obliged, to maintain the Wars without aſſiſtance from their people: or that the treaſures which in theſe reſpects they give the King, they do not give unto themſelves. I may perhaps repute him for a cunning Sophiſter, but never for a faithful Subject which coyns diſtinctions betwixt the welfare of the King, and the weal of the Kingdom. Theſe Legions he employed as occaſion was, either to curb the Natives, or ſecure the Borders. The Roman Empire ſeldom had ſuch perfect peace, but that there were employments always for the Souldiers. If that they had in any place a ſhort ceſſation from the Wars, yet they were not idle. Idleneſs doubtleſs is the greateſt enemy to Martial Diſcipline. Therefore he kept them at ſuch times perpetually buſied, either in paving Bogs, or in draining Mariſhes. By means whereof, he made not only many of the Barbarous Countries, both fruitful in themſelves, and profitable to the Chequer: but thereby alſo he ſecured his own affairs, and diſarmed his enemies. For many times the Barbarous people truſting to ſuch advantages, were apt too often to rebell; and having got themſelves within thoſe Myres and Faſtneſſes, ſtood on their Guard, as in ſome faſhionable or defenſible Fortreſs. The ſureſt means to keep a conquered people from all occaſion of revolting, is to lay waſte their Wood-lands, and make all parts paſſable. The opportunity of a ſafe retreat, makes not more Thieves than Rebels.

35. Thoſe whom he placed over his Provinces and Armies, he neither would remove under three years Government, nor yet continue after five. A longer ſtay might teach them too much cunning in practiſing on the diſpoſitions of the people, and perhaps prompt them to work into the favour of the Natives, and the Men of War: and ſo at laſt eſtabliſh in themſelves a Soveraignty. Cæſar's long ſtay in Gaul, (a ſecond five years being added unto that which was firſt allowed him) made him ſo potent with the People, and gracious with the Souldiers, that in the end he brought the Roman Empire under his ſubjection. And on the other ſide, to take them from their charges under three years continuance were to have called them home, before they were well learned in the Cuſtoms and the nature of the Provinces; ſo making them unable to inſtruct their Succeſſors: As for the men whom he employed in thoſe commands, he culled them always out of the moſt valiant and upright in the Camp and Senate. A Prince more willing and deſirous not to imploy men likely to offend, than after the offence to puniſh and chaſtiſe them for it.

36. Beſides his Forces by Land, he alſo maintained at Sea two invincible Armadoes. The one lay at Anchor near Ravenna, in the upper Sea, to awe and defend Dalmatia, Crete, Greece, Cyprus, Aſia, &c. The other at Miſenum in the lower Sea, to protect and keep under Gaul, Spain, Africa, Egypt, Syria, &c. Neither was this the only uſe of two ſuch puiſſant Fleets, but in all probability they were to cleanſe the Sea of Pirates; to have a care to the conducting of the Tributes and Cuſtoms into the Exchequer; and ſerved alſo for tranſporting Corn, and other neceſſary proviſions, for the ſuſtenance and relief of the City. In the enſuing Civil Wars, theſe two Navies proved to be of great importance: The revolt of them giving as great a blow to the one ſide, as a comfort to the other. The principal aſſurance of Otho in his Wars, was the immoveable fidelity of the Miſenian Fleet; and the ſiding of the other with Veſpaſian, brake the hearts of Vitellius's beſt followers.

37. Now as he thus ſtrengthened the Provinces in general, ſo he did caſt an eſpecial eye on three particulars, viz. Italy, Gaul, and Egypt. Italy founded Rome the Metropolis of the Empire; and therefore he ought to be well aſſured of its good faith and allegiance to him. Nor was he ignorant, that the Bellum ſociale raiſed by the people of that Country, in the Free State, more ſhook and endangered the Empire, than the Invaſions of Pyrrhus or Annibal. Therefore as formerly he planted in it two and thirty Colonies, of old and truſty Souldiers, to keep it ſure unto himſelf; ſo now he did divide it into eleven Regions, each having peculiar Magiſtrates and Under-Officers. This not ſo much to eaſe the City-Prætor, although he had imployment enough at Rome; but becauſe it was thick-ſet, and as it were overlaid with People, whoſe riſing might endanger the Common-wealth. So by his Colonies he kept a Garriſon upon them, as it were, that they could not revolt: and by his Officers and Juſticiers (as I may call them) he ſet ſo ſtrait a Watch about them, that they durſt not practiſe.

38. Gaul, now called France, was both a large and fertile Country, ſtored with a people valiant in all attempts, and in many deſperate. A people with which the old Romans fought rather to maintain their own liberty, than to increaſe their Dominions; a Tribe or Colony of which had ſacked the City of Rome, and endangered the Capitol. A people finally, with whom the Romans durſt not make War, till they had almoſt all the reſidue of the World in ſubjection. The remembrance of their ancient Reputation, and ſtore of money, might occaſion many deſperate practices againſt the quiet of the Empire. The readieſt way to keep them in obedience, was to keep them poor: for without wealth high ſtomachs may well feed on the hope of Liberty, but digeſt it never. Licinius, his freed man, was the fitteſt fellow for ſuch an Office, who is preſently made the Task-maſter of the Province. The Gauls uſed to pay a Monthly Tribute, which he much enhaunched (beſides private and petty means of proling) by making fourteen Months in a year. The Solicitors of that people at Rome make complaint to AVGVSTVS. He ſometimes yielded unto them, ſometimes excuſed his Freed-man; ſome things he would not know, many he would not believe, others he diſſembled. Licinius, to make up his peace, ſent to the Emperour all his Treaſure, and that huge Maſs of Gold and Silver by thoſe unlawful means heaped up together: which he not only willingly received, but his turn being ſerved, and the Gauls not a little impoveriſhed; he recalled Licinius, and ſent Tiberius to ſettle the Province. So old and common a thing it is with great Princes, to ſuffer their Vice-Roys, and Under-Officers, to ſuch like Spunges, the Wealth of the Subject, till they are quite full; and then to ſqueeze them into their own Coffers.

39. But the Province whoſe tuition and defence he principally regarded, was Egypt; not ſo much for the valour and courage of the Inhabitants, as the natural ſtrength and ſituation of the place. Alexander of Macedon having annexed it to his Empire, never committed the entire Government and Juriſdiction thereof, to one man; fearing leſt he preſuming on the wealth of the People, and ſite of the Country, would ſettle the poſſeſſion in himſelf. And ſo AVGVSTVS calling to mind as well the multitude, as the levity and inconſtancy of the Natives; that it was very rich in coyn, and the Roman Granary (as ſerving the City four Months yearly with Corn) not only truſted not the rule thereof into the hands of any of the Senators, but expreſly forbad any of that Order (without his ſpecial permiſſion) to ſojourn there. It is a principle in State, never to licenſe men of great houſes, and credit among the People, to have free acceſs into that Country, whoſe revolt may endanger the whole Empire. Wherefore it was a weakneſs doubtleſs in the Council of King Henry the ſixth, to ſuffer Richard Duke of York, to paſs at leiſure into Ireland; where he had harbour and relief, and whence he brought ſupply both of Men and Money. But to return to Egypt, Germanicus entring once into Alexandria, only to ſee the Antiquities of it, and return; ſtirred ſuch ſuſpicions, and diſtractions in the jealous head of Tiberius, that he ſpared not ſharply to rebuke him for it. Veſpaſian alſo being by the Syrian Legions choſen Emperour, firſt aſſured himſelf of Egypt, as the Key of the Sea and Land; with a ſmall power, againſt a ſtrong hoſt eaſily defended. This place he reſolved to make his Sanctuary, if his deſigns ſucceeded not luckily. And to this place he haſtened, after the defeat of the Vitellian Army, that ſo detaining the ordinary proviſion of Victuals, he might by Famine compel the City of Rome to ſtand at his devotion. The Government of this Province was by AVGVSTVS always committed to ſome one of the Roman Gentry, as leſs able, by reaſon of his low condition, to work gainſt the Princes ſafety. Neither would he allow his Deputy the glorious attributes of Lieutenant, Legatus, Proconſul, or Prætor: Captain or Preſident of Egypt was their higheſt Title; there being even in Titles no ſmall motives to Ambition.

40. AVGVSTVS having by theſe means reduced both the City and Provinces under his abſolute command, and being now declining in ſtrength, by reaſon of a ſudden and violent ſickneſs; began to call his wits to Counſel, how to diſpoſe of the Eſtate after his deceaſe. Male-child he never had any. His Daughter Julia, a woman of immodeſt carriage, never made further uſe of her fathers greatneſs, than that ſhe ſatisfied her Luſts with the greater inſolence. Marcellus, his Siſters ſon, and Julia's husband, was a young man of an ingenious diſpoſition, and ſeemingly capable of the fortunes which attended for him. Him, being yet young, AVGVSTVS preferred to the Pontificial dignity, and Ædileſhip: Yet once upon his ſickneſs, he privately determined to chooſe another Succeſſor in the Common-wealth, rather than his own Family; and not to leave the Empire to Marcellus, whom he held unable to undergo it, but to his companion in Arms, Agrippa, a man daunted neither with adverſe, nor altered with proſperous fortunes. This, Marcellus afterwards ſo ſtomached, that he began to grutch at Agrippa's greatneſs, and to bear a vigilant eye on his plots and actions. Contrarily, Agrippa unwilling to offend him, under whoſe future Government he was in all likelyhood to end the reſt of his days, with much ado obtained leave to retire unto Lesbos: that ſo his abſence either might allay, or remove the diſpleaſure, conceived againſt him by the young Prince. An action full of wiſdom, and magnanimity. For though AVGVSTVS's chief end was, to diſcountenance the popular dependencies of his Son, by the favours heaped on his ſervant: yet did Agrippa know, that a Favourite ought to have ſo much in him of the Perſian Religion, as to worſhip the Riſing Sun alſo; and that he ſhould reſemble old Janus with two faces, with th'one looking on the King regnant, with th'other on the Prince ſucceſſive.

41. Marcellus being dead, Agrippa returning, marryed his Widow, and on her begat two Sons, Caius and Lucius; whoſe actions afterward afforded ſuch variety for cenſure, that there was wanting neither much reaſon to commend, nor little to condemn them. On theſe two, or at leaſt one of them, AVGVSTVS now grown aged, reſolves to ſettle the Eſtate; and, if they failed, upon ſuch others, as by the liberty of the Laws, he might adopt: Adoption, in the eſtimation of the Roman Laws, being indeed another Nature. Poſterity, whether it be natural, or only legal, is the beſt ſupport of the Arms Imperial: Such as both fortifies the Prince, and aſſures the Subject. Yet this he did, not without much reluctancy, and a greater conflict in his mind. ‘Sometimes ‘his thoughts ſuggeſted to him, that the deſigned Suc‘ceſſors draw to them all the attendance and reſpect, ‘from the Prince in poſſeſſion; that they have always a ‘lingring deſire to be actually ſettled in the Throne; ‘That they ſuppoſe the life of the preſent Prince too te‘dious, not caring by what means it were ſhortned; ‘That ſometimes it is pernicious, yea even to the ap‘pointed Succeſſor himſelf alſo. On the other ſide his ‘better thoughts prompted him to conſider, in what a ‘miſerable diſtraction he ſhould leave the Empire, if ‘ſudden death ſhould take from him an ability to nomi‘nate his heir; The fear conceived in the whole City, ‘at his laſt ſickneſs; That Pyrrhus of Epirus, was of all ‘hands condemned, for leaving his Kingdom to the ‘ſharpeſt ſword; That the Common-wealth faln into ‘diſſenſions, could not be ſetled again without a lamen‘table War, and a bloody Victory; That the people ‘ſeeing him childleſs would not only contemn him, but ‘perhaps endeavour to recover the old liberty, though ‘with the ruine of the State; That it was the cuſtom ‘of Tyrants, to deſire the eternizing of their deaths, by ‘the downfal of their Countries. His mind thus di‘ſtracted and perplexed, at laſt he brake in this man‘ner. ‘Thou haſt, Octavian, a Wolf by the ears, which to ‘hold ſtill, or let go, is alike dangerous. Many incon‘veniences may enſue, if thou doſt not declare thy Suc‘ceſſor; more if thou doſt. The good of the Republick ‘conſiſteth in knowing the future Prince, Thine own ‘welfare dependeth on the concealment. The Common ‘good is to be preferred before any private; Yet ought ‘Charity to begin at home. No, Octavian no; As thou haſt ‘receiv'd, ſo ſhew thy ſelf worthy of the title of Pater pa‘triæ. Yea, and perhaps this deſignation may ſecure ‘thine own Eſtate. For what will it profit the people to ‘conſpire againſt thee; when they ſhall ſee a Succeſſor ‘at hand, either of thine own body, or thine own appoint‘ment, ready to take thy place, and revenge thy wrongs?

42. Thus reſolved, he adopteth Caius and Lucius; deſiring, though he made ſhew to the contrary, they ſhould be Conſuls elect, and called Princes of the Youth. Yet wiſely forecaſting the dangers incident to himſelf, if they ſhould make their abode in Rome; he ſendeth them with honourable Charge into the Provinces abroad: as well to exerciſe them in feats of War, as to take away all cauſe of faction in the Court, and ſedition in the City. Which myſtery of State as it was anciently practiſed by moſt Princes, ſo at this day by the Grand Seignior: who always ſendeth his eldeſt Son unto Amaſia, as Governour thereof; from whence till the death of his Father, he never returneth. In theſe journeys, dyed the two young Princes; a misfortune which AVGVSTVS bare nobly; neither baniſhing grief, with a Stoical Apathy; nor ſpending the time in womaniſh lamentations. Having performed due rites to the dead, he adopted his Wifes Son, Tiberius. A man for the conveniency and ripeneſs of his age, not unfit; in feats of Arms, not unexpert; in humane learning, not ignorant; but withal ſuſpected to be cruelly given; and poſſeſſed with the hereditary pride of the Claudian Family. A ſtrange medley of vertuous and vitious qualities! Tiberius, ſuch was the will of his Father, to eſtabliſh the ſucceſſion with more ſtayes than one, adopted Germanicus, his Brother Druſus Son; then commanding over eight Legions in Germany: which done, he ſpeedeth to his charge in Illiricum, This man AVGVSTVS appointed to be his Succeſſor, as it was afterwards (and not improbably) conjectured, neither in care to the State, nor in love to the party; but to win honour to himſelf: and to make the Roman people again wiſh for him, when they ſhould ſee that infinite diſproportion in all Royal and Kingly qualities, between the old and new Emperors. A fetch, after imitated by Tiberius, in the adoption of Caius Caligula.

43. The laſt (though not the leaſt) help of the Empires eſtabliſhment, was the long life and reign of our AVGVSTVS: as having ruled the State 16 years before, and 34 years after his confirmation in the Soveraignty, by the Senate and people. All the young men in the City were born after the firſt Decennium of the Monarchy. Moſt of the old men, during the Civil Wars. Few had ſeen what was the ancient form of Government in the Common-wealth; many did not deſire it. For at the preſent, enjoying peace both at home and abroad; and hearing what ſad and tragical reports their Fathers made of the former troubles and proſcriptions: they contented themſelves with the new Government; as more eſteeming a ſecure and happy ſubjection, than a dangerous and factious liberty. By which long time of Empire and the policies already recited, beſides many others, which I can neither learn by relation, nor gather by preſumptions; did AVGVSTVS ſo firmly ſettle the Roman Monarchy, that it continued ſome hundreds of years without alteration: though all his immediat Succeſſors were in a manner Monſters, incarnate Devils and indeed any thing rather than Men. Tiberius, Caius, Claudius, Nero, Galba, Otho, and Vitellius, both by their own Tyrannies, and their Bondmens Extortions, would have ruined any Monarchy not founded by AVGVSTVS.

44. To ſpeak concerning the Domeſtical affairs of this Emperor, is beyond my Theme. As either how far he ſuffered himſelf to be ordered by his Wife Livia; or whether he uſed variety of women, not ſo much to ſatisfie an inordinate appetite, as by ſo many women to fiſh out the ſecret deſigns of many men. He was too exact a Stateſman to be perfect in Souldiery; and in all his Wars was proſperous by Fortune rather than by Valour, or his Captains Valour than his own. The Common-wealth which he found weak and in Rubbiſh, he left Adamantine, and invincible. In behaviour he was affable and gracious; in his diſcourſe, ſententious; to the good, of a moſt ſweet diſpoſition; to the lewd and diſhoneſt, harſh and unpleaſant. Friendſhip he contracted with few, and that ſlowly; but to them whom he once loved, conſtant and bountiful to the laſt. Finally ſuch a one he was, of whom I will only ſay, what I find ſpoken of Severus; ‘It had been an ineffable benefit to ‘the Common-wealth of Rome, if either he had never died, ‘or never been born.

Thus having drawn the picture of this puiſſant and prudent Prince (though I confeſs with too much ſhadow) I now proceed unto the Catalogue of the Roman Emperours: in which I ſhall take notice of ſuch of their Actions only, as had relation to the Publick, either in the improvement or decreaſe of their Power and Empire; or point to any ſignal matter which concerns the Church.

The Roman Emperours,

A. M.

3918. 1 Julius Cæſar the laſt of the Dictators, and the firſt of the Emperours: in memory of whom the following Emperours were called Cæſars, till the time of Adrian; when it became the title of the heir apparent, or deſigned Succeſſor; the firſt who had it in that ſenſe being Ælius Verus, though he lived not to enjoy the Empire.

3923. 2 C. Octavianus Cæſar, to whom the Senate gave the name of Auguſtus; who added unto the Roman Empire the Provinces of Noricum, Pannonia, Rhætia, a great part of Spain, and the whole Kingdom of Egypt. In his time the Lord CHRIST was born. 56.

A. Chr.

17. 3 Tiberius Nero, the Son Law of Auguſtus, ſubdued many of the German Nations; and added Galatia and Cappadocia to the Empire. In his time, CHRIST ſuffered. 23.

39. 4 Caius Caligula, the Son of Germanicus (Son of Druſus, the brother of Tiberius and of Agrippina Neece to Auguſtus Cæſar, by his daughter Julia. 3.

43. 5 Claudius Cæſar, Uncle to Caligula, Brother of Germanicus, and Son of Druſus by Antonia Neece to Auguſtus by his Siſter Octavia; added Britain, and Mauritania, to the Roman Empire. 13.

57. 6 Domitius Nero, Son of Ænobarbus, and Agrippina Daughter to Germanicus, the laſt of the Cæſars. He made the Coctian Alpes a Province of the Empire, and brought the Armenians to receive their Kings from the Roman Emperours; and was the firſt that raiſed any publick perſecution againſt the Chriſtians. An. 67. 13.

7 Sergius Galba, choſen by the French and Spaniſh Legions.

8 Salvius Otho, made Emperour by the Prætorian Souldiers.

9 Aul. Vitellius, elected by the German Legions.

71. 10 Flavius Veſpaſianus, choſen by the Syrian and Judæan Armies, ſubverted utterly the Common-wealth of the Jews, by the valour and proweſs of his Son Titus; and brought Achaia, Lycia, Rhodes, Sames, Thrace, and Syria Comagene, under the form of Roman Provinces. 9.

80. 11 Titus Veſpaſianus, the fortunate Conquerer of the Jews.

82. 12. Fl. Domitianus, who raiſed the ſecond perſecution againſt the Chriſtians. An. 96. 15.

97. 13 Nerva Cocceius, a noble Senator, but no Roman born; as all the reſt had been before him, but not many after him.

99. 14 Ulpius Trajanus, by birth a Spaniard, adopted by Nerva: he made Dacia a Province of the Empire, carryed the Roman Armies over Euphrates, ſubduing Armenia, Meſopotamia, and Aſſyria; and raiſed the third Perſecution againſt the Chriſtians. An. 110. 19.

118. 15 Ælius Adrianus, who utterly exterminated the Jewiſh Nation, and continued the Perſecution begun by Trajan. 20.

138. 16 Antoninus Pius, whoſe friendſhip was ſought by the very Indians. 24.

162. 17. Marcus Antoninus, ſurnamed the Philoſopher, aſſociated L. Verus in the Government, by whoſe valour he ſubdued the Parthians. He raiſed the fourth Perſecution againſt the Church. An. 167. 19.

181. 18. L. Antoninus Commodus, Son to Marcus, the firſt Emperor that had been hitherto born in the time of his Fathers Empire. 13.

194. 19 Ælius Pertinax, made Emperour againſt his will.

20 Didius Julianus, who bought the Empire of the Souldiers.

195. 21 Septimius Severus, took Cteſiphon from the Parthians, ſubdued the Provinces of Oſroene; and raiſed the fifth Perſecution, An. 195. 18.

213. 22 Baſſianus Caracalla, Son to Severus.

220. 23 Opilius Macrinus, made Emperor by the men of War.

221. 24 Varius Heliogabalus, the ſuppoſed Son of Caracalla.

225. 25 Alexander Severus, Couſen of Varius.

238. 26 Maximinus, a fellow of obſcure birth; who being advanced to the Empire, raiſed the ſixth Perſecution. An. 237.

241. 27 Gordian, elected by the Senate againſt Maximinus. 6.

247. 28 Philip, an Arabian, ſuppoſed by ſome to be a Chriſtian. 5.

252. 29 Decius, ſlain in War againſt the Goths; the Author of the ſeventh Perſecution raiſed againſt the Church. An. 252.

254. 30 Gallus Hoſtilianus. 2.

256. 31 Æmilianus the Moor.

256 32 Valerianus, the Author to the eighth Perſecution, An. 259. He was taken priſoner by Sapores, King of Perſia, and made to ſerve him for a footſtool.

33 Gallienus, Son to Valerianus, in whoſe time the 30 Tyrants ingroſſed unto themſelves ſeveral parts of the Empire.

271. 34 Claudius II, who after a ſhort and troubleſom time, left it to 272 35 Quintillus his Brother, who enjoyed the ſame but 17 days.

273. 36 Valer. Aurelianus, reſtored again the antient diſcipline, ſuppreſſed all the Invaders of the Empire, and vanquiſhed the Goths; but was a great perſecutor of the Church, An. 278. 6.

279. 37 Annius Tacitus, deſcended from Tacitus the Hiſtorian.

38 Florianus, an Emperor of two months only.

280. 39 Valerius Probus. 6.

286. 40 Aurelius Carus, together with his two Sons Carinus and Numerianus.

Diocleſian,

288 41 Diocleſian, firſt aſſociated Maximinianus by the name of Emperor, or Auguſtus; and afterwards Galerius of Dacia, and Conſtantius Chlorus, by the name of Cæſars. He had continual Wars againſt the Perſians, and raiſed the tenth Perſecution againſt the Church, An. 295. Which held ſo long, and was ſo vehement withal, that as St. Hierome writes, there were 5000 ſlain for every day in the year, ſave the firſt of January. He afterwards reſigned the Empire, and lived in private at Salona. 20.

308 42 Conſtantius Chlorus, a friend to Chriſtians. 2.

310 43 Conſtantine, Son of Chlorus, ſurnamed Magnus, or the Great, the firſt Emperor that countenanced the Goſpel, and embraced it publickly; which he is ſaid to have done on this occaſion. At the ſame time that he was ſaluted Emperour in Britain, Maxentius was choſen at Rome by the Prætorian Souldiers, and Licinius named Succeſſor by Maximinianus, the aſſociate of his Father Chlorus. Being penſive and ſolicitous upon theſe diſtractions, he caſt his eyes up towards Heaven, where he ſaw in the Air a lightſom Pillar in the form of a Croſs, wherein he read theſe words, ἐν τȣ́τῳ νίκα, In hoc vince; and the next night our Saviour appearing to him in a Viſion, commanded him to bear that figure in his Standard, and he ſhould overcome all his Enemies. This he performed, and was accordingly victorious, from which time he not only favoured the Chriſtians, but became a very zealous Profeſſor of the Faith and Goſpel. I know Zoſimus an Heathen Hiſtorian, partly out of malice to the Chriſtans in general, and partly a particular grudg to the Emperor Conſtantine; reporteth otherwiſe of the cauſes of his Converſion: But the authority and conſent of all Chriſtian Writers, who deliver it as before is told, is far to be preferred before the teſtimony of one ſingle Heathen, had he not been biaſſed (as he was) by his diſaffections.

Before this time it is obſerved, that few (if at all any) of the Roman Emperors died a natural death, as after they generally did. From Julius Cæſar unto Conſtantine there were 40 in all. Of which Julius was openly murdered in the Senate; Auguſtus made away by his wife Livia; as Tiberius afterwards by Macro; Caligula was ſlain by Caſſius Chæreas; Claudius poyſoned by his wife Agrippina; Nero, and Otho, laid violent hands upon themſelves; Galba, and Vitellus, maſſacred by the Souldiers; Domitian by Stephanus, Commodus by Letus and Electus. Pertinax and Julianus by the Souldiers of their Guard; Caracalla by the command of Macrinus, Macrinus, Heliogabalus, Alexander, Maximinus, Maximus, and Balbinus, ſucceſſively by the men of War; Gordianus by Philip, Philip by the Souldiers; Hoſtilianus by Gallus, and Æmilianus; and they by the Souldiers; Valerianus died a Priſoner in Parthia; Florianus was the Author of his own end; Aurelianus murthered by his houſhold ſervants; Gallienus, Quintillus, Tacitus, and Probus, by the fury of the military men. And yet I have omitted out of this Accompt ſuch of the Emperors as were tumultuouſly made by the Army, without the approbation of the Senate; as alſo the Cæſars, or deſigned Succeſſors of the Empire; moſt of which got nothing by their deſignation and adoption, but ut citius interficerentur. Some of theſe were cut off for their miſdemeanors: ſome for ſeeking to revive again the antient Diſcipline; and ſome that others might enjoy their places. The chief cauſe of theſe continual maſſacres, proceeded originally from the Senate, and Emperors themſelves. For when the Senators had once permitted the Souldiers to elect Galba, and had confirmed that election; Evulgato (ſaith Tacitus) imperii arcano, principem alibi quam Romæ fieri poſſe: more Emperors were made abroad in the field by the Legions, than at home by the Senators. Secondly from the Emperors alone, who by an unſeaſonable love to their Guard-Souldiers, ſo ſtrengthened them with priviledges, and nuſled them in their licentious courſes; that on the ſmalleſt rebuke, they which were appointed for the ſafety of the Princes, proved the Authors of their ruin: ſo truly was it ſaid by Auguſtus in Dion, Metuendum eſt eſſe ſine cuſtode, ſed multo magis a cuſtode metuendum eſt. The laſt cauſe (be it cauſa per accidens, or per ſe) was the largeſs which the new Emperors uſed to give unto the men of ſervice; a cuſtom begun by Claudius Cæſar, and continued by all his Succeſſors: in ſo much that the Empire became ſaleable, and many times he which bad moſt had it. As we ſee in Dion, when Sulpitianus offering twenty Seſtertiums to each Souldier, was (as if they had been bying a ſtock at Gleek) out-bidden by Julianus, who promiſed them five and twenty Seſtertiums a man. So that Herodian juſtly complaineth of this Donative; Id initium cauſaq; militibus fuit, ut etiam in poſterum turpiſſimi contumaciſſimiq; evaderent, ſic ut avaritia indies, ac principum contemptus, etiam ad ſanguinem uſque provoherent. That is to ſay; From this occaſion and beginning, the Souldiers every day grew more ſhameleſs, and leſs regardful of their Prince: ſo that their covetouſneſs encreaſing, and the contempt they had of their Emperors waxing more and more, ended at laſt in the frequent ſhedding of their bloods, in hope to have a better Market of the next Succeſſor: So as the Emperor Conſtantine wanted not good reaſon, beſides their ſiding againſt him for Maxentius, to caſhier theſe Guards, as grown more dangerous than uſeful to Imperial Majeſty. And ſo accordingly he did, levelling their ſtanding Camp to the very ground, diſbanding the whole company, or putting them under other Officers, and to other Services, by means whereof they were not able to create the like diſturbances, or diſpoſe of the Empire as before. And for the Captains of theſe Guards which before were two (Præfecti Prætorio in the Latin) he encreaſed their number unto four (one for each quarter of the Empire) giving them a Civil Juriſdiction in exchange for the Military Command which they had before, and caſting them behind in place after the Patricii, an Order of his own deviſing.

As for the extent and latitude of the Roman Empire, whilſt it remained one intire Body (as it was before the time of Conſtantine, who at his death divided it among his Sons) it was in length about three thouſand miles; namely from the Iriſh Ocean Weſt, to the River Euphrates on the Eaſt; and in breadth, it reached from the Danubius Northward to Mount Atlas on the South, about two thouſand miles. And though the Romans had extended their Dominions ſometimes farther Eaſt, and North; yet could they never quietly ſettle themſelves in thoſe conqueſts. Nature (it ſeemeth) had appointed them theſe bounds, not ſo much to limit their Empire, as to defend it. For the enemies found thoſe Rivers, by reaſon of the depth of the Chanel, and violent current of the ſtream, as a couple of impregnable Fortreſſes; purpoſely (as it were) erected to hinder them from harraſing the Roman Countries.

The Revenues of it Lipſius in his Tract de Magnitudine Romana, eſteemeth to be about one hundred and fifty millions of Crowns; and that they were no leſs, may be made more than probable by theſe reaſons: 1. It is affirmed by divers, and among others by Boterus, that the yearly Revenues of the King of China amount to one hundred and twenty millions of Crowns. And if this be true (as few queſtion it) we cannot in proportion gueſs the whole Empire of the Romans to yield leſs than one hundred and fifty millions; eſpecially conſidering what Arts-Maſters the Romans were, in levying and raiſing their Taxes and cuſtomary Tributes. 2. The Legionary Souldiers which were diſperſed over the Provinces, received in ordinary pay, (beſides proviſion of corn, apparel, and Officers wages) five millions, 516062 pounds and ten ſhillings of our money; which amounteth unto ſixteen millions of Crowns, or thereabout. In the City it ſelf were kept in continual pay, ſeven thouſand Souldiers of the Watch, four thouſand or ſix thouſand for the defence of the City? and ten thouſand for the Guard of the Emperor's perſon. The two firſt had the ſame wages, the laſt the double wages of a Legionary Souldier. Add hereto the expences of the Palace; and other means of disburſals, and I think nothing of the ſum can be abated. 3. We read that C. Caligula ſpent in one year two millions and ſeven hundred thouſand of Seſtertiums; how Nero moſt laviſhly gave away two millions and one hundred thouſand of Seſtertiums; and how Vitellius in few months, was nine hundred thouſand Seſtertiums in Arrearages; every Seſtertium being valued at ſeven pound ſixteen ſhillings three pence: all of them huge and infinite ſums. 4. When Veſpaſian came to the Empire, the Exchequer was ſo impoveriſhed, that he profeſſed in open Senate, that he wanted to ſettle the Common-wealth forty millions of Seſtertiums, amounting to three hundred and twelve millions of our Engliſh money: which Proteſtation (ſaith Sueton) ſeemed probable, Quia & male partis optime uſus eſt. Now unleſs the ordinary Revenues came to as much, or more than we have ſpoken; by what means could this extraordinary ſum be raiſed? 5. We may gueſs at the general Revenue by the moneys iſſuing out of particular Provinces; and it is certain, that Egypt afforded the Ptolomies twelve thouſand Talents yearly: niether had the Romans leſs, they being more perfect in inhancing, than in abating their Intrado. France was by Cæſar ceſſed at the yearly tribute of twenty millions of Crowns. And no doubt the reſt of the Provinces were rated accordingly. 6. And laſtly, the infinite ſums of money given by the Emperors in way of largeſs, are proofs ſufficient for the greatneſs of the In-come. I will inſtance in Auguſtus only, and in him, omitting his Donatives at the victory of Actium, and the reſt, I will ſpecifie his Legacy at his death: He bequeathed (by his Teſtament, as we read in Tacitus) to the common ſort, and the reſt of the people, three pound eight ſhillings a man; to every Souldier of the Prætorian bands, ſeven pounds ſixteen ſhillings three pence; and to every Legionary Souldier, of the Roman Citizens, four pound ten ſhillings ſix pence: which amounted to a mighty maſs of money.

The Arms or Enſigns of this Empire when it was up and in the flouriſh, was the Eagle: not born, as now in colours, and a banner; but in an Image or Portraicture on the top of a Spear, or other long piece of wood, to be fixed in the earth at pleaſure. This Enſign, Spear and Eagle together, they called the Labarum: Quæ ſigna, quod quaſi labantia haſtis appenderentur Labara dixerunt, ſaith Lipſius, Epiſt. Quæſt. Ep. 5. The uſe as of this, ſo of other ſtandards, Lyra giveth us in his Notes on the ſecond of Numbers, namely, ut ad eorum aſpectum, bellatores dividantur & uniantur, to call together, and diſtribute the Souldiers according to occaſions. And certainly for this end and purpoſe were thoſe Enſigns firſt invented. Afterwards they were applied to the diſtinguiſhing of Tribes and Families; and at laſt beſtowed by Kings and Princes as the honorary marks of well-deſerving: Thoſe which had been the Enſigns of War, ſo becoming the ornaments of Peace. At what time the form of this Labarum was altered, and began to be born in colours, I have not yet read. It is now an Eagle Saturn, in a Field Sol, which kind of bearing the Heralds call moſt rich. It was firſt born by Ca. Marius in his ſecond Conſulſhip, and in his Wars againſt the Cimbri; from him conveyed to J. Cæſar, who was allied to him in deſign and perſon; and ſo derived unto the Emperors, his Succeſſors.

But to proceed, Conſtantine having ſetled his affairs in peace, and caſhiered the Prætorian Guards, fell to new modelling the Empire; which he conceived to be too cumberſom and unwieldy to be governed by the former Polity; as indeed it was. And firſt of all, he augmented the Roman Provinces to the number of one hundred and twenty, or thereabouts; over every one of which he ordered a particular Preſident, that had his reſidence in the chief City of that Province. Then he reduced theſe Provinces under fourteen Dioceſes, (for ſo he called the greater diſtributions of his Empire) ſeven of which were in the Eaſt parts thereof, that is to ſay, the Dioceſe of Egypt, of the Orient, of Aſia, of Pontus, Thrace, Dacia, and Macedon: and as many alſo in the Weſt, viz. the Præfecture of the City of Rome (which I count for one,) the Dioceſe of Italy, Africk, and Illyricum, of France, Spain, and Britain. Finally inſtead of the two Præfecti Prætorio which had the command of the Prætorians, he ordained four for the quarters of the Empire: that is to ſay, the Præfectus-Prætorio Italiæ, under whom were the Dioceſes of Italy, Africk, and Illyricum: Præfectus-Prætorio Galliarum, who had under him the Dioceſes of France, Spain, and Britain; 3. The Præfectus-Prætorio Orientis, who had commanded over the Dioceſes of Egypt, the Orient, the Aſian, the Pontick and Thracian Dioceſes; And 4. the Præfectus-Prætorio Illyrici, under whoſe ſuperintendence, beſides Illyricum it ſelf, were the Dioceſes of Macedon and Dacia only; each of theſe Præfects having a Vicarius, or Lieutenant in the ſeveral Dioceſes under his authority, who fixed their reſidence in the head City of the Dioceſe. And this I have the rather noted, becauſe of the relation which the Polity of the Chriſtian Church had to this Diviſion: it being ſo ordered in the beſt and pureſt times thereof, that in every City where the Emperors had an Officer, whom they called Defenſor Civitatis, the Chriſtians ſhould have a Biſhop; in every chief City of the Province a Metropolitan; and over every Dioceſe an Archbiſhop or Primate, from whom lay no Appeal unto any other. And ſo far Conſtantine did well; if at the leaſt the caſting of the Empire into ſo many Dioceſes was of his deviſing. But I have reaſon to believe, that it was more ancient: the Patriarchs or Primates of Rome, Carthage, Alexandria, Antioch, and other of the greater Churches, being ſettled in a preheminence of juriſdiction over the Provinces, and Metropolitans aſſigned to them long time before the Council of Nice, and conſequently before the Empire (nay the birth) of Conſtantine, who poſſibly might act no more in this great buſineſs, than the aſſigning of a Præfectus-Prætorio to each ſeveral quarter, and the allotting of the Dioceſes unto each Præfectus. But whether it were ſo or not, certain it is, that he committed divers errors, which did more prejudice the Empire, than any thing that had been done by his Predeceſſors. Firſt in tranſlating the Imperial Seat from Rome to Byzantium; by which tranſplantation, the Empire loſt much of its natural vigour: as we ſee by experience of Plants and Flowers, which being removed from the place of their natural growth, loſe much of their vertue which was formerly in them. On which reaſon, Camillus would not ſuffer the Romans to remove their Seat unto the City of the Veii, newly conquered by him: but to prevent them in it ſet fire on the Town, and ſo conſumed it, ut nunc Veios fuiſſe, laboret Annalium fides, as my Author hath it. A ſecond fault of this Conſtantime, was the dividing the Empire amongſt his Sons, which only concerned himſelf. For though it was quickly re-united in the perſon of Conſtantius (his brethren dying without iſſue); yet his example being followed by others, the Empire was after torn into many pieces to the deſtruction of the whole. 'Tis true, the former Emperors uſed ſometimes to aſſociate ſome partner with them; but ſo, that they did manage it as one ſole Eſtate: Conſtantine (if I remember rightly) being the firſt which parcelled it into ſeveral Soveraignties, each independent of the other, allotting to Conſtantius, Greece, Thrace, and all the Provinces of the Eaſt; to Conſtans, Italy, Illyricum, Africk; to Conſtantine, Gaul, Spain, and Britain. The third fault of this Emperor was his removing the Legion and Colonies which lay before on the Northern Marches, into the Eaſtern parts of his Dominions; pretending to uſe them as a Bulwark againſt the Perſians; laying thereby thoſe paſſages open, at which not long after the Barbarous Nations entred, and ſubdued the Weſt. For though inſtead of theſe Colonies he planted Garriſons and Forts in convenient places, yet theſe being filled with Souldiers, for the moſt part out of other Countries, fought not as in defence of their native Soil, (as the Colonies would and muſt have done) but on the firſt onſet of thoſe Barbarians abandoned them to the will of the enemy. So that Zozimus (though in other of his reports about this Prince he bewrayeth much malice) doth call him, not untruly, the firſt Subverter of that flouriſhing Monarchy. To theſe three we may add a fourth, which concerns the Emperors in general; namely their ſtupid negligence and degenerate ſpirits, which ſhewed it ſelf moſt viſibly in the laſt of 341 1 Conſtans, the youngeſt ſon of Conſtantinus Magnus, his brother Conſtantine being dead, in the third year of his reign, remained ſole Emperor of the Weſt. 13.

The Weſtern Emperors.

354 2 Conſtantius, the other of Conſtantines ſons ſucceeded Conſtans in his part, after his deceaſe; uniting the divided Empire into one Eſtate.

3 Valentinian Emperor of the Weſt, his brother Valens ruling in Conſtantinople, and the Eaſtern parts.

4 Valentinian II. youngeſt ſon of the former Valentinian.

399 5 Honorius the ſecond ſon of Theodoſius the Emperor, (his elder brother Arcadius reigning in the Eaſt) in whoſe time Alarick with the Goths invaded Italy, ſacked Rome, and made themſelves Maſters of the Country, which afterwards they left in exchange for Spain. 26.

425 6 Valentinian III. during whoſe time Attila and the Hunnes made foul work in Italy; and the Vandals ſeized upon Africk, as they did on Italy and Rome alſo after his deceaſe: Murdered by Maximus a Rom[illegible] (whoſe wife he had trained into the Court, and raviſhed) as ſhall be ſhewn hereafter on another occaſion. He was ſon unto Conſtantius Cæſar by Placidia ſiſter to Honorius, and Widow of Authaulſus King of the Goths.

455 7 Maximus having ſlain Valentinian the third, ſucceeded in the Empire; but on the coming of the Vandals, whom Eudoxia the wife of Valentinian (who had ſome inkling of the manner of her husbands death) had drawn into Italy, he was ſtoned to death by his own Souldiers. 1.

456 8 Avitus, choſen Emperor in a military tumult.

457 9 Maioranus. 4.

461 10 Severus. 6.

467 11 Anthemius, who at the end of five years was ſlain (as were the three before him) by Recimer a Suevian born, the chief Commander of the Armies, who had an aim to get the Empire for himſelf, but died as ſoon as he had vanquiſhed and ſlain Anthemius.

471 12 Olybrius, an Emperor of four months only.

472 13 Glycerius, another of as little note: As alſo was 14 Julius Nepos, depoſed by Oreſtes a noble Roman, who gave the Empire to his ſon, called at firſt Momillus; but, after his aſſuming the Imperial title, he was called as in contempt Auguſtulus.

473 15 Auguſtulus, the laſt of the Emperors who reſided in Italy, vanquiſhed by Odoacer King of the Heruli and Turingians. An ominous thing, that as Auguſtus raiſed this Empire, ſo an Auguſtulus ſhould ruin it.

But though Auguſtulus loſt the Empire, yet Odoacer was not ſuffered to enjoy it long: Zeno the Emperor of the Eaſt ſending Theodorick King of the Goths, to expel him thence; and to poſſeſs himſelf of Italy, the reward of his valour. And this the Emperor did the rather, partly becauſe the Goths were Chriſtians, and in good terms of correſpondency with him: but principally to remove that active Nation ſomewhat further off, who lay before too near the borders of his own Dominions. And that he might diſmiſs them with the greater content and honour, he made Theodorick a Patrician of the Roman Empire; an honour firſt deviſed by the Emperor Conſtantine; and of ſo high eſteem from the firſt Inſtitution, that they who were dignified therewith, were to have precedency of the Prætoria-Præfecti, who before took place next to the Emperor himſelf. Nor did the famous Charlemain ſet upon it any lower eſtimate, in caſe he did not add much unto it; when to the Title of Emperor of the Romans, he added that of a Patrician in the ſtile Imperial. Theodorick thus authorized and encouraged, marches toward Italy; and having vanquiſhed Odoacer, ſecures himſelf in his new Conqueſts by divers politick proceedings; firſt by Alliances abroad, and then by Fortreſſes at home. To fortifie himſelf abroad he took to Wife Adelheida, daughter to Clodoveus (or Clovis) King of the French; marrying his ſiſter Hemelfride to Thoriſmund, King of the Vandals in Africk, Amalaſunta a ſecond daughter to Eutharicus a Prince of the Goths in Spain, and Ammelberge his Neece, to Hermandfridus King of the Turingians. Being thus backed with theſe Alliances with his Neighbour-Princes, (all equally concerned in the ſubverting of the Roman Empire) he built Towns and Forts along the Alpes, and the ſhores of the Adriatick, to impeach the paſſage of the barbarous Nations into Italy. His Souldiers and Commanders he deſperſed into moſt parts of the Country; partly to keep under the Italians, of whoſe wavering and unconſtant nature he was ſomewhat doubtful; partly to unite both people in a mixture of Language, Marriages, and Cuſtoms; and partly that he might more eaſily in War command them, and in Peace correct them. Italy, which before was made a thorow-fare to the barbarous Nations, and quite diſordered by the frequent inundations of Luſt and Rapine; he reduced to ſuch a peaceable and ſetled Government, that before his death they had quite loſt the memory of their former miſeries: inſtead whereof a general felicity had diffuſed it ſelf over all the Country. Such Cities as had been formerly defaced, he repaired, ſtrengthned, and beautified. In his Wars he was victorious, temperate in his times of Peace, and in his private carriage diſcreet and affable. Finally (as Velleius ſaith of Moroboduus) he was Natione magis quam ratione Borbarus: And went the moſt judicious way to eſtabliſh his dominion in Italy, of any of the Barbarous Princes that ever had invaded the Roman Provinces, which he left thus confirmed & ſetled unto his Succeſſors.

A. Chr. The Kings of the Goths in Italy.

495 1 Theodorick, of whom before; who to his conqueſt of Italy added that of Illyricum, as alſo the appendant Iſlands to both thoſe Countries; and wreſted Provence in France, from the Goths of Spain.

527 2 Athalaricus, Nephew to Theodorick by his daughter to Amalaſunta, who in the minority of her ſon managed the affairs of the Goths in Italy. Fearing ſome danger out of Greece, ſhe reſtored Provence to the French, and by their aid drove the Burgundians out of Liguria. A Lady ſkilful in the Languages of all thoſe Nations which had any commerce with the Roman Empire, inſomuch that pro miraculo fuerit ipſam audire loquentem, ſaith Procopius of her.

534 3 Theodatus, the ſon of Hammelfride, the ſiſter of Theodorick, ſucceeded on the untimely death of Athalaricus. Who being in War with the Romans, (or rather with the Greek Emperors, endeavouring to recover Italy from the hands of the Goths) and deſiring before hand to know his ſucceſs; was willed by a Jew to ſhut up a certain number of Swine, and to give to ſome of them the names of Goths, and unto others the names of Romans. Which done, and going to the ſtyes, not long after they found the Hogs of the Gothiſh faction all ſlain, and thoſe of the Roman half unbriſtled: and thereupon the Jew foretold, That the Goths ſhould be diſcomfited, and the Romans loſe a great part of their ſtrength; and it proved accordingly. Which kind of Divination is called Ονομαντια, and hath been prohibited by a General Council. The loſs of this battel (won by Beliſarius Commander of the Armies of the Emperour Juſtinian) drew on the loſs of Rome, and the Eaſt parts of Italy, (with the Realm of Naples) and occaſioned the death of Theodatus, ſlain ſhortly after theſe great loſſes by the Goths themſelves. 3.

537 4 Vitiges, choſen by the Goths, beſieged and taken in Ravenna by the ſaid Beliſarius. 3.

541 6 Ardaricus, of whom nothing memorable. 1.

542 7 Totilas, a right valiant Prince, recovered all which had been got from his Predeceſſors, and ſacked Rome in the ſight of Beliſarius, then returned into Italy, as not able to hinder him. Vanquiſhed and killed in fight by Narſes, in the 11. of his Reign. 11.

553 8 Teyas, the laſt King of the Goths in Italy, who being vanquiſhed by Narſes in the fourteenth year of his Reign, ſubmitted himſelf to the Eaſtern Emperours: but after breaking out again, he was finally diſcomfited, and ſlain by Narſes, not far from the City of Nocera. An. 567. After which time, the Goths and the Italians mingled in Blood and Language, became one Nation.

But the miſeries of Italy, and thoſe Weſtern parts were not ſo to end. No ſooner had God freed them from the rod of his viſitations, which he had laid upon them in the times of Perſecution, formerly remembred; and giving them peace within their dwellings; but they became divided into Schiſms and Factions: and after wallowed in thoſe ſins; which a continual ſurfeit of proſperity hath commonly attending on it. Inſomuch that devout Salvian, who lived much about theſe times, complains of that high hand of wickedneſs, wherewith they did provoke the patience of Almighty God; the lives of Chriſtians being grown ſo deplorably wicked, that they became a ſcandal to the Faith and Goſpel. In nobis patitur Chriſtus opprobrium, in nobis patitur lex Chriſtiana maledictum, ſaith that godly Biſhop. So that their ſins being ripe for vengeance, God ſent the barbarous Nations, as his Executioners, to execute his divine juſtice on the impenitent men; and made them ſenſible though Heathens, that it was Gods work they did, and not their own, in laying ſuch afflictions on theſe Weſtern parts. Ipſi fatebantur non ſuum eſſe quod facerent, agi enim ſe & per urgeri divino juſſu, as the ſaid godly Biſhop doth inform us of them. On this impulſion the Vandals did acknowledge that they firſt waſted Spain, and then harried Africk: And at the ſame time, did Attila the Hun inſert into his Royal Titles the ſtile of Malleus Orbis, and Flagellum Dei; acknowledging thereby his own apprehenſion of ſome ſpecial and extraordinary calling to this publick ſervice. Nay, as Jornandes doth report, ſome of theſe barbarous people did not ſtick to ſay, That they were put on this employment by ſome Heavenly viſions, which did direct them to the work which they were to do. In proſecution of the which, in leſs time than the compaſs of 80 years, this very Italy (though anciently the ſtrength and ſeat of that Empire) was ſeven times brought almoſt unto deſolation, by the Fire and Sword of the Barbarians, viz. Firſt by Alarick, King of the Goths, who ſacked Rome, Naples, &c. 2. By Attila King of the Huns who razed Florence, waſted Lombardy, and not without much difficulty was diverted from the ſpoil of Rome, by the interceſſion of Pope Leo. 3. By Genſericus King of the Vandals, who alſo had the ſackage of Rome it ſelf. 4. By Biorgus King of the Alani, in the time of the Emperour Maioranus. 5. By Odoacer King of the Heruli, who drove Auguſtulus the laſt Weſtern Emperour out of his eſtate; and twice in thirteen years laid the Country deſolate. 6. By Theodorick King of the Goths, called in by Zeno Emperour* of Conſtantinople to expel Odoacer and the Heruli. And 7. by Gundebald King of the Burgundians, who having ranſacked all Lombardy, returned home again, leaving poſſeſſion to the Goths. As for theſe Goths, being the firſt and laſt of thoſe barbarous Nations who had any thing to do in the ſpoil of Italy, after they had reigned here under eight of their Kings, for the ſpace of 72 years, they were at laſt ſubdued by Beliſarius and Narſes, two of the braveſt Souldiers that had ever ſerved the Eaſtern Emperors; and Italy united once more to the Empire, in the time of Juſtinian. But Narſes having governed Italy about 17 years, and being after ſuch good ſervice moſt deſpightfully uſed by Sophia (never the wiſer for her name) the wife of the Emperour Juſtinus, abandoned the Country to the Lombards. For the Empreſs envying his glories, not only did procure to have him recalled from his Government; but ſent him word, That ſhe would make the Eunuch (for ſuch he was) come home and ſpin among her maids. To which the diſcontented man returned this anſwer, That he would ſpin her ſuch a web, as neither ſhe nor any of her minions ſhould ever be able to unweave. And thereupon he opened the paſſages of the Country to Alboinus King of the Lombards, then poſſeſſed of Pannonia; who coming into Italy with their Wives and Children, poſſeſſed themſelves of all that Country which anciently was inhabited by the Ciſalpine Gauls, calling it by their own names Longobardia, now corruptly Lombardy. Nor ſtaid he there, but made himſelf maſter of the Countries lying on the Adriatick, as afar as to the borders of Apulia: and for the better Government of his new dominions, erected the four famous Dukedoms, 1. of Friuli at the entrance of Italy, for the admiſſion of more aids if occaſion were, or the keeping out of new Invadors: 2. Of Turlin, at the foot of the Alpes againſt the French: 3. Benevent, in Abruzzo, a Province of the Realm of Naples, againſt the incurſions of the Greeks, then poſſeſſed of Apulia, and the other Eaſtern parts of that Kingdom; And 4. of Spoleto, in the midſt of Italy, to ſuppreſs the Natives; leaving the whole, and hopes of more unto his ſucceſſors.

In the mean time, we will look into the ſtory of ſome of the former Kings, in which we find ſome things deſerving our conſideration. And firſt beginning with Alboinus, the firſt of this Catalogue: before his coming into Italy he had waged war with Cunimundus, a King of the Gepidæ; whom he overthrew, and made a drinking Cup of his Skull. Roſumund daughter of this King he took to Wife; and being one day merry at Verona, forced her to drink out of that deteſted Cup; which ſhe ſo ſtomached, that ſhe promiſed one Helmichild, if he would aid her in killing the King, to give him both her ſelf and the Kingdom of Lombardy. This when he had conſented to, and performed accordingly, they were both ſo extreamly hated for it, that they were fain to fly to Ravenna, and put themſelves into the protection of Longinus the Exarch. Who partly out of a deſire to enjoy the Lady; partly to be poſſeſſed of that maſs of Treaſure which ſhe was ſaid to bring with her; but principally hoping by her power and party there, to raiſe a beneficial War againſt the Lombards, perſwaded her to diſpatch Helmichild out of the way, and take him for her husband; to which ſhe willingly agreed. Helmichild coming out of a Bath called for drink, and ſhe gives him a ſtrong poyſon; half of which when he had drunk, and found by the ſtrange operation of it how the matter went, he compelled her to drink the reſt: ſo both died together. 2. Clephes the Second King extended the Kingdom of the Lombards to the Gates of Rome: but was ſo tyrannical withal, that after his death, they reſolved to admit of no more Kings, diſtributing the Government among thirty Dukes. Which diviſion, though it held not above twelve years, was the chief cauſe that the Lombards failed of being the abſolue Lords of all Italy. For the people having once caſt off the yoak of obedience, and taſted ſomewhat of the ſweetneſs of licentions Freedom; were never after ſo reduced to their former duty, as to be aiding to their Kings in ſuch Atchievements as tended more unto the greatneſs of the King, than the gain of the ſubject. 3. Cunibert the 14. King was a great lover of the Clergy, and by them as lovingly requited. For being to encounter with Alachis the Duke of Trent, who rebelled againſt him: one of the Clergy knowing that the Kings life was chiefly aimed at by the Rebels, put on the Royal Robe, and thruſt himſelf into the head of the Enemy, where he loſt his own life, but ſaved the Kings. 4. Aribert the 17 King, gave the Coltian Alpes containing Piemont, and ſome part of the Dutchy of Millain to the Church of Rome: which is obſerved to be the firſt Temporal Eſtate, that ever was conferred upon the Popes, and the foundation of that greatneſs which they after came to. 5. The 19 King was Luitprandus, who added to the Church the Cities of Ancona, Narnia, and Humana, belonging to the Exarchate; having firſt won Ravenna, and the whole Exarchy thereof. An. 741. The laſt Exarch being called Eutichus. But the Lombards long enjoyed not his Conqueſts. For Pepin King of France, being by Pope Stephen the third, ſolicited to come into Italy; overthrew Aſtulphus, and gave Ravenna to the Church. The laſt King was Deſiderius, who falling at odds with Adrian the firſt, and beſieging him in Rome, was by Charles the great, Succeſſor to Pepin, beſieged in Pavy, and himſelf with all his Children taken priſoners, An. 774. And ſo ended the Kingdom of the Lombards, having endured in Italy 206 years. Lombardy was then a Province of the French, and after of the German Empire: many of whoſe Emperors uſed to be crowned Kings of Lombardy, by the Biſhops of Millain, with an Iron-Crown: which was kept at Modoecum, now called Monza, a ſmall Village. This Charles confirmed his Fathers former donations to the Church; and added of his own accord, Marca Anconatina, and the Dukedom of Spoleto. For theſe and other kindneſſes, Charls was by P. Leo the Fourth on Chriſtmas day crowned Emperor of the Weſt, An. 801. whoſe Succeſſors ſhall be reckoned when we come to the ſtory of Germany. At this diviſion of the Empire, Irene was Empreſs of the Eaſt; to whom and her Succeſſors was no more allotted than the Provinces of Apulia, and Calabria, (the Eaſt parts of the Realm of Naples) being then in poſſeſſion of the Greeks. To the Popes were confirmed or given by this Emperor and his Father, almoſt all the Lands which they poſſeſs at this day; though afterwards extorted from them by the ſollowing Emperors, or under colour of their Title: by many ſeveral ways and means brought again unto them, as ſhall be ſhewn hereafter in convenient place. The Venetians, in that little they then had, remained ſui juris. The reſt of Italy, containing all the other Provinces of the Kingdom of Naples, together with Tuſcany, Friuli, Trevigina and whatſoever is at this day in the poſſeſſion of the Dukes of Milan, Mantua, Modena, Parma, Montferrat, and the Duke of Savoy as Prince of Piedmont, together with Liguria, or the States of Genoua, was reſerved by Charles unto himſelf, and in his life-time given by him to Pepin his ſecond ſon, with the ſtile or title of King of Italy. But long it did not reſt in the houſe of France; the Princes of the Lombards wreſting it from the line of Charles, and after weakning and dividing it by their ſeveral factions, till in the end, inſtead of an united Kingdom, there roſe up many ſcattered Principalities, as ſhall hereafter be declared. But firſt we muſt proceed to the Kings of Italy, of which we ſhall endeavour as exact a Catalogue, as the confuſions of that State can be capable of.

1 Pepin ſon of Carolus Magnus, died before his Father.

2 Barnard, ſon of Pepin.

3 Ludovicus Pius, Emperor, and King of France.

841 4 Lotharius, Emperor, eldeſt ſon of Ludovicus. 15.

856 5 Ludovicus II. Emperor, eldeſt ſon to Lotharius. 20.

876 6 Carolus Calvus, Emperor, the youngeſt ſon of Ludovicus Pius. 2.

8 Carolus Craſſus, or the Fat-Emperor, brother of Caroloman, the laſt King of Italy of the houſe of Charles, he died Anno. 888.

888 9 Guy, Duke of Spoleto, contends with Berengarius Duke of Friuli, both of the Longobardian Race, of the Kingdom of Italy; and in fine carrieth it againſt him.

894 10 Lambert, the ſon of Guy, crowned by Pope Formoſus.

11 Ludovick, ſon of Boſon Earl of Ardenne, King of Arles and Burgundy, by ſome Writers called only Earl of Provence; upon the death of Lambert invadeth Italy; and is made King.

917 12 Berengarius Duke of Friuli, vanquiſheth Ludovicus, is made King of Italy; and at laſt overcom by the Hungarians; who having waſted the Country returned back again.

13 Rodolph Duke of Burgundy Tranſ-jurane, called into Italy againſt Berengarius, reſigned it in exchange for the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy to his Couſen.

926 14 Hugh D' Arles, King of Arles and Burgundy, who held the Kingdom of Italy upon this reſignatination; but after many troubles, was at laſt outed of it by Berengarius, and returned into France.

946 15 Berengarius II. ſon of the former Berengarius, on the retreat of Hugh, received by the Italians as Protector to Lotharius the ſon of Hugh; beſieging Adelhais the next heir of Italy (on the death of Lotharius) was taken priſoner by the Emperor Otho.

16 Otho, called into Italy by Adelhais, danger to Rodolph King of Burgundy and Italy; marrieth the Lady, and in her right is King of Italy.

974 17 Otho II. ſon of the former Otho, marrieth Theophania Neece to Nicephorus Phocas, Emperor of Conſtantinople, and hath Calabria for her Dower, 20.

984 18 Otho III. Emperor, and King of Italy, in whoſe minority the Kingdom was uſurped by 19 Harduicus, a man of great power in Italy, who kept it all the time of Otho; till being broken with long wars by Henry the ſucceeding Emperor, he was forced to quit it.

20 Henry, the ſecond Emperor of that name, having thrice vanquiſhed Harduicus, got the Kingdom of Italy, and left the ſame unto the Emperors his Succeſſors.: the Title of Italy after this time being drowned in that of the Empire; and the Country governed as a part and Member of the Empire, by ſuch Commanders and other Officers as the Emperors from time to time ſent thither. But long it ſtaid not in that ſtate. For the Popes of Rome knowing how much it did concern them in point of Polity, to weaken the Imperial Power in Italy, without which their own Grandeur could not be maintained; ſtirred up continual factions and wars againſt them; and by that means, and by the Cenſures of the Church which they denounced according as they ſaw occaſion, did ſo aſtoniſh and diſtract them, that in the end the Emperors began to lay aſide the affairs of Italy, by which they reaped more trouble than the profit came to. Inſomuch that Rodolfus Habſpurgenſis, a valiant and a politick Prince, finding the ill ſucceſs which Henry the 4. and 5. and Frederick the 1. and 2. Emperors of more puiſſance than himſelf, had found in their Italian actions and pretenſions; reſolved to rid his hands of that troubleſom and fruitleſs Province; and to that end made as much money as he could of that commodity, which he ſaw he was not like to keep. And yet he ſold good penny-worths too, to them that bought them; the Florentines paying for their Liberties but ſix thouſand Crowns, the Citizens of Luca, ten thouſand; others as they could make their Markets. And being once required the reaſon, why he went not into Italy to look to the affairs thereof, as his Predeceſſors had done before him: he is ſaid to have returned for anſwer that conceit of the Fox, for his not going to attend (as other beaſts did) at the Lion's Den:

——— Quia me veſtigia terrent,
Omnia me adverſum ſpectantia, nulla retroſum.

That is to ſay,

I dare not go, becauſe no track I ſee
Of any Beaſt returning towards me.

Which faulty and improvident reſolution being followed by too many of his Succeſſors, not only gave the Popes the opportunity they looked for, of making themſelves the great diſpoſers of the affairs of Italy; but many petit Princes thereby took occaſion of getting all they could lay hold on for themſelves, and others. For by this means, the Scaligers made themſelves Maſters of Verona, the Paſſariens of Mantua, the Carrarians of Padua, the Baillons of Bononia, and by the ſame the Florentines got Piſtoia, and Ferrara was poſſeſſed by the Venetians. And although Henry the 7. provoked by theſe indignities, made a journey thither, reduced many of the revolted

Cities to their former obedience, and was crowned King at Millain with the Iron-Crown; as were alſo Ludovicus Bavarus, and Charles the 4. two of his Succeſſors: yet found they in concluſion ſuch ſmall benefit by the enterpriſe, as did not quit the charge and trouble which it put them to. So in the end Italy was left wholly in a manner to the Pope's diſpoſing, who gave away to others what they could not manage; or otherwiſe confirmed thoſe men in their uſurpations, whom they found already poſſeſſed of the Emperors Countries, and bound them by that means the faſter to the See of Rome, of which they were to hold their eſtates in Fee; the Emperors having nothing left them but the empty Title, nor exerciſing the Imperial Power there any other way, than by changing Earldoms, into Marquiſates, and Marquiſates to Dukedoms, which they often did for ready money, or reward of Service, or to preſerve ſome ſhadow of their ancient Intereſt.

And now we are to look on Italy as under a new face of things, not only in regard of ſeveral Principalities and forms of Government, but as repleniſhed with new Colonies or Sets of people, differing from the old in manners as well as language. And though the Soil be now as it was before, yet hath that alſo found ſome change in the different production of the natural Fruits, as well as in the Manufactures and works of Art. For now beſides their Corn and Wine, which anciently were the ſtaple Commodities of this Country, they ſupply the reſt of Chriſtendom with Rice, Silks, Velvets, Taffaties, Sattins, Grograins, Raſh, Fuſtians, Goldwire, Allom, Armour, Glaſſes, and ſuch like commodities, which make their Merchants very wealthy; who being for the moſt part, Gentlemen of Noble-houſes, not only loſe not the eſteem of their Nobility by following the Trade of Merchandiſe (as in other places;) but by reaſon that they are poſſeſſed of eſtates in land, which they manage by their Bailiffs and other Servants, they are become the wealthieſt Merchants in all Chriſtendom.

Nor do the Gentry come behind them in all manner of affluence, which can be poſſibly enjoyed in ſo rich a Soil. Their Lands they ſet not at a rent, but at thirds and halfs, according as the Soil is more or leſs fruitful; ſeldom abiding in the Country, but only for a month or two in the Summer times; but then they entertain themſelves with their Muſick and Miſtreſſes under the fragrant Hedges and ſhady Bowers, in as much ſolace and delight as may be deſired. The reſidue of the year they ſpend in Cities, and places of the moſt reſort, for change of company. But, on the other ſide, the Country-Farmer lives a drudging and laborious life, liable to all the Taxes and Impoſitions which are laid on the Land; the Landlords part coming in clearly without any disburſements or defalcations; inſomuch that it is proverbially, but moſt truly ſaid, that the rich men in Italy are the richeſt, and the poor men the pooreſt, in all the world.

The people generally are grave, reſpective, and ingenious. Excellent men (ſaid once an Hiſpaniolized Italian) but for theſe three things; that is to ſay, in their luſts they are unnatural, in their malice unappeaſable in their actions deceitful. To which might be added, that they will blaſpheme rather than ſwear, and murder a man ſooner then ſlander him. But this perhaps may be the fault but of ſome particulars: it being obſerved by moderate and impartial men, that they are obedient to their Superiors, to Inferiors courteous, to their Equals full of all Civilities, to Strangers affable, and moſt deſirous by all fair and friendly offices to win their loves. In apparel they are ſaid to by very modeſt, in the furniture of their houſes ſumptuous, at their Tables neat, ſober of ſpeech, enemies of all ill reports of others; and of their own reputation ſo exceeding tender, that whoſoever ſlandereth any one of them, if it come unto the parties ear, he is ſure to die for it. Of money and expence he is very thrifty, and loves to be at no more coſt, than he is ſure to ſave by, or receive great thanks for: but otherwiſe for civil carriage and behaviour, ſurpaſſing all the Gentry of the World beſides. Only in ſtrictneſs to their wives, they exceed all reaſon, of whom they are ſo extreamly jealous, that they ſhut them up all day from the common view, and permit them liberty of diſcourſe with few or none. The Lock uſed by a Gentleman of Venice to be aſſured of his wives chaſtity in the time of his abſence, is ſo known a ſtory that it needs no report. But touching the predominancy of this jealous humor in moſt Southern Nations, we ſhall ſpeak more hereafter when we come to Spain. And yet if that be true, which is proverbially ſpoken of the women of Italy, the husbands have more reaſon for this ſtrict reſtraint, than other Nations are aware of. For though they be for the moſt part witty in ſpeech, and modeſt in the outward appearance, as much as any; yet it is ſaid of them in the way of proverb, That they are as Magpies at the door, Saints in the Church, Goats in the Garden, Devils in the houſe, Angels in the Streets, and Syrens in the Windows, not wanting on this ground to ſet out themſelves with all advantages of Art, there being few amongſt them who uſe not painting, and other the ſophiſtical helps to fallacious Beauty; and thereupon they have a ſaying, that If God make them tall and fat, (for the title of a goodly woman is much prized amongſt them) they will make themſelves fair.

The Language of both Sexes is very Courtly and fluant, all of them ſpeaking the Courtezan, or Court-language; notwithſtanding the diverſity of Dialects which is amongſt them. For though there be a remarkable difference betwixt the Florentine and Venetian, the Millaneſe and the Roman, the Neapolitan and the Genoeſe; yet it is hard to be diſcerned by the tone or pronunciation, what language any Gentleman is of. But generally it is beſt ſpoken in the great Duke's Country, in the Cities of Florence and Sienna, but in Florence eſpecially; in which City, Guicciardine the Hiſtorian, Boccace the Author of the Decameron, and other great Maſters of the Italian Language, did live and flouriſh in their times.

For other men of note both for Arts and Arms; Italy hath afforded many ſince the fall of the Empire, viz. Æneas Silvius, afterwards Pope, by the name of Pius the ſecond; 2. Marſilius Patavinus, a ſtout defender of the Imperial Rights; 3. Petrarch a Roman born; 4. Angelus Politianus, the Reſtorer of polite Literature in Italy; 5. Rodolphus Volaterranus; and 6. Picus Mirandula, two great Humanitians; 7. Guido Bonatus, a famous Aſtrologer; 8. Arioſto, and 9. Taſſo, the moſt renowned Poets of their times, and the latter never fellowed ſince; 10. Sixtus Senenſis, one of the beſt Antiquaries of the Nation, and a great Divine; 11. Bellarmine, and 12. Baronius, the Butreſſes and Pillars of the Church of Rome. And then for Arms; 1. Ludovicus Conius, the firſt Reſtorer of the honour of the Italian Souldiery; 2. Forti Bracchio, and 3. Nicolao Picinino, two of his training up in the feats of Chivalry; 4, 5. Sforza, the Father, and the Son; of which the Son attained by his valour, to the Dukedom of Millain; 6. Chriſtopher Columbus, a Genoeſe; Americus Veſputius; a Florentine, and 8. Sebaſtian Cabot, a Venetian, the fortunate Diſcoverers of America; 9. Andrea D'Oria, Admiral of the Navies to Charles the the fifth; and 10. Ambroſe Spinola (both Genoeſe) Commander of the Armies of Philip the ſecond, King of Spain: Which laſt being once upbraided by Maurice, Prince of Orange, as iſſued from a Race of Merchants, (though otherwiſe of a very ancient and noble Family) returned this tart and ſudden Anſwer, That he thought it a greater honour to him, being a Merchant, to have the command of ſo many Princes; than it could be unto the other, though a Prince by birth, to be under the command of ſo many Merchants,

The uſual Diviſion of Italy is into ſix parts, 1. Lombardy, 2. Tuſcany, 3. the Land of the Church, 4. Naples, 5. Riviere de Genoa; and 6. the Land of Venice: and of them there is paſſed this Cenſure according to the principal Cities, i. e. Rome for Religion, Naples for Nobility, Millain for beauty, Genoa for ſtatelineſs, Florence for Poſicy, and Venice for riches. But take it as it ſtands at the preſent time; and ITALY is beſt divided

- The Kingdoms of
  - Naples.
  - Sicily.
  - Sardinia.
- The Land or Patrimony of the Church.
- The great Dukedom of Tuſcany.

The Kingdom of NAPLES.

THE Kingdom of NAPLES is invironed on all ſides with the Adriatick, Ionian, and Tuſcan Seas, excepting where it joyneth on the Weſt to the Lands of the Church: from which ſeparated by a line drawn from the mouth of the River Tronto (or Druentus) falling into the Adriatick, to the Spring head of Axofenus. By which accompt it taketh up all the Eaſt of Italy, the compaſs of it being reckoned at 1468. miles.

It hath been called ſometimes the Realm of Poville, from Poville or Apulia, a chief Province of it; the firſt poſſeſſion of the Normans (the Founders of this Kingdom) in theſe parts of Italy: but called moſt commonly the Realm of Sicil, on this ſide of the Phare, to difference it from the Kingdom of the Iſle of Sicil, lying on the other ſide of the Phare, or ſtrait of Meſſana. The reaſon of which improper appellation proceeded from Roger the firſt King hereof, who being alſo Earl of Sicil, and keeping there his fixed and ordinary reſidence; when he got the favour to be made a King, deſired (in honour of the place where he moſt reſided) to be created by the name of King of both the Sicilies. And that indeed is the true and ancient name of the Kingdom; the name or title of King of Naples not coming into uſe till the French were diſpoſſeſſed of Sicil by the Aragonians; and nothing left them but this part of the Kingdom, of which the City of Naples was the Regal Seat, called therefore in the following times, the Kingdom of Naples; and by ſome of the Italian Writers, the Kingdom only.

This is eſteemed to be the moſt fertil place in all Italy, abounding in all things neceſſary for the life of man, and in ſuch alſo as conduce to Delight and Phyſick; viz. Many Springs, and Medicinal waters, Baths of divers vertues, ſundry Phyſical herbs. It hath alſo an excellent breed of Horſes, which may not be tranſported but by the leave of the King, or at leaſt the Viceroy; great ſtore of Allom, Mines of divers Metals, and the choiceſt Wines, called anciently Vina Maſſica, and Falerna, frequently mentioned by the Poets. And as for Merchandiſe, to Alexandria they ſend Saffron, to Genoa Silks, to Rome Wines, and to Venice Oyl, &c.

The Noblemen or Gentry hereof, live of all men the moſt careleſs and contented lives; and like the Tyrant Polycrates in the elder ſtories, have nothing to trouble them, but that they are troubled with nothing. And there is a great number of them too, there being reckoned in this Realm in the time of Ortelius, 13 Princes, 24 Dukes, 25 Marqueſſes, 90 Earls, and 800 Barons; and thoſe not only Titular, as in other places, but men of great power and revenue in their ſeveral Countries; inſomuch that the yearly income of the Prince of Biſignan is ſaid to be an 100000 Crowns, one year with the other; the Princes of Salerno, and St. Severine being near as great. They are all bound by their Tenure to ſerve the King in his Wars, which gives them many priviledges, and great command over the common Subject: whereby as they were made the abler to aſſiſt the King, upon any foreign invaſion; ſo are they in condition alſo of raiſing and countenancing ſuch defections as have been made from King to King, and from one Family to another, as ſorted beſt with their ambitions & particular intereſſes. For not alone the Nobles, but in general as many of the common people as can be ſpared from husbandry, are more addicted to the Wars, than they are to Merchandiſe: The Nobles in purſuit of honour, and the Paiſant out of deſire of being in action; ſo that the greateſt part of the Forces which ſerve the Spaniard in the Low-Countries, are ſent from hence. To which, the humour which they have from the higheſt to the loweſt, of going bravely in Apparel, ſerves exceeding fitly. An humour which is ſo predominant in both ſexes, that though the Paiſant lives all the reſt of the week in as great ſervility and drudgery, as his Lord doth in pride and jollity; yet on the Sundays and Saintdays, he will be ſure to have a good ſuit to his back, though perhaps he hath no meat for his belly. And for the women, ſhe that works hard both day and night for an hungry living, will be ſo pranked up on the Sundays and other Feſtivals, or when ſhe is to ſhew herſelf in ſome publick place; that one who did not know the humour, might eaſily miſtake her for ſome noble Lady.

The principal Rivers of this Kingdom are, 1 Sybaris, 2 Baſentus, 3 Peſcara, 4 Trontus, 5 Aufidus, 6 Salinellus, 7 Vomanus, 8 Salinus and 9 Garigliano. The moſt famous of which, are Aufidus and Garigliano. The firſt as being the only River of Italy, which riſing South-ſide of the Apennine, forceth a breach through it to the upper Sea: but more for the great Battel fought on the banks thereof, called the Battel of Cannæ, of which more hereafter. The other no leſs famous for thoſe many Battels, which have been fought near it between the French and the Spaniard, for the Kingdom of Naples: eſpecially that famous Battel between the Marqueſs of Saluzzes, General of the French, and Gonſalvo, Leader of the Spaniards; the loſs of which Victory by the French, was the abſolute confirmation of the Realm of Naples to the Spaniards. More famous is this River for the death of Peter de Medices, who being baniſhed his Country at the coming of King Charles the 8. into Italy, and having divers times in vain attempted to be reimpatriate, followed the French Army hither, and after the loſs of the day, took Ship with others, to fly to Cajeta; but over-charging the Veſſel, ſhe ſunk and drowned them all. But moſt famous is it, in that Marius, that excellent, though unfortunate Captain, being by Sylla's faction driven out of Rome, hid himſelf ſtark naked in the dirt and weeds of this River: where he had not lain long, but Sylla's Souldiers found him, and carried him to the City of the Minturnians, being not far off.

Theſe men, to pleaſe Sylla, hired a Cimber to kill him, which the fellow attempting (ſuch is the vertue of Majeſty even in a miſerable fortune) run out again, crying, he could not kill C. Marius. This River was of old called Liris; and towards its influx into the Sea expatiated into Lakes and Fens, called the Lakes of Minturni, from a City of that name adjoyning.

It is divided into the Provinces of 1 Terra di Lavoro, 2 Abruzzo, 3 Puglia, or Apulia, 4 Terra de Otranto 5 Calabria Superior, 6 Calabria Inferior, and 7 the Iſles of Naples. Some of which have ſome ſmaller Territories adjoyning to them, which we ſhall meet withal as they come in our way.

TERRA di LAVORO is bounded on the North with Abruzzo, from which ſeparated by the Apennine Hills, on the Eaſt with the River Silarus, which parteth it from the lower Calabria; on the South with the Tyrrhenian or Tuſcan Sea, and on the Weſt with Latium, or Campagna di Roma; from which divided by the River Cariglian; Called anciently Campania Fælix, in regard of the wonderful fertility of it, and that it was the ſeat or dwelling of the Campans; by ſome modern Latiniſts called Campania Antiqua, to difference it from Latium, which they now call Campagna di Roma, or Campania Nova. And for the other name of Terra di Lavoro, or Terra Laboratoris, it was given to it, from the continual labour of the Husbandmen in cultivating the ground, and carrying in the fruits thereof; but neither the reaſon, nor the name ſo new, as ſome men ſuppoſe. But, I am ſure, as old as Pliny, who calleth theſe parts ſometimes by the name of Laboria, ſometimes of Campus Laborinus; and gives this reaſon of the name, quod ingens in eo colendo ſit labor, becauſe of the great pains it requires to till it, and the great profit reaped by them who did till and manure it.

The Country is ſo exceeding fruitful in Wines and Wheat, that by Florus the Hiſtorian it is called Cereris & Bacchi certamen, and deſervedly too. For in this noble Region one may ſee large and beautiful fields overſhaded with rich Vines, thick and delightful Woods, ſweet Fountains, and moſt wholſom Springs of running waters; uſeful as well for the reſtoring of mans health, as delight and pleaſure: and in a word, whatſoever a covetous mind can poſſibly aim at, or a carnal covet.

Towns of note here were many in the elder times. The principal whereof, 1 Cajeta, ſeated on a fair and capacious Bay, from the crookedneſs whereof it is thought by Strabo, to have took the name; the word in the Laconian Language ſignifying crooked. Others will have it ſo called from Καίω, Uro, with reference to the burning of the Fleet of Æneas by the Trojan Ladies; for fear of being forced again to go to Sea, where they had been ſo extreamly toſſed in their former voyages. But why that Fact committed on the furtheſt coaſts of Sicil, ſhould be ſo ſolemnly commemorated here on the ſhores of Italy, I can ſee no reaſon: and therefore we may far more probably derive it from Cajeta, the nurſe of Æneas, in memory of whom, being buried here, or hereabouts, Æneas is affirmed to have built this Town. Of which thus the Poet, Æneid. lib. 7.

> Tu quoque Littoribus noſtris, Æneia nutrix,
> Æternam moriens famam, Cajeta, dediſti.

That is to ſay,

> Æneas Nurſe, Cajeta, by her death,
> Did to theſe ſhores an endleſs fame bequeath.

But on what ground ſoever it firſt had this name, it is aſſuredly a place of great ſtrength and conſequence; and of ſo ſpecial importance for the Eſtate of this Kingdom, that (as Comineus hath obſerved) if King Charles the 8. had but only fortified it and the Caſtle of Naples; the Realm had never been loſt. 2. Naples, the Metropolis of the Kingdom, a beautiful City, containing ſeven miles in compaſs. It was once called Parthenope and falling to ruine, was new built, and called Neapolis. Among other things, here is an Hoſpital, the revenues whereof is 60000 Crowns yearly, wherewith beſides other good deeds, they nouriſh in divers parts of the Kingdom, 2000 poor Infants. In this City, the diſeaſe called Morbus Gallicus, or Neapolitanus, was firſt known in Chriſtendom. This City is ſeated on the Sea-ſhore, and fortified with four ſtrong Caſtles, viz. 1 Caſtle Capodua, where the Kings Palace was, 2 Ermo, 3 Caſtle del Ovo, or the Caſtle of the Egge, and 4 Caſtle Novo, or the new Caſtle. But nature hath not done much leſs to her Fortifications, than the hand of Art, the Town being for the moſt part environed by Sea, or Mountains not to be aſcended without great difficulty and diſadvantages. Which Mountains, as they ſerve on that ſide as a bank to the City, ſo do they furniſh the Citizens with moſt generous Wines; and being once aſcended yield a gallant proſpect both for Sea and Land. A City honoured by the ſeat of the Vice-Roy, and the continual reſort, if not conſtant reſidence of moſt of the great men of the Realm; which makes the private buildings to be very graceful, and the publick ſtately. And yet it had increaſed much more in buildings, than it is at preſent, if the King had not forbidden it by ſpecial Edict. And this he did, partly, at the perſwaſion of his Noblemen, who feared that if ſuch a reſtraint were not laid upon them, their Vaſſals would forſake the Country to inhabit here, ſo to enjoy the priviledges and the exemptions of the Regal City: but principally upon jealouſie and point of State, the better to prevent all revolts and mutines, which in moſt populous Cities are of greateſt danger. 3 Capua, once the head of the Campans, ſeated in a delicious and luxurious ſoyl, and one of the three Cities which the old Romans judged capable of the ſeat of the Empire, the other two being Carthage, and Corinth. Being diſtreſſed by the Samnites, they were fain to caſt themſelves into the Arms of the Romans, who did not only take them into their protection, but ſuffered them to live according to their own Laws, as a Free Common-wealth; rather like a confederate than a Subject-State. Which freedom they enjoyed, till after the revolt to the Carthaginians; when being reduced to their obedience by force of Arms, they loſt all their Liberties, and hardly eſcaped its fatal and final ruin: drawing the whole Nation of the Campains with divers leſſer States, which depended on them, into bondage with it; A. V. C. 542. Appius and Flaccus being Conſuls. The pleaſures of this place was it which enervated the victorious Army of Annibal, who wintered here after the great defeat given to Terentius Varro at the Battel of Cannæ; whence came the ſaying, Capuam eſſe Cannas Annibali. 4 Cuma, a City once of great power and beauty, till Campania was ſubdued by the Romans; after which, it decayed in both. Near hereunto was the Cave or Grot of one of the Sibyls called from hence Cumæa; and not far off the Lake called Lacus Avernus, the ſtink whereof is ſaid to have poyſoned Birds as they flew over it; ſuppoſed by ignorant Antiquity for the entrance of Hell. And finally, from this place it was, that Æneas is fabled by the Poets to have gone down to the infernal Ghoſts, to talk with his Father. 5 Nola, where Mercellus diſcomfited the Forces of Annibal, and thereby gave the Romans to underſtand, that he was not invincible. 6 Puteoli, a ſmall Town ſtanding on a Creek of the Sea, juſt oppſite to Baiæ, on the other ſide of it; from which diſtant about three miles and a half. Both Towns remarkable for the Bridge built betwixt them by Caligula, compoſed of ſundry Veſſels joyned together in ſuch ſort, that there was not only fair and large paſſage over it, but Victualling houſes on both ſides of it: Over which Bridge thus made, he marched and remarched in triumphal Robes, as if not only the Earth, but the very Seas were made ſubject to him. And this he did (as himſelf afterwards affirmed to ſome of his friends) to awe the Ocean; and imitate (if not exceed) the like acts of Xerxes and Darius, mentioned in the ancient Writers; as alſo to terrifie the Britains, and the German Nations, with the report of ſuch a notable exploit; or (as ſome thought) to fulfil the Propheſie of one Thraſibulus a fortune-teller of thoſe times, who had been often heard to ſay in the life-time of Tiberius (his next immediate Predeceſſor) that it was as impoſſible for Caius to ſucceed in the Empire, as it was for him to ride on Horſeback from Baule to Puteoli. 7 Not far hence, on a Semicircular Bay, ſtands the City of Baiæ (whereof Baule before mentioned is a part) ſo called, as they ſay, from Baius, one of the companions of Vlyſſes in his Navigations. A City in the flouriſh of the Roman Empire of five miles in length, and two in breadth; ſo wonderfully endued by nature, and adorned by Art, that no place in the world was thought comparable to it:

Nullus in Orbe locus Baiis prælucet amœnis.

Few places in the world there are
With pleaſant Baiæ to compare. As it is in Horace.

A City beautified with magnificent Temples, multitudes of Baths, or Bannia's Imperial Palaces, ſtately buildings, and the adjoyning Mannor-houſes of the principal Romans, whom the pleaſures of the place invited hither; and was indeed too great and ſenſible a monument of the laſciviouſneſs and luxury of that proſperous people, of which the Ambubaiæ mentioned in the Satyriſt is ſufficient proof; (though ſome fetch the Etymologie of the word far enough from Rome, deriving it from Ambub, a Syrian word ſignifying a Pipe, from whence the Latins give this name to their Minſtrels) now ſo demoliſhed by War, and devoured by Water, that there is nothing of it to be ſeen but ſome ſcattered ruins. 8 Miſenus, ſeated near a great Hill, or Promontory of the ſame name, at the foot whereof there is a large and capacious Harbour; where Auguſtus keeping one Navy, and another at Ravenna in the upper Sea, awed the whole Roman Empire. But theſe were places of renown in the former times; all which, excepting Naples, are now only known by what they have been, not by what they are. The principal Cities at this time, are (next to Naples it ſelf) Seſſa; the Sinueſſa or Suiſſa of the ancients, and now the title of a Dukedom to the houſe of Cordova in Spain, derived from Gonſalvo the great Captain, of whom more hereafter. 2 Averſa, a Town of great ſtrength and conſequence, ſecond to few in all the Kingdom; but forced to yield (though the Earl of Monpenſier then Vice-roy of the Realm for Charles the 8. were in perſon in it) to the good fortune of Gonſalvo, ſpoken of before: the whole Kingdom following ſhortly after. 3 Ceano, 4 Salvi, 5 Vanafre, and 6 Caſerte, with others, to the number of 22, beſides 166 Caſtles or defenſible places. Here is alſo in this Tract the Hill called Gallicanum, where Annibal that great Maſter in the Art of war, frighted that wary Captain Fabius Maximus, by the ſtratagem of two thouſand Oxen, carrying fire in their horns; by which device he freed himſelf out of thoſe difficult Straights, in which he was at that preſent. And in this Country there is alſo the Hill Veſuvius, that caſteth out flames of fire, the ſmoke of which ſtifled Pliny ſenior, coveting to ſearch the cauſe of it. The flame hereof brake forth cruelly alſo during the reign of Titus, caſting out not only ſuch ſtore of ſmoke, that the very Sun ſeemed to be in the Eclipſe, but alſo huge ſtones: and of aſhes ſuch plenty that Rome, Africk, and Syria, were even covered; and Herculanum, and Pompeii, two Cities in Italy were overwhelmed with them. There were heard diſmal noiſes all about the Province; and Giants of incredible bigneſs ſeen to ſtalk up and down, about the top and edges of the mountain; which extraordinary accident, either was a cauſe, or preſage of the future Peſtilence, which raged in Rome and Italy long after.

On the Eaſt ſide of this Campania, and properly (as anciently it was eſteemed) a part thereof, lieth that little Territory, which Alfonſo King of Naples cauſed to be called the Principate; bounded upon the Eaſt with Calabria inferior, or that part thereof which is called the Baſilecate; from which parted by the River Silarus. It extends 33 miles in length, and 10 in breadth: and was of old the Seat of the Picentini, a colony of the Piceni dwelling on the Adriatick. Principal places of it, 1 Maſſa, by the Italians called Marſo, of more note for the Hills adjoyning, than any great beauty or antiquity it hath in it ſelf. Thoſe hills now called Monte Marſo, but known to the Romans by the name of Montes Maſſici; of ſpecial eſtimation for the rich Wines, called Vina Maſſica. 2 Nuceria nine miles from the Sea, in a very plentiful and delicious ſoyl. 3 Rivelli, a City not long ſince built, which for the elegancy of the buildings hardly yields to Naples. 4. Malfi, or Amalphi, an Arch-biſhops See, in which it is ſuppoſed that the Mariners Compaſs was firſt found out. It is ſituate on the Sea-ſide, and giveth name to the coaſt of Amalfe, fenced with Hills or Mountains of ſo great an height, that to look down into the Vallies or the Sea adjoyning, makes men ſick and giddy. A Town of great note (were there nothing elſe to commend it to our obſervation) for the finding out of the Mariners Compaſs, (as before is ſaid) deviſed and contrived here about the year 1300. by one John Flavio, a native or inhabitant of it. 5 Salerno, about a mile from the Sea, the title of the Prince of Salerno, and an Univerſity, but chiefly for the ſtudy of Phyſick, the Doctors of which wrote the Book called Schola Salerni, dedicated to a King of England: not to K. Henry the 8. as it is conceived, for then the Commentary on it, written by Arnoldus Villanovanus, (who lived about the year 1313) muſt needs have been before the Text. And therefore I conceive it dedicated either to King Richard the firſt, or King Edward the firſt, who in their journies towards the Holy-Land, might beſtow a viſit on this place, and give ſome honourary encouragement to the Students of it. Beſides theſe, there are ſaid to be in this ſmall Territory, fifteen other good Towns, and two hundred and thirteen Caſtles or walled places; but theſe the principal.

II. North of Campania, lyeth the Province now called ABRUZZO, bounded on the Eaſt with Puglia, or Apulia; on the Weſt, with Marca Anconitana; on the North, with the Adriatick Sea; and on the South, with the Apennine. It is called, Aprutium by the Latins, but the reaſon of the name not agreed upon: divided anciently between the Picentes and the Samnites: the Picentes taking up thoſe parts which lay next the Adriatick; the reſt (being far the greater part) was poſſeſſed by the Samnites. Theſe laſt (for of the others we ſhall ſpeak elſewhere) a people which held longer wars with the States of Rome; than almoſt all Italy beſides; as keeping them in continual action for the ſpace of 70 yearys together, beſides many after-claps. In which long courſe of Wars, the Romans were ſo hardly put to their ſhifts, that they were four times fain to have recourſe to the laſt refuge; which was the chuſing of Dictators; and yet came off ſo often with ſucceſs and victory, that it afforded them the honour of thirty triumphs. But theſe Samnites, as they were a potent, ſo they were alſo a compound Nation; conſiſting of the Ferentani, Caraceni, Peligni, Precatini, Veſtini, Hirpini, and Samnites properly ſo called; into which name the reſt of the inferiour Tribes were after ſwallowed. The chief City of the whole was called Samnium, whence they had their name; which in the concluſion of the War was ſo defaced by Papyrius the Roman Conſul, ut hodie Samnium in ipſo Samnio requiratur; that not improperly (ſaith Florus) a man might ask where Samnium ſtood, even in the middle of the City. Which hapened A. V. C. 481.

The River of Peſcara runneth through the midſt of it, and divideth it into parts, whereof the one containeth 5 Cities, and 150 Caſtles, or walled places; the other, 184 Caſtles, and 4 Cities. The principal Cities of the whole, 1 Arpinum, once the chief Town of the Arpinates. and the Country of M. Tullius Cicero, that famous Orator, now a poor Village called Arpino. 2 Beneventum, heretofore called Maleventum, as we find in Pliny, becauſe the Winds hereabouts were ſo fierce and violent, that men could not ſit upon their Horſes; but had at laſt that name of Beneventum, from the pleaſant Plains and ſpacious Vallies, which ly round about it; in like manner as the Country of the old Allobroges, exchanged the name of Malvoy, into that of Salvoy. It was one of the four Dukedoms which the Lombards erected, when they firſt came into Italy, for the better aſſuring of their Conqueſt; and was given to the Church of Rome by the Emperor Henry the Fourth, in exchange of a certain Tribute remitted by Pope Leo the Ninth to the Church of Bamberg, where the ſaid Emperor was born; and is ſtill under the command of the Popes of Rome. 3 Aquila, built by the Emperor Frederick the Second, King of Naples, to aſſure the Realm upon that Quarter. 4 Lanciano, four miles from the Adriatick, a Town of great Trade, and much reſorted to by Merchants at her Annual Marts. 5 Ortona, the Port-town unto Lanciana. 6 Teranum, or Teran (Ptolomy calls it Inter-amna) anciently the Metropolis of the Precatini. 7 Cittadi Chiety, ſituate on a Hill ſome ſeven miles from the Sea, heretofore known by the name of Theate. 8 Aquino, the Birth-place of Thomas Aquinas the great School-man, who firſt brought the ſcattered limbs of Popery into a body. Here ſtood alſo, 9 the old Town Corſinium, the chief City of the Peligni, made good a while by Domitius Ænobarbus againſt Julius Cæſar, in his firſt following after Pompey, then retired from Rome. And ſeven miles hence, 10 Sulmo, honoured with the birth of Ovid, that renowned Poet, as himſelf teſtifieth.

Sulmo mihi patria eſt, gelidis uberrimus undis,
Millia qui nonies diſtat ab Urbe decem.

Full of cool ſtreams Sulmo, my native Land,
From the great City ninety miles doth ſtand.

There belongeth alſo to Abruzzo the Country of Moniſi, in which are 104 walled places or Caſtles, and four conſiderable Towns; the principal of which is Bovianum, or Boiano, now a Biſhops See, in former times a Colony of the Romans, by Pliny called Bovianum Undecumanorum to difference it from another in this Tract, of the ſame name, which he calls Bovianumvetus. 2 Luparetha, of which little memorable. In this Country alſo (I mean Abruzzo) are the ſtraights called Furcæ Caudinæ, in which when the Samnites and their confederates had ſo incloſed the Romans, that there was no poſſibility to eſcape, they ſent to Herennius, a man for his Age much honoured, and for his wiſdom much followed by them, to know what they ſhould do with the captive Enemies. Word was returned, that they ſhould ſend them home ſafe, and without diſhonour. Thinking the old man had not been well informed of the ſtate of the buſineſs, they ſent to him again, and he adviſed, that they ſhould put them all to the ſword. Theſe contrary anſwers made them judge amiſs of the old mans brain; and therefore following their own fancies, they ſpoiled the Romans, and diſarmed them, and deſpightfully uſed them, and ſo ſent them home. Which when Herennius came to know, he much lamented the imprudence of ſo raſh an action; but much more the deſtruction of this Country, as a conſequent of it. Telling them, after their return, that had they given the Romans a ſafe and honourable deliverance from the preſent danger, they had made them their friend for many Ages; or had they put unto the ſword ſo many of their Souldiers and chief Commanders, they had diſabled them for long time from perſuing the War: The middle courſe which they had taken would be their undoing; and ſo accordingly it proved. For the Romans not being made their friends by ſo odious a benefit, but hatching revenge for the diſgrace, ſoon renewed the War; and under the conduct of Papyrius ſubdued the Country, and handled the poor conquered people with the like deſpight. An excellent Precedent unto Princes and thoſe in power, how to proceed towards men of Quality and Rank, when they have them under; which muſt be, either not to ſtrike at all, or to ſtrike home, and to the purpoſe. Ni. Machiavil, in his Florentine Hiſtory taxeth Rinaldo of Albizi for committing a great Solæciſm in point of State, in that hating Coſmo de Medices, and deſiring to remove him from his publick managery of affairs, he thought it was ſufficient to procure his baniſhment: which Coſmo, afterwards returning, paid in better coyn. Whereupon he inferreth this notable Aphoriſm, that, Great perſons muſt not at all be touched, or if they be, muſt be made ſure from taking Revenge. Yet do I not interdict a Prince, or any ſupreme Governours, the uſe of Mercy. I know it is the richeſt Jewel which adorns the Crown. Nor dare I take upon me to direct the uſe of that excellent vertue. Only I ſhall obſerve what uſage hath been commonly afforded towards ſuch perſons after their Delinquencies; whoſe liberty or life may create danger to the publick. The firſt is preſent Execution; for Mortui non mordent, as the ſaying is: a courſe more to be allowed of where it cannot, than commended where it may be ſpared. The ſecond is either cloſe impriſonment under truſty Guards, or elſe confinement to the houſe and cuſtody of ſome truſty Stateſman: in which great caution alſo is to be obſerved. For, beſides that nothing is more ordinary than the eſcape of great Priſoners, either by corrupting or deceiving their Keepers; We find in our Hiſtories, how Dr. Merton Biſhop of Eli, being committed to the cuſtody of the Duke of Buckingham by King Richard the 3. not only procured his own liberty, but brought about that Duke to the contrary faction. The laſt, which is in all times the gentleſt, and in ſome caſes the ſafeſt, is, not only an abſolute pardon of life, and a grant of liberty; but an endearing of the party delinquent, by giving him ſome place of honour or committing unto his fidelity ſome office of truſt; it being the nature of moſt men, that where they are not truſted, they are never true; and that as long as they lie under ſuſpect and jealouſies, they will be apt to entertain ſome thoughts of their loſt condition. And of this kind of dealing with a perſon Delinquent, we have a pregnant inſtance in the Emperor Otho, who not only pardoned Marius Celſus one of Galba's faction, and a chief one too, but put him in place neareſt to him, and made him one of his principal Leaders, in the following War againſt Vitellius. His reaſon was Ne hoſtis metum reconciliationis adbiberet, leſt lying aloof as a pardoned Enemy, he might conceive the breach were but bad made up. And on the other ſide, Marius Celſus proved ſo ſenſible of the obligation, that he continued faithful to him to the very laſt; and loſt his life in the purſuance of his quarrel: ſhewing thereby, that perſons of a generous and noble diſpoſition, are more obliged by favours, than reſtrained by terrour. But it is now time I ſhould free my ſelf of theſe Furcæ Caulinæ, and ſport my ſelf a while in the Plains of Apulia.

But I muſt note, before I take my leave hereof, that theſe two Provinces of Campania and Abruzzo, make up the greateſt, richeſt, and beſt peopled part of the Realm of Naples. And therefore when the Kingdom was divided between the French and the Spaniards, it was allotted to the French, as having the priority, both of claim and power. The Provinces remaining, although more in number, yet are not comparable to thoſe two for wealth and greatneſs, and were aſſigned over to the Spaniards, as lying moſt conveniently for the Realm of Sicilie.

III. PVGLIA is bounded on the Weſt, with Abruzzo; on the Eaſt, with Terra di Otranto; on the North, with the Adriatick Sea; on the South, with Calabria. It contains the whole Country called of old Apulia; from whence the Puglia of the Italians and the Poville of the French are to be derived.

The whole Country containeth in it beſides Villages and Towns unfortified, 126 Caſtles and walled places, with 13 Cities of good note.. The moſt conſiderable of which we ſhall meet withal in our Chorography of the ſeveral paats, divided anciently by Ptolemy, and ſince him, by Leander; into Apulia Daunia, and Apulia Peucetia: the former ſubdivided into the Capitanate, and Poville the Plain; the latter into Bari, and the Land of Otranto. For that the Land of Otranto, (though now a Province of it ſelf) did ſometimes paſs in the accompt of Apulia; ſeems to me moſt probable, in that all the Eaſt parts of this Kingdom were held by the Conſtantinopolitan Emperors (after the coming in of the Lombards) by no other names than thoſe of Apulia, and Calabria: and by no other names than thoſe were aſſigned over unto Otho the 2 of Germany, on his marriage with Theophania, Neece to one of thoſe Emperors. And I conceive that it was then laid unto Apulia, rather than to Calabria, firſt, in regard that the old inhabitants were the ſame in both; the Iapyges, Meſſapians and Salentini, poſſeſſing promiſcuouſly all this Tract from Mount Garganus in Daunia, to the Promontory called Iapygium in the moſt Eaſtern angle of the Land of Otranto. And ſecondly, in regard that the people of both, have a diſeaſe peculiar only to themſelves, occaſioned by the biting of a little-Serpent called a Tarantula, not curable but by muſick only. This ſaid we will proceed in our Survey of the parts. And firſt, APVLIA DAVNIA, is that part hereof which lieth next to Abruzzo, from which parted by the River Phiternus (now called Fortore) and ſo extending Eaſt-wards to the River Aufidus (Lofonto, the Italians call it) where it meets with Peucetia. The reaſon of the name is not yet agreed on. But I find no more probable conjecture of it, than that it ſhould be called thus of Daunus, the ſon of Danae by Pilumnus, once the King of this Country; it being reported in the Legends of thoſe elder times, that Danae being delivered of Perſeus whom ſhe had by Jupiter, was by her Father the King Acriſus, expoſed to the mercy of the Seas; by which ſhe was waſted with her young ſon to the coaſts of this Province, here taken up by a poor Fiſher, and by him carried to the Court, where the King became ſo enamoured on her, that he took her to Wife, and by her was Father to this Daunus. But Daunus had not long enjoyed it, on the death of his Father, when either by force or compoſition, he was fain to leave it to Diomedes King of Ætolia: who at the end of the Trojan War, wherein he was principal Actor, hearing of the libidinous courſes of his Wife Ægiale, abhorred the thought of living with her; and ſo came with his people to this Country; where he fixt his dwelling, and built the City of Argirypa, whereof more anon. But as for Daunus, though he was not able to keep the poſſeſſion of this Country, yet he bequeathed his name unto it; and afterwards withdrawing into Latium with ſuch of his ſubjects as were willing to follow his Adventures, he became there the chief head of the Rutuli, and built among them the Town of Ardea, his chief ſeat at the coming of Æneas into Italy; betwixt whom and Turnus the ſon of this Daunus, grew that deadly feud, ſo celebrated in the Works of Virgil.

In this part hereof is the Lake of Leſina, ſo called from a City of that name adjoyning to it, made of the waters of Phiternus, and ſome other Rivers, which there loſe themſelves; in compaſs 40 miles, and well ſtored with Fiſh: the Eeles hereof the largeſt that have been ſeen. Another Lake called Arduarius, more memorable though not ſo great, it being ſaid hereof by Pliny, that the waters of it are neither diminiſhed by draining, nor increaſed by Land-floods. Here is alſo the Mount Garganus, known by that name in Virgil, but now called St. Angelo, high, ſteep, and full of cragged Rocks: 20 miles in compaſs, but that extent diverſified into hills and moſt pleaſant vallies; well wooded, and well ſtored with waters: here being one Lake (beſides many others) called Lacus Varanus, ſaid to be 30 miles in circuit. A place defenſible by nature, and ſo ſtrong by art, that it is commonly the laſt piece in the Realm of Naples, which is given up to the Invader: as appears plainly by the keeping of it by the Greeks and Sarazens for many years, after the Normans had poſſeſſed themſelves of the reſt of the Kingdom.

The whole devided by Alfonſo (in his new modelling of this Kingdom) into two parts, the greateſt and moſt flouriſhing called Pouille the Plain, from the condition of the ſoil which is plain and level, not ſo much ſwelled with Hills as the reſt of Apulia: for which cauſe called Puglia Piana by the modern Italian. Interjected betwixt which and Abruzzo, lieth a ſmall Teritory, by the ſaid King Alfonſo called the CAPITANATE, deſtitute both of Woods and Rivers, and conſequently not ſo populous as the reſt of this Province: well furniſhed notwithſtanding with all ſorts of grain, and ſtored with large and ſpatious paſtures, which breed ſuch infinite herds of Cattel, that the Tribute thence ariſing was valued at 80000 Crowns per annum in the time of Guicciardine, and by him reckoned one of the beſt Revenues of the Realm of Naples. Of which Tribute when the French could receive no part, by reaſon that on the diviſion which they made with Ferdinand the Catholick (ſpoken of before) this Territory as a part of Apulia, did belong to the Spaniards, they brake out into open War, pretending that the Country appertained to them, (as indeed it lay very near their part) and thereby gave a juſt occaſion to the Spaniards, a more diligent nation, and more intent upon their work, to worm them by degrees out of all the kingdom.

Chief places of the whole Daunia, 1. Luceria, the Nuceria of Ptolemy, and the Rudra of Suetonius; as rich as it is ancient, and honoured with an Epiſcopal See. 2. Aſcoli, of old called Aſculus, and ſometimes Aſculum Satrianum, to difference it from another of that name in Ancontiana; the ſtile and honour of a Duke. 3. Troia, a Duke's title alſo, built by the Eaſtern Emperors in a place of ſtrength and great advantage to reſtrain the inſolencies of the Sarazens, then infeſting this Country. Theſe three in that part of it which is called the Capitanate. Then in the other part called Poville the Plain. 4. Sipontum once a Roman Colony and an Archbiſhops See, which honour it enjoyed till deſtroyed by the Sazarens. 5. Maufredonia, founded near the place of the former, by Maufred the Baſtard, King of Naples, the better to aſſure theſe parts of his Kingdom. A ſtately and magnificent City, the Seat of the Archbiſhop of Siponto; beautified with a capacious Harbour for receipt of Ships, and an impregnable Caſtle for defence thereof. 6. Salpe of great antiquity, but not elſe obſervabe. 7. Severine of a newer date, but more rich and populous. 8. As ancient and as famous as the beſt amongſt them, the poor Village of Cannæ, ſituate near the mouth or influx of the River Aufidus; ignobilis Apuliæ vicus, as it is in Florus, but ſuch as afterwards grew more notable for the great defeat which Annibal there gave to Paulus Æmilius and Tarentinus Varro the Roman Conſuls, of whoſe Army he ſlew 42700 on the very place. Which victory had he husbanded as he might have done, he had utterly ſubverted the State of Rome: ſo that it was moſt tartly (as moſt truly) ſaid by Mabarbel General of his Horſe, Vincere ſcis Annibal, victoria uti neſcis; that he knew better how to get, then to uſe his victory. 9. But of moſt note in this part of Apulia was the Town Argypia or Argyrippa as ſome call it, founded by Diomedes in the skirts of Mount S. Angelo towards the Sea, and in that part of this Country, which then (or afterwards) was held by the Iapyges. Of which thus Virgil in the 11. of the Æneids.

> Victor Gargani condebat Iapygis arvis,
> And being Victor he a City builds
> Near Garganus in the Iapygian fields,
> And called it Argyrippa, by the name
> Of ſome known place i'th Land from which he came.

By which we alſo may conclude, that it took this name with reference to ſome Town of Etolia, which was the native Country of Diomedes. For although I know that many of the ancient Writers ſuppoſe it to have been firſt called Argos Hippium, with relation to a famous City of that name in Peloponneſus, and after by contraction or corruption to be named Argyrippam; yet thoſe words of Patriæ de nomine gentis, do perſwade me otherwiſe; Diomedes having nothing to do in the Country of Argolis, where that City ſtood; nor in the whole Demy-Iſland of Peloponneſus, whereof Argolis was a part or Province. It was called alſo Diomedia, and urbs Diomedis, becauſe of this foundation, and his Royal Seat, after his fixing in his Country; but at the laſt it came to be called Aryp, and by that name was known in the time of the Roman greatneſs; Now no where to be found but in the ruines of time, and the Records of Antiquity, unleſs it be in a poor Village called Sarpy where Nigar findeth it.

APULIA PEUCETIA, extendeth from the Banks of the River Aufidus on the Weſt, to the land of Otranto on the Eaſt. So called as ſome conceive from Peucetius; the Brother of Oenotrus; which may be probable enough, this being the firſt Country at which Oenotrus touched, when he came unto Italy with his people. Bochartus a great Enemy of all Traditions, will have it called Peucetia, ἀπὸ τῆς πευκῶν, for that great quantity of Pitch which theſe Countries yield, as the word ſignifieth in the Greek. But whatſoever was the reaſon of the ancient name, that of the preſent is well known and agreed upon from Bari the chief City hereof, being now called Barry.

Places, of moſt importance in it: 1. Barri, ſeated near the Sea, but without a Haven, yet ſeated in ſo rich a ſoyl, and ſo well inhabited, that it is a fair and wealthy City, and the chief of this part of Apulia, taking name from hence. 2. Barlette, by the modern Latiniſts calleth Barulum, ſituate in or near the place of the old Canuſium; an Haven Town, and of ſo great importance, reckoned for one of the four ſtrong holds of Italy, in theſe middle Ages; the other three being Crema in Lombardie, Prato in Tuſcani, and Fabrianum now called Fabiano in Anconitana. 3. Monopolis, a Port-town alſo not very large, but of a neat elegant building, new built, and the title of a Marqueſs. 4. Tranum, an ancient City, and an Archbiſhops See, but at this time better built than peopled by reaſon of ſome defects in the Harbour upon which it ſtandeth. Theſe three laſt together with Maufredonia in the other Apulia, pawned by the Kings of Naples (when firſt invaded by the French) to the ſtate of Vencie: but recovered from them not long after by Ferdinand the Catholick, when poſſeſſed of that Kingdom. 5. Bitonto, an Archbiſhops See alſo, one of which was a notable ſtickler in the Council of Trent. 6. Polignano, on a rocky hill, the Honourary title of a Marqueſs, and a See Epiſcopal. 7. Molfette, which gives title to a Prince, but not elſe conſiderable. 8. Vigilia, now called Biſigli a Biſhops See, ſituate near the Adriatick amongſt craggy Rocks. 9. Venoſa, a ſtrong piece and of great importance; one of the laſt Towns which held good for the French, in the recovery of this Kingdom from Charles, the 8. The Venuſium of the ancient Romans, and the Birth-place of Horace, hence called Venuſinus. Nothing conſiderable of theſe people in point of ſtory, but that confederating with Tarentum againſt the Romans, as the Calabrians, Brutii, and Lucani did; they were all forced to ſubmit to the power of Rome at the end of the War, A. V. C. 481. Papyris Curſor and Sp. Carvilius being the ſecond time Conſuls.

IV. TERRA di OTRANTO, as it is now called, was once the Eaſtern part of Apulia Daunia, unto which it ioyneth, from which parted only by a line drawn from Brunduſium to Tarentum, of which more anon. Thus called from Otranto the chief Town hereof, the ſeat and habitation in the elder times of the Salentini, the Iapyges, and the Meſapiani, and is accordingly intituled in ancient Authors by the ſeveral names of Iapygia, Meſapia, and Salentina. They were the laſt people of Italy which held out againſt Rome, and ſunk immediately after the Tarentini, upon whoſe Fate they did depend, An. V. C. 487. Junius Pera and Fabius Pictor, the two Conſuls then, triumphing for it. Of theſe three Nations the Iapyges were of greateſt Fame or of greateſt infamy. Cretans originally ſent in queſt of Glaucus the Son of Minos, whom when they could not finde, and durſt not return without him, they fixed here their dwelling; Iapyx the Son of Dedalus, being their Captain and conductor, and from him denominated.

Growing into eſtate and power, they became not only ſo luxurious in their courſe of life, and effeminate in their dreſs and habit, that they were a ſcorn and ſcandal to the neighbour Nations; but ſo regardleſs of their gods, that in the end they threw down all their Images, and deſtroyed their Temples: puniſhed at laſt for theſe high inſolences by balls of fire falling on them from the heavens, with which the whole ſtock of them were almoſt extirpated. The Promontory called Iapygium, being the extreme point of this Country towards Greece, now better known by the name of the Cape of St. Mary, did take name from this people; and from thence the North-weſt wind (or the Weſt-north-weſt) which the Latines generally call Caurus, frequently blowing from this coaſt, had the name of Iapyx, occurring by that name in the 8. of Æneids, and in Horace, *Carm.l.*1.Ode.4.

But to proceed: this Country is invironed on all parts, with the Adriatick and Ionian Seas, ſaving where it joyneth to Apulia by an Iſthmus of about 30 miles in bredth; reaching from Brunduſium in the Adriatick or upper Sea, to Tarentum on the Gulf or Bay thence named in the Ionian Sea. And is from land to land, as you go by water, about 200 miles in compaſs. The ſoyl hereof is very fruitful if well manured, abounding in Corn, Oyl Melons, Citrons, Saffron, and other commodities of good price; for which they never want the company of the Merchants of Genoa. They are many times much endangered by Graſhoppers, which commonly devour all whereſoever they come, and would in one night conſume whole fields of ſtanding corn, if divine Providence by ſending the Birds called Gaines amongſt them, did not provide a remedy for ſo great a miſchief. The greateſt defect hereof is the want of waters, and therefore probably enough may be the Siticuloſa Apulia; ſpoken of by Horace; which notwithſtanding, they have very rich paſtures. The people are conceived to be the ſimpleſt or moſt void of craft, of any in Italy; perhaps becauſe they have ſo little commerce with their own Countrymen, and ſo much with ſtrangers.

The chief Towns are, 1. Lecci, Aletium in Latine, a rich Town well built, and very well peopled. 2. Caſtro, a Sea Town, but not well fenced by Art or Nature, which hath made it very often a prey to the Turks. 3. Gallipolis, a Town built on ſo craggy a Rock, that it is conceived to be unconquerable. 4. Brunduſium, the head Town of the Saletini, once glorying in the moſt capacious Haven of all the world; from whence there was continual paſſage into Dalmatia, Epirus, Macedon, and the reſt of Greece. Here was it that Pompey took Ship to fly from Cæſar, and Cæſar took Shipping alſo to purſue after him: when to encourage the Pilot who was afraid of the ſtorm, he cryed out, Cæſarem vehis & fortunam ejus. It was firſt built by the Ætolians, under the conduct of one Diomedes, and called Brontiſion, which in the Meſſapian Tongue ſignifieth the horn or head of a Stag, which it much reſembleth: from whence the Latines give it the name of Brunduſium. At this day it is but a mean Town, the Haven of it being ſo choaked, that a Gally can very hardly enter. 5. Hydruntum, a very antient Town, and yet ſtill reaſonably well peopled, having a ſtrong Caſtle upon a Rock for its defence, and a capacious Port for Traffick; the principal at the preſent of all the Province, which is therefore called Terra Hydruntina, by our modern Latiniſts. It is now called Otranto, and is a place of ſuch importance, that the taking of it by Mahomet the Great, Anno 1481. put all Italy into ſuch a fear, that Rome was quite abandoned. Not well inhabited again, till the expulſion of the Turks in the year next following.

Paſs we on next to the two Calabriaes, ſo called from the Calabri an ancient people of this Tract, inhabiting that Part hereof which formerly had been called Magna Grecia, now Calabria ſuperior, with a part of the Country of the Salentini, lying on the Northern ſide of the Gulf of Tarento, now called by the name of Otranto. But the Greek Emperors being poſſeſſed of theſe parts of Italy, when the more Weſtern parts thereof were under the Goths and Lombards, extended the name of Calabria, as far as to the Strait of Meſſana, taking the Country of the Brutii, now Calabria inferior, into the accompt: and making but two Provinces of their whole Eſtate which was left in this Continent by the names of Apulia and Calabria: of which, Apulia conteined all the Country on the coaſt of the Adriatick, from Abruzzo to the extreme point or Promontory in the land of Otranto, called antiently Iapygium, now the cape of St. Mary; Calabria, all the reſt of theſe parts of Italy, which lye between the Tuſcan or Tyrrhenian Sea, and the Bay of Tarentum. So that the antient Calabria, was but part of this; and of that Ennius the old Poet was a Native, as is affirmed by Ovid in his 3 de Arte.

Ennius emeruit Calabris in montibus hortos.

Old Ennius his Garden tills
Among the ſteep Calabrian Hills.

Now called the Baſilicate, and reckoned as a member of the lower Calabria.

But leaving theſe matters of remote Antiquity, let us behold the Country as it ſtandeth at the preſent; divided of late times into Inferior and Superior, in which diſtinct capacities we ſhall look upon it. Premiſing only by the way, that this Country is the title of the eldeſt Son of the Kings of Naples; who were from hence called the Dukes of Calabria; and that, before it was ſubjected to theſe Kings, it had a King of its own; Holofernes, whoſe daughter Flora was marryed unto Godfrey of Bovillon, being King, hereof, An. 1098.

V. CALABRIA SVPERIOR, called formerly Magna Græcia, from many great and famous Cities founded there by the Grecians, hath on the Eaſt the Adriatick or Ionian Sea; on the Weſt Lucania, from which it is divided by the Apennine, and the River Crathis; on the North, Sinus Tarentinus, or the Gulf of Tarento; and on the South and South-Eaſt, Calabria inferior, and Golfo di Squillacy, of old called Sinus Scilleticus. The principal Cities at this time are, 1. Belcaſtro, eight miles from the Sea, where once ſtood Petilia. 2. Beſignan, the title of a Prince, fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle and endowed with the beſt Revenues of any principality or other Noble-man of Title in all the Kingdom. 3. Macera, an Archbiſhops See, a rich Town, and well peopled. 4. Roſanum, three miles from the Sea, a well fortified City, and ſituate in a very fruitful and pleaſant Soil. 5. Altavilla, which gives title alſo to a Prince. 6. Terra Nova, given with the Title of Duke to Gonſalvo Fernandes de Cordova, commonly called the great Captain, as a reward of his ſignal ſervice in the conqueſt of the Realm of Naples: and ſtill enjoyed (together with the title of Duke of Seſſa) by the houſe of Cordova.

As for the chief Cities of the Greeks in the former times, they were Locris founded by the Locrians, a people of Achaia. Here lived the Law-maker Saleucus, who ordering Adultery to be puniſhed with the loſs of both eyes, was compelled to execute the Law on his own Son, as the firſt offender. Therefore to ſhew the love of a Father, and the ſincerity of a judge, he put out one of his Sons eye, and one of his own. He alſo provided in his Laws that no Woman ſhould be attended in the ſtreet with more than one Maid, but when ſhe was drunk; that ſhe ſhould not go abroad at night, but when ſhe went to play the Harlot; that ſhe ſhould not wear Gold or Imbroidered apparel, but when ſhe mean to ſet her ſelf to open ſale; and that men ſhould not wear Rings and Tiſſues, but when they went about the proſtituting of ſome Woman; and many others of this mould. By means whereof both men and women were reſtrained from all extraodinary Trains of Attendants, and exceſs of Apparrel; the common conſequents of a long and proſperous tranquillity. It was alſo famous in old times for the victory which Eunomus an excellent Muſician obtained againſt Ariſtonus of Rhegium, another of the ſame profeſſion. For though Ariſtonus had made his prayers to Apollo the god of Muſick for his good ſucceſs; yet Eunomus plainly told him, that Nature was againſt them in this contention, which had made all the Graſhoppers mute on that ſide the water And ſo accordingly it happened. For when the day appointed came, Eunomus had the ill hap to break one of his Harpſtrings, even in the middle of his Muſick; when preſently a Graſhopper leaped upon his Harp, and ſupplied moſt melodiouſly the place of the broken ſtring; and by that means obtained the victory to Eunomus. An accident not unworthy of the Muſe of Strada, in his perſonating of the Poet Claudian. And though I bind not any man to believe this Tale (though of Strabo's telling) yet there are very good Authors for thus much thereof, that on the one ſide of the River Alax, which parteth Locris from Rhegium, the Graſhoppers do merrily ſing; but on the other ſide, which is that towards Rhegium, they are always ſilent. 2. Tarentum, a Town of no leſs note, ſituate on the Bay called Sinus Tarentinus; firſt built by the Spartans: the people whereof having a great command on the Country adjoyning, were one of the laſt Italian Nations taken in by the Romans. Nam quis poſt Tarentinos auderet: For who durſt ſtir when once the Tarentines were vanquiſhed? ſaith the Hiſtorian. For in the ruin of this Eſtate, the Apulians, Lucani, Brutii, and the neighbouring Calabrians being all confederate together in defence thereof, were brought under the command and power of Rome, A.V.C. 578. all which (from the beginning of the Tarentine war ſome nine years before) were either a free people, or in a kind of ſubjection to this mighty City; but never felt the force of the Roman puiſſance. So that the War began but A. V.C. 472. and ended in the total ſubjection of theſe ſeveral Nations; *An.*482. Papyrius Curſor, and Sp. Carvilius being then the ſecond time Conſuls, as before was ſaid. In the defence of this people did Pyrrhus War againſt the Romans; the hope of getting this place by Annibal, was the loſs of Capua: finally here lived Archytas ſo famous for his flying Dove. 3. Crotona, the Inhabitants whereof were once ſo active, that at one Olympick meeting the Victors were all of this one Town. Their glory much decayed in a Battel againſt the Locrians, in which one hundred and twenty thouſand of them and their Confederates, were vanquiſhed by fifteen thouſand of the enemy. 4. Amyclæ, a Town inhabited formerly by Pythagoras, who having been often terrified with a falſe report of the approach of their Enemies, publiſhed a Law prohibiting all ſuch reports. By which means, their Enemies coming unawars poſſeſſed themſelves of it. Hence grew the proverb Amyclas ſilentium perdidit; and hence that notable ſaying of Lucilius, who being commanded to be ſilent, returned this anſwer Mihi neceſſe eſt loqui, ſcio enim Amyclas ſilentio periiſſe: 5. Sybaris, a City built by the Græcians after the deſtruction of Troy; the people whereof were Lords of 25 good Towns, and could Arm 30000 men. A people ſo effeminate, that they permitted no Smith nor Brazier, no not ſo much as a Cock to live among them, becauſe they would not have their ſleeps diſturbed: but the Fidlers, and Muſitians were in high requeſt, which advantage the Crotonians taking, (with whom then in hoſtility) they entred the Town in the habit of Muſitians, and ſo maſtered it. Before which accident there had been a Propheſie, that the Town ſhould never be taken, till men were more eſteemed then the Gods themſelves. It hapened that a ſlave being grievouſly beaten by his Maſter, and obtaining no pardon for the Gods ſake, upon whom he called, fled to the monument of ſome of his Maſters Anceſtors, and was pardoned by him; which coming to the ears of Amyris the Philoſopher, he forſook the Town, moſt men holding him mad in a time of no danger to leave ſo delicate a ſeat: whence came the Proverb, Amyris inſanit, applyed to ſuch as under the pretence of madneſs or folly do provide for their ſafety.

VI. CALABRIA INFERIOR is bounded on the North with Calabria ſuperior, from which parted by the River Crathis, and a branch of the Apennine; on the South with the Tyrrhenian Sea, and the Strait of Meſſana; on the Weſt with that part of Campania which is called the Principate: and on the Eaſt with a part of the Adriatick or Ionian Sea. It was anciently the habitation of the Brutii, whom the Greek Writers generally call Bretti; and their Country Bretania; upon which ground, ſome of our modern Criticks (envying ſo great an honour to the Iſle of Great Britain) have transferred to this Province the birth of Conſtantine, the firſt Chriſtian Emperour. Theſe Brutii being firſt conquered by the Romans, with the reſt of Italy, after the defeat of Cannæ, took part with Carthage, and was for a long time the retreat of Annibal, whom the Romans had ſhut up in this corner. A Country not much ſhort in fruitfulneſs of the reſt of the Kingdom; and having the advantage of ſo much Sea, is the better ſituate for Traffick. At one extremity hereof, is the Promontory called by Ptolemy, Leuco Petra, now Labo di Spartimento; all along which, eſpecially in the month of May, are taken great ſtore of Tunnies (a Fiſh which much reſembleth mans fleſh) which being barrelled up are ſold to Mariners. Here are two Rivers alſo of a very ſtrange nature; of which the one called Crathis, makes a mans hair yellow, and dyeth Silk white; the other named Buſentus, cauſeth both hair and Silk to be black and ſwarthy.

The Principal Cities of it are, 1. Conſentia, an ancient Town, comprehending ſeven little Hills, and a Caſtle on the top of one of them, which commandeth both the Town and Country adjoyning. It is built betwixt the ſaid two Rivers, and is ſtill reaſonable rich though not ſo wealthy now as in former times. 2. Rhegium, or Rhezo, on the Sea ſhore, oppoſite to Meſſana in the Iſle of Sicily, which is ſuppoſed to have broken off from the reſt of Italy, and that this Town had the name of Rhegium from the Greek word ῥήγνυμι, which ſignifieth to break off, or to tear aſunder. A Town in former times very well Traded, but left deſolate in a manner ſince the year 1594. when it was fired by the Turks. 3. Caſtrovillare, ſeated upon the top of a very high Mountain, 4. Belmont, and 5. Altamont, two very fair Towns, whoſe names ſufficiently expreſs their pleaſant and lofty ſituations. 6. St. Euphemie, from whence the Bay which anciently was called Sinus Lametinus, or Lameticus, is now called Golfo de St. Euphemie. 7. Nicaſtro, three miles from the Sea, the ſame with Newcaſtle in Engliſh.

On the Weſt ſide of this Calabria, and properly a part thereof, but reaching to the North as far as Apulia, ſtandeth that mountainous Country, which in the ſubdiviſion of theſe Provinces by King Alfonſus, was called the BASILICATE; anciently the ſeat of the Lucani, and therefore called Lucania by the elder Latiniſts. Divided from the Principate, or Weſt parts of Campania, by the River Silarus. A Country heretofore very unſafe for Travellers, by reaſon of the difficult ways, and aſſured company of Thieves, but now reduced to better order. It containeth in it 93 walled places, and nine Towns or Cities, the chief whereof are, Poſſidonia, or Peſt, a City ſituate in ſo clement and benign a ſoil, that Roſes grow there thrice a year. 2. Polycaſtro, on the Sea-ſhore, as the former is, honoured with the title of a Dukedom. And Dian or Diamum, a more midland City, near which there is a Valley 20 miles in length, and four miles in breadth; which for all manner of delights, and fruitfulneſs, yields to none in Naples.

VII. The ISLES of NAPLES are either in the Adriatick, and Tuſcan Seas, or in the Bay of Puteoli. In the Adriatick Sea, are the Iſlands of Diomedes, right againſt Apulia, where it encountereth with Abruzzo: ſo called from Diomedes King of Ætolia, who after the end of the Trojan War, (in which he was ſo great a ſtickler) ſetled himſelf in ſome part of Apulia; the principal whereof are, St. Maries, St. Dominico, and Tremitana. 2. The Iſland of Acates, over againſt the Town of Gallipolis. 3. St. Andrews, in the Bay of Tarentum. 4. And finally, the two Iſlands of Dioſcoros and Calypſo, over againſt the Cape of Lacinia, now called Colonnes, in the upper Calabria. Of all which there is little famous. In the Tuſcan or Tyrrhenian Seas, are the Iſlands of Pontia and Panditaria (now called Palmarde) as little famous as the other; ſave that the laſt is memorable in the Roman Stories, for the confinement of Agrippina the wife of Germanicus, and mother of Caligula, by the appointment of the Emperor Tiberius Nero.

Thoſe in the Gulf or Bay of Puteoli are of better note. The principal whereof are 1. Iſchia, heretofore called Oenotris, from its plenty of Wine, wherewith it aboundeth to this day; as alſo with Allom, Sulphur and moſt excellent Fruits. It is in compaſs 18 miles, and ſo begirt with Rocks and dangerous Cliffs, that it is acceſſible at one entrance only, and that too fortified with a ſtrong and impregnable Citadel: and therefore choſen by King Ferdinand for his place of refuge, when he was outed of his kingdom by Charles the 8. Here is alſo good plenty of Hares and Conies. 2. Prochita, now called Procita, about ſix miles in circuit, wherein are very wholſom Baths, good ſtore of Conies Hares, and Pheaſants; the ſhore repleniſhed with Fiſh, and the land with Fountains. John de Prochitis who plotted the Sicilian Veſpers, was once Lord of this place; but afterwards for a reward of that ſervice, made Vice-Roy of Valentia, a Kingdom of Spain. 3. Capreæ, a ſmall rocky Iſland having no Haven, nor convenient ſtation for Ships, but of a mild and temperate Air; much beautified by Auguſtus Cæſar, in regard that an old ſapleſs Tree upon his caſual landing here, did bud forth afreſh. After that, it was much honoured by his retirement from affairs of State; and as much diſhonoured by Tiberius his next Succeſſor, who withdrawing hither many times from his Court at Rome, made it the Theater of his Cruelties, and moſt filthy Luſts. It hath a little City of the ſame name, having a fortreſs, and a Biſhops See; and another Town called Anacapræ, inhabited by Fiſhermen, and Ship-wrights belonging to the Navy of Naples. Into this Iſland they uſed to confine offenders in former times, and ſometimes alſo at this day. 4. Ænaria, a ſmall Iſland given by Auguſtus to the Neapolitans in exchange for Capreæ, whoſe before it was.

There are few Nations under the Sun, who have ſuffered under more changes and alterations of State, than the Inhabitants of this Kingdom. For being at the firſt a mixture of ſeveral Nations, ſome of them preyed upon the others, till they were all ſubdued (as hath been ſhewed before) by the power of Rome. In the declining of her fortunes, they followed for the moſt part the Carthaginians, and took part with Annibal; and he being called home, they returned again to their old obedience. When Italy was ſubdued by the Goths, it became ſubject to that people, as Sicil, and the reſt of thoſe Iſlands did; and when the Lombars Lorded it in the Roman Provinces, all Naples fell into their hands, except Apulia and Calabria; which the Greek Emperors having conquered from the Goths with the reſt of Italy, kept (but with much difficulty) to themſelves. In the diviſion of the Empire betwixt Carolus Magnus and Irene, theſe two laſt Provinces only were aſſigned to the Conſtantinopolitans; the reſt to Charles, and his Succeſſors: both outed of their ſeveral parts by the prevailing Sarazens, under the conduct of Sabba, and other ſucceſſive Generals. Theſe partly diſpoſſeſſed by the Emperor Otho the firſt, and his Almain forces; challenging a right herein, as King of Italy; that right confirmed and enlarged by the marriage of Otho the 2. with Theophania, Neece to Nicephorus Phocas the Eaſtern Emperor, who brought Apulia and Calabria for her Dower or Portion. But long the Germans had not held it, when they were again expelled by the Greeks and Sarazens, joyning together againſt them as a common Enemy; who afterwards held bitter wars againſt one another, for the ſole command. During theſe wars, it hapned that one Drangot a Gentleman of Normandy, having in the preſence of Duke Robert (the Father of William the Conqueror) ſlain one Repoſtel, a Gentleman of like quality; to avoid the juſtice of the Prince, and the practices of Repoſtels kindred, fled into this Country, attended by ſuch of his followers, as either did depend upon his fortunes, or had been medlers in the Fray. Where being come, the Duke Benevent, Vicegerent to the Eaſtern Emperor, took them into pay. Their entertainment being bruited in Normandy, and a report raiſed withal, That the Greeks hearkned after men of valour and action; cauſed many private Gentlemen to paſs over the Alpes, and there to hew themſelves out a more proſperous fortune, than formerly they had enjoyed. The fortunate ſucceſs of which laſt Adventurers, drew thither alſo Tancred, the Lord of Hanteville; who with his twelve ſons came into Apulia, An. 1008. and in ſhort time not only drave the Sarazens thence, but the Grecians alſo, as men that had broke Covenant with them in the diviſion of the Booty. For William the ſon of Tancred, combining with Melorco, Governour of Apulia for the Greek Emperor, and with the Princes of Capua and Salern, men of power and honour, for the conqueſt of Sicil (which the Sarazens then wholly held) agreed amongſt themſelves to divide the places conquered by them into four equal parts; one, for each Adventurer. But when the Sarazens were driven out, Melorco having new ſupplies ſent him out of Greece, ſeized on the poſſeſſion of the whole Iſland in the Emperor's name. Which injury William commonly diſſembled, till Melorcos's Forces were diſperſed, and then he ſuddenly ſet upon him; firſt took the City of Melſi, and after by degrees, moſt of the other Towns and places which the Greeks held in Italy: of which both he and his Succeſſors kept poſſeſſion by the Title of Dukes of Calabria only. Of theſe (though all of eminent vertue) there were two beſides this William, of ſpecial ſame. 1. Robert Guiſcard, the third ſon of Tancred, the moſt valiant Captain of his time, and chief eſtabliſher of the Normans power in Italy, to which he added in concluſion the Iſle of Sicil, together with the City of Naples it ſelf, and all the Lands which lie betwixt it and Rome. 1. Bohemund the eldeſt ſon of this Robert, who going with Godfrey of Bovillon and others of the Weſtern Chriſtians to the Holy-Land, was for his ſignal merit inveſted with the Kingdom of Antioch; inherited by his Children after his deceaſe.

But to proceed: This Guiſcard at his death, (but not without ſome wrong to the Children of his Brother William, whom he had diſpoſſeſſed of all by the Pope's Authority) gave Sicil, with the Title of Earl, to his ſon Rogero; and his eſtates in Italy, to his other ſon William: who going to Conſtantinople to marry with the Emperor's daughter, was outed of his part by his brother Roger; made not long after, by the Pope the firſt King of this Family.

The Kings of Naples of the Norman Line.

1125 1 Roger, Earl of Sicil, created by Pope Anacletus, 2 King of both the Sicilies, at the town of Benevent; which City in requital of ſo great a favour, he reſtored again unto the Church, from which it had been taken (after the firſt Donation of it) by the German Emperors. 24.

1149 2 William, the ſon of Roger, who to aſſure himſelf of his Kingdoms, was content to take them as a gift from the hands of Pope Adrian the 4. to be holden for ever in Fee of the Church of Rome. 21.

1170 3 William, II. ſon of the former William, who left a daughter called Conſtance, who became a Nun. 26.

1196 4 Tancred, the baſe ſon of William the 2. excluded his Siſter from the Crown, but was ſententially depoſed by Pope Celleſtine the 3. who had an aim to get the Kingdom for himſelf. But when he ſaw that Tancred was too ſtrong for him, out of meer ſpight to be defeated of his purpoſe, he called in the Germans, the ancient enemies of his See; and gave the Lady Conſtance, then almoſt fifty years of age, in marriage unto Henry the 6. 2.

The German Line.

1198 5 Henry, the ſixth of that name, Emperor, and Duke of Schwaben, ſucceeded on his marriage with the Lady Conſtance. 4.

1202 6 Frederick, ſon of the Emperor Henry and Queen Conſtance, crowned at the age of three years, afterwards Emperor by the name of Frederick the 2. He had to wife the daughter of John di Bren, the titular King of Hieruſalem, of which the Kings of Naples have ever ſince had the Title of Kings; and in the rights of this Kingdom, the Kings of Spain.

1250 7 Conrade, the ſon of Frederick, King of Naples and Sicil, as alſo Emperor and Duke of Suevia, or Schwaben; poyſoned (as it was conceived) by his baſe brother Manfred. 4.

1254 8 Manfroy of Manfred, baſe ſon of Frederick, and Duke of Benevent, firſt governed the Kingdom as Protector unto Conradine, the ſon of Conrade; but after took it to himſelf againſt the will of Pope Urban the 4. who being weary of the Germans, called in Charles Duke of Anjou, and the Earl of Provence, brother to Lewis the 10 of France: It being uſual with the Popes (as Machiavel very well obſerveth) to call new men into Italy, and ſtir up new Wars for their own ambition; not ſuffering any to poſſeſs that long which themſelves (through their weakneſs) could not hold; and practiſing the overthrow of thoſe very men, whom themſelves had raiſed to power and greatneſs.

The French Line.

1261 9 Charles, Earl of Anjou and Provence, overcame King Manfred, and was after Crowned by Pope Urbane the 4. who conditioned with him, that neither he nor his Succeſſors ſhould aſſume the Empire; and that they ſhould pay fifty thouſand Crowns per annum as a Rent to the Church. This Charles did alſo vanquiſh Conradine the ſon of Conrade, the laſt of the Royal houſe of Suevia, whom he cauſed to beheaded at Naples. After which bloody Act, neither he nor any of his poſterity, did either quietly or long enjoy theſe Kingdoms. For in his own time Peter King of Aragon, claimed the Kingdom of Naples, in right of Conſtance his wife, the daughter of Manfred: betwixt whom and Charles, a ſingle combat was appointed to be fought in Bourdeaux, before King Edward the firſt of England, to decide the Controverſie. But whilſt Charles there expected him, he ſeized on Sicil Anno 1281. This Charles reigned three and twenty years.

1284 10 Charles II. ſon of Charles the firſt, formerly priſoner in Sicil to Peter of Aragon, was ranſomed by the procurement of King Edward above named for 30000 Marks. By Mary, daughter of Stephen, King of Hungary, he had fourteen Children: the moſt pertinent of which (to our purpoſe) were Charles ſurnamed Martel, King of Hungary in right of his Mother; Robert King of Naples; John of Durazzo; and a daughter (whoſe name I find not) married to Charles, Earl of Valois, who in her right obtained the Earldom of Anjou. 26.

1310 11 Robert, the ſecond ſon of Charles the 2. 32.

The Hungarian Line.

1371 13 Charles III. ſon to Lewis, and nephew of Prince John of Durazzo before mentioned, by the power of Lewis, King of Hungary, and the favour of Pope Urban the fifth, was made King of Naples. He overthrew and killed in Battel Duke Lewis of Anjou, his competitor, and after the death of King Lewis of Hungary, ſucceeded in that Kingdom alſo; but long he had not reigned therein, when poyſoned (as it was ſuppoſed) by the old Queen Mother, to advance her daughter to that Throne. 15.

1386 14 Ladiſlaus, ſon of Charles the 3. having a quarrel with the Pope, made a voyage Royal unto Rome, where he forced his entry, and was there triumphantly received: on which diſpleaſure the Pope called in Lewis the 2. Duke of Anjou, who gave Ladiſlaus a great overthrow. Inſomuch, as Ladiſlus uſed to ſay, that if Lewis had followed his Victory the firſt day, he had been maſter of his Kingdom and Perſon too; if the ſecond, of his Kingdom, but not of his Perſon: but not perſuing it till the third day, he failed of both. So in the end he was compelled to fly to Rome, and give over the enterpriſe. 29.

1415 15 Joane II. Siſter of Ladiſlaus, of as much levity, but not altogether of ſo ill a fame as the former Joane: obſerving the unproſperous ſucceſſes of the houſe of Anjou ſhe adopted for her heir, Alphonſo the fifth of Aragon; who had ſome claim unto the Kingdom as the direct heir of Pedro, or Peter the 3. and Conſtance the daughter of King Manford, ſpoken of before. But finding him to ſtand too much on his own right, and to be too forwards in taking a poſſeſſion of it, before her death; ſhe revoked that Adoption, and made a new grant of that Eſtate to Lewis the fourth, Duke of Anjou, and after his deceaſe to his brother Rene, or Renatus: both vanquiſhed by the Aragonians.

The Aragonian Line.

1434 16 Alfonſo King of Aragon, partly by Conqueſt, and partly by Adoption, having got the Kingdom; left it well ſettled unto Ferdinand, his natural ſon. 24.

1458 17 Ferdinand, the baſe ſon of Alfonſo (the lawful ſons inheriting the Realm of Aragon, Sicil, &c.) ſucceeded in the Realm of Naples. 36.

1494 18 Alfonſo II Son of Ferdinand, in whoſe time the French began to aim at the Realm of Naples. This King and his two Predeceſſors were of the Order of the Garter.

1494 19 Ferdinand II. Son of Alfonſo the ſecond, outed of his Eſtate and Kingdom by Charles the eighth, ſon of King Lewis the eleventh of France, whom Rene the laſt Duke of Anjou had made the ſole Heir of all his Titles and Poſſeſſions. And though Charles upon his Conqueſt was ſolemnly Crowned, yet poſting back again into France before he had ſetled his affairs in this Kingdom, and having much diſcontented the chief men of Anjonvin Faction; he loſt it ſuddainly to the ſame Ferdinand from whom he had ſo ſuddainly won it.

1497 20 Frederick II. Brother of Alfonſo the ſecond, and Uncle of this laſt Ferdinand, ſucceeded him in his Eſtate; and was the ſixth King that had reigned in Naples within the compaſs of three years: that is to ſay, Ferdinand the firſt, Alfonſo the ſecond, Ferdinand the ſecond, Charles of France, the ſecond Ferdinand again, and then this Frederick. Finding himſelf betrayed by the Spaniards, he ſubmitted himſelf to Lewis the XII. King of France, and yielded up his Kingdom to him. And indeed what elſe could that poor Prince do, when he ſaw his own blood, and ſuch as had taken his Realm into their protection, conſpiring againſt him?

For when Charles made his paſſage towards Naples, Ferdinand the Catholick, ſent Gonſalvo, (who was afterward for his valour ſurnamed the Great Captain) with ſome Forces to reſiſt the French Invaders. But when the French were expelled, Gonſolvo would not leave the Country, becauſe his Maſter had not as yet ſent for him. In the mean time it was agreed betwen Lewis of France, and this Ferdinand, that they ſhould jointly ſet upon the Kingdom of Naples: That having won it, the French ſhould poſſeſs Abruzzo, and Lavoro; the Spainards, Puglia, and both Calabrias: That the firſt ſhould be entituled King of Naples; the other, Duke of Apulia. This Confederacy was kept ſecret till the French Forces were come to Rome; and Gonſolvo poſſeſſed (under pretence of defending it) of all Calabria. So that it was no marvel that they made themſelves Maſters of the Country. An action in which the French dealt very unadviſedly, in bringing into Italy where he was before the ſole Moderator, another King as great as himſelf; to whom as to his Rival, his enemies might have recourſe on all occaſions; and the Spaniard as unnaturally, in betraying for the moity of a Kingdom, a Prince of his own blood, under pretence and promiſe of ſuccours. But the two Kings did not continue long in good terms of Partnerſhip. For the Spaniards being more intent upon their advantages, ſoon picked a quarrel with the French, within two or three years drave them out of all, and to this day keep it; though both this Lewis, and his Succeſſors Francis the firſt, and Henry the ſecond, have divers times, and with great effuſion of blood, attempted the recovery of it.

The Spaniſh, or Caſtilian Line.

1503 21 Ferdinand III. ſurnamed the Catholick, King of Caſtile, Aragon, &c. and Naples. 13.

1516 22 Charles V. Emperor, King of Spain, and the IV. of that name in Naples. 43.

1558 23 Philip the 2. of Spain, and the firſt of Naples. 40.

1598 24 Philip II. of Naples, 3. of Spain. 22.

1621 25 Philip III. of Naples, 4. of Spain.

The Arms of this Kingdom are Azure, Seme of Flower de Lyces, Or, a File of three Labels, Gules.

The Revenues of it are two Millions and a half of Crowns; whereof 20000 are due to the Pope for Chief-Rent; and the reſt ſo exhauſted in maintaining Garriſons upon the Natives, and a ſtrong Navy againſt the Turks, that the King of Spain receiveth not a fourth part de claro.

Here are in this Kingdom

The Kingdom of SICILIA.

BEfore we can come into the Iſle of Sicily, we muſt firſt croſs that branch of the MEDITERRANEAN Sea, which is called the Fare, or Strait of Meſſana; where the paſſage is ſo ſtrait and narrow, that it exceedeth not in breadth a mile and a half. In other parts, as the Sea grows wider, it is diſtant from the main land of Italy near 300 miles; that is to ſay, from the Town of Drepanum in Sicily, to the City of Naples. As for the Mediterranean Sea, it is ſo called becauſe it interlaceth the midſt of the earth; extending from the Straights of Gibralter on the Weſt, to the Coaſt of Paleſtine on the Eaſt; and ſo dividing Africk both from Europe, and Aſia Minor. In the Scriptures, Joſh. 1. 4. it is called by the name of Mare magnum, or the great Sea: great in compariſon of the dead Sea, and the Sea of Galilee, lying on the other ſide of the land of Paleſtine; but ſmall enough if compared to the Ocean, with which in probability the Writer of that Book might have no acquaintance. Beſides which general name of the Mediterranean, it hath alſo many particular names, as the Adriatick, Ægean, Ionian, and Carpathian Sea, where it bordereth upon Greece, and Anatolia; Mare Lybicum, where it runneth by the ſhores of Africk: with reference to Italy called in ſome parts Mare Tyrrhenum, in others Mare Liguſticum; in ſome parts Mare Siculum, and in others Mare Sardoum, &c. And as the Cameleon is ſaid to apply it ſelf to the colour of the neareſt adjacent body; ſo this Sea taketh its particular denominations from the neareſt ſhores. Theſe Seas are alſo called by ſome modern Writers, in imitation of the French, by the name of the Levant, or the Seas of the Levant: becauſe in reſpect of France, Spain, Britain, Germany, &c. they lie towards the Eaſt; the word Levant ſignifying in the French, a riſing up, and more eſpecially the Sun-riſing. The principal Iſlands of this Sea which relate to Italy (for of others we ſhall ſpeak in their proper places) are thoſe of Sicil, Sardinia, Corſica and ſome Iſles adjoyning unto theſe.

SICILY, environed round with the lower or Tyrrhenian Sea, contains ſeven hundred miles in compaſs; and is ſuppoſed to have been joyned to Italy in former times, being then a Peninſula, or Demy-Iſland, ſuch as Peloponneſus; and joyned to the Continent by as narrow an Iſthmus. The reaſon of that name we ſhall ſee anon.

The ſeperating of it from the main Land of Italy, is by the Poets aſcribed to Neptune, who with his three-forked Mace, or Trident, broke it off from the land, in favour of Jocaſtus the ſon of Æolus; that ſo he might inhabit there with the greater ſafety, being invironed round with waters. Which though it be a Fable or Poetical fiction, yet with ſome help from the Mythologiſts, may be made a ſtory. For if by Æolus, and Neptune, we underſtand the Winds and Seas, it intimates that it was divided from the reſt of Italy, either by the fury of the Waves, or by the violence of ſome Earthquakes, to which this Iſland is ſtill ſubject, which might in time conſume and wear away the Earth. Nor wants there very good reaſon for this ſuppoſition; as, 1. The narrowneſs of the Strait, exceeding not a mile and a half; inſomuch as at the taking of Meſſana by the Carthaginians many of the people ſaved themſelves by ſwimming over this Strait, into the oppoſite parts of Italy. 2. The ſhallowneſs of it, being found upon adiligent ſounding, not to be above eight fadom deep. Then 'tis obſerved, that the land on both ſides is very brittle, full of Caves and chinks made in it by the working of the Sea, on this ſeperation; and that on the Italian coaſt where the Strait is narroweſt, there ſtands a City of old called Rhegium, which ſignifieth a breach or cutting off, from the Greek word Ῥήγνυμι, which ſignifies to break off, or violently to pull aſunder; and is ſuppoſed to be ſo called upon this occaſion. And indeed the violence of the Sea is ſo great and dangerous in this narrow Chanel, ſo ſubject unto bluſtering winds iſſuing out of the hollow caverns of the earth; that the breaking off of this Iſland from the reſt of Italy, is a thing moſt credible. Which dangerous nature of the paſſage, being alſo full of Rocks, and unſafe by reaſon of the Whirl-pools occaſioned it to be called by Florus the Hiſtorian, Fabuloſis infame monſtris fretum; chiefly ſo called with reference to Scylla and Charybdis, of which may fabulous things are reported by the ancient Poets. Of theſe, Charybdis is a Gulf or Whirl-pool on Sicily ſide, which violently attracting all Veſſels that come too nigh it, devoureth them, and caſteth up their wracks at the ſhore of Tauromenium, not far from Catana. Oppoſite to this in Italy, ſtandeth the dangerous Rock Scylla, at the foot of which many little Rocks ſhoot out; on which the water ſtrongly beating, making that noiſe, which the Poets feign to be the barking of Dogs. The paſſage between theſe two being, to unskilful Mariners exceeding perilous, gave beginning to the Proverb;

Incidit in Scyllam cupiens vitare Charybdim.

Who ſeeks Charybdis for to ſhun,
Doth oftentimes on Scylla run.

But there are other things which made Sicily famous in old times, beſides theſe two, as viz. the puniſhment of the Giant Enceladus, for his attempt againſt the gods: the frequent burning of Ætna (under which he is fabled to be ſhut up) being ſuppoſed to proceed from his ſulphurous breath. Secondly, the birth of Ceres in this Iſle; and thirdly, the Rape of Proſerpine. To theſe two laſt the Iſle was conſecrated in thoſe days; to Ceres, in regard ſhe firſt taught the people to ſow Corn, whence the word Ceres is often uſed in the Poets to ſignify Bread, and other neceſſary proviſions for life, as Sine Cerere & Baccho friget Venus: To Proſerpine, becauſe beſtowed upon her by Pluto, to pleaſe her after the Raviſhment committed on her.

It is ſituate under the fourth Climate, the longeſt day being 13 hours and an half. And was once called Trinacria, becauſe it ſhoots forth into the Sea with three Capes or Promontories: viz. 1. Pelorus, now Capo de Foro, to the North; 2. Pachinus, now Capo Paſſaro, to the Weſt; and 3. Lilybæum, now Capo Boii, or Capo Caro, to the South. This laſt looketh towards Carthage, and the ſhores of Africk, from which diſtant 180 miles. And of this Strabo doth affirm, that a man of quick and ſtrong ſight getting up into a Watch-tower that ſtood in this Cape, deſcryed a Fleet ſetting ſail out of the Haven of Carthage; and told the Lilybitanians their bigneſs and number. That this is true, I dare not ſay: for beſides the unlikelihood of kenning at ſo great a diſtance; we are taught by Philoſophy, that the Sea being of an orbicular form, ſwelleth it ſelf into the faſhion of a round Turret or Hill, till it put bound to the eye-ſight. From theſe three corners, this Country was (as we have ſaid) called Trinacris, or Trinacria, according to that of Ovid.

Terra tribus ſcopulis vaſtum procurrit in æquor;
Trinacris à poſitu, nomen adepta, loci.

An Iſland with three corners braves the Main,
And thence the name of Trinacris doth gain.

The firſt Inhabitants that we find to have dwelt in this Country, are the huge Giants ſo often mentioned in the Odyſſes of the divine Poet Homer, called Læſtrigones and Cyclopes; of which laſt rank was the ſo much famouſed Polyphemus, who with ſo much humanity entertained Ulyſſes, and his companions. Theſe were afterward rooted out by the Sicani, a people of Spain, who called it Sicania. As for the name of Sicilia, ſome derives it from Siculus, a ſuppoſed King of Spain, who is fabled to have conquered this Country. But the truth is, it came from the Siculi, who being by Evander and his Arcadians driven out of Latium, came into this Iſland: to which having maſtered the Sicani, and driven them from the Weſt and the Northern part, to the Eaſt and South they left their name. At their firſt landing they built the City of Zancle, called afterwards Meſſana, together with Neæ, Hybla, Catana, and Leontium. After them came another Italian people named the Morgetes, being driven thence by the Oenotrians; and ſate down in that part of the Iſland where ſtood the City of Morgentum, built by them at their firſt arrival. The firſt of all the Greeks who ſet footing in it (not to ſay any thing of the coming of Minos hither in the purſuit of Dædalus, having more in it of the Fiction than Hiſtorical truth) where the Chalcidians, a people of the Iſle Eubœa, now called Negropont; who built the City of Naxos; and after them Architas of Corinth, with his fellow adventurers, by whom Syracuſe was either firſt built, or very much beautified and repaired. Next them the Rhodians and Cretans ſent ſome Collonies hither, the firſt Founders of Gela; and after of the renowned City of Agrigentum: And not long after a new Plantation ſent from Sparta built Heraclea. The Citizens of Megarus, another ſtate of Greece, ſent a Colony alſo, who built Selinus. And did thoſe of Meſſene alſo, who taking the Town of Zancle from the Siculi, new built or beautified it, and gave unto it ſo repaired the name of Meſſana. Nor is it to be thought, that the Tyrians and Phœnicians, being ſo great undertakers of publick buſineſs, and very powerful in ſhipping, would ſit ſtill, when ſo fair a booty did invite their induſtry: who ſeiſing on the Promontories of Pachinus and Lilybæum, and ſome of the adjoyning Iſlands; did fortifie them for the better ſecuring of the Trade which they had in Sicily. But all theſe ſeveral Adventurers having ſeveral intereſſes, joyned not together in the work of an abſolute Conqueſt; but planting themſelves only on the Sea-ſhores, altered not the name by which they found it called at their coming thither.

The people are ingenuous, eloquent and pleaſant, but withal very unconſtant, and ſo full of talk, that from thence came the Proverb, Gerræ Siculæ. They are alſo ſaid to be of a very envious, ſuſpitious, and diſtruſtful nature, uncapable of injuries, and vehement in purſuit of revenge, as appears by that great ſlaughter which they made of the French: yet withal courteous enough to ſtrangers, and Paraſitical enough to their ſuperiors. They have been famous heretofore for many notable inventions, Ariſtotle aſcribing to them the Art of Oratory, and firſt making of Paſtoral Eclogues, Pliny of Clocks (or rather of Hour-glaſſes; for Clocks were but a late invention, and that of the Flemmings) and Plutarch of Military Engines; which laſt were brought by Archimedes unto great perfection.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt preached here, by ſome of the Diſciples of St. Peter, whom he ſent hither at his firſt coming to Rome; of which Pancratius (whom we call commonly St. Pancrace) is ſaid to have been the firſt Biſhop of Tauramenium, and Marſianus of Syracuſe. They are now generally of the Religion authorized by the Popes of Rome; that of the Greek Church being rather connived at than allowed of; in the Communion whereof here are thought to be ten thouſand ſouls, but looked on by the reſt as ſchiſmatical people. For the moſt part they uſe the Italian Language, but very much altered, by the Greek, Arabian, Norman, French and Spaniſh tongues; to which Nations they have been ſeverally ſubject, ſince the time of the Romans. The total number of the people is thought to be about a Million and a half.

The ſoil is incredibly fruitful in Wine, Oyl, Honey, Minerals of Gold, Silver, and Allom, together with plenty of Salt and Sugar; which laſt commodity the Natives ſell in Canes unto the Venetians, and buy it again of them when it is refined; and thereby letting ſtrangers go away with the beſt part of their gains; as generally they do in all other Merchandize; which they permit to be exported, rather than put themſelves to the trouble of Trafficking abroad in Forain Nations. There are alſo Gems of Agates, and Emralds. It yieldeth alſo great ſtore of the richeſt Silks, which grow plentifully about Meſſana; variety of moſt excellent and delicious fruits, both for taſte and colour: with ſuch abundance of all ſorts of Grain, that it was called in old times Horreum Romani populi, or the Granary of the Roman Empire; and doth now furniſh ſome parts of Italy, Spain, and Barbary, beſides Maltha, and the adjacent Iſles, with that which ſhe can ſpare of her ſuperfluities. Nay, Tully doth not only call it the Granary and Store-houſe of the City of Rome, in regard of Corn, but adds that it was accounted for a well-furniſhed Treaſury; as being able of it ſelf without charge of the State, to cloath, maintain, and furniſh the greateſt Army, with Leather, Corn, and Apparel. And if Diodorus Siculus may be credited in it, he telleth us, that about Leontium and ſome other places, Wheat did grow of it ſelf, without any labour of the Husbandman. At this day in ſome parts of the Iſle, the ſoil is ſo exceeding fruitful, that it yields unto the Husbandman an hundred meaſures of Corn for one. And certainly the Corn of this Country muſt needs yield a wonderful increaſe, the King of Spain receiving an hundred thouſand Crowns yearly for the Cuſtom of Wheat. In this Country is the Hill Hybla, ſo famous for Bees and Honey; near which there was a City of the ſame name alſo, which afterwards was called Megara. And here is alſo the Hill Ætna, now called Montgibel, which continually ſendeth forth flames of Fire, to the aſtoniſhment of all beholders. The moſt famous Conflagrations in the former times were preſently before the breaking out of the War in Sicil, which the Roman Writers call Bellum ſervile, not pacified but by the ſlaughter of 70000 of the Slaves which had taken Arms againſt Rome; and ſhortly after the death of Julius Cæſar, portending thoſe proſcriptions and bloody Wars, which did after follow. And to this day ſuch extraordinary eruptions of it are accounted ominous. The Hill it ſelf is of that height, that it is ten miles from the top to the bottom, and may be eaſily diſcerned by Saillers at an hundred miles diſtance: the lower parts thereof being very fruitful, the middle ſhaded with Woods, and the top covered with Snow, a great part of the year, notwithſtanding the frequent vomiting of flames and cinders. But theſe eruptions of fire are not now ſo ordinary as they have been formerly; the matter which gave fuel to it being waſted by continual burnings: ſo that the flames which iſſue hence are hardly viſible but by night, though the ſmoak ſhew it ſelf the moſt part of the day. And when it doth break out, which is commonly once in three or four years; it falleth in great flakes on the Vales adjoyning; to the deſtruction of the Vintage, and great loſs of the Country. But that, they ſay, is recompenſed by the plenty of the following years; the aſhes thereof ſo batling and enriching the ſoyl, that both the Vines and Corn-fields are much bettered by it. And this report I am the apter to believe, in regard we find by late experience here amongſt our ſelves, that the Turf taken from the ground and burnt to aſhes, and ſo ſpread on land and ploughed into it, doth yield a very great improvement, even to barren ſoyls. Which kind of Huſbandry is called the Devonſhiring of land, becauſe there firſt uſed; but in Hampſhire it was called, as I remember (having been unfortunately too long a ſtranger there) by the name of burning and beaking. But to return again to Ætna, into this fiery Furnace the Philoſopher Empedocles caſt himſelf that he might be reputed a God.

———Deus immortalis haberi
Dum cupit Empedocles, ardentem fervidus Ætnam Inſiluit———
as Horace, in his Book de Arte Poetica.

Empedocles to be a God deſires,
And caſts himſelf into th' Ætnean fires.

The reaſon of theſe fires is the abundance of Sulphur and Brimſtone, contained in the boſom of the Hill; which is blown by the wind, driving in at the chaps of the Earth as by a pair of bellows. Through theſe chinks alſo there is continually more fuel added to the fire, the very water adding to the force of it: as we ſee that water caſt on coals in the Smiths-Forge, doth make them burn more ardently. The reaſon of this flame is thus ſet down by Ovid.

Iſta bitumineæ rapiunt incendia vires;
Lutoaq; exiguis ardeſcunt ſulphura flammis.
Atq; ubi terra cibos alimentaq; debita flammæ
Non dabit, abſumptis per longum viribus ævum,
Naturæq; ſuum nutrimen deerit edaci,
Non feret Ætna famem, deſertaq; deſeret ignes.

A rozen mould theſe fiery flames begin,
And clayie brimſtone aids that fire within:
Yet when the ſlimy ſoyl conſumed, ſhall
Yield no more food to feed the fire withal,
And Nature ſhall reſtrain her nouriſhment,
The flame ſhall ceaſe hating all famiſhment.

Under this Hill ſome Poets feign the Giant Enceladus to have been buryed, as before is ſaid, whoſe hot breath fired the Mountain lying on his face. Others ſuppoſe it to be the Shop of Vulcan, and the Cyclopes; and the groſs Papiſts take it for the place of Purgatory; all alike unfallible.

The principal Rivers hereof, 1. Taretta, anciently called Terius. 2. Himera, neighboured by Mount Hybla, much famed for Honey. 3. Iſaurus. 4. Hypſa. 5. Acaſus, of great note for its precious Stones. None of them much obſervable for length or breadth, but that defect ſupplyed by the commodiouſneſs of Bays and Creeks, which are very frequent in this Iſland, and by the benefit of Fountains and freſh-water Lakes. Moſt memorable amongſt theſe, 1 The Lake called Palicoro, (now Napthia,) which for three months doth caſt forth water very hot, but of very ill ſmell; of which there is mention made in Pliny, by the name of Ephintia. 2. A Fountain neer the foot of Ætna, the water whereof is ſharp like Vinegar, and ſometimes boyleth; into which a piece of cloth caſt, being before ſteeped in water mixed with Gall, becomes ſuddenly black. 3. Another Fountain near Drepanum, the water of which, as ſoon as drunk, provoketh looſneſs. All which effects proceed from that ſulphureous and bituminous matter, of which the whole Iſland is exceeding full. 4. Arethuſa, of greater fame among the Ancients, than all the reſt; eſpecially in that the River Alpheus (a River of Greece) having ſwallowed up one hundred and forty leſſer ſtreams, and loſing it ſelf under the ground; is thought to empty it ſelf into it. The thing affirmed by Seneca and Strabo both; and ſeems to be ſufficiently proved, by the ſeveral inſtances of a wooden diſh or cup loſt in the River Alpheus, and found riſing up in this River; and by the leaves of certain trees growing on the banks of that Greek-River, and ſwimming on this in great abundance; there being none of theſe trees in all Sicil. Dicitur Alpheus (ſaith Mela) ſe non conſociare pelago; ſed ſubter maria, terraſq; depreſſus, huc agere alveum, atq; hic ſe rurſus extollere.

This Iſland is famous for the worthy Scholars ſhe once produced, viz. Æſchylus, the firſt Tragedian of fame; who being bald through age, once walked in the fields, where by chance an Eagle taking his bald pate for a white Rock, let a ſhellfiſh fall on it, of that bigneſs that it beat out his Brains. 2. Diodorus Siculus, that famous Hiſtorian. 3. Empedocles the firſt inventer of Rhetorick; and his fellow Gorgias. 4. Euclide, the textuary Geometrician, who taught in Megaris. 5. Archimedes, a moſt worthy Mathematician, the firſt Author of the Sphere; of which inſtrument he made one of that art and bigneſs; that one ſtanding within, might eaſily perceive the ſeveral motions of every Celeſtial Orb. He made alſo divers military Engins, which in the ſiege of Syracuſæ ſorely vexed the Romans, and was at laſt ſlain in his ſtudy by a common Souldier in the ſack of the Town, to the great grief of the General Marcelus. 6. Epicharmus, the firſt inventer of Comedies; and 7. Theocritus, the firſt Author of Paſtoral Eclogues. In the latter times, Nicolas Abbot of Palermo, a learned Canoniſt, and Cardinal of the Church of Rome, commonly called Panormitanus, was of greateſt fame.

In Plinies time there were reckoned in this Iſland ſeventy two Cities, of which only twelve are now remaining. The whole divided at this time into three ſmall Provinces, that is to ſay, 1. Val de Noto, 2. Mazara, and 3. Mona; to which the Iſles adjoyning may add a fourth.

1. VALLIS de NOTO taketh up the Eaſtern parts of the Iſland. The chief Cities of which are 1. Syracuſa, once the Metropolis of the whole Iſland, and a moſt flouriſhing Common-wealth: it was (as Tully reports) the greateſt and goodlieſt City of all that were poſſeſs'd by the Greeks; for ſituation very ſtrong; and of an excellent proſpect, from every entrance both by Sea and Land. The Port thereof which had the Sea on both ſides of it, was for the moſt part environed with beautiful buildings; and that part of it which was without the City, was on both ſides banked up, and ſuſtained with very fair Walls of Marble. Nor was it only the goodlieſt City of the Greeks, as Tully tells us, but one of the greateſt alſo in the World, as is ſaid by Strabo; by whom it is affirmed, that without the outmoſt wall thereof, (for it was environed with three Walls) it contained one hundred and eighty Furlongs in compaſs, which of our meaſure cometh to eighteen miles. It was compounded of four Towns made up into one, that is to ſay, Inſula (or the Iſle) Acradine, Neapolis, and Tyche, beſides the Fort called Hexapla, which commanded the reſt; the greatneſs of all which, the ruines and foundations of it do ſtill demonſtrate. It ſtandeth North of the Promontory called Pachinus, and was built by Architas of Corinth about the time of Jotham King of Judah; who being for an unnatural Rape, committed on a young Gentleman, baniſhed his Country, together with his friend and companion Miſcellus; conſulted with the Oracle at Delphos, how and in what place they ſhould diſpoſe of themſelves. The Oracle demanding whether they moſt affected wealth, or health: Miſcellus anſwered health, and Architas wealth; and thereupon the former was directed to ſettle himſelf at Crotona in Italy, and the other here. Nor did the Oracle deceive him in his expectation; this Town by reaſon of its beautiful and commodious Port, proving of greateſt trade and wealth next to Carthage it ſelf, in thoſe times of the World. It was the cuſtom of this Town, when any of the Citizens grew too potent, to write his name in an Olive-leaf; which being put into his hand, did without more ado condemn him to baniſhment for five years, and was called Petaliſm, from the Greek word Πεταλον, ſignifing a Leaf. Yet could not this device ſo well ſecure them in the poſſeſſion of their ſo much deſired Freedom, but that this City fell oftner into the power of Tyrants, than any one City in the World. That which is now remaining of it is the work of Auguſtus, who after a ſecond deſtruction of it in the time of Pompey, ſent a Colony hither, and built upon the Iſle and the parts near unto it. But now the whole Iſle (Ortygia the Ancients called it) is taken up with a very ſtrong Caſtle; the whole City alſo being very well walled, and held by a Garriſon of Spaniards. 2. Noto, which gives name to this whole Diviſion. A City which heretofore contended with Syracuſe in point of Greatneſs: ſituate on a very high Rock, unacceſſible on all ſides but by one narrow paſſage; and having under the Cape of Paſſari a very fair and capacious Harbour, the Key of Sicil on that ſide. 3. Auguſta, ſituate on the ſhore alſo, and of ſo large a Haven that it could never be fortified. 4. Caſtro Giovanni, a Town of about four thouſand Families, ſituate in a wholſom air, and a fruitful ſoil, which they hold to be the very Navel and exact middle of the Iſland. It is alſo much prized for Mines of moſt excellent Salt. 5. Lentini, famous for its Lake, whoſe fiſhing is farmed for eighteen thouſand Crowns yearly: It was anciently called Leontium, and ſtood ſomewhat North of Syracuſa; with which continually in War, either to preſerve their own Liberties, or get the Soveraignty of the other. 6. Enna, a midland Town, whence Pluto is ſaid to have raviſhed Proſerpine: In after-times the dwelling of that Syrus Ennus, who ſtirred up the Roman ſlaves againſt their Lords; and having broke open the common Priſons, and received all ſuch as came unto him, patched up an Army of forty thouſand. This War the Roman Writers call Bellum Servile, ended at laſt but with no ſmall difficulty, by the valour and good fortune of P. Rupilius.

2. MAZARA containeth all the Weſt parts of the Iſland. The chief Cities thereof, 1. Agrigentum, now called Gergenti, famous for Phalaris the Tyrant, and his torturing Perillus in a Brazen Bull, which he had made for the deſtruction and torture of others. Of which aptly Ovid,

——Nec enim lex juſtior ulla eſt,
Quam necis Artifices arte perire ſua.

Moſt juſt it is, a man ſhould be tormented
With that, which firſt his cruel Wit invented.

It was ſaid anciently of the people of this City, that they built as if they ſhould never die, and ate as if they were ſure to live no longer. 2. Palermo, anciently called Panormus, and then a Colony of the Phœnicians; now the chief City of Sicil, and the Seat of the Spaniſh Vice-roy. Situate on the Weſt Cape of the Iſland looking towards Sardinia, beautified with large Streets, delicate buildings, ſtrong walls, and magnificent Temples. It hath no natural Port appertaining to it, (Drepanum ſerving anciently as the Port thereof) but of late there is an Haven forced out by a mighty Pierre; a work of vaſt expence, and worthy of the greatneſs of Rome, It is alſo an Archbiſhops See, and an Univerſity. 3. Monreal, commonly called Morreal, famous for the Church, the Archbiſhops See. It is called in Latine, Mons Regalis. 4. Drepanum, now called Trapani, ſituate on a Promontory thruſting into the Sea, not far from that of Lilybæum, a Town well fortified, in regard of the ill Neighbour-hood of the Moors, who do often pillage on theſe coaſts; and having the command of a very fair Port. The Inhabitants of this place are ſaid to be the beſt Seamen of Sicil. 5. Mazara, which gives name unto all this Vale, ſituate South of Lilybæum, and not far from Selinus. 6. Eryx, ſituate on a Mountain over-looking the Sea, ſaid by the Ancients to have took this name from Eryx the Son of Venus, ſlain here by Hercules: memorable in thoſe elder times for being the Seat of K. Aceſtes, who ſo kindly entertained Æneas, and his wandring Trojans; and a magnificent Temple, in which Venus was worſhipped, who from thence was called Erycina, as, Sive tu mavis Erycina ridens, in the Poet Horace. This was the laſt Town which the Carthaginians held in Sicil. On the ſurrendry whereof by Amilcar the Father of Annibal; at the end of the firſt Punick War, it was conditioned by the Romans, amongſt other things that the Carthaginians ſhould relinquiſh all the Claim or Title which they had to any part of this Iſland; which thereby fell unto the Romans (the State of Syracuſa excepted only.) Who, whatſoever colour they were pleaſed to put upon that action, were principally tempted to it by ambition and covetouſneſs. And therefore in my mind Florus ſtates it rightly, who ſaith, that it was undertaken ſpecie quidem juvandi Socios, re autem ſollicitante Præda; i.e. under pretence of aiding the Mamertines, who had put themſelves into their protection, but in plain terms to get poſſeſſion of the Iſland which lay fit for Italy. Now and long ſince a ruine only, the place on which it ſtood being called Mount St. Julian. 7. Segeſta, on the Sea-ſide, not far from Eryx, near unto which the Trojan Ladies weary of their many long and dangerous voyages, and fearing to go again to Sea, burnt the Fleet of Æneas; on which occaſion it was built. Peopled at firſt by ſuch of the more old and feeble Trojans, (Longævoſque ſenes, & feſſas æquore matres, as the Poet hath it) who choſe rather to fix their dwelling here, than to follow the fortunes of Æneas, in his queſt of Italy. Called then Aceſta, in honour of King Aceſtes ſpoken of before, part of whoſe Kingdom it was made; afterwards Egeſta from Ægeſtas one of Trojan race, born here, by whom it was repaired and beautified; and at laſt Segeſta.

3. MONA lieth on the North-Eaſt of the Iſland, oppoſite unto Vallis de Noto. The chief Towns of it, 1. Nicoſia, in the mid-land. 2. Milaſe, on the Northern Promontory. 3. Meſſana, a City of great ſtrength and beauty juſt oppoſite to Rhezo in Italy. It was the firſt Town which the Romans had in this Iſland, being put into their hands by the Mamertines, a Troop of Souldiers brought thither out of Campania for the defence of the City; who finding themſelves too ſtrong for the Citizens, made themſelves Maſters of the place; but being withal too weak to hold it, choſe rather to ſurrender it to the Romans, than to its true and proper Owners. Hence the beginning of the firſt War betwixt Rome and Carthage. A City it is at this time, of the moſt beautiful building of any in Sicil; and peopled by the wealthieſt ſort both of Merchants and Gentlemen, who live here in great pleaſure (if not voluptuouſneſs) as having plenty of all neceſſary proviſions, Fruits of all kinds, delicious Wines, and Snow to moderate and qualifie the heats thereof, at cheaper rates than any elſewhere in the Country. On the Weſt ſide there ſtands a ſtrong Citadel, highly mounted, and well Garriſoned, which commands the Town: and not far off a very high Lanthorn where lights are kept burning all night long, for the direction of ſuch Mariners, as are to paſs thoſe dangerous Straits; which from this Phare or Watch-Tower, is called commonly the Phare of Meſſana. The Haven of this Town is the faireſt of Sicil, whoſe entrances are ſo ſtrongly ſconced and bulwarked, that the people let their Gates (in deriſion of the Turks) ſtand always open. It is alſo an Archbiſhops See. 4. Catana, ſo often vexed by Dionyſius the Tyrant of Syracuſe; more ancient than beautiful: ſeated on the North ſide of a great (but hollow) Bay, not eaſily approached by Ships, and therefore neither held by any Garriſon, nor much traded by Merchants; the riches of the place conſiſting principally in the fruitfulneſs of the ſoil, the habitation of many of the Gentry, and by being a ſmall Univerſity. It was once a Colony of the Naxians. And ſo was alſo Tauromenium, the 5. Town of note in this part of the Iſland, called ſometimes from its Founders Naxos, but now Thermino; a ruine only of what was in the former days: a place by nature of great ſtrength, but over-topped by Syracuſa and Meſſana, betwixt which it ſtandeth. It was in this part of the Country that the Cyclopes dwelt, there being three litte Rocky Iſlands (now not inhabited) not far from this Town, which for a long time were called Cyclopum Scopuli.

4. On the Weſt part of Sicil lye the ÆOLIAN or Vulcanian Iſlands, heretofore only ſeven, and all almoſt of equal bigneſs; now eleven in number. The firſt name derived from Æolus, once Lord of them, who being well skilled in divining from what coaſts the Winds would blow, (which he conjectured by the ſmoak aſcending from them) occaſioned the Poets to make him the God of the Winds. The other is derived from Vulcan the God of fire; by reaſon of the continual flames of fire from thence evaporating in thoſe elder days. But now the matter of thoſe flames being waſted in long tract of time, there is only one of them which burneth, now called STOMBOLO; by ſome Writers Strongyle, from the roundneſs of it. An Iſland of about ten miles compaſs, but ſuch as ſeems to be no other than a large round Mountain. Out of the top whereof iſſueth continually a flame like a burning Beacon, eaſily diſcernable far off, but at nights eſpecially: a place ſo full of horrour to the neighbouring Iſlanders, that they and many others of the Romiſh Catholicks conceive it to be Hell it ſelf. And yet in thoſe parts where the rage of the fire offendeth not, it is of a very fruitful ſoil, and apt for tillage.

2. But the faireſt and beſt-peopled of thoſe Iſlands, is that of LIPARA, ſome ten miles in circuit, (from whence the reſt are called the Liparean Iſles) ſo named from Lipara the chief Town, ſaid to be built in the time of Joſiah King of Judah; the See of a Biſhop, under the Archbiſhop of Meſſana. The Iſland generally fruitful, well furniſhed with Allom, Sulphur, and Bitumen; and with ſome hot medicinal Bathes, which are much frequented, and from thence called Thermeſſa; by the ancient Writers. It was formerly of ſo great wealth, that falling into the diſpleaſure of Agathocles (then the Tyrant of Syracuſe) they were able to buy their peace of him, at the ſum of one hundred Talents of Gold; which ſum they had no ſooner paid, but the Tyrant for a farewel, robbed their very Temples. Unproſperous in his Actions always after that adventure. Nor ſped it better with the Turks, who in the year 1544. laid the Country deſolate; in which condition it remained, till Charles the fifth repleniſhed it again with Spaniards, and fortified it very ſtrongly againſt all invaſions.

3. Not far off lieth another of theſe Iſlands, now called FAFOGNANA, or Fauciana, but anciently Æguſa, conceived to be the ſame which Livy and Florus call Ægates; in which there is a fair and capacious Bay, able to receive the greateſt Navies; and near to which Luctatius Catulus the Conſul gave the Carthaginians their laſt blow at Sea, which drew along with it the ſurrender of Eryx, and the loſs of Sicil, Dedyme, Ericoſæ, Eunymos, and Phœnicuſæ, four other of theſe Iſlands, but of leſſer note, I paſs over willingly; and make haſte to

4. HIERO, the ſeventh and laſt of theſe Iſlands of any conſideration, and the eighth in tale, called alſo Vulcania, in which Vulcan was worſhipped; ſaid to have firſt appeared above the water at ſuch time as Scipio African died. A barren, ſtony, and unhabited place, by reaſon of the fires which formerly have flamed ſo hideouſly (eſpecially in the year 1444.) that it made not only the reſt of theſe Iſlands, but all Sicily tremble. Near unto this Iſle was fought the firſt Naval fight betwixt Rome and Carthage. Before which time the Romans had never uſed the Seas, as being totally employed in the conqueſt of Italy; inſomuch that when they had built their Gallies, they were fain to exerciſe their men in rowing, by placing them on two Seats near the water with Oars in their hands. Which notwithſtanding, having deviſed an Engine like a grapling hook, they ſo faſtned the Adverſe Fleet unto them, that the whole fight ſeemed a Land-battel fought upon the Sea. The victory fell unto the Romans, C. Duilius the Conſul then commanding in chief; and honoured with the firſt Naval Triumph that was ever ſolemnized at Rome.

After this Iſland was once known to the Greeks, they ſent from all their chief Cities ſeveral Colonies, who planted in the Sea-coaſts of the Country, as before noted. But ſo as they never united themſelves in a body together, but had their ſeveral eſtates and particular ends; whereby they came to be devided into many factions, and at laſt made themſelves a prey to as many Tyrants. Phalaris lording it at Agrigentum, Panætius at Leontium, Gelon at Syracuſe, Cleander at Gela, and when one Faction grew too weak to reſiſt the other, they called in ſeveral Foreign Nations to abet their quarrel. For on this ground the Carthaginians were firſt called into Sicily by the Meſſanians, againſt the Agrigentines. And on the ſame was managed here a great part of the Peloponnſian Wars: the Athenians ſiding with the Leontines, and the Spartans with the Syracuſans: in which the whole power of Athens was broken by Sea and Land; and their two Generals Nicias and Demoſthenes, murdered in priſon. But becauſe Syracuſe was a City of the greateſt Authority, and of greateſt influence over the reſt of Sicily, we ſhall more punctually inſiſt on the State-affairs thereof. The Government of which at firſt was popular, as it was in moſt of the Greek Colonies, according to the platforms which they brought from home; and was but newly altered to the Ariſtocratical; when Gelon made himſelf King of it, about 26. years after the expulſion of the Tarquins at Rome; whom with as many as ſucceeded in the Royal dignity, take along as followeth.

The Tyrants, or Kings of Syracuſe.

A. M.

3465 1 Gelon the Prince or Lord of Gela taking advantage of the quarrels in Syracuſa, betwixt the Magiſtrates and people, made himſelf Maſter of the City; and was choſen King. A valiant and prudent Prince, by whom 150000 Carthaginians were ſlain in battel, for their firſt welcome into Sicil. 7.

3472 2 Hiero, the Brother of Gelon, a valiant King alſo, but a rude and covetous man, whereby he loſt the love of his people. 11.

3484 3 Thraſibulus, Brother of Hiero, whoſe Government proved ſo cruel and unſupportable, that it held not above 10 Months; who being forced into Exile by the Syracuſans, the people did a while enjoy their liberty; but withal fell into thoſe Factions, which after 60 years made them loſe it again.

3544 4 Dionyſius, that ſo famous Tyrant, from being General of the Forces of the Syracuſans, made himſelf their King: A man of great vices, but great vertues withal. He brought almoſt all Sicily under his obedience, and the Town of Rhegium in Italy; reigning in all 38 years.

3582 5 Dionyſius II. ſucceeding his Father in his Kingdom and vices, but not in valour or wiſdom, was firſt outed by Dion a noble Gentleman of Syracuſe; and afterward taken Priſoner by Timolean of Corinth, to which City he was ſent, and there died in Exile.

3635 6 Agathocles, by trade a Potter, after that a Souldier; 20 years after the death of Timoleon, made himſelf King of Syracuſe. To draw the Cathaginians out of Sicil, he paſſed over into Africk, and beſieged Carthage; which example Scipio after followed, but with better fortune. 29.

3681 7 Hiero II. of a Commander of their Armies choſen King of Syracuſe, by a Party which he had made amongſt them. In his time brake out the firſt Punick War, the Romans being called in by the Mamertines, who held Meſſana againſt the Carthaginians; the Lords at that time of the greateſt part of the Iſland. 56.

3737 8 Hieronymus, the Son of Hiero, after whoſe death Syracuſe and all Sicil became ſubject to Rome, by the fortunate conduct of Marcellus.

Of theſe eight Kings, the ſix firſt commonly paſs under the name of Tyrants; from whence and from ſome others of like diſpoſition, who lorded it over the reſt of the free Cities of Sicil, the name of Siculi Tyranni grew into a Proverb. But of all none more hated than the two Dionyſii, who were ſo odious, that there were continual execrations poured on them; only one old Woman praying for the life of the latter. Who being asked the cauſe made anſwer, that ſhe knew his Father to have been a monſtrous and wicked Tyrant; on whom when the curſes of the people have prevailed, and obtained his death; this his Son ſucceded, worſe by far then he; for whoſe life ſhe was reſolved to pray, leſt after his death the Devil himſelf ſhould come amongſt them. But to proceed: after theſe Tyrants, as they called them, were rooted out, and the Iſland was conquered by Marcellus, it always followed the fortune of the Roman Empire; till in the partition of that Empire, it fell together with Apulia and Calabria, into the power of the Greeks. In the declining of whoſe greatneſs, this Iſland having been miſerably pilled and ſpoiled by the Emperour Conſtans, An. 669. became a prey to the Saracens; from them recovered again by the help of the Normans, who held both this and the Realm of Naples, in Fee of the Church, under the title of Kings of both Sicils. From that time forwards it ran the fortune of that Kingdom, ſubject unto the Princes of the Norman and German Lines; till the death of Conrade, no interruption intervening. After whoſe death when Manfroy or Manfrede, the baſe Son of the Emperour Frederick, and Brother of Conrade, had forcibly made himſelf King of theſe Countries; it was offered to Richard Earl of Cornwall, Brother to Henry the third of England: a Prince of ſuch riches, that he was able to diſpend an hundred Marks per diem, for ten years together; which according to the Standard of thoſe times, was no ſmall ſum. But the conditions which the Pope propoſed were ſo impoſſible for the Earl to perform, that his Agent told him, he might as well ſay to his Maſter, I will give thee the Moon; catch, climb up, and take it. The Earl refuſing it, it was offered the King for his ſecond Son Edmund, who was inveſted by the gift of a Ring, and money coined in his name by the Popes appointment, with the inſcription of Aimundus Rex Siciliæ. But the King not being able to purſue the buſineſs, becauſe then overburthened by his Barons Wars, and the Pope having ſucked no ſmall ſtore of Treaſure from him; it was, in the year 1261. given unto Charles, Earl of Province and Anjou, Brother to Lewis the 10. Under him thoſe Countries joyntly continued ſubject till the year 1281. in which his Competitor, Peter of Aragon, claiming it in right of his Wife, Daughter of Manfroy before mentioned, promiſing him to fight a ſingle combat before our K. Edward the firſt, at Bourdeaux, fail'd of his Word; and in the mean time ſo contrived it, that at the ſound of a Bell tolling to prayers, all the French men in Sicily were cruelly maſſacred. This exploit is known now under the name of Veſperi Siculi; and was managed by John de Prochita, a Gentleman of the Realm of Naples, whom Charles had diſpoſſeſſed of the Iſle of Prochita, whereof he had been formerly Lord; and not content to do him ſuch a piece of injuſtice, added a further inſolency to it, in the forcing his Wife. Provoked with theſe two injuries, the abuſed Gentleman plots with King Pedro of Aragon, to make him Maſter of the Iſle of Sicily, where he had very good intelligences; and where the French by reaſon of their Luſts and Inſolencies had ſo exaſperated the Natives; that they were capable enough of any ſuch impreſſions, as a man ſharing with him in his ſufferings, could imprint upon them. According to the compact made, Don Pedro riggeth out his Navy, under pretence of ſome exploit againſt the Moors, and anchoeth in the Port of Sardinia, there to expect how well the Tragedy would be acted; which fell out ſo agreeably to his expectation, that in one inſtant as it were, on the ſignal given, the French were univerſally murthered in all parts of the Iſland: the people being ſo enraged, that they would not ſpare women great with Child, if ſuppoſed it to have been got by any of that hated Nation; and Pedro coming in with his Navy as the deed was done, was by the general conſent of all ſorts of people, crowned King of Sicily. A bloody policy, I confeſs, which as the Actors learned of the Engliſh Saxons, who had made like riddance of the Danes; ſo did they teach it to the French, who practiſed it on the Hugonots of France in that horrid Maſſacre of Paris, An. 1572. An Act which ſo provoked the Pope, that he ſolemnly accurſed the King, and cauſed many of the neighbouring Princes to Arm againſt him. But the Fox fared never the worſe for that: who did ſo order his affairs, that he did both clear his own Country of thoſe enemies which on the Popes curſe had come in againſt him; and ſetled Sicily more firmly in obedience to him. Since which time this Iſland hath belonged to the houſe of Aragon, but not always in poſſeſſion of the Kings thereof, being a while governed as a State apart by its own Kings, whoſe ſucceſſion followeth.

Kings of Sicily of the Houſe of Aragon.

1281 1 Pedro, or Peter the firſt, King of Aragon by birth, of Sicily in right of his wife, the choice of the people, and the Legacy of Coradine (the laſt of the Royal line of Suevia) but principally by the power of the Sword.

1285 2 James, the ſecond Son of Pedro, King of Sicily; after the death of his Brother Alfonſus, ſucceeded in Aragon, to which Crown he added the Iſle of Sardinia.

1291 3 Frederick, the Brother of James, on his Brothers taking the Crown of Aragon, got poſſeſſion of Sicily. By Frederick Alfonſo, a younger Son of this Frederick, the Title of Duke of Athens came into this Family.

1336 4 Peter, or Pedro II. Son of Frederick.

1342 5 Frederick II.

6 Peter or Pedro III.

7 Lewis, Son to Peter III.

8 Frederick III. in the life of Lewis his Brother called Duke of Athens; after his death ſucceeded in the Kingdom of Sicily.

1389 9 Martin, Son to Martin the firſt, King of Aragon, ſucceeded in the right of his Wife Blanch, Daughter of Frederick the third; and dying without iſſue, gave the Kingdom unto Martin his Father.

1409 10 Martin II. of Sicily and the firſt of Aragon, of which laſt he was King by birth, and of the former by the gift of his Son. After which time the Iſle of Sicily being again united to the Crown of Aragon, was never ſeparated from it, except it were when John King of Aragon gave it to Ferdinand his Son, the better to fit him for the bed of Iſabel Princeſs of Caſtile, with whom the match was then in treaty; and when the Emperor Charles the fifth gave it, with Naples, unto Philip his eldeſt Son, on his marriage with Mary Queen of England, who thereupon was ſtiled King of Naples, Sicily, and Hieruſalem. But this held only for a year; his Father ſhortly after reſigning to him all his Kingdoms, whereby it became joyned to Spain again.

The Revenues of this Kingdom are by ſome ſaid to be but 800000, but as others ſay, a million of Ducats, moſt of which is again disburſed on the entertainment of the Vice-Roy, and the defence of the Iſland. The Arms are, Or, four Pallets Gules (being thoſe of Aragon) betwixt two Flanches Argent, charged with as many Eagles Sable, beaked Gules, which was the bearing of Manfroy King of Naples, and Sicil, ſpoken of before, who gave thoſe Arms with reference to his deſcent from the German Emperors.

This Iſland for the number of its Nobility compares with Naples, as having in the time of Ortelius, 80 years ago, 7 Princes, 4 Dukes, 13 Marqueſſes, 14 Earls, 1 Vicount, 48 Barons: Men of authority and power in their ſeveral Territories, and therefore not permitted to live much in the Iſland, the greateſt part of their time being ſpent in the Court of Spain; but more to ſatisfie that King upon reaſon of State, than any affection of their own to ſo long an exile. And for the Government of the Church,

The Kingdom of SARDINIA.

THE Iſland and Kingdom of SARDINIA lieth Weſt from Sicily; from the neareſt point whereof called Cape Boii, or Cape Coro, it is diſtant about 200 miles. It is in length 180 miles, 90 in breadth, 560 in the circuit; and is ſituate under the 4. Climate, the longeſt day being 14 hours.

In the time of Ariſtotle it was called Ichnuſa, next Sandaliotis, from the reſemblance which it hath to a man's Shoo or Sandal; and finally Sardinia from Sardus the Son of Hercules, who coming out of Africk poſſeſſed the ſame. For this there is ſufficient authority amongſt the Ancients. Of the firſt names ſaith Pliny in as plain tearms as may be, that Timæus called Sardinia Sandaliotis, and Myrſilus, Ichnuſa, from the ſimilitude which it hath to the Shoo-ſole, or impreſſion of a man's foot on the ground; Sardiniam Timæus Sandaliotin appellavit ab effigie ſoleæ; Myrſilus, Ichnuſam à ſimilitudine veſtigii. And for the laſt nothing can be more plain than that of Pauſanias, who tells that the firſt who came by ſhipping into Sardinia, were certain Africans under the conduct of Sardus the Son of Maceris, whom the Egyptians called by the name of Hercules; who coming into this Iſland then called Ichnuſa, τὸ ὄνομα ἀπὸ σοῦ Σάρδου τούτου μετέβαλεν ἡ νῆσος, cauſed it after his own name to be called Sardinia. For further evidence whereof, the people in the Latin tongue are called Sardi; the adjoyning Sea, Mare Sardoum. And to this name it was ſo conſtant, that no following Plantations from other Countries were ever able to alter it. Some Companies of Attica, led by Iolaus, came and ſetled here, where they built Olbion, and Agrillis: leaving a memory of Iolaus their Captain in ſome places, which remained in the time of Pauſanias, called Iolaia; and taking to themſelves for his ſake the name of Iolatenſes. And after the deſtruction of Troy, ſome of that ſcattered Nation came and planted in ſome void parts of the Iſland; kept to themſelves the name of Ilienſes, and by the name are mentioned both by Pliny and Livy. But neither of theſe Nations did attempt the change of the name, becauſe not of ability to ſuppreſs or out power the Natives. Nor could the Carthagians do it, though a more puiſſant Nation than the former were; and ſuch as by the nearneſs of their habitation (Sardinia being diſtant but 160 miles from Africk) had all advantages to make (as at laſt they did) a full Conqueſt of it: building therein the Cities of Charmis, Chalaris, and Sulchi; and holding it until it was unjuſtly extorted from them by the Romans, at the end of the firſt Punick War, at what time Carthage was in danger to be ruined by the revolt of her own Mercenaries, and ſo not able to reſiſt.

But of the name and firſt Plantations of this Iſland we have ſaid enough. Let us now look upon the place; in which it is reported that there is neither Wolf nor Serpent, neither venomous nor hurtful Beaſt, but the Fox only, and a little Creature like a Spider which will by no means endure the light of the Sun, except held by violence. Some Pools it hath, and thoſe very plentiful of Fiſh; but generally ſo deſtitute of River-water, that they are fain to keep the Rain which falls in Winter, for their uſe in Summer. By means whereof, and for that there is no paſſage for the Northern winds, being obſtructed by the high Mountains near Cape Lugudori, the air is generally unhealthy, if not peſtilential: Inſomuch that Tully writing to his Brother Quintus being then in this Iſland, adviſeth him to remember, as in point of health, that he was in Sardinia; and ſpeaking of Tigellius a Sardinian born, ſaith of him, that he was more peſtilent than the Country which bred him.

The ſoil is very fertile in reſpect of Corſica, but barren if compared with Sicil; which yet may rather be imputed to the want of good manuring in the Huſbandman, than any natural defect in the Soil it ſelf. Well ſtored with all ſorts of Cattel, as appears plainly by that plenty of Cheeſe and Hides which are ſent hence yearly into Italy and other places. The Horſes hereof, hot, headſtrong, and hard to be broken, but will laſt long. The Bullocks naturally amble, ſo that the Country-man rideth them as familiarly as they do in Spain on Mules and Aſſes. Here is alſo the Beaſt called Muſrones, or Muſcriones, found in Corſica alſo, but in no other part of Europe; ſomewhat reſembling a Stag, but of ſo ſtrong an hide, that it is uſed by the Italians inſtead of Armor: Of the skin of which carried to Cordova in Spain, and there dreſſed, is made the right Cordovan Leather. Finally, here is an Herb, of which if one eat, it is ſaid he will die with laughter; whence came the Proverb, Riſus Sardonicus. The truth of which report I ſhall not diſpute, though it be by others more probably conjectured, that the Herb being of a poyſonous nature, cauſeth men to die with ſuch a Convulſion or attraction of Sinews, that they ſeem to grin, or laugh at the time of their death.

The people are ſmall of ſtature, of complexion inclining unto ſwarthineſs, and that either by reaſon of the heat of the Sun, or more probably from their African extraction: their behaviour much participating of that people alſo. So ſlothful in the times of the Romans, that they were grown into a Proverb, and a Law made to compel them to work; but now eſteemed a very painful and laborious Nation. Much given to hunting, and ſo prone to Rebellion that the Spaniard permitteth no Cutler to live among them; yet peaceabe among themſelves, and in ſome meaſure courteous unto Strangers alſo. Their Language a corrupt Catalonian; their diet on meats common and groſs; their apparel in the Towns (eſpecially that of the women) gorgeous, in the Villages ſordid.

In matters of Religion they are little curious. That which they make moſt ſhew of, is according to the Rites and Doctrines of the Church of Rome; which both their Neighbourhood to the Pope, and their ſubjection to the Spaniard, have impoſed upon them. But in their practice of it they are looſe enough, going to Maſs on Sundays and Saints days; which done they fall a dancing in the midſt of the Church, ſinging in the mean time ſongs too immodeſt for an Ale-houſe. Nay, it is thought that their Clergy it ſelf is the moſt rude, ignorant, and illiterate of any people in Chriſtendom; ſaying their Maſſes rather by rote, than reaſon, and utterly unable to give any accompt of their Religion.

It is divided commonly into two parts, viz. Cape Lugudori, towards Corſica; and Cape Cagliari, towards Africk: the firſt the leaſt, and withal mountainous and barren; the laſt the larger, level, and by much more fruitful. Chief Cities of the whole, 1. Calaris, firſt built by the Carthaginians, and ſituate in that point of the Iſland which lieth neareſt to Africk; which from hence took the name of Cape Cagliari, by which it is at this day called. A City of ſuch fame, when it was firſt taken by Gracchus, for the uſe of the Romans, that it is called by Florus, Urbs urbium; and was deſtroyed by the ſaid Gracchus, the better to diſable the Natives from rebelling againſt the Conquerors. Being new built again in more ſetled times, it was a ſecond time deſtroyed by the Sarazens; and finally re-built and beautified by the Piſans, at ſuch time as they were Maſters of this part of the Iſland. Very well fortified by Nature, as ſeated on the top of an Hill; and hath under it a ſpacious and goodly Haven, much frequented by Merchants. The Town it ſelf adorned with a beautiful Temple, being the See of an Archbiſhop, many fair Turrets, and the conſtant reſidence of the Vice-roy: from whoſe authority it is exempt by eſpecial priviledg, as to the legal Government of it; and ordered by a Common-Council of its own Citizens. 2. Boſſa, on the Weſt ſide of the Iſland, another Arch-Epiſcopal See. 3. S. Reparata, on the North, looking towards Corſica. 4. Aquilaſtro, on the Weſtern ſhores. 5. Saſſari, a Town of conſequence, where they have an Aquæduct twelve miles long reaching from thence unto S. Gavins. Alghes-Boſa, a good Town ſituate in a wholſom air, and a fertile ſoil, and having a fair Haven of ſix miles in length, in which the Ships of Genoa and Catalonia do moſt commonly ride. 7. Oreſtagne, a large Town but very ill peopled, by reaſon of a bad air which proceeds from the Fens; the Country about which gives title to the Marqueſs of Oreſtagne. 8. Turrita, once a Roman Colony, now little better then a ruine; yet giving title to the third Archbiſhop of this Iſland, who is called in Latin, Turritanus. Here are alſo in divers parts of this Iſland the remainders of ſundry Towers and Forts which the people call Noracks from Nora, one of the Sons of Geryon; who (as they think) came into this Country, and built the firſt dwelling or manſion in it. And this Tradition of the Vulgar hath ſo much in it of Hiſtorical and undoubted truth, that certain Colonies from Spain came and planted here, under the conduct of one Nora; ſomewhat before the expedition of the Atticks under Iolaus, as Pauſanias teſtifieth.

This Iſland taken by the Romans from the Carthaginians, as before is ſaid, was firſt under the immediate Juriſdiction of the Præfect of the City of Rome: but after by Juſtinian was made a Province of his new Dioceſs of Africk, and as a part thereof or rather an Appendix to it, was challenged, invaded, and finally conquered by the Sarazens, Anno 807. From them recovered by the joynt-forces of the Piſans and Genoeſe, who divided it betwixt them: the Southern part, called Cape Cagliari, being allotted to the Piſans, and the Northern towards Corſica, to thoſe of Genoa. But the Genoeſe not content with the partage, (their portion of the Iſland being leſs in quantity, and worſe in quality) began to quarrel with the Piſans, and at the laſt to break into open Wars. To part the Fray, Pope Boniface the 8. beſtowed it on James King of Aragon, who driving thence the Genoeſe, Anno 1324. became Maſter of it. The Aragonian before that did pretend ſome Title to it, in right of the Kingdom of Sicil, then in his poſſeſſion; to ſome preceding Kings whereof it had once been ſubject: and having backed that Claim by the Pope's Donation, who challenged it as a part of St. Peter's Patrimony; incorporated it for ever to the Crown of Aragon. Once indeed it was offered unto Anthony of Bourbon, in exchange for his Title to Navarre, but without any purpoſe of performance; that being only a device to fetch him off from the party of the Reformed in France, to which he formerly adhered: and was as ſuddenly laid by, as if it had done the feat intended in the Propoſition.

The Government hereof is by a Vice-roy, who reſides at Calaris, and muſt of neceſſity be a Spaniard under whom are two Deputy Governours, Spaniards alſo; the one for Cape Cagliari, the other for Cape Lugudori. Inferior Officers of Command may be of the Natives. What profits ariſe hence to the Crown of Spain, I have no where found. The Arms hereof are ſaid to be Or, a Croſs Gules, betwixt four Sarazens heads Sable, curled Argent. Which Arms were given upon the taking of it from the power of the Moors: but firſt taken (as ſome ſay) for the Arms of Aragon, on occaſion of the heads of four chief Princes of the Moors which were found ſevered from their bodies in the Battel of Alcoraz, Anno 1094. won by Don Pedro, King of Navarre and Aragon.

There are divers ſmall Iſlands about Sardinia, as 1. Iſola Roſſa, heretofore called Phintanis. 2. The Iſle of Hercules, now called Aſinaria. 3. St. Peters, anciently Hieracum, or Accipitrum, with others of as little note: all which as the Appendants of Sardinia, do belong to the Spaniard.

There are in this Iſland,
Archbiſhops 3. Biſhops 15.

The Land of the CHURCH.

WEST of the Realm of Naples, lyeth the LAND OF THE CHURCH, extended North and South from the Adriatick to the Tuſcan Seas. Bounded on the North-eaſt with the River Trontus, on the South-eaſt with the Axoſenus, by which two parted from that Kingdom; as on the North-weſt by the River Po, and Fiore, by which ſeparated from the State of Venice; and on the South-weſt with the River Piſeo, by which it is divided from the Modern Tuſcany, or the State of the Florentine.

By this Accompt the Pope's Dominion taketh up the whole middle of Italy; having in breadth from the one Sea unto the other above two hundred miles, and in the length along the Adriatick to the furtheſt parts of Romandiola, above three hundred. By vvhich advantages it lieth moſt fitly for the command of all the reſt, it being very eaſie for the Popes to convey their Forces by Sea or Land, into vvhat part thereof they pleaſe. And vvere it not that the Popes commonly are of ſeveral factions; and that the Succeſſor purſueth not the deſigns of his Predeceſſors, but hath his ovvn ends to himſelf, vvhich for the moſt part are driven on vvithout conſideration of increaſing the publick Patrimony; it is not poſſible, but that the Pope long before this time, had been Lord of all. And this may be conceived the rather, conſidering the extraordinary fertility of the ſoyl, able to ſpare proviſions for the greateſt Armies; the multitudes of people which it may afford, in regard they are ſo ſeldom conſumed by Wars; and that the men of this Dominion (but chiefly thoſe of Rome, and the parts adjoyning) are conceived to be the beſt Souldiers of Italy; as retaining ſome ſparks of their Anceſtors vallour, together with their gravity, magnificence, and a certain greatneſs of courage, which ſeems to be particular to them of this Nation. And they preſerve alſo to this day ſo much of the ancient Roman, as to prefer any kind of life, before Trades or Merchandize. For though their Lands be very well tilled, and their Vines well dreſſed, and all things done exactly in the way of Husbandry: yet for their Manufactures they are brought from other places, as Venice, Naples, Florence, Genoa. And though they have the Sea on both ſides, and the advantage of many fair and commodious Rivers and Havens, which with little coſt might be made very uſeful: yet do they no way improve their fortunes, or the publick Patrimony in the way of Traffick; which is the main defect of the Papal Policy, and filleth a rich Country full of poor and indigent perſons. But to proceed to the deſcription of the Pope's Eſtate: it containeth the Provinces of 1. Romandiola, 2. the Territory of Ferrara. 3. the Eſtate of Vrbine. 4. Marca Anconita. 5. Ducato Spoletano with Sabinia. 6. St. Peter's Patrimony, and 7. Campagna di Roma.

1. ROMANDIOLA extendeth from the River Iſaurus (now called Foglio) by which parted from the Dukedom of Vrbine on the Eaſt, to the Dukedom of Parma on the Weſt, from which parted by the River Panaro, called of old Scultenna: and from the Apennine on the South to Padus, and the Adriatick, on the North. It was called anciently Flaminia, from Flaminius the Roman Conſul, who having won it from the Galls planted Colonies in it, and had the honour (though he purſued this War againſt the will of the Senate) to have it called by his own name: and for the better paſſage betwixt Rome and this, made a very large Cauſey, which for a long time was called Via Flaminia. Chief Rivers hereof, beſides thoſe ſpoken of already, which are only borderers; 1. Ariminum, now called Marechia; and 2. Rubicon, now called Piſſatello, betwixt Ariminum and Ravenna, of which more anon.

The chief Cities of it are, 1. Bononia (or Boulogne) ſeated in a ſpacious Plain near the Apennine Hills, a very populous City, of a round form, and a great circuit: the building Antique, ſeeming for the moſt part to be the work of the Lombards, the foundation of the houſes of Free-ſtone, the reſt of Bricks; built with arched Cloyſters towards the ſtreet, under which one may walk dry in the greateſt rain. A City honoured with many Palaces of the neighbouring Nobles, the chief Univerſity of Italy, and the retiring place of the Popes. The Civil Law is much ſtudied here, inſomuch that from hence proceeded the famous Civilians Johannes Andreas, Aza, Bartolus, and Socinus. I believe they have built Caſtles in the air, which aſcribe the founding of this Univerſity to Theodoſius the 2. The Charter of whoſe foundation dated, Anno 423. is an idle and fooliſh thing. For there it is ſaid, that at the inſtitution there were preſent Gualter Earl of Poictiers, Embaſſador for the King of England; and Baldwin Earl of Flanders, for the King of France: when at that time, neither thoſe Earldoms, or thoſe Kingdoms were in rerum natura. It is ſituate on the River Apoſa, and was by former Writers called Felſina. Near unto this Town in a Demy-Iſland called Forcelli, was that meeting between Auguſtus, Anthony, and Lepidus; wherein they agreed on the Triumvirate, dividing the Empire and City of Rome among themſelves: Which combination was confirmed by the enſuing Proſcription; wherein, that they might be revenged on Cicero, Lepidus proſcribed his Brother; Antonius, his Uncle. 2. Rimini, anciently called Ariminum, ſeated on the mouth of the River Ariminum, of no great note, but for giving name unto this City, and now called Marechia. The City large, and ſeated in a plentiful and pleaſant ſoil, abundantly productive of Wines, Figs, and Olives; wealthy withal, the trade which formerly enriched Ravenna, being for the moſt part managed here. Divided by the River into the City and the Suburbs; but joyned together by a fair and ſtately Bridge, built over it by Auguſtus Cæſar, who alſo erected in the City a Triumphal Arch. It is ſituate ſomewhat Eaſt of the River Rubicon, which in thoſe times divided Italy from Gaule: upon the Bank whereof looking towards this Town, there was an old Marble Pillar having on it a Latin Inſcription to this purpoſe, viz. Leave here thy Colours, and lay down thine Arms, and paſs not with thy Forces beyond the Rubicon; whoſoever goeth againſt this command, let him be held an Enemy to the people of Rome. Which Rule when Cæſar had tranſgreſſed, and ſurprized this City, he ſo frighted Pompey and his faction, that they abandoned Italy and Rome it ſelf, and withdrew themſelves into Epirus. It is ſaid that Cæſar dreamed the night before, that he carnally knew his own Mother: whereby the Sooth-ſayers gathered that he ſhould be Lord of Rome, which was the common Mother of them all. Which dream, and ſeveral prodigies hapning at the ſame time with it, did ſo encourage him in his enterpriſe, that he is ſaid, at the paſſing over Rubicon, to have ſaid theſe words, Eamus quò nos Deorum oſtenta, &c. Let us go whither the ſins of our Enemies, and the Prodigies of the Gods do call us. In memory of which venturous, but fortunate action, he cauſed a monument to be erected in this City, with his name and titles. It was anciently a Roman Colony, and in the buſtles hapning betwixt the Pope and the Emperor, was ſeized on by the Malateſti, as Bononia was by the Bentivoli, two potent Families of theſe parts; who held them in defiance of the Popes of Rome, till they were reduced again unto the Church, by Pope Julio the ſecond. 3. Cervia, on the Adriatick Sea, where there is made ſo much Salt, that they furniſh therewith all their neighbours of Marca Anconitana, and a great part of Lombardy: the Pope receiving for his Cuſtoms of this one Commodity, no leſs than 60000 Crowns per annum. 4. Furlii, (called of old Forum Livii) one of the Towns belonging properly to the Exarchate of Ravenna, ſeated in a very pleaſant air, and a fruitful ſoil, betwixt two freſh ſtreams; of which the one is called Ronchus, and the other Montonus. 5. Faventia, now called Faenza, on the banks of Anemus, a calm gentle River; an ancient City, but well peopled: much benefited by the Flax which groweth in the adjoyning fields, and the Earthen Veſſels which they vend to moſt parts of Italy. It was firſt given unto the Popes by Deſiderius the laſt King of the Lombards, whom they but ſorrily requited for ſo great a courteſie. 6. Sarſina, an old City, ſeated at the foot of the Apennine, the birth place of Plautus the Comedian; 7. Imola, anciently called Forum Cornelii, and 8. Ceſena, Cities both of them of no ſmall Antiquity; but this laſt the fairer built, the better peopled, and the more ſtrongly fortified: there being a ſtrong Caſtle on the top of an Hill, the work of Frederick the 2. Emperor and King of Germany. This Town, with that of Sarſina ſpoken of before, ſeem to be ſeated on the banks of the River Rubicon, now called Piſſatello. 9. Ravenna, ſituate in the embracements of two Rivers, called Montonus and Ronchus: by the confluence whereof at their fall or influx into the Adriatick, it was once beautified with one of the faireſt Havens in the World, and for that cauſe made the Road of one of the two Navies, which Auguſtus always kept manned to command the whole Empire of Rome: the other riding at Miſenus in Campania. This of Ravenna, being in the upper Sea, awed and defended Dalmatia, Greece, Crete, Cyprus, Aſia, &c. the other at Miſenus, in the lower Sea, protected and kept under France, Spain, Africk, Egypt, Syria, &c. The walls of this City are ſaid to have been built or repaired by Tiberius Cæſar; the whole City to have been much beautified by Theodoricus King of the Goths, who built here a moſt ſtately and magnificent Palace; the ruins whereof are ſtill eaſily diſcernable. The private buildings are but mean, the publick ones are of a grave, but ſtately ſtructure. Of which the principal heretofore was the Church of St. Mary the Round, whoſe roof was of one entire ſtone, and honoured with the rich Sepulchre of the ſaid King Theoderick: which the Souldiers (in the ſack of this City by the French, Anno 1512) pulled down together with the Church it ſelf, only to get the Jewels and Medals of it. The principal at the preſent is the Church of St. Vitalis, the pavement hereof is all of Marble, and the walls all covered with precious ſtones of many ſorts, but unpoliſhed as they were taken out of Mines; which ſheweth as well the Magnificence as antiquity of it. The Patriarchs of this City, in regard it was ſo long the Regal and Imperial Seat, have heretofore contended for precedency with the Popes themſelves: not brought to yield the place to thoſe proud pretenders, till Donus the 2. in the ſhort time of his Papacy about the year 975. did in fine prevail. And this they did upon good reaſons, this City having been anciently the Metropolis of the Province called Flaminia, afterwards honoured with the Seat of the Emperour Honorius, and his ſucceſſors; next of the Gothiſh Kings, then of the Exarchs, and laſt, of its Patriarchs. And it was choſen for this purpoſe, becauſe of the plentiful Territory, ſince covered with water; and the conveniency of the Haven, at this day choaked: though lately by expence of a great deal of treaſure, the Fens about the City have been very much drained; and the Bogs in ſome places turned to fruitful fields, to the great benefit hereof both for health and pleaſure.

As for the fortunes of this Country, it was anciently together with the Territories of Ferrara, and ſome part of Trevigiana, the habitation of the Boii, who with the Senones, the Inſubres, and the Cenomani, made up the whole body of the Ciſalpine Galls, of whom more hereafter. Finding the Romans grown too near them, by whom the Senones their next neighbours had been rooted out, they thought it was high time to beſtir themſelves, eſpecially after the defeat given them by the Conſul Minutius, who carried the War home unto them; which never any of the Romans had done before. For after this, under Carolamus their King, they ſet upon Marcellus the Conſul, killing 3000 of his men, but vanquiſhed and ſubdued by him in a following Battel. Vanquiſhed again not far from Mutina by Cornelius Merula, with the loſs of 14000 of their men, they called both the Inſubrian and Tranſalpine Galls to come in to aid them. But being then vanquiſhed alſo at the Battel of Telamon (of which more in Lombardy) A V.C. 528. they were followed home, and utterly ſubdued by the Conſul Flaminius, as before was ſaid: after which times this Country following the ſame fortunes with the reſt of Italy, becauſe ſubject to the Goths, as a part of their Italian conqueſts: whoſe Kingdom here was no ſooner deſtroyed by Narſes, but the Lombards entred. To give a ſtop to whoſe ſucceſſes, and preſerve ſo much unto the Empire as was not already conquered by them; it was thought good by Juſtine the ſecond, to ſend thither an Imperial Officer of principal command and note, whom he honoured with the title of Exarch. His reſidence ſetled at Ravenna, as ſtanding moſt commodiouſly to hinder the incurſions of the barbarous Nations; and withal to receive ſuch aids from the Eaſtern parts, as his occaſions did require. Theſe Exarchs having divided Italy into many Governments, appointed over each ſome ſupreme Commander, dignified with the name of Dukes. And even the City of Rome it ſelf (ſo far then was it from being ſubject to the Pope in Temporal matters) had a chief Officer of this kind (accomptable to the Exarch, and ſubordinate to him) whoſe Government was called the Roman Dukedom. That which they kept unto themſelves as their own peculiar, contained the Cities of Ravenna, Rhegium, Mutina, Bononia, Claſſ[illegible]Forli, Forlimpoli, Sarcino, Parma, and Placentia: which ten Cities with the Territories belonging to them, made up that Diſtrict which properly was called the Exarchate of Ravenna; much mentioned in the Hiſtories of the middle times, by reaſon of the continual Wars which they had with the Lombards, but newly entred when this Magiſtracy had its firſt beginning. The names of theſe Exarchs are as followeth.

727 14 Paulus.
728 15 Eutichus. 12. In the days of this Exarch, Ravenna was taken from the Empire, by Luitprandus King of the Lombards, Anno 740. But regained by Charles the Great, and by him given to the Biſhops of Rome, together with Anconitana and Spoleto, as a requital for the Kingdom of France, confirmed unto King Pepin his Father, by the conſent and authority of the Popes. The donation of this Exarchate to the Popes, partly to blot out the memory of the Exarches, and partly to make the people obedient to thoſe Prelates, changed the name of the Country from Flaminia (by which name it was formerly known) to Romandiola, and now to Romagna. Notwithſtanding which Donation, or Original Grant, the Popes enjoyed not long the poſſeſſion of it: The Emperors of Germany, and their Vice-gerents in Italy, wreſting it by ſtrong hand out of the poſſeſſion of the Church; and giving it to ſuch as deſerved well of them, and were moſt likely, or moſt able to uphold their Faction. And ſo it ſtood, till the late Popes conſpiring with the French Kings, Lewis the 12, and Francis the firſt, brought them into Italy Anno 1509. and by their aids, and by the cenſure of the Church, ſo prevailed in fine, that they extorted Ravenna, and ſome other places, out of the hands of the Venetians, ejected many petit Princes out of other Cities, which they pretended to belong to St. Peter's Patrimony; and thereby got poſſeſſion of all thoſe Teritories, which lie betwixt the State of Venice, and the Marches of Ancona.

2. The Territory of FERRARA lieth in the very ſkirts of Romandiola towards the Venetian, extending one hundred and ſixty miles in length, and about fifty in breadth: the ſoil thereof exceeding rich, but ſubject to the overflowings of the River Po; which makes the air in many places to be ſomewhat unwholſom. And though as well the former Dukes as the Popes, who are now Lords hereof, have been at great charge in raiſing high banks and Ramparts to keep in the Waters: yet could not this reſiſt the violence of the River, falling from ſo high a Spring, and ſeconded with ſo great Land-floods (as ſometimes it is) but that it makes many breaches in them, do they what they can. The places of moſt note herein, are 1. Graffignan in the borders of Tuſcany, near the Apennine. 2. Carpi, a place of great importance, ſeated in the midſt of this Dukedom; belonging heretofore to the houſe of the Pici. But partly by exchange made with Marcus Picus, partly for one hundred thouſand Crowns in ready money, given unto Lionel Pico, once the Lord hereof; it was by Charles the 5. incorporated into this Eſtate. 3. Commachia, ſeated in the Marſhes of the Adriatick, from which the Princes of this Family of Eſto, were at firſt called only Lords of Commachia; a place which yielded great profit to the former Dukes, by the fiſhing of Eels. 4. Saxole, given by Duke Alphonſo in exchange for Carpi. Here is alſo the Territory and Lordſhip of the Poleſin, the cauſe of ſo many quarrels and contentions between the ancient Dukes of Ferrara and the States of Venice. But the chief honour of this Dukedom is in the Capital City that which denominates the whole. Ferrara, a City of five miles in compaſs, ſo called from the Iron Mines which are about it; commodiouſly ſeated on the River Po, which by reaſon of its breadth, depth and violent ſwiftneſs of the current, is a ſufficient rampart to it on that ſide; the other ſides being fortified with a ſtrong wall, and a ſpacious mote. In the middle of the City is as fair and ſpacious Market-place, into which do open on all ſides about twenty Streets, all of them half a mile in length; and all ſo ſtreight and evenly built, that the furtheſt end of each of them may be eaſily ſeen. Near to this Market-place is a little Iſland, in which the former Dukes had a ſtately Palace, called Belvedere, from the fair Proſpect which it had or gave to the whole City; and on the North-ſide of the City a large Park for pleaſure. The other houſes are for the moſt part built of fair Freeſtone, not joyning unto one another as in other Cities, but at a pretty diſtance with neat Gardens between. Arioſto, the Author of that ingenious Poem called Orlando Furioſo, and Hierome Savanarolo the Prophetical Fryer, were both of them natives of this place: of which the firſt lieth here entombed, the laſt for preaching againſt the Pope, was burnt at Florence.

In the declining of the Power and Empire of the Lombards, this City together with Faenza was given by Deſiderius their laſt King, to the Church of Rome, the better to oblige the Popes by ſo great a benefit. But being taken from them by the Emperors of the houſe of Schwaben, it was again recovered by the proweſs of the Counteſs Mathildis, Anno 1107. who took it, with many other Towns in Italy, from the Emperor Henry the fourth, and at her death conferred the ſame upon the Church. The Popes once more poſſeſſed hereof, and not able to hold it, gave it in Fee for ever unto Azo of the houſe of Eſte, a man of great ſway in the affairs of Italy, who valiantly had defended it againſt Ezelinus, Vicegerent of Frederick the ſecond. This was the firſt of this Family who had Ferrara in propriety: His Anceſtors being called before, the Marqueſſes of Eſte, and ſometimes Marqueſſes of Ferrara, (but in title only) as Governors hereof in behalf of the Pope of Rome. Obizo the Grandchild of this firſt Azo, obtained of Rodolphus the firſt, (who was willing to make what money he could of his Lands in Italy) the Cities of Rhegium and Modena; that Grant confirmed by Guido Legat of Pope Benedict the ninth, with the Popes conſent, Anno 1304. Other improvements there were made by the following Princes, according to the chance of War, but none of them continued conſtant in their poſſeſſion but theſe three Cities and the Territories adjoyning to them. As for this Family de Eſte (Familia Ateſtina it is called in Latin) it took this name from Eſte, or Ateſte, a ſmall Town in the Siegneury of Venice, conferred upon the Anceſtors of this Azo, by Charles the Great. And for the Chiefs, or Princes of it, they have been of great authority and power in their ſeveral times, commanding ſometimes the Venetian Armies, and ſometimes the Popes: great favourers of Learned men, and advancers of Learning; inſomuch that the Reinaldo's and Rogero's of Eſte, make up a great part of the Poems of Arioſto and Taſſo, two of the greateſt Wits of Italy; and finally allied to many of the beſt Houſes of Chriſtendom. The Catalogue of whom, ſince they were made the Hereditary Lords and Princes of this noble City, I have here ſubjoyned.

The Dukes and Marqueſſes of Ferrara.

1236 1 Actius, or Azo de Eſte, the ninth of that name, but firſt Hereditary Marqueſs of Ferrara, by the Grant of the Pope.

1264 2 Obizo, the ſixth of that name, Grandſon to Azo by his Son Reinaldo, ſecond Marqueſs of Ferrara.

1293 3 Azo the tenth of Eſte, and II of Ferrara, Son to Obizo.

1308 4 Franciſco, Brother to Azo the 2. after whoſe death, Anno 1312 Ferrara for a time was under the command of the Popes.

1312 5 Alobrandinus, Brother of Franciſcus, who had the Title to, but not the poſſeſſion of Ferrara.

1315 6 Reinaldo the 3 of Eſte, and the firſt of Ferrara, recovered Ferrara from the Pope, and caſt out his Garriſons. 1317.

1335 7 Obizo II. Brother of Reinaldo.

1352 8 Alabrandino II. Son of Obizo.

1361 9 Nicolao the 2. of Eſte, and firſt of Ferrara, Brother of Alabrandino, whoſe children being young, he diſpoſſeſſed of the Eſtate.

1388 10 Albertus, Brother of Nicolas, the Founder of the Univerſity of Ferrara Anno 1392.

1393 11 Nicolas II. baſe Son of Albertus.

1441 12 Leonelius, the baſe Son of Nicolas, in the minority of his Brother Hercules, begot in lawful Wedlock, invaded the Eſtate, and held it.

1450 13 Borſius, another of the baſe Sons of Nicolas 2. ſucceeded Leonel in the Eſtate; who being made Duke of Mutina by Frederick the 3. was by Pope Paul created Duke of Ferrara alſo, Anno 1470.

1471 14 Hercules, the lawful Son of Nicolas the 2. made Knight of the Garter, by King Edward 4.

1505 15 Alphonſo, the Son of Hercules.

1534 16 Hercules II. Son of Alphonſo.

1559 17 Alphonſo II. who dying without lawful iſſue, Anno 1595 Pope Clement 8. challenged this Eſtate in the right of the Church; and partly by force, partly by compoſition (whereof we ſhall ſay more when we come to Modena) united it for ever to the See of Rome.

The yearly Revenues of this Dukedom were heretofore two hundred and fifty thouſand Crowns; now not ſo much worth unto the Pope, by reaſon of the Alienation of Modena and Reggio; of which more hereafter.

The Arms of theſe Dukes (which for the honour of this noble and illuſtrious Family, and for the ſtrangeneſs of the Coat, I ſhall here put down) were Pale-wiſe of three pieces, 1. Partie per Feſſe, in a chief Or, an Eagle diſplayed Sable, membred, langued, and crowned Gules; and in Baſe Azure, three Flowers de Lys Or, within a Border indented Or and Gules. 2. Gules, two Keys in Saltier, the one Or, the other Argent, charged in Feſſe, with an Eſchocheon of pretence Azure, ſupporting an Eagle of the third, membered and crowned of the ſecond. Over all in chief a Papal Crown Or, garniſhed with ſundry Gems Azure and Purple. The 3. as the firſt Counterplaced. Which Coat upon the falling of the Houſe of Ferrara, doth now belong to that of Modena and Reggio, as deſcended of it.

3. From the Territory of Ferrara proceed we to the Eſtate of Vrbine; both Dukedoms and diſtinct Eſtates till theſe later times: this laſt the younger of the two, and conſequently (as in the ordinary courſe of Nature) the ſurviver alſo; but ſwallowed at laſt into the Popedom as the other was. Bounded on the Weſt with the River Iſaurus (now called Foglia) by which parted from Romandiola, on the Eaſt from Marca Anconitana, on the North with the Adriatick, and on the South with the Apennine Hills, by which parted from Tuſcany. So called from Vrbine the chief City of it, and the Ducal Seat. It is in length about 60. miles, 35. in breadth: Some pieces and Eſtates belonging anciently to the Church, lying intermingled with the Lands and Signeuries which belonged to the Dukes.

The ſoil is very fruitful of Corn, Wine, and Oyl, plentiful of Figs and other fruits of moſt pleaſant taſte; and in a word, affording all things neceſſary for the life of man. But the air is generally unwholſom, eſpecially about Peſaro and Foſſembrune, by reaſon of the low flats and overflows of the water. The principal Commodities which they vend abroad, are the Wines of Peſaro, ſold in great abundance to the Venetians; and dried Figs, which they vend unto Bologne, and other places.

The moſt famous River is Metauras, (now called Metremo) and a famous one it is indeed, by reaſon of that great Battel fought on the banks thereof, betwixt Aſdrubal the Brother of Annibal, and his Carthaginians; and the two Conſuls Livius and Cl. Nero: in which, after a long and hot diſpute, the victory fell unto the Romans; there being 56000 of the Carthaginians ſlain, (as Livy writeth) and 5400 taken priſoners. Polybius ſpeaks of a leſs number both ſlain and taken; and like enough it is that Livy, to advance the honour of that Family, might enlarge a little. But whatſoever was the truth in this particular, certain it is, that this victory turned the tide of the Roman Fortune, which from this time began to flow amain upon them: the Citizens of Rome beginning at this time to trade and traffick, to follow their affairs, and make contracts, and bargains with one another, which they had long forborn to do; and that with as ſecure a confidence, as if Annibal were already beaten out of Italy. This famous River riſeth in the Apennine Hills, and paſſing by Foſſombrune, a Town of this Dukedom, falls into the Adriatick.

There are reckoned into this Dukedom ſeven Towns or Cities, (four of which are Epiſcopal Sees) and three hundred Caſtles. The principal of which are, 1. Vrbine, one of the moſt ancient Cities of Italy, which both Tacitus and Pliny mention; a fair Town, well built, and the Duke's ordinary ſeat in Summer. It is ſeated at the foot of the Apennine Hills, in a very rich and pleaſant ſoil, built in the faſhion of a Miter, and therefore called Vrbinas, quod urbes binas continere videbatur. Franciſco Vbaldi the firſt Duke, built here a very ſumptuous Palace, and therein founded a moſt excellent Library, repleniſhed with a great number of rare Books, covered and garniſhed with Gold, Silk, and Silver; all ſcattered and diſperſed in the time that Cæſar Borgia ſeized on the Eſtate. Polydore Virgil, the Author of the Hiſtory of England, which paſſeth under his name, was a Native here: an Hiſtory of worth enough as the times then were, except only in ſuch paſſages as concern the Pope (the Collector of whoſe Peter-pence he was then in England) whoſe credit and Authority he preferreth ſometimes, before truth it ſelf. 2. Piſaurum, now called Peſara, the ſtrongeſt Town of all the Dukedom, two miles in compaſs, and fortified according to the modern Art of War: the fortifications of it being firſt begun by Franciſco Maria, and perfected by Guido Vbaldo, his Son and ſucceſſor; the ordinary ſeat of the Duke in Winter, well Garriſoned, and therefore truſted with the publick Armory. It is ſeated near the ſhore of the Adriatick, at the mouth or influx of the River Iſaurus, which parts it from Romagna: populous, of handſom buildings, and a very ſtrong wall, the ſoil exceeding rich, but the air ſo bad, that partly in regard of that, and partly by their eating of too much fruits, nothing is more frequent here than Funerals, eſpecially in the month of Auguſt; few of the Inhabitants living to be fifty years old. 3. Senogalle, called anciently Sena Gallica, (Gallica being added to it to diſference it from another of that name in Tuſcany) a ſtrong and well fenced City near the River Metaurus, over which there is a Bridge conſiſting of eighty Arches, made of that length, not ſo much in regard of the breadth of the Chanel, as the frequent overflowings of that turbulent Water. 4. Foſſombrune, called in old Authors Forum Sempronii, for air and ſoil of the ſame nature with Piſaurum; bought by D. Frederick of Galeazzo Malateſte for thirteen hundred Florins of Gold. 5. Cabo or Cagli, on the Sea. 6. S. Leon, a good Town, and the chief of the Country of Montfeltre, which is a limb of this Dukedom. 7. Fano, not far from the Sea, an Epiſcopal City, and anciently belonging to the Church of Rome: of old times called Fanum fortunæ, from a Temple there erected to Goddeſs Fortune (Te facimus Fortuna deam, as the Poet hath it.) 8. Eugubium (now caclled Augubeo) a Town belonging to theſe Princes, but properly within the bounds of the Spoletan Dukedom; and there we ſhall hear further of it. Of the Caſtles the principal are Marivola, and the Rock of S. Leon, which were the laſt that held good for Duke Guido Vbaldo againſt Cæſar Borgia, Duke of Valentinoys, Son to Pope Alexander the ſixth; and the firſt which did return again under his obedience. For which cauſe when he fled the ſecond time from the ſaid Borgia, he diſmantled all his other Caſtles, as being more likely to admit than reſiſt the Invader; and theſe two laſt being very well fortified, he left to keep poſſeſſion of the Country for him.

Here is alſo within the limits of this Eſtate, the Dukedom of CAMERINO, an ancient and well peopled Town, of a ſtrong natural ſituation amongſt the Hills: an Eſtate holden of the Church by the noble Family of Varena, till the time of Pope Paul the third; when Julia di Varena the heir thereof, conveyed it by marriage unto Guido Vbaldi Duke of Vrbine. But the Pope pretending an Eſcheat for want of heirs males, made himſelf Maſter of it by force of Arms: and gave it to his Son Pitero Farneſi, whom afterwards with the conſent of the College of Cardinals he made Duke of Parma; and ſetled Camerino on the Church, as it ſtill continues.

As for the fortunes of this Country, it was anciently the habitation of the Senones; a Nation of the Ciſalpine Galls, who only had the honour of ſacking Rome, to which City it continued ſubject, till the declining of the Empire in the time of Honorius. They being rooted out at laſt (of which more in Lombardy) and the Country peopled with Roman or Latin Colonies, it followed the ſame fortunes with the reſt of Italy, till the time of Conradine, the laſt Duke of the Imperial Houſe of Schwaben, when Vrbine was firſt ſubdued by the Earls of Montfeltre, whoſe Succeſſors increaſing in power, added the Town and Territory of Eugubio to it. And in the buſtles betwixt Lewis of Bavaria the Emperour, and Pope Clement the ſixth, Anno 1345. Gelaſſo di Montfeltre held it by no other Title, but as the Empero's Vicegerents. This Family enjoyed it till the year 1444. by the Title only of Earls of Montfeltre, and Lords of Vrbine when Frederick Vbaldi, for his ſingular and ſurpaſſing valour, was by Pope Eugenius the fourth, created the firſt Duke hereof: to hold as Feudataries of the Church, and paying 2240 Crowns for an Annual quit-rent. A man of ſuch repute for all gallant qualities, that he was by King Henry the ſixth, made Knight of the Garter; in recompence of which high honour, the Engliſh to this day enjoy many priviledges in theſe Dominions. Guido Vbaldi this Duke's Son loſt his Eſtate to Cæſar Borgia; after whoſe death he did recover it again by the power and favour of Pope Julio the ſecond, to whom ſucceeded Franciſco Maria di Rovero, his Siſters Son, in whoſe Family it continued till now of late, as will appear by this enſuing Catalogue of The Dukes of Vrbine.

1444 1 Frederick Vbaldi, of the ancient Family de Montefeltre the firſt Duke of Vrbine, and one of the Knights of the honourable Order of the Garter.
2 Guido Vbaldi, Son of Frederick, for a while outed of this Dukedom by Cæſar Borgia. He was Knight alſo of the Garter.
3 Franciſco Maria di Rovero, Siſters Son and next heir to Guido Vbaldi, was in his own right Lord of Senogallia, and had Piſauro from the Pope in reward of his many ſervices done unto the Church; diſſeized for a while by Pope Leo the tenth.
4 Laurence de Medices, Father of Catharine di Medices the French Queen, and of Alexander the 1. Duke of Florence; was for a while made Duke of Vrbine by Pope Leo the 10th (being of that Family) but loſt it ſhortly after to Duke Franciſco, who after the death of Pope Leo, recovered his eſtates again, and died poſſeſſed of the Dukedom.
1538 5 Guido Vbaldi II. Son of Duke Franciſco.
6 Fanciſco Maria II. Son of Guido the 2*d*, whoſe line expired, it eſcheated not long ſince (for want of heirs males) to the Church of Rome.

The Revenues of this Dukedom were reckoned to have been 100000 Crowns per annum; but might have been raiſed to a greater ſum, had not the Dukes preferred the love and eaſe of their Subjects, before the filling of their own Coffers. He was able to raiſe 1200 good Souldiers out of this Eſtate; and more the people would ſupply, if they had occaſion. The Arms hereof Azure a Tower Argent, environed with Flower de Lyces Or.

4. MARCA ANCONITANA is bounded on the Weſt with the State of Vrbine; on the Eaſt with the River of Trontus, or Druentus, by which it is parted from Abruzzo; on the South with the Apennine Hills, by which parted from the Spoletan Dukedom; on the North with the Adriatick. The reaſon of the name we ſhall have anon.

It was formerly the dwelling of the Picentes, poſſeſſed all theſe parts on the Coaſts of the Adriatick, from the River Rubicon on the Eaſt, to that of Aufidus on the Weſt. For aiding the Tarentines their Allies, in their War againſt Rome, they were invaded and ſubdued by the Romans, A.V.C. 485. which was about five years before the firſt Punick War, under the conduct of Sempronius; at which time they were ſo great and multitudinous a Nation, that they weren umbred to amount to 3600000 which were then brought under the Command and Vaſſalage of the Roman Empire. When Italy was divided into no more then eight Regions, theſe Picentes only made up one; ſo did they alſo when divided into eleven. Afterwards, in the time of the Antonini, they made up one of the ſixteen Provinces, into which Italy was divided by thoſe Emperors; and the ſame repute it held in the time of Conſtantine, Picenum making always one: Aſculum caput gentis, as Florus calls it, which was the head of their nation, being the Metropolis of the Province.

Called in thoſe times Picenum Annonarium, partly by reaſon of the abundance of grain which it did produce; and partly to diſtinguiſh it from the dwelling of the Picentini, which from its nearneſs unto Rome, had the name of Picenum Suburbicarium; that part of Campania at this time, which is called the Principate. In the declining of the Empire, it was firſt called Marcha Firmiana, from Firmo: once a Roman Colony, and at that time of moſt importance in the Country; but by transferring the chief ſeat from Firmo to Ancona, in the time of the Lombards, it came to have the name of Anconitana. The chief Rivers, beſides thoſe named already, which are only borderers, are, 1. Chientus, 2. Sentinus, and 3. Potentia; all riſing in the Apennine, and paſſing with a ſwift courſe to the Adriatick Sea.

The chief Towns, 1. Ancona, ſeated on the Hill Cimmerius, ſhooting into the Sea, glorying in giving name to the Province, and her Haven built by Trajan the Emperor; one of the faireſt in the World, not ſo much for capacity, as the pleaſantneſs and beauty of it: the deſcents down unto the Water being made of Marble, and very delectable walking on all ſides of it. The City it ſelf is begirt with Hills, on one of which Pope Clement the ſeventh built a very ſtrong Caſtle. Anno 1532. under pretence of defending the Town againſt the Turks, but indeed to keep the people in more full ſubjection, who till that time, did yearly chooſe their own Magiſtrates, and lived according to their own Laws, like a Commonwealth. 2. Recanati (heretofore Ælia Recina,) ſeated upon the banks of the River Mulſio, renowned for the great concourſe of Merchants from all parts of Europe, at her Annual Marts; and a vein of the moſt excellent Wines. 3. Firmo, ſirnamed the Strong: in former times of moſt eſteem in all the Province which was hence called Marca Firmiana; and to this day, a place of great ſtrength and conſequence; and an Archbiſhops See. 4. Macerata, now of moſt credit, by reaſon that the Popes Legat keeps his reſidence there, and with him the Chancery for his Marquiſate. 5. Loretto, called in Latin Lauretana, a little City betwixt Recanati and the Sea; well fortified againſt the Turks, and other Pirates who once ſpoiled the ſame, and might be eaſily tempted thither on the like occaſions: The Church here being admirably rich, and frequented by Pilgrims from all parts, to pay their devotions unto our Lady of Loretto, and behold her Miracles. Concerning the removal of whoſe Chamber hither, in our deſcription of Paleſtine, you ſhall meet with a very proper Legend. 6. Aſeoli, ſirnamed the Fair, ſeated at the influx of the River Druentus, and on the furtheſt ſide of it towards Abruzzo, to which by ſome it is aſcribed. Anciently the chief City of the Picentes, as before is ſaid, and then called Aſculum, conquered by the Romans, under the conduct of Sempronius, A.V.C. 485. Nigh unto this City, was fought the ſecond Battel between C. Fabricius and the Romans on the one ſide, and Pyrrhus with the Epirots on the other; wherein the Victory (as Plutarch telleth us) fell to the King, having ſlain 6000 of his Enemies; but yet with ſuch loſs on his ſide alſo, that he affirmed to ſome of his Friends and followers, That ſuch another Victory would quite undo him; and with ſuch apparancy of valour and vertue in the Romans, that he could not but break forth into this acclamation; O quam facile eſſet orbem vincere, aut mihi, Romanis militibus, aut me rege, Romanis! This Town alſo was the ſeat of the War called Bellum ſociale, raiſed by the people of Italy againſt the Romans; Popedius being both Author of the Rebellion, and Captain. They for a while ſorely ſhaked the ſtate of Rome; but at laſt were vanquiſhed, and this Town by Strabo Pompeius forced and ſpoiled. 7. Adria, now not otherwiſe famous, than that it gave denomination to the adjoyning Sea, and the Emperor Adrian. 8. Humana, which together with Ancona, was given to Pope Zachary, by Luitprandus King of the Lombards, about the year 741. The ſucceeding Popes after the giving of this Inch, took the whole Ell.

5. Having ſurveyed the Provinces of the Church along the Adriatick, we muſt next croſs the Apennine, which parts the Marches of Ancona from the Dukedom of SPOLETO (DUCATO SPOLETANO the Italians call it) which takes up the Weſtern part of that Province, which the old Romans called Umbria: and therefore before we come to the deſcription of this, we muſt a little look on the ſtate of that. A Country bounded on the Eaſt with the River Aniene, dividing it from the Eaſt parts of Latium; on the Weſt with Tuſcia or Hetruria; on the North, with the Apennine; on the South, with the reaches or windings of the Tiber, the main body of Latium, and with that part of Tuſcany which is now called St. Peter's Patrimony. So called, becauſe being ſituate under the ſhade of the Apennine Hills, it was Regio Umbroſa. Some give another reaſon of it, and think that the Inhabitants were called Umbri, quaſi Ὄμβροι, as men that had eſcaped the Deluge; becauſe ſo ancient a people, that no body could tell the Original of them.

But whatſoever was the reaſon of the name, they were a ſtout and valiant people, and gave the firſt check to Annibal's career, after his great Victory at Thraſymene; repulſing him with loſs and ſhame from the Walls of Spoleto: yet not of power ſufficient, for all their valour, to preſerve their Country from the Tuſcans, who are ſaid to have deſtroyed in it 300 good Towns. Made by that means, if not plainly ſubject, yet ſo obnoxious to the will and pleaſure of the Victors, that at their inſtance or command they ſided with them in a War againſt the Romans (whom formerly they had found very quiet neighbours:) and by the Romans were ſubdued together with the reſt of the Confederates then in Arms againſt them, A. V. C. 458. Decius and Qu. Fabius then the fifth time Conſuls, which was about 77 years before Annibal fell into their Country. After which time in ſuch eſteem, that it was one of the eleven Regions into which Italy was divided by Auguſtus Cæſar; and finally, together with Tuſcia, made up a Province of the Empire.

As for the Dukedom of Spoleto, it taketh up the Weſtern parts of the Province of Umbria, as before was ſaid, included betwixt the Apennine, the Tiber, and the River Nar, by which laſt (now called Neara) it is divided from Sabinia, or the Land of the Sabines. The Country of a mixt nature, equally compoſed of very rough Hills, and yet moſt delectable Vallies; exceeding plentiful of all neceſſaries, and much commended heretofore for the extraordinary fœcundity of the Women. The Wine hereof is much commended by Martial, as the beſt of Italy.

> Malueris, quam ſi muſta Falerna bibas.

That is to ſay,

> If with Spoleta bottles once you meet,
> Say that Falerno Muſt is not ſo ſweet.

Places of greateſt note herein, 1. Spoletum, built partly on the Hill, and partly on the lower ground; the reſidence heretofore of one of the four Dukes of the Longobardians, who governed as Vice-roys, or Lord preſidents, of the remoter parts of that Kingdom: from whence the Country round about it, was called Ducato Spoletano. It is ſtill a Town of good eſteem, populous, and of handſom building; and hath a ſtrong Fortreſs for defence thereof, built upon the ruins of an old Amphitheatre: to which men paſs over a great Bridge of ſtone, upheld by 24 great Pillars, which joyns two Mountains together; having between them a deep Valley, but narrow and without any Water. Theodorick the Goth built a fair Palace in this City, ebuilt by Narſes, but ſince ruined. 2. Eugubium (now called Augubio) ſeated on the foot of the Apennine; in or near that place where anciently ſtood that City which Pliny calls Juginium; Ptolomy Iſuvium; utterly ſubverted by the Goths. A Town well ſeated in a fruitful and wealthy ſoil, and bleſſed with an induſtrious people: acknowledging the Dukes of Vrbine for Lords thereof, till that eſtate was ſwallowed up into the Popedom. 3. Nuceria, (now Nocera) in Pliny's time called Alfatenia, at the foot alſo of the Appennine; the people of which in former times much traded in their wooden veſſel. 4. Aſſiſium, or Aſiſe, deſtroyed almoſt to nothing in the Civil Wars of Italy, and only famous at this time, for a See Epiſcopal, and being the birth-place of St. Francis; the Founder of the Franciſcans, or Cordeliers, as the French call them, but we in England the Grave-Friers. 5. Citta de Caſtello, anciently Tipherdum, on the banks of Tiber. 6. Tudertum, now called Todi, ſeated near the Tiber, on the declivity of a rich and fruitful Hill.

the reſt of Umbria towards the Eaſt, not being within the compaſs of the Spoletane Dukedom, but under the command of the Popes of Rome, is by late Writers called SABINIA, becauſe the dwelling in times paſt, of the ancient Sabins: who being taken into Rome, and made Free Denizens of that City in the time of Romulus, upon the League concluded betwixt him and Tatius, then the King of this people, for a long time lived under the protection of that mighty City. But after joyning with the Latins in a War againſt it, they were ſubdued by Curius Dentatus the Roman Conſul, and made a ſubject Province of that common-wealth, A. V. C. 463. But though the Sabines, at this time bare away the name, yet were they not ſole Maſters of it in theſe elder times; the greateſt part hereof being poſſeſſed by ſome Nations of the Umbri, whom by a general name they called Vilumbri (the Sabines interjected betwixt them and Rome) and as a member of that body, ſubdued together with the reſt of the Umbri by the conquering Romans. Afterwards in the diviſion of Italy made by Antoninus, it was called Nurſia; and in that made by Conſtantine, it was contained within the new Province of Valeria; Reate being the Metropolis, or head City of both. A Territory of no great circuit, but abundantly fruitful in Oyl or Olives, Vines and Fig-trees: watered with the River Farfarus, which cutteth through the very midſt of it; and with the Lake called anciently Lacus Velinus (now Laco di Pedeluco) eſteemed to be the Centre or Navel of Italy by ſome ancient Writers; the waters of which are of ſuch a nature, that in ſhort time they will cloath a piece of wood with a coat of ſtone, and yet yieldeth excellent Trouts, and other good Fiſh. The Towns and Cities of moſt note, are, 1. Reate (now called Reite) an ancient City, and the Metropolis heretofore of all this Tract; as well when it was called Nurſia, as when it was under the name of Valeria. 2. Nurſia, a City no leſs ancient, ſeated amongſt the Hills, which for the moſt part are covered with ſnow; from which Town, being heretofore of more reputation, the province of Nurſia, ſpoken of in the Itinerary of Antoninus, took denomination. 3. Magliano, a pleaſant and well-peopled Town, at this time the principal of this Territory. 4. Ocriculum, built amongſt many Fruitful Hills, a mile from Tiber. 5. Narnia, the Country and Birth-place of the Emperor Nerva, the firſt of all the Emperours not born in Rome, as after him there were few born in it. The ſoyl about it is of ſo different and ſtrange a nature, that it is ſaid to be made dirty by the Sun and Winds, and duſty by Rain: the City well-peopled, and a Biſhops See, ſeated upon a very ſteep and craggy Hill, not far from the River Nar (now Negro) from which perhaps it took the name. A City given unto the Church of Rome by Luitprandus, King of the Lombards; of which the Popes of Rome having got poſſeſſion, never left practiſing til they had got into their power all the reſt of the Country. Little elſe famous in the whole Region of Umbria, but that in the Weſtern part thereof, is the Lake called Lacus Vademonius, near to Ameria, now called Amelia, a Town of the Dukedom, where Dolobella overthrew ſuch of the Senones, a valiant Nation of the Galls, as had eſcaped the Sword of Camillus, Quinctius, Curius, and other fortunate Commanders in the Wars againſt them; Ne quis extaret in ea gente (ſaith the Hiſtorian) qui incenſam a ſe Romam gloriaretur: a former ſlaughter being made of them by Camillus, on the banks of Aniene, the Eaſtern limit of theſe Umbri.

5. S. PETERS PATIMONIE, properly and ſpecially ſo called, is that part of Tuſcanie which appertains unto the Church; bounded upon the Eaſt with Tiber, which divides it from Latium, or Campagna di Roma: on the Weſt, with the River Piſeo, which falleth into the Sea near the Mountain of Argentario and parteth it from the eſtate of the great Duke of Tuſcanie; on the North, with the Apennine, and the Spoletan Dukedom on the South, with the Tuſcan or Tyrrhenian Sea. It took this new name preſently on the donation of the Counteſs Mathildis, who gave it for ever unto the Church, An. 110. (Paſchal the ſecond ſitting in the Chair of Rome) to be the Patrimony of S. Peter, and his ſucceſſors in that See. A Country not inferior unto any in Italy, for the fertility of the ſoyl: but for the moſt part of an unhealthy Air, by reaſon of the frequent overflowings of Tiber, and the thick woods which hinder that the winds cannot purge and cleanſe it.

The principal Cities, and places of moſt obſervation, air 1. Perugia, formerly called Peruſia; a famous Town; in which Auguſtus beſieged L. Antonius the brother, and Fulvia the wife of M. Antony the Triumvir, who when they had in vain attempted to ſeduce Rome from his party, repaired to this City; which alſo at the laſt, yielded to the more fortunate Emperor. Auguſtus afterwards, having much adorned and beautified it, cauſed it to be called Auguſta; but it returned not long after, to its ancient name. It is ſeated very pleaſantly on the banks of Tiber, not far from the Apennine, in a very rich and fruitful ſoil; well built both for the publick and private ſtructures; a Biſhops See and made an Univerſity, An. 1090. In the diſtructions of Italy betwixt the Emperours and the Popes, this City was ſeized on by the Baillons, who held it as Vicars of the Church. The Oddies, an oppoſite faction to them, having got together a ſtrong party of Malecontents, ſo ſuddenly entered one night into the City, that the Baillons began to fly: nor was there any thing to hinder them from being Maſters of the Palace, but the Chain which was drawn croſs the Gate. One of the Souldiers going about to cut this Chain, and wanting room to wield his arm, cryed aloud, Give back; which words being heard, but not well underſtood by thoſe furtheſt off, put them to their heels; and the foremoſt, which thought they fled not for nothing, ran away too. So the City was ſaved. 2. Orvieto, ſeated on ſo high a Rock, that it is no ſmall Terrour to look down from the top of it, into the vallies beneath; in which there is a Church of a wondrous lightneſs, and yet the Windows of the ſame (if we may credit Adrianus who reports it) are made of Alabaſter, inſtead of Glaſs. 3. Viterbo, famous for the long reſidence of the Popes, at ſuch time as they were affronted by the Roman-Senators. 4. Civitas Vecchia (called anciently Centumcellæ) the only uſeful Haven that belongeth to Rome; which being ruined by the Saracens, was rebuilt by the Popes, new named, and fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle for the defence of their Shipping. 5. Porto, ſeated on the mouth of Tiber, over againſt Oſtia; but cannot make one good Haven betwixt them both; a Biſhops See, who is one of the ſeven Cardinals which is always aſſiſtant to the Pope. 6. Farneſe, the ancient Seat and Patrimony of the Farneſi's, now Dukes of Parma. 7. Bracciano, which gives the title of a Duke to a branch of the Vrſins, a well-known Family of thoſe parts. 8. Bacchano, near the laſt in ſound, although not in ſite: compaſſed round about with Hills in form of a Theatre, having a fair Lake in the midd'ſt; out of which runneth the River Cremera, neer which the Fabii were ſlain.

Here was in this Country alſo the City of the Veii, affirmed to be as big as Athens, but queſtionleſs of great wealth and power; in a War againſt which, managed for the moſt part by the aforeſaid Fabii, 306 of them were ſlain in a day, at the Battel of Cremera, a petit River of the Tuſcans: only one little child of them being left at home, who reſtored the houſe; and was the Anceſtor of that Fabius Maximus who preſerved Italy, in the wars with Annibal. Of which great ſlaughter, thus ſaith Ovid.

————Veientibus Arvis
Ter centum Fabii, ter cecidere duo.

———On the Veientine Plain
Three hundred and ſix Fabii were ſlain.

This City of the Veii was at laſt after a ten-years ſiege taken by Furius Camillus; and by him levelled with the earth; becauſe he found that the common people of Rome had a mind to leave their own City, and inhabit here. Here is alſo that fatal River of Allia, nigh unto which Brennus and his Galls, (that people, as ſhall be ſhown hereafter, having 200 years before been drawn into Italy, by the ſweet taſte of the Italian Wines) ſlaughtered the Romans: the Roman Army at that time conſiſting of 40000 Souldiers, moſt of them being raw and unexperienced; the Galls not more in number, but naturally of a more fierce and hardy courage, and withal ſo big-boned, that it ſeemeth they were born to be the terrour of mankind, and the ruin of Cities. Which overthrow at Allia, and the vanquiſhment of the Fabii, hapning in one day, though in divers years, occaſioned the old Romans to put that day among thoſe unfortunate days, on which they never did attempt any buſineſs of importance. The like cuſtom, whether on ſuperſtition, or fear of ill-luck, is uſed by many Chriſtans; and eſpecially on Childermas-day: on which Philip de Comines telleth us: that Lewis the 11. uſed not to debate of and matter, but accounted it a ſign of ſome great miſfortune towards him, if any man communed with him of his affairs; and would be marvellouſly diſpleaſed with thoſe that were near him, if they troubled him with any matter whatſoever. In this particular, little leſs ſuperſtitious (if not more) than the ancient Romans. And finally, here is the famous Lake called Thraſymene (now Lago di Perugia, from the nearneſs of it to that City) where Annibal ſlew Flaminius the Conſul, and 15000 of his Romans: which fight continued three hours, with ſo great an eagerneſs, that the Souldiers perceived not a terrible Earthquake which at that time happened.

6. CAMPAGNA di ROMA, containeth that part of Italy, which anciently was called Latium, the habitation of the Latins, and ſeat of Rome; ſo called, for that it is adjoyning to that famous City, as the more proper Territory, and precinct thereof. It is ſometimes alſo called Campania nova, to difference it from Campania properly ſo called; the ſeat and dwelling of the Campans. It is bounded on the Eaſt with the ſaid Campania, from which it is parted by the River Azofenus; on the Weſt, with Tiber; on the North with Vmbria, or the now Ducato Spoletano, and Sabinia; and on the South, with the Tyrrenian, or Tuſcan Sea: and came unto the Popes by no other Title, than as they had the Soveraignty and poſſeſſion of the City of Rome, to which it always did belong.

The old Inhabitants were the Latins, as before is ſaid, but ſubdivided into many petit and inferiour Tribes, ſuch as the Æqui, Volſci, Fidenates, and others of as little note, to the number of thirty, all vanquiſhed piece-meal by the Romans, firſt under the conduct of their Kings, and then of their Conſuls and Dictators. Broken at laſt by L. Quintius the Dictator, A. V. C. 295. they became aſſociates with the Romans, and ſo continued for the ſpace of 100 years and upwards. But growing inſolent on the ſack of that City by the Galls, and impudently requiring that one Conſul yearly ſhould be choſen by and from themſelves, they drew the Romans into Arms: by whom ſubdued under the leading of Manlius Torquatus, and Decius Mus, then Conſuls, A. V. C. 413. Subject from that time forwards to the ſtate of Rome, but enjoying greater priviledges than the reſt of the conquered Nations did; excepting ſuch to whom the like were granted by eſpecial favour.

The chief place of it in old times was the City of Alba, then the Seat-Royal of the Latin, or Sylvian Kings, ruined by Tullus Hoſtillius the third King of Rome, in which War Rome and Alba being laid at the ſtake, the whole action was committed by the Romans to the Horatii; to the Curatii, by the Albans, being three Brethren of each ſide; in which it hapened that two of the Horatii were firſt ſlain, and the third counterfeiting a flight ſevered his enemies, and ſo ſlew them; whereby the Albans ever after became ſubject to Rome. 2. Lavinium, built by Æneas in honour of his Wife Lavinia. 3. Antium, honoured many times with the ſeat and retirement of the Emperors: the Country round about affording variety of Recreations. The people once very ſtrong in ſhipping till the taking of the Town by Mevius a Roman Conſul, who having broke their Forces at Sea, brought with them into Rome the Beaks of their Ships and other Veſſels, with which he decked and beautified the Pulpit for Orations (in the common Forum,) which have generally ever ſince been called Roſtra. This was the chief City of the ancient Volſci, a people very ſtrong in ſhipping though without an Haven: afterwards much frequented by the principal Romans in their retirements from the City, ſo that for pompous and ſtately buildings it might compare with any other. Out of the ruins of this Town long ago deſtroyed, ſprang the new City called Neptunum, ſituate on a Rock near unto the Sea, the ſteepneſs of which gives it natural ſtrength enough; and yet it is fortified beſides with two ſtrong Caſtles, ſurveying the Sea, and commanding the ſhore. 4. Ardea, the chief Town of the Rutuli, and ſeat of Turnus, the Rival and Competitour of Æneas: afterwards taken by Superbus the laſt King of the Romans; to which when the Galls had taken Rome, the miſerable Citizens were compelled to fly. 5. Gabbi, taken alſo by the ſame Superbus, whoſe Son Sextus counterfeiting ſome diſlike of his Fathers cruelties, fled to the Gabii, by whom improvidently entruſted with the command of their City, which he betrayed unto the Romans. 6. Oſtia, anciently the Port-Town to Rome, built at the mouth of Tiber, by Ancus Martius, the IV. King of Rome; but the Haven hath been long ſince dammed up, to ſtop the paſſage of the enemies Ships unto the City. The Biſhop of this Town uſeth to conſecrate the Pope. 7. Præneſte, firſt, conquered by the Romans under Qu. Concinnatus the Dictator. Nothing ſo much endamaged this City as its natural and artificial Fortifications: for when the Romans in the times of ſedition abandoned the Town, they uſed to make this place their refuge. Among others Marius the younger made it the ſeat of War, againſt L. Sylla: but perceiving the unſucceſsfulneſs of his affairs, here killed himſelf; and Sylla entring it as Conquerour, put 12000 of the Citizens to the Sword. It hath ſince been ſo often ſacked, that it is very ſhort now of its former luſtre; but ſtill it holds the reputation of a Biſhops See. 8. Tibur, an ancient City alſo, and ſeated in a healthy Air. It is now called Tivoli, where there is a Fountain, which with artificial Engins moved with Water, repreſenteth the notes of divers Birds. A device very rare (it ſeemeth) in the time of Adrianus, who reporteth it; but now grown ordinary. In the perfection of which Art, as almoſt all Civil Nations may pretend a ſhare; ſo I conceive that the priority herein doth belong of right unto the French: whoſe Maſter-pieces in this kind do far exceed the reſt of Europe. For in the Kings houſe at St. Germains, ſeven miles from Paris (if it be lawful for me to digreſs a little on this Argument) one may behold the Statua of a Nymph, ſitting before a pair of Organs: whoſe fingers by the help of Water, are taught to manage the keys in ſo due an order, and the inſtrument to yield ſuch a Muſick to it, as comes exceeding near the Organ, if it be not the ſame; her head in the mean time jolting from one ſhoulder to another, like an old Fidlers at a Wake; there being alſo not far off, the counterfeits of divers Mills, who very buſily plyed their work till the Muſick ſounded, and then ſtood ſtill as if inchanted with the noiſe. In another place, upon the drawing of a Curtain, one may ſee two Titrons riding on their Dolphins, in a Sea of Water; each of them with a ſhell in his hand, which interchangeably and in turns ſerved in ſtead of Trumpets. In a third, the ſtory of Perſeus and Andromeda moſt lively acted; and in a fourth, Orpheus in ſylvis poſitus, Orpheus playing on a Viol, the Trees moving, and the wild Beaſts dancing in two rings about him, by the artificial guidance of the Waters only; the pretty Birds in every place ſo chirping out their ſeveral and reſpective notes, that the hearer would conceive himſelf to be in ſome pleaſant Grove. But it is time to go from Tivoli to 9. Velitri (called anciently Velitræ, and then a City of the Volſci) famous for the Birth of the Emperor Auguſtus, and the dwelling of the Octaviau Family; a place moſt delectably ſeated amongſt the Vines; which yields as rich Wines as moſt in Italy. 10. Anxur, ſo called of the Temple which was here dedicated to Jupiter; ſurnamed Anxurus, that is, Beardleſs; firſt built by the Spartans, who flying from the ſeverity of Lycurgus his Laws, did here ſeat themſelves, after a Colony of the Volſci, and at laſt of the Romans. But this Town being deſtroyed by the tyranny of time, there ſtarteth up 11. Taracina in the place thereof, ſeated upon a Mountain, but near the Sea, which it embraceth like a half Moon (it is now called the Bay of Mola:) this City lying on the one horn thereof, in the very extremity of the Popes Dominions; and that of Cajeta on the other, which is the firſt Port-Town of the Realm of Naples. The Country hereabouts hath moſt pleaſant Orchards, of Citrons, Oranges, and Limons; the Oranges having at the ſame time both ripe and Green Fruits, and repreſents a kind of Summer in the dead of Winter.

Such other things as are remarkable in this Campagna (heretofore called Latium) but more by what they have been, than they are at the preſent, are 1. Tuſculum, a Village which belongeth to Tully, who here compoſed his excellent Book, called the Tuſculan Queſtions. 2. Formiæ, built by the Laconians, heretofore the delight and ſolace of the ancient Romans, now viſible only in its ruins. 3. Privernum, once the chief City of the Volſci, and the ſeat of Camilla, a noble Amazonian Lady; who aided Turnus the Rutulian, in his ſharp War againſt Æneas and the Trojans, where ſhe loſt her life. 4. Circe, an old City (in the place whereof now ſtands S. Felix) the habitation of Circe, that ſo much celebrated Sorcereſs; of whom, and her chanting of Ulyſſes and his companions, there is ſo much upon record, in the ancient Poets. Near to which is the head-land called the Circæan Promontory, the repercuſſion of the Waves by whoſe Southern Baſis makes a dreadful noiſe; and gave occaſion to the fabulous inventions of the roaring of Lions, howling of Dogs, &c. which were heard about that Witches dwelling.

But the great glory of Latium, and indeed not of Italy only but of all the World, was, that the famous City of ROME was ſeated in it, being built on the Eaſt ſide of Tiber; now much inlarged by the increaſe of 42 leſſer ſtreams or Rivers. It is diſtant from the Sea about 15 miles, firſt built, as Fryer Leander a great Italian Antiquary is of opinion, by Roma Daughter or Wife to one of the Latin Kings. But being forſaken and forlorn, by reaſon of the unwholſom Air coming from the Fens, was rebuilt by Romulus, much pleaſed with the natural ſtrength of the ſituation; and therefore like to make a good Town of War. And this tradition I ſhould rather ſubſcribe unto, than that it was called Rome from Romulus; who had he pleaſed to challenge the honour to himſelf, might better have cauſed it to be called Romulea (of which name there was a Town among the Samnites) than to call it Roma. But whatſoever greatneſs it did after come to, it was ſmall enough (God knows) at firſt; the City comprehending the Mount Palatine only, and therefore not a mile in compaſs; the Territory not extending as Strabo witneſſeth, above ſix miles from the City; and the Inhabitants thereof at the firſt general Muſter, amounting at the moſt to 3300 men. So inconſiderable they were as well in quality as numbers, that their Neighbours thought it a diſparagement to beſtow their Daughters on them; and therefore they were fain to get themſelves Wives by a ſlight of wit: proclaiming ſolemn Plays and Paſtimes to be held in Rome, and raviſhing the Women which came thither to behold the ſports. The Kings ſucceeding much inlarged it. Mount Aventine, and the hill Janiculum on the other ſide of the Water, being walled and added to it by Ancus Martius; as Quirinalis, Eſquilinus, and Viminalis, were by Servius Tullus; Capitolinus and Mount Cœlius, came not in till afterwards. But at the laſt it was improved to ſuch an height, that in the flouriſhing times of that Common-wealth, the men encreaſed to the number of 463000, and the compaſs of the Town unto 50 miles; there being on and about the walls 740 Turrets. And in this number of 463000 men, I reckon neither Servants, Women, nor Children, but men able to bear Arms; Free-Denizens, and ſuch as were inrolled into Cenſe, or the Subſidie-Books. To which if we ſhould add their Wives, Children, and Servants, we cannot probably conjecture them to have been fewer than three or four Millions: and ſo Lipſius is of opinion, in his Tract de Magnitudine Romana. The moſt memorable buildings of it, were firſt the Capitol, founded by Tarquinius Superbus, and beautified with the ſpoils of their conquered Neighbours; ſaved from the fury of the Galls by the cackling of Geeſe. Tacitus calleth this houſe, Sedem Jovis optimi maximi, auſpicatò à majoribus pignus imperii conditum. It was twice burnt, once in the Civil Wars of Sylla and Marius; and again in the Wars of Veſpaſian and Vitellius. In the third building of it, Veſpaſian carried the firſt basket of Earth; after him the Nobility did the like, to make the people more forward in the ſervice: and perhaps the cuſtome of laying the firſt ſtone in a building, or driving the firſt nail in a timber-work, by him whoſe edifice it is; hath, from hence, if not beginning, yet growth. 2. Here was the Temple of Janus open in the time of wars, and ſhut in the time of peace; which, during all their Monarchy, hapned but thrice: namely during the reign of Auguſtus, after the firſt Punick War, and in the time of Numa. 3. Here was the Bridge called Pons Sublicius, on which Horatius Cocles reſiſted the whole Army of King Porſena, Tarquin, and the Tuſcans; till the Citizens behind had broken down the bridge, received him ſwiming to the bank with joyful acclamations, and ſaved their City from preſent ruin. Here lived the famous Warriers, ſo much renowned in the ſtories of elder times; here flouriſhed the exact Martial diſcipline, ſo memorized by ancient Hiſtoriographers: and finally, here were laid up the ſpoils and Trophies of all Europe.

ROME, as now it ſtandeth lower on the bank of Tiber upon Campus Martius, (where it was built after the inundation of the Goths and Vandals) is in compaſs about eleven miles, within which compaſs is not a little waſte ground. The Inhabitants of all ſorts reckoned to amount to 200000, two parts whereof are Clergymen and Courtiers; that is to ſay, ſuch as have their dependance on the Court of Rome, either by holding Offices and places of employment under the Popes, or by attending on his perſon, or waiting on the Cardinals and eminent Prelates who are there abiding; or otherwiſe being of the retinue of ſuch foreign Ambaſſadors as are always commorant in the City, to follow the Negotiations of their ſeveral Maſters, all which muſt needs amount to a very great number. It was firſt built on the Eaſt-ſide of the River in the Territory of Latium, but now there is little left of the old City but the goodly ruins; and here and there ſome Churches and ſcattered houſes (except it be a little on the North-Eaſt of the River, from the Gate called Del populo, to the Iſland of Tiber): the reſt, eſpecially towards South, being taken up with paſtures and fields of Corn. The main body of the City, as now it ſtands is on the Weſt-ſide of the water, and the Holy Iſland, conſiſting of three diſtinct parts or members. Of theſe the leaſt is that which they call La Iſola, but anciently the Holy Iſland; firſt made an Iſland by the Corn, Straw, and other goods of the Tarquins, which the Senate not vouchſafing to convert to any publick or private uſe, commanded to be flung into the River; where it ſunk and ſetled to an Iſland, called afterwards the Holy Iſland, from a Temple herein built unto Æſculapius, brought hither from Epidaurus, in the ſhape of a Serpent. This Iſland is not above a quarter of a mile in length, and hardly half ſo much in breadth: but full of ſtately Churches and beautiful houſes. Next to this is that which they call Traſtavere, or Tranſ-Tiberina; but of old Janiculo, from the Mountain of that name included in it: Called alſo Civitas Ravennatium, or the City of the men of Ravenna, of the Souldiers which Auguſtus kept at Ravenna againſt Antonius; and after placed in this out-part of the City, which by reaſon of the unwholſomneſs of the air, is inhabited only by Artizans and poor people; yet compaſſed about with walls, except on that ſide next the water, and adorned with many goodly Churches and ſome handſom buildings. But the chief glory of the City conſiſteth in that part of it which is called Il Borgo, lying on the North ſide of the other, but diſ-joyned from it; compaſſed about with walls by Pope Leo the 4. and from thence called Civitas Leonina. For in this part there are, 1. the Church of S. Peter, which were it once finiſhed, would be one of the rareſt buildings in all the World. 2. The Caſtle of S. Angelo, impregnable unleſs by Famine. 3. The Popes Palace, called Belvidere, which with the Gardens thereof was compaſſed about with a very high wall, by Pope Nicolas the 5. And had his name from the fair proſpect which it hath: in the ſame ſence, as Belvoir Caſtle here in England, the Barony and Manſion of the Earls of Rutland. A Palace of magnificence and receipt enough. 4. The Library of the Hill Vatican, properly called the Palatine, but more commonly the Vatican Library: a Library firſt founded by Sixtus the 4. who not only ſtored it with the choiceſt Books he could pick out of Europe; but allowed alſo a large revenue for the perpetual augmentation of it. Bibliothecam Palatinam in Vaticano, toto terrarum orbe celebrem, advectis ex omni Europa libris conſtruxit; proventuſq; certos, &c. So Onuphrius. When the Duke of Burbon ſacked Rome, Anno 1527. it was much defaced and ranſacked; but by the ſucceeding Popes it hath been again recovered to its former fame, and beauty. Rome is now an Univerſity, which was founded by Urban the fourth, at whoſe requeſt Thomas Aquinas profeſſed here. Pope Nicolas the fifth was a ſpecial benefactor to the ſame; and after him, Leo the tenth, who revived the Greek Learning and Language, which were in theſe parts almoſt forgotten. And finally, to this place are brought all the treaſures of thoſe parts of Chriſtendom ſubject to the Popes authority: partly for the expence of ſtrangers, which do there remain on their ſeveral pleaſures or occaſions; and partly for the expeditions which are there obtained, for the Inveſtitures of Biſhopricks, and Buls of Benefices, Indulgences and other matters of Court-holy-water; and partly in the Penſions, which are paid there to the Cardinals and other Miniſters of thoſe Kings and Princes, which know beſt how to make their ends of the Popes ambitions. So that it may be truly ſaid, there came not more Tributes into old-Rome from the conquered Provinces, than hath been brought into the New from the ſubject Churches, which have ſubmitted to the power of the Roman Prelates: and that they have as great command now under the pretence of Religion, as ever they had formerly by force of Arms. So truly was it ſaid by Proſper of Aquitane, (if memory fail not)

Roma caput mundi, quicquid non poſſidet Armis,
Religione tenet,—————

That is to ſay,

What Rome ſubdu'd not with the Sword.
She holds by colour of the Word.

But yet there wants the Genius of the ancient City, the power and natural courage of the old Inhabitants, which held the ſame againſt the bravery and aſſaults of all foreign Enemies: this City during the time of the ancient Romans, being never took but by the Galls; but ſince Pontifical, it hath been made a Prey to all Barbarous Nations, and never was beſieged by any that did not take it. In a word, the City of Rome as now it ſtandeth, is but the carkaſs of the old, of which it retains nothing but the ruins; and the cauſe of them, her ſins.

The Popes do much brag of the foundation of their Church, and the authority of St. Peter; whoſe being there is indeed conſtantly atteſted by moſt ancient Writers; inſomuch that Calvin, though no friend to the Popes of Rome, yet propter Scriptorum conſenſum, in regard of the unanimous conſent of the primitive times, did not think fit to controvert it. The ſilence of the Scriptures is a Negative Argument, and concludes nothing to the contrary; againſt ſo great a Cloud of unqueſtioned Witneſſes, as ſoberly and poſitively have affirmed the ſame. And yet I would not have it thought by the captious Romaniſts, that I conceive that it makes any thing at all for the Pope's Supremacy, becauſe he ſits in Peter's ſeat: no more than it did make for Vibius Rufus (as Dion doth relate the ſtory) to attain Tully's eloquence, or Cæſar's power, becauſe he married Tully's Widow, and bought Cæſar's Chair: though the poor Gentleman did befool himſelf with this opinion, that he ſhould be Maſter of them both. Of which ſee Lib. LVII. And yet the Popes relie ſo much upon this fancy, of being the direct heirs of St. Peter, and all his preheminencies, that all things which they ſay or do, muſt be entituled to St. Peter. Their Throne muſt be St. Peter's Chair, their Church St. Peter's Ship, their Lands St. Peter's Patrimony, their Tributes and Exactions muſt be called Peter-pence, their Excommunications fulminated in St. Peter's name; and all their Buls and Faculties ſealed Annulo Piſcatoris, with St. Peter's Signet. Nay, they went ſo far at the laſt, that Pope Steven not being contented to be Peter's Succeſſor, did take upon him in plain tearms to be Peter himſelf. For being diſtreſſed by Aſtulphus King of the Lombards, he ſends for aid unto King Pepin in this following ſtile. Petrus Apoſtles JESU CHRISTI, &c. i. e. Peter the Apoſtle of JESUS CHRIST, to you the moſt Illuſtrious King Pepin, and to all Biſhops, Abbots, &c. I the Apoſtle Peter, whoſe adopted ſons you are, admoniſh that you preſently come and defend this City, &c. And doubt you not, but truſt aſſuredly, that I my ſelf, as if I ſtood before you, do thus exhort you, &c. And that I Peter the Apoſtle of God, will at the laſt day yield you mutual kindneſſes, and prepare you Tabernacles in the Heavens. Baronius who records this Letter, Anno 755. numb. 17. was, it ſeems, pretty well perſwaded of it, that the Pope and Peter were all one. For in his Exhortation or Paræneſis to the State of Venice, being then upon ſome differences with Pope Paul the fifth, he ſtileth him in plain tearms thus, Paulus idemque Petrus vicem Chriſti agens in terris, i. e. Paul, who is alſo Peter, and Chriſts Vicegerent, &c. But leaving theſe imaginary claims and challenges of St. Peter's priviledges, though they did really advance the reputation of that See in the darker Ages two things there were which did exceedingly conduce to the improvement of their power, in the more knowing and diſcerning times of Chriſtianity. Of which the principal, was, the Orthodoxy of the Biſhops or Popes of Rome, their eminent and ſincere profeſſion of the Faith of Chriſt; when almoſt all the other Churches were either torn in pieces by the fury of Schiſm, or waſted and ſubverted by the fraud of Hereſie. In which regard, Appeals were frequently made to the Church of Rome, as a more competent Judge of the truth of Doctrine; the communion of it much deſired by all true Chriſtians; and a repair thither for relief and ſhelter in the times of trouble, made by the Orthodox Profeſſors under perſecution. And of theſe times, and this condition of that Church, we are to underſtand ſuch paſſages of the Ancient Writers, as magnifie the Faith of the Church of Rome, and ſet it above all the batteries and aſſaults of Hereſie. Such is that paſſage of St. Cyprian, Romanos eſſe ad quos perfidia non poteſt habere acecſſum, lib. 1. ep. 3. and that of Hierome, Romanam fidem (i. e. Romanorum fidem) Apoſtolica voce laudatam, ejuſmodi præſtigias non recipere, in Apol. cont Ruffin. and many others of that kind. Which paſſages it were as fooliſh and ridiculous to apply to all following times; the condition of that Church being different, from what then it was; as to accommodate all thoſe Elogies and commendations to the preſent City of Rome; which the Orators and Panegyriſts of the elder times have hyperbolically aſcribed to old Rome in her greateſt glories. The next was the fixation of the Popes in the Metropolis, or Imperial City; which drawing to it ſuch a multitude of ſuiters and attendants from all parts of the world, could not but add much to the power and reputation of thoſe Prelates, who had the happineſs and honor to be reſident there: and thereby opportunity to gain more Diciples to ſolve more doubts of conſcience, and decide more controverſies, than any other could expect. And ſo we are to underſtand that paſſage in St. Irenæus, in which he ſaith, Ad hanc Eccleſiam propter potentiorem Principalitatem, neceſſe eſt omnem convenire Eccleſiam, i. e. eos qui ſunt undiq; Eccleſiæ. And ſo they did as long as Rome enjoyed the honour of a more potent Principality than other Cities. But when that more potent Principality failed to be at Rome, by the removal of the Imperial See, firſt to Conſtantinople, and afterwards unto Ravenna, then did the Biſhops of Conſtantinople and Ravenna, diſpute with thoſe of Rome for Superiority; the chief ſeat of Religion moſt commonly following the ſeat of the Empire. And in this claim the Patriarch or Biſhop of Conſtantinople prevailed ſo far, that with the permiſſion of Mauritius the Emperor, he took upon him the title of Univerſal Patriarch. Gregory the Great (of whom it is ſaid that he was the worſt Biſhop of all that went before him, and the beſt of all that came after him) was at that time Biſhop of Rome: who ſharply inveighed as well againſt the Emperor, as the Patriarch of Conſtantinople, for this Title, and plainly maintained, that whoſoever called himſelf Univerſal Biſhop, was the forerunner of Antichriſt. As for himſelf it is probable that he took the title of Servus ſervorum Dei, more in oppoſition to him of Conſtantinople, than with an intent to be ſo truly. To which though thoſe of Rome reply that Gregory did not abſolutely condemn this Title, but only blamed John the Conſtantinopolitan Patriarch, for aſſuming to himſelf that attribute, which properly belonged to the See of Rome; yet this cannot be. For then either in the old Buls of the former Popes, we ſhould find mention of this Title; or elſe Pope Gregory would have aſſumed it to himſelf, that the world might take notice to whom of right it did belong. But Boniface, who next but one ſucceeded Gregory, having further aims applied himſelf to Phocas that bloody Tyrant: who having murthered the Emperor Mauritius, his Wife and Children, and thereby got the general hatred of all the good Subjects of the Empire, the better to aſſure himſelf of Italy, which he feared was ready to revolt, declared this Boniface to be the Oecumenical Biſhop, and Head of the Church. To ſuch a good beginning, ſuch a gracious Patron do the Popes ſtand indebted for that power and Empire, which now they challeng to themſelves over all the Church

Now as the Biſhop of Conſtantinople, and Ravenna, did challenge a priority or precedency, of the Popes of Rome; by reaſon that they were reſpectively honoured with the Seat Imperial; ſo were there divers other Biſhops, as Antioch, Alexandria, Carthage, Millain, which claimed claimed an equality with them; and would by no means yield them any ſuperiority. For trial of whoſe claim, we muſt look back on ſomewhat which hath been ſaid before; where it is ſhown, that the Roman Empire was divided into fourteen Dioceſes; each Dioceſe being ſubdivided into ſeveral Provinces; each Province comprehending many ſeveral Cities: then, that in every of thoſe Cities, where the Romans had their Defenſores, the Chriſtians alſo had a Biſhop: in the Metropolis of each Province, which commonly was the ſeat of the Roman Preſident, the Chriſtians had their Metropolitan; and that in each principal City of each ſeveral Dioceſe, wherein the Vicar of that Dioceſe had fixed his dwelling, there did the Chriſtians place a Primate. And this was done according to that famous Maxim of Optatus, Reſpublica non eſt in Eccleſia, ſed Eccleſia eſt in Republica, that the Church is in the Common-wealth; and not the Common-wealth in the Church. Upon which foundation the Fathers in the Counſel of Chalcedon, raiſed this ſuperſtructure, Ἐκκλησιαστικὰς τὴν τάξιν, &c. that the honours of the Church ſhould he accommodated unto thoſe in State. So that according to this Platform, the Primates of the Church were of equal power, each of them limited and reſtrained to his proper Sphere; out of the which if he preſume once to act, he moved irregularly, and in his Eccentricks. And for thoſe Primates, I ſhall give you once for all, this general Muſter, that is to ſay, the Patriarch or Pope of Rome, for the Dioceſe or Præfecture of that City; the Primate or Archbiſhop of Millain, for the Dioceſe of Italy; of Syrmium, for that of Illyricum; of Lyons, for that of France; of York, for Britain; Toledo, for Spain; and of Carthage, for Africk. Then for the Eaſt parts of the Empire, there was the Patriarch of Alexandria, for the Dioceſe of Egypt; of Antioch, for that of the Orient; the Primate or Archbiſhop of Epheſus, for the Dioceſe of Aſia, of Nicomedia, for that of Pontus; of Bizantium, or Conſtantinople, for that of Thrace; of Theſſolonica, for the Dioceſe of Greece, and of Juſtiniana prima, for that of Dacia. Amongſt all which there was a mutual correſpondence and Co-ordination, for the general Government of the Church; maintained by Letters of intercourſe, which they called Literas formatas, and Communicatorias; but no ſubordination, and much leſs ſubjection, unto one another, as doth appear moſt evidently by the Canons of the Council of Nice, aſſigning to the three great Patriarchs their peculiar bounds, according to the cuſtom of the former times. As for the Dioceſe or Patriarchate of the Popes of Rome, it contained in it thoſe ten Provinces, which were immediately ſubject to the Præfect or Povoſt of that City (an Officer firſt inſtituted by Auguſtus Cæſar) that is to ſay, the Provinces of Tuſcia and Umbria, Picenum Suburbicarium, Campania, Apulia and Calabria, Valeria, Samnium, Lucana and the Brutii, in the main Land of Italy; and the three Iſlands of Sicily, Corſica, and Sardinia. In which regard, (I mean as to the immediate Government of thoſe Provinces by the Prefect of the City of Rome) as they are called Regiones Suburbicariæ, by Ruffinus an Italian Writer; ſo anciently the Pope himſelf was called Urbicus, or the City Biſhop, as appears plainly by Optatus, who calleth Pope Zepherinus, Zepherinus Urbicus. But the Popes were not long content with that allotment, growing up daily by a ſteddy and conſtant watchfulneſs upon all occaſions, to encreaſe the Grandeur of that See; and taking to themſelves the honor to be Vindices Canonum, the ſtrict and punctual preſervers of the ancient Diſcipline which took extreamly well with all ſorts of people. Till in the end from being Vindices Canonum, they came to be Interpreters and at laſt the Rulers, or rather the Over-rulers of the Canons; and from chief Labourers in the Vineyard, they became the Landlords: which was the honour aimed at, and at laſt obtained by the foreſaid Boniface, whom that cruel and butcherly Tyrant Phocas made the Head of the Church, the ſixty ſixth Biſhop and firſt Pope of Rome: the Latin word Papa coming from the old Greek, Πάππας, ſignifying a Father. A Title at the firſt common unto other Biſhops, as is evident to any one, who hath read the Fathers; but after this, appropriated unto thoſe of Rome. Of theſe Popes, their Succeſſion, and times of Government, our Chronologers are very uncertain: not one of them that ever I had the luck to ſee, agreeing exactly with another. The reaſons whereof, as I conceive, are, 1. The frequent Vacancies; and 2. the many Schiſms which have hapned in it; and 3. the Anti-Popes in them created: the Writers of thoſe times accounting him only among the Popes, to whoſe faction they were moſt devoted. This Catalogue enſuing I have collected principally out of the Tables of Helvicus, Freigius, Bellarmine, and Onuphrius, whoſe differences I have reconciled as well as poſſibly I could: premoniſhing the Reader, that where the number of years which every Pope is found to ſit in the Papal Chair, makes not up the full number form his firſt admiſſion, to the coming in of his Succeſſor; it muſt be underſtood of ſome Schiſm or Vacancy, hapning in the Interval, by which the tale is to be made up. And for the difficulties which occurr amongſt the Antients, in the firſt Succeſſion, ſome placing of them thus, Linus, Cletus, Clemens; ſome Linus, Clemens, Cletus; and finally ſome others putting Clemens the firſt, I know no better way to compoſe the ſame, than to aſſirm (as many of the Fathers do) that St. Peter and St. Paul were Co-founders of the Church in Rome; St. Peter of the Church of the Circumciſion, and St. Paul of the Gentiles; each of them being Biſhop of the Church of his own foundation: and then to draw down the Succeſſion in this manner following.

The Biſhops of Rome.

A. Ch.

44 1 St. Peter, Biſhop of the Churches of the Circumciſion.

70 2 Cletus, or Anacletus, Succeſſor to St. Peter in the Churches of the Circumciſion. 23.

59 1 St. Paul Biſhop of the Churches of the Gentiles.

70 2 Linus, Succeſſor to St. Paul in the Church of the Gentiles. 11.

81 3 Clemens having ſucceeded Linus firſt in the Church of the Gentiles, did after, Anno 93. ſucceed Cletus alſo in the Church of the Jews, reckoned by ſome the next Succeſſor to St. Peter, becauſe the next who after him had the charge of the whole; the Church of the Gentiles not being founded, or not diſtinguiſhed from the other, till ſome years after Peter's coming.

To theſe one hundred ſeventy nine Popes, add the ſixty five Biſhops which preceded that arrogant title of Univerſal, and they make up the full number of two hundred forty four. How many are to come, he muſt be a cunning man that can determine. And yet ſuch cunning men there have been, who have determined poſitively, but withal, Prophetically, of the number of Popes; by name St. Malachy one of the firſt Apoſtles of the Iriſh Nation, very much honoured by that people to this very day. Of whom there is remaining in Maſſinghams collection of the Iriſh Saints, a certain number of Mottoes, in the Latin tongue; agreeable to the nature or chief accidents of as many Popes ſucceſſively to one another, according to the order of thoſe ſeveral Mottoes: and thereunto this Propheſie annexed, that when ſo many Popes had ſate in St. Peters Chair, either the World ſhould end, or the Popedom fail. The Book was ſhewed to me by the Author, when I was at Paris, and the Popes names in order joyned to every Motto, as far as to the time of Vrban, who laſt deceaſed; which I compared as well as memory would ſerve me, and found the Mottoes and the Popes to be very anſwerable. The Motto for Pope Vrban, which I took moſt notice of, was, Lilium and Roſa: a Motto very ſutable to the principal Action which was like to happen in his time, being the conjunction of the Engliſh Roſe, and the French Lily; in the marriage of Charles King of England, and Madam Henrietta Maria the Princeſs of France; which that Pope earneſtly promoted, in his ſpeedy and cheerful granting of the Diſpenſation. And to take from me all ſuſpicion of Impoſture, this Maſſingham ſhewed me an old Book written by one Wion a Fleming, and printed neer 200 years before his Collection; in which the Mottoes ſtood as in his they did, and comparing the Mottoes with a printed Catalogue of the Popes, I found the name of Vrban, and that Motto, to jump even together. From Vrban down-wards there remained (as I now remember) 36 Mottoes more to come; by conſequence, if this Malachy were as true a Prophet as one Malachy was, juſt ſo many Popes, and then the Popedom to be ruined, or the World to end. But I hope God for his Elects ſake will abridge thoſe days, and not permit the ſuperſtitions and the corruptions of that Church to endure ſo long; nor ſo many Aſſertiors and Defenders of thoſe Roman Heterodoxies, to be added to the former number. Out of the ſtories of all which (pretermitting many things of leſs conſideration) I will only ſelect ſome few paſſages, for the better underſtanding of their ſtate and ſtory.

1. Pelagius the firſt, ordained that Hereticks and Schiſmaticks ſhould be puniſhed with temporal death; which ſeverity continueth ſtill: and that none ſhould be preferred to Eccleſiaſtical dignities by Gifts, and Bribes; which pious order is long ſince adequated.

2. Vitalianus, firſt brought Organs into the Divine ſervice of the Church of Rome, to be uſed with the ſinging or vocal Muſick formerly in uſe; which afterwards was brought unto more perfection by the Popes ſucceeding.

3. Conſtantine was ſo generally beloved of all men, that going to Conſtantinople, Juſtinian the ſecond kiſt his feet in ſign of honour, which ſome of the ambitious Popes in times ſucceeding, drew into example, and at laſt brought into a cuſtom, as it ſtill continueth.

4. Paſcal the firſt, cauſed the Prieſts of certain Pariſhes in Rome, by reaſon of their nearneſs to his perſon, their preſence at his Election, and to honour them with a more venerable Title, to be called Cardinals. Now mates for Kings, and numbred about 70. but more or fewer at the ſole pleaſure of the Popes.

5. Eugenius the ſecond, took to himſelf within the Territories of the Church, the Authority of creating Dukes, Earls and Knights; as the Exarch of Ravenna had uſed to do.

6. Sergius the ſecond, was the firſt that changed his name. For thinking his own name, Bocca di Porco, or Swines-mouth, not conſonant to his dignity, he cauſed himſelf to be called Sergius; which precedent his Succeſſors following, do alſo vary their names. So that if one be a Coward he is called Leo; if a Tyrant, Clemens; if an Athieſt, Pius, or Innocent; if a Ruſtick, Vrbanus; and ſo for the reſt.

7. John the eight, is by moſt men confeſſed to be a Woman, and is uſually called Pope Joane. To avoid the like diſgrace, the Porphyry Chair was ordained; ubi ab ultimo diacono, &c. ſo that both in a literal and myſtical ſenſe, this Woman may not unfitly be called, The Whore of Babylon. The name of this Female Pope, the Romiſh Chronologers have not inſerted into the Catalogue; the reaſon, as Marianus Scotus giveth it, propter turpitudinem rei, & ſexum muliebrem. And from hence it is that in the common Catalogues, theſe Popes that have called themſelves Johns, are ſo ill ordered; ſome making that John which ſucceeded Adrian the ſecond, An. 872. to be the 8th and others the 9th Platina only of all the Pontificians reckoneth Pope Joane as the 8th of the Johns, and ſo forward: in which particular I have followed his authority. And it is probable enough that God might ſuffer that proud See to fall into ſuch an infamy, the better to humble the enſuing Popes, in the times of their greateſt ruff and flouriſh; or to prevent the brag of that continued Succeſſion, they ſo much pretend to. More of this Argument, (as to the truth of the ſtory in matter of Fact) he that liſts to ſee, may ſatisfie himſelf in Mr. Cooks Book of Pope Joane; who moſt induſtriouſly hath anſwered all objections, which have been made againſt it by thoſe of Rome.

8. Nicolas the firſt, the better to faſten the Clergy to the See of Rome, and make them the leſs obnoxious to their natural Princes; was the firſt who did by Law reſtrain them from marriage. Saying, that it was more honeſt to have to do with many Women privately, than openly to keep a Wife: and ſome of his Succeſſors followed it ſo cloſe, that a Prieſt of Placentia being accuſed to have Wife and Children, was deprived of his Benefice; but upon proof made, that ſhe was the Wife of another man, and his Strumpet only, he was again reſtored to it.

9. Adrian the third, ordained, that the Emperour from thenceforth ſhould have no more to do with the Election, or confirmation of the Pope; but that it ſhould be left wholly to the Roman Clergy.

10. Formoſus was ſo ill beloved, and of ſuch a general diſeſteem, that Pope Steven the ſeventh cauſed his body to be unburyed, all his Acts reverſed, two of his fingers to be cut off, and then the mangled carkaſs to be again interred among the Laity. And though theſe Acts of Steven were adjudged illegal, both by John the tenth, and Pope Romanus, two of his Succeſſors; and the doings of Formoſus juſtified: yet Sergius the third cauſed his corrupt and putrified body to be taken once more out of the grave; and his head to be cut off, as if ſtill alive. So little did the infallibility of St. Peters Chair preſerve theſe Popes from falling into groſs and irreconcileable contradictions.

11. John the twelfth, was the next after Sergius the ſecond, that changed his name; a very wicked, cruel, and libidinous man: who coming to that place by his Fathers greatneſs, cut off the noſe of one Cardinal, and the hand of another, for that they had ſignified to the Emperour Otho the firſt, what a ſcandal all the Church did ſuffer by his deteſtable life; and finally, being taken in Adultery, was ſlain by the husband of the woman.

12. Gregory the fifth, finding the power of the Emperor, as long as it continued in a way of ſucceſſion, not likely to be over-born by that of the Church; and being withal incenſed againſt the Romans, who, till that time retained ſome ſhadow of an Empire; projected the election of the future Emperours, by the Princes of Germany; by which the Germans were diſtracted into Factions, and the Romans weakned; and ſo a door left open to the Popes of Rome, to make their ends upon them both.

13. Steven the tenth, brought the Church of Millain to be under the obedience of the Popes of Rome, which till that time had challenged an equality with them; as before Pope Domnus had done the Church of Ravenna, which for ſome time had challenged the precedency of them.

14. Gregory the ſeventh, commonly called Hildebrand, a turbulent and unquiet man, who firſt adventured to draw the premiſes laid down by ſome of his Predeceſſors into a concluſion: Excommunicating the Emperor Henry the fourth, for medling with the Inveſtitures of Biſhops, and cauſing Rodolph Duke of Suevia to rebel againſt him. A man, much favoured againſt the Princes of her own Houſe by the Counteſs Mathildis, who is ſaid to be ſo much his friend, that for his ſake ſhe left the company of her Husband, and diſherited her right Heirs, ſetling her whole Eſtates in Italy on the See of Rome. And though the Emperor had the better of this Pope, and made him fly out of Rome, and die in exile; yet he was fain at laſt to ſubmit himſelf to Pope Paſchal the ſecond, (who had Armed his own Son againſt him) to attend bare-foot at his own door, and cry peccavi.

15. Sergius the third, ordained the bearing of Candles, in the Feaſt of the Purification of the Virgin Mary, thence called Candlemas day.

16. Sergius the fourth was the firſt that on Chriſtmaſs night, with divers Ceremonies did conſecrate Swords, Roſes, or the like; to be ſent as tokens of love and honour to ſuch Princes as deſerved beſt of them, or whom they deſired to oblige. Thus Leo the tenth ſent a conſecrated Roſe to Frederick Duke of Saxony, requeſting him to baniſh Luther: and Paul the third an hallowed Sword to James the fifth of Scotland, to engage him in a War againſt Henry the Eighth, who had then withdrawn himſelf and his Kingdom, from the Pope's commands.

17. Nicolas the ſecond, took from the Roman Clergy the election of Popes, and gave it the Colledge of Cardinals.

18. Celeſtine the ſecond, was the Inventer of that mad manner of curſing, or Anathematizing, by Bell, Book, and Candle.

19. Alexander the third, purſuing the deſperate courſe of Gregory the ſeventh, excommunicated the Emperor Frederick the firſt; and by raiſing War againſt him in every place; brought him to that exigent, that he was fain to proſtrate himſelf at his feet: when the Pope treading on his neck, ſaid aloud Super Aſpidem & Baſiliſcum, &c. profanely applying thoſe words to the preſent occaſion. And when the Emperor, to put the better colour on his diſgrace, meekly replyed, Non tibi ſed Petro; the Pope not willing to loſe his part of ſo great a glory, ſubjoyned as angerly, Et mihi & Petro.

20. Innocent the third held a Council in Rome, in which it was decreed that the Pope ſhould have the correction of all Chriſtan Princes; and that no Emperor ſhould be acknowledged, till he had ſworn obedience to him. Which bringeth into my mind that jolly humour of the great Cham of Tartary; who when he hath dined, commands his Trumpeters to ſound, and make Proclamation, that now all other Kings and Princes may ſit down to dinner. He brought in the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation, and ordained that there ſhould be a Pix made to cover the conſecrated (but now tranſubſtantiated) Bread, and a Bell to be rung before it. He is alſo ſaid to have firſt impoſed Auricular Confeſſion upon the people.

21. Nicolas the third, was the firſt Pope who practiſed to enrich his kindred, intending to make one of them King of Lombardy, another King of Tuſcany; and to raiſe the reſt to great Advancements out of the Lands of the Church. Before which time (as Machiavel very well obſerveth) as there was no mention of the advancement of any of the Pope's kinsfolks or poſterity, ſo afterwards they ſtudied no one thing more than to prefer their own blood; inſomuch that they have not only laboured (as he ſaith) to make them Princes, but if it were poſſible would procure the Popedom to be made hereditary. So he, with probability enough. For ſo dearly do they love their Nephews (by which name they uſe to call their Baſtards) that it was very juſtly ſaid by Pope Alexander the third, The Laws forbid us to get Children, and the Devil hath given us Nephews in their ſtead.

22. Boniface the eighth, of whom it is ſaid, That he entred like a Fox, reigned like a Lion, and died like a Dog; by his general Bull, exempted the Clergy from being chargeable with Taxes and Payments, unto Temporal Princes. Which being complyed with by the Clergy of England, King Edward the firſt put them out of his protection; and ſo the Pope's Bull left roaring here. He cauſed the Book of the Canon Law, called the Decretals to be firſt ſet out: and inſtituted the Feaſt of Jubilee, to be held in Rome every hundredth year; but by Clement the ſixth it was brought unto the fiftieth year, and ſince reduced to the five and twentieth. This is that Boniface, who in that great concourſe of people which repaired to Rome, to obſerve his new Feaſt of Jubilee, (to which every one that did repair was to have a plenary remiſſion of all his ſins) ſhewed himſelf one day in the habit of a Pope, and the next day in that of an Emperor; and cauſed two Swords to be born before him every day, in ſign that all Power Eccleſiaſtical and Temporal did belong unto him.

23. Clement the fifth, was the firſt that made Indulgences and Pardons ſaleable. For ſeeing (ſaid he) that one drop of our Saviour's blood had been enough to have ſaved all Mankind, and yet that all his blood was ſhed, the over-plus was left to the Church as a ſtanding Treaſure, to be diſpoſed of by St. Peter and his Succeſſors. And hereunto, to make his Treaſure the more inexhauſted, he added the Merits of the Virgin Mary, and all other Saints. Being wearied with the inſolencies of the people of Rome, he removed the Papal See to Avignon in France, where it continued for the ſpace of ſeventy years.

24. Clement the ſixth, had an ill time of it. For in his Papacy the Emperor gave freely all Lands belonging to the Church, to ſuch as formerly had uſurped them; to be holden by them of the Empire. Upon which title the Malteſti became Lords of Rimini, the Ordelaffi of Forli, the Vareni of Camerine, the Bentivolies of Bononia, the Manfredi of Faenza, &c. Which Eſtates were never recovered to the Church, till the time of Pope Julio the ſecond; though conquered from the preſent owners in the time of Alexander the ſixth, by Cæſar Borgias his Son; who had an aim of ſetling them, and perhaps the Papacy it ſelf, on the Borgian Family.

25. Gregory the eleventh, returned the Papal Chair again to the City of Rome, whither he conveyed himſelf by Sea, in private, for fear of being withheld by the French: and being come thither, found the chief parts of the City ſo over-grown with briers and buſhes, and the principal buildings of it ſo decayed and ruinous, that a little longer abſence would have made it deſolate.

26. Paul the ſecond, endeavoured to encreaſe the Majeſty of the Popedom by Arms and Avarice, and exceeded all his Predeceſſors in pomp and ſhew: cauſing his Miter to be enriched with Diamonds, Saphyrs, Emeralds, and other Stones of great price; and augmenting the ſplendor of the Cardinals with a Scarlet Gown, whom Innocent the fourth had graced with Red Hats before. He brought the Jubliee from fifty years to twenty-five.

27. Sixtus the fourth ordained a conſtant Guard to attend his perſon. He very much beautified and repaired the City of Rome, and was the firſt founder of the Vatican Library. But on the other ſide he is ſaid by ſome, to have ſet all Offices and Preferments to ſale, and to have builded in Rome Stews of both ſexes to bring in Beads, and to authorize our Ladies-Pſalter.

28. Alexander the ſixth, ſetting aſide all modeſty, was the firſt that openly acknowledged his Nephews (as they call their Baſtards) to be his Sons. By one of which, the Cæſar Borgias before named, he recovered Forli, Imola, and many other Eſtates from the preſent owners, on a deſign of ſetling them in his own Family, as before is ſaid; and to that end called in the French, who after made ſuch foul work in Italy.

29. Iulio the ſecond had more in him of the Souldier, than the Prelate, recovering many Towns unto the Church, which had been formerly uſurped, being taken from the Occupants by Cæſar Borgias; and keeping Italy in his time in continual Wars. This is the Pope who paſſing over the Bridge of Tiber, brandiſhed his Sword, and threw his Keys into the River; ſaying, that if Peter's Keyes would not ſerve his turn, then Paul's Sword ſhould do it.

30. Leo the tenth was indeed a great Favourer of Learning, but of great prodigality, and vaſt expence. For maintenance whereof, he ſent his ſaleable Indulgences into France and Germany: which buſineſs being indiſcreetly handled by his Miniſters, occaſioned Luther in Germany, and Zuinglius amongſt the Switzers, firſt to write againſt them; and afterwards to queſtion many points of Popiſh Doctrine. In purſuance of which quarrel, the Pope of Rome burnt Luther's Books, whom he declared for an Heretick; and Luther did the like at Wittenberg, which the Pope's Canon Law, whom he declared to be a Perſecutor, a Tyrant, and the very Antichriſt. Which flame encreaſed ſo faſt and inlarged ſo far, that it burnt down a great part of the Papal Monarchy.

31. Pius the fourth, continued the Council formerly called at Trent by Pope Paul the third, but interrupted and laid aſide from one Pope to another, and having brought it to an end, and thereby ſetled and confirmed the Intereſs of the Church of Rome, cauſed it to be received as Oecumenical: though the Italian Biſhops being moſt of them the Pope's Creatures, did more than double the number of all the reſt; and yet ſome of the reſt alſo were but meerly Titulars. He added alſo a new Creed conſiſting of twelve Articles to be added to that of the Apoſtles, by all who lived in the Communion of the Church of Rome. But of the words and actions of theſe Ghoſtly Fathers we have ſaid enough, if not too much. I will therefore end with that of the Painter, who being blamed by a Cardinal, for giving to St. Peter's Picture too much of the Red, replied, That he had made him ſo, as bluſhing at the Lives of thoſe who were called his Succeſſors.

As for the Temporal power and greatneſs of the Popes of Rome; there is a pretended Donation of the Emperor Conſtantine; by which the City of Rome it ſelf moſt part of Italy, and Africk, and all the Iſlands of thoſe Seas are conferred upon them: the forgery whereof is very learnedly ſhewn by our learned Cracanthorp, in his Diſcourſe upon that ſubject. But that Donation might moſt juſtly be ſuſpected of Fraud and Forgery, though no body had took the pains to detect the ſame; conſidering how fearful the Popes are grown to have the truth thereof diſputed: inſomuch that many leaves are razed out of Guicciardine by the Inquiſition, where it had been queſtioned. For in that place the Hiſtorian not only denieth the ſaid feigned Donation, but affirms that divers learned men reported, That Conſtantine and Sylveſter (to whom it is ſaid to have been made) lived in divers Ages. Then ſheweth, how baſe and obſcure the Authority of the Pope was in Rome it ſelf, during the time that the barbarous Nations made havock of Italy. 2. That in the inſtitution of the Exarchate, the Popes had nothing to do with the Temporal Sword, but lived as ſubject to the Emperors. 3. That they were not very much obeyed in matters Spiritual, by reaſon of the corruption of their manners. 4. That after the overthrow of the Exarchate, the Emperors now neglecting Italy, the Romans began to be governed by the advice and power of the Popes. 5. That Pepin of France, and his Son Charles having overthrown the Kingdom of the Lombards; gave unto the Popes the Exarchate, Vrbine, Ancona, Spoleto, and many other Towns and Territories about Rome. 6. That the Popes in all their Bulls and Charters, expreſſed the date of them in theſe following words; Such a one our Lord the Emperor reigning. 7. That long after the tranſlation of the Empire from France to Germany, the Popes began to make open proteſtation, that the Pontifical dignity was rather to give Laws to the Emperors, than receive any from them. 8. That being thus raiſed to an earthly power, they forgot the ſalvation of ſouls, ſanctity of life, and the Commandments of God, propagation of Religion, and Charity towards men: And that to raiſe Arms, to make War againſt Chriſtians, to invent new devices for getting of money, to profane ſacred things for their own ends, and to enrich their kindred and children, was their only ſtudy. And this is the ſubſtance of Guicciardine in that place: an Author above all exception. He was a man whom the Popes employed in many buſineſſes of principal importance; ſo that no hate to them, but love to the truth, made him write thus much. As for the City of Rome, ſo unlikely is it to have been given by Conſtantine, that neither Pepin nor Charles his Son, (though more beholding to the Popes than that Emperor was) could be induced to part with it. Lewis ſirnamed Pius, is ſaid to have been the firſt Donor of it, and a Copy of his Donation is found in the third Book of Volaterran, ſubſcribed by the Emperor, his three Sons, ten Biſhops, eight Abbots, fifteen Earls, and the Pope's Library-Keeper: yet notwithſtanding it is thought, by many very learned and judicious men, that really there was no ſuch matter; but that all this was forged by Anaſtaſius the Pope's Bibliothecarian, or Library-Keeper, who is cited as a witneſs to the Donation. And yet to put the matter further out of queſtion, let us next hear what that great Polititian and Stateſman, the Recorder of Florence, Nic. Machiavel, hath obſerved in this caſe. 'Rome (ſaith he) was always ſubject to the 'Lords of Italy, till Theodorick King of the Goths re'moved his Seat to Ravenna; for thereby the Romans
'were enforced to ſubmit themſelves to the Biſhops,
'An. 430. or thereabouts. And talking of the eſtate of the Popedom, An. 931. he ſtates it thus. 'In Rome were 'elected yearly out of the Nobility two Conſuls, who
'according to the ancient Cuſtom ruled that City. Un'der them was appointed a Judge to miniſter juſtice to
'the people. There was alſo a Council of twelve men,
'which gave Governours unto the Towns ſubject to 'Rome. And for the Pope, he had in Rome more or
'leſs Authority, according to the favour which he 'found with the Emperors, or others then moſt mighty;
'but the leaving of Italy by the German Emperors ſet-
'led the Pope in a more abſolute Soveraignty over the 'City. And yet it ſeems they were not of ſuch abſo-
'lute power, but that the Romans tugged hard with 'them for their Liberties. Concerning which he tells us in another place, That the ambition of the people of Rome did at that time (viz. At. 1010.) make much War with the Popes; and that having helped the Pope to drive out the Emperor, and altered the Government of the City as to them ſeemed good, ſuddenly they became Enemies to him; and the Popes received more injuries at their hands, than at any other Chriſtian Princes; and that even in thoſe days when the Cenſures of the Popes made all the Weſt of the World to tremble, yet even then did the people of Rome rebel, and both the Popes and the people ſtudyed for nothing ſo much, as how one of them might overthrow the Authority and Eſtimation of the other.

But for the method and degrees by which the Popes aſcended to their temporal greatneſs, take here an extract of the Story collected out of the beſt Authors, by the moſt Reverend Father in God the late Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, in his learned and laborious work againſt Fiſher the Jeſuit. ‘The Pope (ſaith he) being choſen anciently by the Clergy and people of Rome, uſed always to receive from the Emperors hands a ratification of that choice: in ſo much that about the year 579. when all Italy was on fire with the Lombards, and Pelagius the ſecond conſtrained through the neceſſity of the times, to enter upon the Popedom without the Emperor's leave; St. Gregory then a Deacon, was ſhortly after ſent in an Embaſſie to excuſe it. But when the Lombards grew ſo great in Italy, and the Empire was ſo infeſted with the Saracens, and ſuch changes hapned in all parts of the World, as that neither for the preſent the Homage of the Pope was uſeful to the Emperor; nor the Protection of the Emperour, available for the Pope: by this means was the Biſhop of Rome left to play his own game by himſelf. A thing which as it pleaſed him well enough, ſo both he and his Succeſſors made great advantage by it. For being grown to that eminence by the favour of the Emperors, and the greatneſs of that City and place of his abode; he then found himſelf the more free, the greater the Tempeſt was that beat upon the other. And then firſt he ſet himſelf to alienate the hearts of the Italians from the Emperor; in which he did prevail ſo far, that Theophylact the Exarch coming into Italy, was oppoſed by the Souldiers, who wiſhed better to the Pope, than to the Emperor; and the Emperor's own Governour was fain to be defended from his own Souldiers by the Power of the Pope, who had gotten an intereſt in them againſt their own Maſter. Next he oppoſed himſelf againſt him; and about the year 710. Pope Conſtantine the firſt did openly affront Philippicus the Emperor, in defence of Images, as Onuphrius telleth us. After him, Gregory the ſecond and third, took up his example, and did the like by Leo Iſaurus. By this time the Lombards began to pinch very cloſe, and to vex on all ſides not only Italy, but Rome too. This drives the Pope to ſeek a new Patron, and very fitly he meets with Charles Martel in France that famous Warrier againſt the Saracens. Him he employeth in defence of the Church againſt the Lombards; and the Addreſs ſeems very adviſedly taken, it proved ſo fortunate to them both. For in ſhort time it diſſolved the Kingdom of the Lombards, having then ſtood Two hundred and four years, which was the Pope's ſecurity: and it brought the Crown of France into the houſe of Charles, and ſhortly after the Weſtern Empire. And now began the Popes to be great indeed. For by the bounty of Pepin, the Son of Charles, that which was taken by him from the Lombards, was given to the Pope; that is to ſay, the Exarchate, and all that lay betwixt the Appennine and the River of Po. So that now he became a Temporal Prince. But when Charles the Great had ſet up the Weſtern Empire, then he reſumed the Ancient and Original power, to govern the Church, to call Councils, and to order Papal Elections. And this power continued for a time in his poſterity; for Gregory the ſeventh was confirmed in the Popedom by the ſame Henry the fourth, whom he afterwards depoſed. And it might have continued longer, if the ſucceeding Emperors had had Abilities enough to ſecure, or vindicate their own Rights. But the Pope keeping a ſtrong Council about him, and meeting with ſome weak Princes, and thoſe oſt-times diſtracted with great and dangerous Wars, grew ſtronger till he got the better; yet was it carryed in ſucceeding times with great changes of Fortune, and different ſucceſs; the Emperor ſometimes plucking from the Pope, and the Pope from the Emperor; winning and loſing ground, as their ſpirits, abilities, aids and opportunities were; till at laſt the Pope ſetled himſelf on the grounds laid by Gregory the ſeventh, in that great power which he now uſeth in and over theſe parts of the Chriſtian World. A power firſt exerciſed (ſaith he in another place) by this Pope Gregory the ſeventh, and made too good upon the Emperor Henry the fourth, as by Pope Adrian the fourth, Alexander the third, with ſome others, upon Frederick Barbaroſſa. And others of the Emperors were alike ſerved when they did not ſubmit. And for this, I hope his Holineſs was not to be blamed. For if the Emperor kept the Pope under for divers years together, againſt all reaſon; the Pope, as Bellarmine affirms, being never ſubject to the Emperor, and wanting force to ſtand on his own Prerogative: I hope the Pope having now got power enough, may keep the Emperors under foot, and not ſuffer them any more to ſtart before him.

Having thus a little glanced at the means, by which the great power of the Church of Rome was firſt obtained; let us next conſider of thoſe policies, by which this Papal Monarchy hath been ſo long upheld in eſteem and credit. We may divide them into three heads. 1. Thoſe by which they have inſinuated and ſcrewed themſelves into the affections and affairs of the greateſt Princes. 2. Thoſe by which already they have, and by which they will hereafter be able to ſecure their eſtate: And 3. thoſe by which they keep the people in obedience and ignorance.

1. Concerning the firſt. Firſt, the Donation of ſeveral Kingdoms to them which have no right nor title, but by theſe Grants of the Pope, cannot but bind them faſt to uphold that power, without which they could lay no claim to that which they are poſſeſſed of. Of which ſort was the confirmation of the Kingdom of France to the houſe of Pepin; of Naples to the houſe of Schawben, and Anjou; of Navarre to the Spaniards. 2. The readineſs of their Miniſters to kill ſuch as reſiſt them, cannot but neceſſitate Princes to ſeek their friendſhip, and hold fair with them: eſpecially ſince by a Writ of Excommunication, they can arm the Subjects againſt their Soveraign; and without the charge of levying one Souldier, either deſtroy him utterly, or bring him to conformity. The frequent Wars raiſed by them againſt the Emperours of Germany, and that againſt King John in England, by theſe Papal fulminations only; the poyſoning of the ſaid King John by a Monk of Swineſtead, and killing of King Henry the third of France, by Jaques Clement; are full proofs of this. 3. Then followeth their allowance of Marriages prohibited both by God and Nature; the iſſue of which cannot but uphold the Popes Authority, without which their birth would be illegitimate, and conſequently themſelves uncapable of the Eſtates they are born unto: And by this means they do more ſtrengthen themſelves by the unlawful Marriages of others, than ever Prince could do by the lawful Marriage of his own. Nothing more faſtened Queen Mary of England to the See of Rome, than the queſtion that was raiſed about the Marriage of her Mother to King Henry the eighth; the lawfulneſs of which depended chiefly on the diſpenſation of Pope Julio the ſecond. 4. Then cometh in their diſpenſing with the Oaths of Princes, when they conceive themſelves induced upon reaſon of State, to fly off from thoſe Leagues and break off thoſe Treaties, which have been ſolemnly made and ſworn betwixt them and their Neighbours. By means whereof, ſuch Princes think themſelves not perjured, becauſe diſpenſed with by the Pope; and commonly get ſomething in advantage, or point of profit, for which they cannot be unthankful unto the Papacy. Examples of this kind are obvious in all times and ſtories. 5. Next comes the chooſing of the younger Sons of great Princes, into the rank of Cardinals; which obligeth the whole Stock or Family to the Papal Throne: that being a means whereby young Princes are preferred without charge to their Fathers, or any diminution of the Regal Patrimony. 6. And as by theſe courſes he holds in with all Chriſtian Princes generally, which are of the Religion of the Church of Rome; ſo hath he faſtned more particularly on the King of Spain; whereof we ſhall ſpeak further when we come to that Country.

2. Concerning the ſecond: 1. So it is that their Eſtate hath the firmeſt foundation of any, as being built on the Conſciences of men poſſeſſed with an opinion of their Infallibility, and that undoubted power they pretend unto, not only in Heaven and upon Earth, but alſo over Hell and Purgatory. 2. Then comes the innumerable Preferments at their diſpoſing, for men of all humours and affections; as having in their power the diſpoſing of almoſt all the Benefices and Biſhopricks of Italy, half of thoſe in Spain, divers in Germany and France: which keepeth the Clergy, and all ſuch as are that way ſtudied, in a perpetual dependance upon that See; eſpecially injoying by it many notable Priviledges, which thoſe of the Temporalty are not capable of. 3. Conſider next the multitude of Monks and Friers, whoſe very being depends wholly upon his Authority; every Monaſtery and Convent being a Garriſon (as it were) to defend the Papacy, and train up a Militia of Spiritual Janizaries; men moſt affectionately devoted to his See and Service. Of theſe it is conceived that there are no fewer than a Million, one half whereof at leaſt may be fit for action; and all maintained at other men's coſt, themſeves not diſburſing a penny towards it. 4. Their Pardons and Indulgences are a great increaſe to their Revenue: ſome of them as unlimited as that of Pope Boniface the eighth, which was for 82000 years to all that could ſay ſuch a Prayer of St. Auguſtines; and that for every day, Toties quoties. 5. Their practiſing on Penitents, whom they perſwade in the very agony of their Souls, that there is no ſalvation for them, but by giving part of their Eſtates unto the Church. 6. Nor have they found any ſmall advantage to their Power and Patrimony by the invention of Spiritual Fraternities, which are Appurtenances (as it were) to the Orders of Friers, and may in number perhaps equal them. Into theſe the Lay-people of all ſorts, men and women, marryed and ſingle, deſire to be inrolled; as hereby injoying the ſpiritual prerogatives of Indulgences, and a more ſpeedy diſpatch out of Purgatory.

3. Concerning the third. 1. They deterr the people from reading the Scripture, alledging unto them the perils they may incur by miſ-interpretation. 2. They breed an Antipathy between the Papiſts and the Proteſtants; inſomuch that a Papiſt may not ſay Amen, unto a Proteſtants Deo Gratias. 3. They debar them from all ſound of the Religion, in prohibiting the Books of the Reformed Writers; and hiding their own Treatiſes, in which the Tenet of the Proteſtants is recited only to be confuted; inſomuch that in all Italy one ſhall ſeldom meet with Bellarmines works, or any of the like nature to be ſold. 4. They have under pain of Excommunication prohibited the Italians from Travel and Traffick with Heretical Countries, or ſuch places, where thoſe contagious ſounds and ſights (as they tearm them) might make them return infected. 5. The Severity, or Tyranny rather of the Inquiſition, (of which we ſhall ſpeak more at large when we come to Spain) cruſheth not only the beginnings, but the ſmalleſt ſuſpitions of being this way addicted. And 6. the people thus reſtrained from Travel, are taught to believe that the Proteſtants are Blaſphemers of God and all his Saints; that in England Churches are turned to Stables, the people grown barbarous and eat young Children; that Geneva is a profeſſed Sanctuary of Roguery, and the like. We have yet two later examples of their dealing in this kind. Firſt, thee groſs ſlander of the Apoſtaſie (or, as they call it the Reconciliation) unto their Church, of the Right Reverend Father in God Dr. King, not long ſince the Lord Biſhop of London, a Prelate of too known a faith and zeal, to give occaſion for ſuch a calumny. The ſecond, a Book by them publiſhed, and commonly ſold in Italy and France, containing a relation of God's judgments, ſhown on a ſort of Proteſtant Hereticks, by the fall of an houſe in St. Andrews Pariſh in London, in which they were aſſembled to hear a Geneva Lecture, Octo. 26 A. D. 1623. By which dealing the ſimple people are made to believe that to be a judgment on us of the Proteſtant party, which the Authors of that Pamphlet well know to be a calumny in regard of us; and a ſad chance (I will not ſay a judgment) which befell their own, by the fall of a Chamber in Black-Fryers, where they were met to hear the Sermon of one Drury a Popiſh Prieſt, and that too on the fifth of November in their own accompt, being the 26 of October before mentioned.

The Popedom being thus cunningly and ſtrongly founded, it cannot be if the Popes had been choſen young, or of the ſame Family, (ſo that the Succeſſor had not often croſſed the deſigns of his Predeceſſor) but that this new Monarchy had been greater and better eſtabliſhed, than ever the old Roman Empire was in her greateſt glory. And to ſay truth, I have oft wondered with my ſelf, that ſome of the more active Popes, eſpecially ſuch as were choſen young, and had the happineſs to deſcend of Noble Families; did never ſeek the ſetling of this Eſtate in their own Poſterity: eſpecially conſidering the good Precedents which they had before them, both in ſacred and in civil ſtories. The high Prieſthood in the Church of Jewry went from Father to Son; and why ſhould any man think it inconvenient to follow the example of Almighty God, in making the high Prieſthood in the Church of Chriſt to be alſo hereditary, not elective? The Saracens who were as great Maſters for Wit and Policy, as any thoſe Ages did produce, purſued that precedent; governed by Hereditary Caliphs many years together, until the Sultans their Vicegerants (ambitiouſly affecting the Supream Command) rooted out their races. And if the ſame Obligation lie on the Maſters of Religious or mixt Orders, for preſerving the Rules and Statutes of their foundations; as is upon the Pope by the fundamental Ordinances of the Conclave, as it ſeems to do; why might not the Popes as well diſpenſe with thoſe Conſtitutions, and turn the Popedom into an Hereditary Eſtate; as Albert of Brandenbourg, and Gotardus of Denmark, Maſters of the Dutch Knights in Pruſſia and Livonia, in their times have done? Nor can I ſee, but that ſuch an alteration as I ſpeak of, might be altogether as contenting to the Princes of Chriſtendom, as the like change from an unſetled popular Government to an Hereditary Monarchy, was formerly unto the Provinces and People of the State of Rome. Of which it is affirmed by that notable Hiſtorian and Stateſman Tacitus, Neque Provinciæ illum rerum ſtatum abunebant, ſuſpecto Senatus populique imperio ob certamina Potentium, & avaritiam Magiſtratuum, invalido Legum auxilio, quæ vi, ambitu, poſtremò pecuniâ turbabantur, The Provinces (ſaith he) diſliked not the alteration, to whom the Government of the Senate and People had been long diſtaſted, by reaſon of the factions of the great Ones, and covetouſneſs of their Officers: the Laws affording no ſecurity at all, as being ſway'd up and down by force, ambition and corruption. The Popedom ſetled in one houſe, would prove more conſtant in the preſervation of all Leagues and Treaties, more careful to preſerve the intereſt of their Eſtate, more uſeful to the Confederates and Allies thereof upon all occaſions, than it is at preſent: where the Popes ſo often change their ſides, and ſhift their factions; the Succeſſor many times eſteeming it his greateſt glory, to reſcind all the Acts of his Predeceſſor. And poſſible enough it is that Cæſar Borgia the Son of Alexander the Sixth, might have ſome ſuch ends; when it was covenanted betwixt him and Lewis the twelfth of France, that being declared General of the Churches Forces, and giving his helping hand to that King in the Conqueſt of Millain; he ſhould be aided by him in recovering all the Lands of the Church, which the Dukes of Vrbine and Camerine, the Families of the Malateſti, Baillons, and Bentivogli, with divers others of leſs note, did poſſeſs in Italy. Which having got into his hands, had not his Fathers ſudden death, and his own dangerous ſickneſs hapning at the ſame time, cut off his deſign; it had been a matter of no great difficulty (if of any at all) to have made himſelf abſolute Maſter of Rome, and of all the Lands of the Church, and to have left the ſame eſtabliſhed in the Borgian Family. 'Tis true, that ſuch an alteration would be very diſtaſtful to the ambition of the Cardinals, who by the deaths (natural or violent, it matters not) of the preſent Pope, aſpire by all means both of love and money to that high dignity. But for my part, I cannot ſee how all the wit in the Conclave had been able to hinder it, if Alexander, on a purpoſe to poyſon ſome of that number whom he had invited to a Supper, by a meer miſtake of his Cup-bearer, had not poyſoned himſelf, (even in the very heat of the buſineſs then almoſt effected) and ſo made fruſtrate the device.

But paſſing by this imagination of an Hereditary Popedom, let us behold it as Elective, and look upon the form and order obſerved in it. Now the Election of the Pope is made moſt commonly, in this place, and manner. In the Popes Palace on the Hill Vatican, are among other buildings five Halls, two Chappels, and a Gallery ſeventy foot long. The Gallery is appointed for conference, one Chappel for the Maſs, and for the Election; the other with the Halls are for the Cardinals Lodgings. Every Hall hath two rows of Chambers, which are purpoſely for the time, made of green or violet cloth. To each Cardinal is allowed four Servants, to lie in his Chamber. They that are once within, are compelled, unleſs they be ſick, ſtill to continue there; and ſuch as are once out, are no more permitted to go in: leſt by that means, the Cardinals ſhould maintain intelligence with any foreign Princes. To this Conclave (for by this name the place of the Election is called) is but one door, to which belongeth four Locks, and as many Keys. One Key is in the keeping of the Cardinals; one, of the City-Biſhops; one, of the Roman Nobility; and one, of the Maſter of the Ceremonies. There is in this door a Wicket or Hatch, which is opened only at Dinners and Suppers, whereof the Maſter of the Ceremonies keepeth a Key. At this hole the Cardinals Servants receive their meat; every diſh being firſt diligently ſearched, leſt any Letters ſhould be conveyed in them. As for the Lodgings they have neither holes nor windows to give light; ſo that there they make day of Wax-Candles: And leſt the Pope ſhould be made by force, both the City and Conclave are ſtrongly guarded. When the Cardinals are going to Election, the priviledges of the Cardinals are recited: which every one ſweareth to obſerve, in caſe he be choſen Pope. Then the Maſter of the Ceremonies ringing a Bell, calleth them to Maſs: which ended, there is brought to every Cardinal a Chair, and therein a Scroll of all the Cardinals names. Before the Altar is ſet a Table covered with a Purple Cloth, whereupon is ſet a Chalice, and a Silver Bell, and about it ſix Stools, on which ſit two Cardinal-Biſhops, two Cardinal-Prieſts, and two Cardinal-Deacons. Every Cardinal writeth his voice in a piece of paper, goeth to the Altar, prayeth God to guide him in the Election, putteth his voice into the Chalice, and departeth to his Seat. The firſt Biſhop taketh out all the papers, and delivereth them to the firſt Deacon; who unfoldeth each of them, readeth (without mentioning the name of the Elector) the name of the elected: and every Cardinal in his particular Scroll, noteth how many voices every one hath. The accompt being made, the firſt Prieſt having the like Scroll, pronounceth who hath moſt voices: which done, the Prieſt ringeth a Silver Bell; at which call the Maſter of the Ceremonies bringeth in a pan of Coals, and burneth all the little papers, wherein the names of the elected were written. He that hath the moſt voices (ſo that his voices exceed the proportion of two parts of three) is acknowledged Pope, and adored by the reſt of the Cardinals: but if they exceed not this number, they muſt begin all anew. If in the ſpace of thirty days the Election be not fully ended, then muſt the Cardinals be kept from fire, light, and victuals, till they are fully agreed. The Wicket which we before mentioned, is called the Golden Gate, at which ſtand an infinite number of poor people; on whom the new Pope, having opened that Gate, beſtoweth his Fatherly Benediction, and remitteth to them all their ſins. Then ſtriketh he continually on the ſame door with a Golden Mallet; which whilſt he is doing, workmen without break it open. The Chips, Stones, Duſt, and Dirt which falleth from the Gate, while it is opening, are gathered and preſerved as choiceſt Reliques; and the Golden Mallet is uſually given to that Cardinal, who is in moſt grace with the new Pope.

This is the ordinary way of the Pope's Election, but ſubject to much Faction and Diviſion amongſt the Cardinals, and that in times of leſs deceit than the preſent are: Inſomuch as after the death of Pope Clement the fourth, the differences amongſt them held for two years and more. Which gave occaſion to one of them to ſay in ſcorn, that they muſt uncover the roof of the houſe to make way for the Holy Ghoſt to come upon them. And there is now much more corruption and abuſe in it, than ever formerly, as buying of voices, ſitting up ſome for ſtales and tearing Scrutinies, every Cardinal deſiring to have a Pope of his own, or his Prince's Faction. So that we find it written of an old Sicilian Cardinal, who after long abſence came to the Election of a Pope, where he expected that inceſſant Prayers, as in times of old, ſhould have procured ſome fit man to be pointed out to them for the Vicar of Chriſt: that, finding nothing but canvaſſing, promiſing rewards, and threatning for Voices in the choice; Ad hunc modum (ſaith he) fiunt Pontifices Romani? and ſo returned unto his Country, and ſaw Rome no more.

The ordinary Temporal Revenue of the Papacy ariſing out of Land-rents, Impoſts upon Commodities, and ſale of Offices, Boterus maketh to be better than two Millions of Crowns; but the extraordinary, and Spiritual, to be far beyond. For it is ſaid of Pius Quintus, who ſate Pope ſix years only, that he got from the Spaniſh Clergy 14 Millions. And though he was a very great Builder, which ſpent him a great deal of money, yet he ſo managed his Eſtate, that he laid up four Millions of Crowns in the Caſtle of S. Angelo. Sixtus the Fifth took from the Jeſuites at one clap 20000 Crowns of yearly rent, (becauſe they were too rich for men profeſſing poverty:) and having ſate but five years, had coffered up five Millions of Gold; four of which his Succeſſor Gregory the fourteenth ſpent in leſs than a year. Out of France they receive no leſs than a Million of Crowns yearly. Out of England, when it was the Pope's Puteus inexhauſtus, they and their followers extracted no leſs than 60000 Marks per annum, which amounteth to 120000 pounds of our preſent Money; and was more than the Kings ſtanding Revenue did attain unto: Yet was this in the time of K. Henry 3. before their avarice and rapine was at the height. And of late days, no longer than ſince the Reign of K. Henry 8. beſides their Peter-pence, which was an Annual Rent upon every Chimny in the Realm, firſt granted to the Pope by Offa King of the Mercians, An. 730. or thereabouts, and afterwards confirmed by Ethelwolf the ſecond Monarch of England; beſides their firſt Fruits, Tenths, and all other exactions: it was made evident that in ſome few years then laſt paſt, the Popes had received out of England no leſs than 160000 l. ſterling, for the confirmation of Epiſcopal Elections only. By which we may conjecture what vaſt ſums they drew hence on all other occaſions. Let other Countries ſubject to the Pope's Authority be accordingly rated, and the total will amount to a ſum incredible. Next add to this the ſums of money they receive from particular perſons, for pardons, for diſpenſations with unlawful Marriages; the profits ariſing from Pilgrimages, from the death and Funerals of great Perſons, from the Indulgencies granted to Abbies and Convents; in all which the Popes have a ſhare; and it would puzzle a good Arithmetician to ſtate his Intrado. So truly was it ſaid by Pope Sixtus the fourth, that a Pope could never want money, as long as he was able to hold a Pen in his hand. Yet notwithſtanding, their Treaſury for the moſt part is but low and empty. For 1. the State they keep, becauſe of that great honour which they have above other Princes, which is to be maintained at a great expence (for the more worſhip the more coſt, as the ſaying is) is very chargeable unto them; their ordinary Guards ſtanding them in no leſs than 30000 Crowns per annum. 2. The large allowances which they are fain to give unto their Legates, Nuncios, and other Miniſters, keep their Coffers low; the entertainment of their ordinary Nuncios in the Courts of Chriſtian Princes, amounting to no leſs than 1200 Crowns a month to each. And 3. their greedy deſire to enrich their Sons or Kinſmen with the treaſures of the Church (with which humour Pope Sixtus the Fifth, being of poor and obſcure birth, was never touched) keeps them always bare. Add unto theſe the exceſſive gorgeouſneſs of the Papal Veſtments (in which vanity every one ſeeketh to excel the other) eſpecially that of their Tripple-Crown; which muſt needs put them to great charge, and continual iſſues of their treaſure. And for an evidence of this laſt, we find that Clement the Fifth, who firſt transferred his See to Avignon, to ſhew his gallantry to the French (probably unacquainted with the like fine ſights) had his Crown thick ſet with Carbuncles and precious ſtones; one of which being loſt by a fall from his Horſe, was valued at 6000 Ducats.

As for the Forces of the Church, the Pope is able to impreſs as great a number of Land-ſouldiers out of his Eſtate, as any Prince or Common-wealth within the limits of Italy. Paul the 3. ſent to the aid of Charles the 5. in the Wars of Germany, 12000 Foot, and 500 Horſe, and yet raiſed his own Family to the Dukedom of Parma, Pius the Fifth ſent to the aid of Charles the 9. againſt the Hugonots, 4000 Foot, and 1000 Horſe; which Forces they maintained at their own charges. And when Clement undertook the War of Ferrara, he raiſed out of his Eſtate 20000 Foot, and 2000 Horſe, in leſs than a month; which was more than moſt Princes in Europe could poſſibly have done. And for the valour of his Souldiers, and ability of his Commanders, they retain ſo much (as before was ſaid) of their Anceſtors virtues; that there are thought to be many Families in the Eſtate of the Church, able to furniſh all the Common-wealths and Princes of Chriſtendom, with ſufficient Captains. What, and how little he is able to do by Sea, may be beſt ſeen out of the aid which he ſent to the Venetians, at the famous Battel of Lepanto, wherein he furniſhed them with no more than twelve Gallies; and thoſe too hired of the Duke of Florence: The Venetians in the Adriatick, and the Florentines in the Tuſcan Seas, having all the Trade, and conſequently all the power in the Seas of Italy. 'Tis true, the Pope was bound by the capitulation, to bear the fifth part of the charge of the War, and with the help of the reſt of the Princes of Italy (who were to march under his colours) to ſet forth 50000 Foot, and 4500 Horſe: which is as great an Argument of his riches and power by Land, as the other is of his weakneſs at Sea.

Having a purpoſe in the proſecution of this Work, to mention ſuch particular Orders of Knighthood, as moſt Countries have given beginning to; I will here ſet down the Orders of ſuch Popiſh Spiritual Knights or Friers, which his holy benediction hath erected, and fat allowance doth maintain. And for our better proceeding, we will begin with the original of a Monaſtical life; and then we will make ſpecial mention of ſome of the Romiſh Votaries of both Sexes. Know then, that under the ſeventh perſecution raiſed againſt the Church by Decius, one Paulus, born at Thebes in Egypt, retired to a private Cave under the foot of a Rock, Anno 260. Here he is ſaid to have lived one hundred years, and to have been ſeen of no man but one Anthony who was at his death. This Anthony was the firſt that followed the example of Paulus; a man of a noble Houſe, and one that ſold all his Eſtate, that he might the more privately enjoy himſelf. He lived an hundred and fifty years, and is called the Father of the Monks. To theſe beginnings doth Polidore Virgil refer the original of the Monks, and religious Orders; the name Monk coming from the Greek Μόνος, becauſe of their lonely and ſolitary lives. Thoſe of the Religious Orders are called Fratres, and in Engliſh, Friers, from the French word Frere, which ſignifieth a Brother; and that either becauſe of their brotherly co-habitation; or elſe becauſe they are Fratres in malo, Brethren in miſchief and deſign.

The foundation of Monaſtical life thus laid by Paulus, and Anthony; the world increaſed ſo faſt in Monks and Eremites, that it ſeemed neceſſary to preſcribe them Orders. Hereupon Saint Baſil gathered them together, living formerly diſperſed; and is ſaid to be the firſt that built them Monaſteries. He is alſo ſaid to have ordained the three Vows, of Poverty, Chaſtity, and Obedience; to have inſtructed them in good Arts, true Religion, and in the ſervice of God, with Hymns, Prayers, and Watching. Of this Order there are not many in the Latine Church, but good plenty of them in the Greek. They are bound to abſtain from all kind of Fleſh, and are called Monks of St. Baſil, by the name of that Father; amongſt the Writings of which Father, the Rules for theſe Monaſticks are ſet down at large.

2. The next who preſcribed Orders was St. Auguſtine, born in the year 350, who being thirty years of age, is ſaid to have obtained a Garden without the walls of Hippo, for private Contemplations. Twelve only he aſſumed into his ſociety, living with them in all integrity, and wearing a leathern Girdle to diſtinguiſh them from Monks. Branched afterwards into two ſeveral and diſtinct Orders, the one called by the name of Canons Regular, whoſe chief Houſe here in England was St. John's near Colcheſter, the other called commonly Auſtin Friers, or the Eremites of St. Auſtin, as others call them; Of ſuch eſteem formerly in the Univerſity of Oxford, that all who took the Degree of a Maſter of Arts, were to ſubmit themſelves to their Oppoſitions in the publick Schools, and receive approbation from them; from whence the form, in Auguſtinenſibus reſponderit vel oppoſuerit, ſtill retained among them. Their houſe in London ſtood in Broadſtreet, of which a part of the Church ſtill ſtandeth, converted to a Church for the uſe of the Dutch; the reſt demoliſhed, and in the place thereof a ſtately Manſion erected by Sir William Pawlet the firſt Marqueſs of Wincheſter, and Lord Treaſurer of England. Theſe make the firſt Order of the Friers Mendicants. The firſt Monaſtry of them was erected at Paris by William Duke of Guien, Anno 1155, and Anno 1200, they began to flouriſh in Italy, by the favour of John Lord of Mantua. The other branches of this Tree, are 1. the Monks of S. Hierom, 2. the Carmelites, 3. the Crouchet Friers, and 4. the Dominicans.

1. The Monks of St. Hierom challenge their original from the worthy Father of the Church, ſo called. They flouriſh eſpecially in Spain, where there are thirty two Monaſteries of them; their chief Houſe being S. Bartholomews of Lupiena; and have taken unto themſelves the Rule of St. Auſtin. Their Robe is a white Caſſock, under a tawny Cloak.

2. The Carmelites ſo called from Mount Carmel in Syria, pretend their original from Elias, and John the Baptiſt. They only allowed at firſt the Rule of S. Baſil; and were confirmed in Europe by Honorius the Third. They are by ſome called Jacobines, from a Church dedicated to S. James, where they had their firſt Convent; and by us, the White Friers, from the colour of their Habit. Their Houſe in London ſtood in Fleetſtreet, converted ſince into a dwelling of the Earls of Kent, beſides other Tenements. Their Rule was afterwards corrected according to the Rule of S. Auſtin, by Donna Ereſba (or Tereſa) a Spaniſh Woman; who made them alſo certain Conſtitutions, confirmed by Pius the fourth, Anno 1565.

3. The Friers of S. Croſſe, Croſſed, or Crouched Friers, were firſt ordained by Cyriacus Biſhop of Hieruſalem, who ſhewed to Helena the place where the Croſs was hidden; hence this Order: which being almoſt decayed, was reſtored firſt by Urban the Second, and afterwards by Innocent the Third, under the Rule of S. Auſtin. Their Robe is Watchet, and in their hands they carry the Figure of the Croſs. Their Houſe in London near the Tower, ſtill retains its name.

4. The Dominicans, or Friers Preachers, were inſtituted by S. Dominick a Spaniard. He put himſelf in this Order with ſixteen of his Diſciples, under the Rule of S. Auſtin, Anno 1206, and had his device confirmed by Honorius the Third. Their duty is to preach the Goſpel in all places unto the fartheſt parts of the world; which both they did, and their Succeſſors ſince have done, not at home only, but in India and America, with great zeal and diligence. They are called by us Black-Friers, from the Colour of their Habits, and are the third Order of Friers Mendicants. Their Houſe in London ſtood near Ludgat, and took up the whole Precinct which is ſtill called Black-Friers; though nothing be remaining of it but the very name.

3. The third that preſcribed Orders was S. Benedict, born at Nurſia, in the Dutchy of Spoleto, Anno 472. He gathered the Monks of Italy together, gave them a Rule in Writing, cauſed them to be called Benedictines, or Monks of S. Benedict; and lived till he had ſeen twelve Monaſteries filled with them. After his death this Order grew ſo populous, that there have been of it 29 Popes, 200 Cardinals, 1603 Archbiſhops, 4000 Biſhops, beſides ſome thouſands of Canonized Saints, which they uſe to brag of. Their Habit is a looſe Gown of black, reaching down to the ground, with a Hood of the ſame; an under-garment of white woollen, and Boots on their legs. The other principal ſtreams of this Fountain are, 1. the Monks of Clugnie, 2. of Carthuſia, 3. of Ciſteaux, 4. the Celeſtines.

1. The Monks of Clugnie, are ſo called from the Abbey of Clugnie in the County of Burgundy, the Abbot whereof, by name Odo, was the firſt that reformed the Benedictines, then fallen from their former integrity, Anno 913. He obtained of the Popes and Emperours, that all ſuch Abbies as would come under the compaſs of his Reformations (which were in all about two hundred) ſhould be called the Congregations of Clugnie, and that they might call their Chapiters, and diſpatch their common buſineſſes, when and as often as they pleaſed.

2. The Carthuſians were firſt inſtituted by one Bruno, a German Doctor of Divinity, at the Town of Carthuſia in Daulphine, Anno 1080. His followers, which were at the firſt but ſix, have at this day 93 Monaſteries. They eat no fleſh, live by couples, labour with their hands, watch, pray, and never meet together but on Sundays. Their Houſe in London by corruption and long tract of time, got the name of the Charter-Houſe, (the Monks themſelves being corruptly called the Charter-houſe-Monks) now better known by the name of Sutton's Hoſpital; from the Hoſpital of the Foundation of Richard Sutton, a wealthy Citizen of London.

3. The Monks of Ciſteauz were firſt inſtituted by one Robert, Abbot of Moleſme, Anno 1090, or thereabouts; who together with 21. of the moſt religious of his Covent, retired to Ciſteaux in Burgundy Dutchy; hence the name. About five years after, one Bernard, a great Lord, became of their Order, who built and repaired for them 160 Abbies. Their Robe is a white Caſſock, girt with a Girdle of wool, the reſt black. They were by us called White Monks; and the common Benedictines, Black Monks; both from the colour of their Habits.

4. The Celeſtines owe their original to Peter de Moron a Samnite, born Anno 1250, who being afterwards for his ſanctity choſe Pope, was called Celeſtine the 5th. He reformed the Benedictines, then much degenerated; and had his Order confirmed by Gregory the Eleventh. There are at this preſent 124 Monaſteries of them.

4. The fourth and laſt that preſcribed new Orders to the Monaſticks, was St. Francis of Aſſis in the Dutchy of of Spoleta. He fell from Merchandize, which was his firſt profeſſion, unto the ſtudy of Religion, going barefoot, and behaving himſelf very penitently: whereupon, great ſtore of Diſciples following him, he gave them a Rule in writing; by which they are bound to profeſs abſolute beggery, and are not permitted to carry any money about them, or more victuals than will for the preſent ſerve themſelves and their Brethren. This they obſerve punctually in their own perſons, but give themſelves leave to have a Boy with them, to do both without ſcruple. S. Francis deſired they ſhould be called Minors, to ſhew their humility; but they are generally called Franciſcans, by the name of their Founder. By the French, called Cordeliers, becauſe of the knotty Cord which they wear about them inſtead of a Girdle; by us, the Gray-Friers, from the colour of their upper Garment. Their Houſe in London ſtood near Newgate, of which the Church, the Cloyſters, and ſome other the publick Offices, do ſtill ſtand entire; the whole converted to an Hoſpital for poor Children by King Edward the ſixth, in the latter end of his Reign, now beſt known by the name of Chriſt Church. Their Rule and Order was confirmed by Innocent the Third, Anno 1212, and is the fourth and laſt of the Friers mendicants, or begging Friers. The other principal Children of this Father, are 1. the Minimes; and 2. the Capouchins.

1. The Friers Minimes, were firſt founded by Franciſcus de Pola, a Neapolitan, Anno 1450, according to a corrected copy of the Rule of S. Francis of Aſſis. His followers keep always a true Lenten Faſt, unleſs in caſe of ſickneſs. Their Robe is a dark tawney, an hood of the ſame hanging to their Girdles.

2. The Capouchins, (ſo called from their Cowl or Capouch) were ordained by one Matthew Baſci of Ancona. Frier Lewis his Companion, obtained for them of the Pope, the Habit and Rule of S. Francis, Anno 1526. In the ſpace of 42 years they increaſed to 2240 Aſſociates, had 222 Monaſteries, and were divided into 15 Provinces. They are bound by their Rule to ſpend their time in prayer; and are generally thought to be the devouteſt of all the Orders Monaſtical.

I ſhould now ſpeak of the Jeſuites, but that I cannot bring them under any Rule; as being a people neither ſimply Lay nor Prieſts, nor meerly ſecular nor regular, but all together. They were founded by Ignatius Loyola, born in Navarre, who being in his youth addicted to the Wars, was lamed in one of his Legs: after which maim betaking himſelf to the ſtudy of Religion, he framed this Order, conſiſting at the firſt of Ten only. Paul the Third did confirm it, Anno 1540, confining the number within ſixty: which he after enlarged ad infinitum. They are now the greateſt Politicians, foundeſt Scholars, and chiefeſt upholders of the Romiſh See: ſo that the only way to re-eſtabliſh the Romiſh Religion in any Land, is to plant a Colledge of Jeſuites in it. To the three Vows of Poverty, Obedience, and Chaſtity, common to all other Orders; Ignatius at the Inſtitution of this, added the Vow of Miſſion: whereby his Followers are bound to obey their General, or the Pope, without demanding any reaſon, in all dangerous and hazardous attempts whatſoever, whether it be undertaking ſome tedious voyage, for the propagation of the Romiſh Religion; or the maſſacring of any Prince whoſe life is a hindrance to their proceedings. It is reported, that a Jeſuit being in the midſt of his Maſs, which they call the Sacrifice of the Altar, was ſent for by Ignatius; to whom leaving off his Maſs, he went immediately. Ignatius having no buſineſs wherein to employ him, told him, he only ſent for him to try his obedience; and withal profanely added, that Obedience is better than Sacrifice: and this is called the blind obedience of the Jeſuites. To leave them then as they are, the greateſt diſturbers of the quiet of Europe; I have heard a worthy Gentleman, now with God, ſay many times, that till the Jeſuites were taken from the Church of Rome, and the peeviſh Puritan (or Presbyterian) Preachers out of the Churches of Great Britain, he thought there would never be any peace in Chriſtendom; with what a true preſaging ſpirit, the event hath ſhewed.

Corrivals with the Jeſuites in power and learning, and almoſt coætaneous in point of time, are the Oratorians, founded by Philip Nerio a Florentine, Anno 1564. Who marking the great ſway which the Jeſuites began to have, and the danger which the Church might run, if that Order were not equally ballanced by ſome other of as much ability; firſt eſtabliſhed this, conſiſting altogether of Prieſts; that by their diligence in preaching of the lives of the Saints, and other heads of practical and moral duties, they might divert the torrent of the peoples affection from the brood of Ignatius. The renowned Cardinal Cæſar Baronius, Francis Bourdino, afterwards Biſhop of Avignon in France, and one Alexander Fidelis, were the three firſt whom he admitted to his Rule: initiated in S. Hierom's Church at Rome by Pope Pius the Fourth with great zeal and cheerfulneſs; to whom, as to ſome of his Predeceſſors, the power and practices of the Jeſuites were become ſuſpicious. They increaſed ſpeedily (being countenanced on ſo good grounds) to great numbers, and a proportionable Revenue, as much eſteemed of for their knowledge in Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, and Practical Divinity; as the others for Philoſophy, Tongues, and the ſtudy of Controverſies; and more accepted of in moſt places, becauſe not uſually intermedling in affairs of State. So evenly looked on by the Popes, that the Jeſuites could not obtain the Canonization of their Ignatius, till the Oratorians were grown rich enough to celebrate that of their Nerius alſo: which hapned in the ſhort Popedom of Gregory the 15. Anno 1622.

To conclude this diſcourſe of Monks and Friers, I will ſay ſomewhat of the ſevereſt kind of Recluſe, which is the Anachoret, or Anchoret, ſo called from ἀναχωρέω, becauſe they uſe to live retired from company. They are kept in a cloſe place, where they muſt dig their Graves with their nails; badly clad, and worſe dieted; not to be pityed for all that, becauſe their reſtraint of liberty is voluntary; yet to be ſorrowed for in this, that after ſuch an earthly Purgatory, they ſhall find inſtead of an Euge bone ſerve, a Quis quæſivit hæc de manibus veſtris.

But concerning theſe Orders of Monks and Friers, certain it is, that at their firſt inſtitution they were a People much reverenced for their holy life; as men that for Chriſts ſake had abandoned all the Pomps and Vanities of the World. And queſtionleſs they were then a People altogether mortified, and who by their very aſpects would gain upon the affection of the hardeſt heart; inſomuch that not only mean men, but great perſonages alſo did deſire to be buried in a Frier's weeds; as Francis the Second Marqueſs of Mantua, Albertus Pius another Prince of Italy, Iſabel the renowned Queen of Caſtile and Aragon, wife of Ferdinand the Catholick; and in late times the great Scholar Chriſtopher Longolius. But as Florus ſaith of the Civil Wars between Cæſar and Pompey, Cauſa hujus Belli, eadem quæ omnium, nimia felicitas; we may ſay alſo of theſe Friers. The greatneſs of their wealth, which many on a ſuperſtitious devotion had bequeathed unto them, brought them firſt to a neglect of their former devout and religious carriage; next to a wretchleſneſs of their credits, and conſequently into contempt: ſo that there was not a people under Heaven that was more infamous in themſelves, or more ſcornfully abuſed by others. Hence the vulgar ſayings of the people, that Friers wear Croſſes on their breaſts, becauſe they have none in their hearts; and that, when a Frier receiveth the Razor, the Devil entreth into him; and the like. Nay, Sir Thomas Moor, who loſt his head in the Pope's quarrel, ſticks not in his Utopia, to call them Errones maximos; and would have them comprehended within the Statutes of Vagabonds and ſturdy Beggers. Now to ſhew both the humours of Reſpect and Contempt, uſed ſeverally to theſe Monks and Friers, as men ſtood affected; there goeth a Tale, how the Lady Moor, Sir Thomas his Wife, finding by chance a Friers Girdle, ſhewed it to her Husband with great joy, ſaying, Behold Sir Thomas, a ſtep towards Heaven: whereunto with a ſcornful laugh he returneth this anſwer, that he feared that ſtep would not bring her a ſtep higher. And as for their retiredneſs and ſolitary courſe of life, ſo it is that many Kings, eſpecially of the Saxons in the time of their Heptarchy, have abandoned their Scepters to enjoy it: And Barclay in his Argenis, under the perſon of Aneroeſtus, hath defended it in ſuch Princes, as have cloiſtered themſelves to enjoy the ſolitude of a Convent. Which notwithſtanding, Philoſophers have defined a man to be ζῶον πολιτικὸν, a Creature principally made for civil converſation; the Poets ſay, Naſcitur indignè per quem non naſcitur alter, that he dieth indebted to the World, who leaveth no poſterity behind him: and the Jews, which live in great numbers even in Rome it ſelf, abhor this unſociable kind of living, and prefer a civil ſociableneſs much before it; as to Nature more agreeable, to Man more profitable, and conſequently to God more acceptable. And having ſpoken thus much of the Monks and Friers, deſcend we now unto the Nuns.

And indeed I ſhould much wrong the Friers, if I ſhould deprive them of the company of their deareſt Votaries; and therefore take ſomewhat of them alſo. Called anciently Moniales from the Greek word Μόνος, from their living alone; whence we alſo had the names of Monks and Monaſteries: in the middle times called Nuns, from Nonna an Egyptian word, (for Egypt in old times was not meanly furniſhed with ſuch Eremites) which alſo ſignifieth a ſolitary and lonely life. A word in ſome of the barbarous Latines very much in uſe. Scholaſtica the Siſter of S. Benedict, was the firſt who collected them into Companies, and preſcribed them Rules. They are ſhaved as Monks are, and vow (as they do) perpetual Poverty and Virginity. Which laſt how well they keep, let Clemangis teſtifie; who telleth us, that Puellam velare idem eſt ac publice eam ad ſcortandum exponere: to veil a Nun, and proſtitute her for a common Harlot, were terms equivalent. And one Robinſon, who lived for a time in the Engliſh Nunnery at Liſbon, hath told us, that he found an hole in the Garden-wall covered over with Morter, in which were hidden the bones of many new-born children, which their unnatural Mothers had murthered and thrown in there. But of theſe I will inſtance only in two Orders, viz. that of S. Clare, as being the ſtricteſt; and that of S. Brigit which enjoyeth moſt liberty.

1. S. Clare was a Knights Daughter of Aſſis, where S. Francis was born, with whom ſhe was co-temporary, and with whoſe auſtere life ſhe was ſo affected, that ſhe forſook her Fathers houſe, and followed him. Having learned her Lirrie of that Frier-monger, ſhe deviſed an Order of Religious Women, and had it confirmed by Pope Honorius the Third, Anno 1225. Her followers vow Poverty and Virginity, as before was ſaid, go barefoot, feed meanly, and are more ſtraitned in their courſe of life, than thoſe of any other Order. By their Foundreſs, out of a deſire to conform the better to the Rule and Order of S. Francis, they were called Minorites, or Minores, and gave name to the place near the Tower-hill in London, where they had their houſe, called from them, the Minories.

2. S. Brigit was a Queen of Swethland, and coming to Rome on devotion, obtained of Pope Urban the Third, Anno 1370, or thereabouts, that Friers and Nuns might in ſome places live together. For being a Woman, and a Widow, ſhe knew beſt (as it ſeemeth) what was good for both Sexes; and ſo deviſed ſuch a Rule, as contented both. But little needed this co-habitation or living together, under the ſhelter of the ſame roof. For they had formerly been joined in carnal affections, though parted by Walls; neither were the Viſitations of the Friers ſo fruitleſs, but that the Nuns did fructifie by them. Theſe Friers and Nuns though they lived under the ſame roof, are prohibited from coming to one another, but on ſpecial occaſions: the Foundreſs ſo ordering it, that the Nuns ſhould lie in the upper Rooms, and the Friers in the lower. The Confeſſor alſo is denied acceſs into their Chambers, but ſhrieveth them through an Iron Grate, by which his lodging is parted from the Lady Abbeſſe's. And herein lieth the Myſtery of Iniquity. For Robinſon, whom before I named, tells us, that at the time of his ſervice in the Engliſh Nunnery at Liſbon, he was ſhewed a way by which this uncharitable Grate, which ſeemed to keep the Friers from the company of their female friends, might be, and was on ſuch occaſions uſually removed, and the acceſs made free and open to each others Beds. Which if it be truly ſaid of theſe, may be ſuſpected alſo in all the reſt of this Order, and in moſt alſo of the others.

And now I return unto my Friers, which beſides the maintenance which by their Founders is allotted for their preſent ſubſiſtence; are kept in a continual hope and poſſibility of attaining to the higheſt honours which that Church can give, if they continue conſtant in their due obedience. For there is not one of them which hopeth not to be the Prior of his Convent; 2. Provincial of his Order, in that Country where he liveth; 3. and then the General of his Order. Next, none more likely than the Generals to be choſen Cardinals, and out of the Cardinals one of neceſſity muſt be choſen (and why not he, as well as any of the Pack?) to be Pope of Rome. So firm and ſweet a Companion of man is Hope, that being the laſt thing which leaves him, it makes all toyls ſupportable, all difficulties conquerable.

The Popedom containeth
Arch-Biſhops 44. Biſhops 57.

The Signeury of VENICE.

NOrth of the Lands of the Church from Romandiola to the Alps, lie the Italian Provinces of the State of VENICE, bounded upon the South with the Territory of Ferrara, and the reſt of Romandiola; on the Weſt, with the Dukedom of Millain; on the North, with the main body of the Alpes; and on the Eaſt, with the Adriatick and the River Arſia, by which laſt parted from Liburnia, a Sclavonian Province. Beſides which, it commands a great part of Dalmatia, together with the Iſlands of Candy, Corfu, Cephalenea, Ithaca, Zant, Cithera, and certain others of leſs note. The length of their Dominions by Sea and Land extending above a thouſand Miles, but the breadth not anſwerable.

The nature of the ſoil, and the principal Rivers which refreſh it, we ſhall ſee anon in the deſcription of the Provinces into which it is divided. According to which Provinces and the chief Cities of them, the Character of the people may beſt be taken: it being ſaid proverbially by the Italians, that the Venetians themſelves are ſtately, crafty, and greedy; the Veronians ſtudious and faithful; the Paduans fierce, the Vincentians eager on revenge; thoſe of Friuli, grateful, but inconſtant; thoſe of Hiſtria, neither long livers, nor of very great courage. That in the conduct of a War, thoſe of Venice bring Silver; thoſe of Treviſo, Swords; that the Breſcians are fit to dig in Trenches; thoſe of Bergomo to lay Ambuſhes; thoſe of Padua to manage Horſes. And of the Women it is ſaid, that thoſe of Crema are deceitful, thoſe of Venice inſolent, thoſe of Vincentia conſtant; thoſe of Verona gracious; thoſe of Treviſo jealous, thoſe of Breſcia diligent, and the Bergomaſque crafty.

But not to dally longer in theſe proverbial characters (though they carry a great deal of truth in them) certain it is, that the Venetians themſelves do affect a great deal of gravity in their actions, ſpeak very little at the Table; very ſevere where they have authority, and many times in the exceſs. And yet ſuch is the conſtant temper of their Government, and their impartiality in doing juſtice, that they are very well obeyed, and generally well beloved of all their Subjects (notwithſtanding the heavy preſſures which are laid upon them) as well in Italy as without. Eſteemed in former times good Souldiers both by Sea and Land, maintaining Wars continually with the Turks in Paleſtine; the Emperours of Conſtantinople, in Greece it ſelf; the Genoeſe by Sea, and their Neighbours of Italy in this Continent. But of late times they have more ſtudied to preſerve, than inlarge their Dominions; and that too rather by expence of money, than the loſs of blood, and by wit rather than by valour. So fortunate in this laſt kind of practice, that Machiavel obſerved of them in his time, that whatſoever they loſt by War, they recovered by Treaty. A pregnant evidence whereof we ſhall ſee anon.

To proceed now to the deſcription of ſuch of the Provinces and Eſtates of this Common-wealth, as paſs under the accompt of Italy, they are theſe that follow, that is to ſay, 1. Marca Trevigiana, 2. Friuli, 3. Hiſtria, 4. the Italian Iſles of the Adriatick; of which now in order; leaving the other Members of this Eſtate to be conſidered in their proper places.

1. MARCA TREVIGIANA is bounded on the South with the River Atheſis, and the moſt Northern branch of the Po, which from ſome Lime-kills near adjoining, they now call Fornaces, by which parted from the Territory of Ferrara, and the reſt of Romagna; on the Weſt, with the Rivers Mincius and Sarca, and the Lake of Benacus, (now called Lago de Garda from a little Town of that name, adjoining) by which parted from the Dutchy of Millain; on the Eaſt, with Friuli, and the Golf of Venice; and on the North with the Alpes which divide it from Tirolis, a Province of Germany. In the time of great Auguſtus Cæſar, this Tract together with Friuli the next neighbouring Province had the name of Venetia, from the Veneti, the old Inhabitants hereof; and by that name made one of thoſe eleven Regions, into which he then divided Italy. How it obtained this new name we ſhall ſee anon.

The principal Rivers of this Tract are, 1. Brenta, called anciently Meduacus Major, which riſing in the Alpes not far from Trent, and watering the Fields of Padua, paſſeth into the Sea, near the City of Venice, making up the famous Haven of Malamocco. 2. Bachilio, called anciently Meduacus Minor, which riſeth alſo in the Alpes, and paſſing by Vincenza, emptieth it ſelf into the Brenta. And 3. Atheſis, now called Adige, which ſpringeth alſo out of the Alpes not far from Trent, and having taken many leſſer ſtreams into its chanel, paſſeth by Verona, and after is divided into two great branches; whereof the one falls into the Sea, the other loſeth it ſelf in the midſt of the Mariſhes.

The chief Cities of it are, 1. Vincentia, one of the twelve Cities built by the Tuſcans, or Hetrurians on this ſide of the Apennine; pleaſantly ſeated on the banks of the River Bachilio, and another navigable water called Retone (Erotenus formerly.) The Territory of the City not more large than fruitful, abounding with all ſtore of fruits, and yielding an excellent kind of Wine, which from thence is vended unto Venice. The buildings of it for the moſt part of poliſhed ſtone, whereof the Fields adjoining afford ſpecial Quarries; and the Inhabitants generally an induſtrious people, making a great quantity of Silks, with which they do adorn themſelves, and ſupply their Neighbours. 2. Treviſo, ſeated on the Banks of the River Silus, (which runneth through the middle of it) in the midſt of a large and ſpacious plain, abounding even to admiration, with moſt excellent Wheat, and all other Neceſſaries. A City of no ancient name, not mentioned by Ptolomy, nor others of the old Geographers: but of ſufficient note in the later times, for being the Reſidence or Seat of thoſe Provincial Governours (Marqueſſes they are ſometimes called) which the Lombardian Kings ſent hither to defend their Borders. Hence it gave name to all the Country, in Latine called Marca Treviſiana, or Tarviſana, as ſome call it: taken by the Venetians, and loſt again divers times; but was finally conquered Anno 1380, or thereabout; Antonia Venieri being Duke of Venice. 3. Padua, formerly called Patavium, built by Antenor, whoſe Tomb is ſtill here to be ſhown. From him named Antenoria, as ſome report, but after called Patavium quaſi Padavium, from its nearneſs to the River Po, and the Fens thereof. Situate in ſo delectable and ſweet a ſoil, that Conſtantius Palæologus was uſed to ſay, that did not the authority of the Scriptures perſwade him otherwiſe, he ſhould look for Paradiſe no where elſe, than in perſuavi Patavina amœnitate, amongſt the flouriſhing and delightful ſweetneſſes of the Paduan field. A Town of great eſteem in the time of the Romans, who much reſorted to the ſame: and much frequented at the preſent for the Univerſity here eſtabliſhed Anno 1220. famous for Phyſicians, who have here a Garden of Simples; of good name alſo for the birth of Livy the Hiſtorian, Julius Paulus a Civil Lawyer his Co-temporary, L. Aruntius Stella, and C. Valerius Flaccus, two famous Poets celebrated by Martial: and in the later times, of Marſilius Patavinus a Minorite Frier, who wrote ſo learnedly in behalf of the Emperour, againſt the Pope, Fr. Zabarella the Civilian, Mic. Savanarola the Phyſician, Maginus the Geographer, and divers others. It was much renowned in former times for the humanity of the Men, and chaſtity of the Women; which laſt ſo eminent and famous, that as chaſte as one of Padua, grew into a Proverb. Hereunto alludeth Martial, ſpeaking of his laſcivious Writings;

Tu quoq; nequitias noſtri luſuſq; libelli,
Uda puella leges, ſis Patavina licet.

Young Maids my wanton lines will long to ſee,
And read them o're, though Patavines they be.

The City after much viciſſitude of Fortune, fell into the power of the Venetians, with all her Territories, being in compaſs one hundred and eighty miles, Anno 1400, Michael Steno then Duke; Vicenza being won about the ſame time alſo. 4. Breſcia, the ſecond City for bigneſs and beauty in all Lombardy. It is alſo the Seat of an Archbiſhop, who is an Earl, a Marqueſs, and a Duke. Her Territories are in length one hundred, in breadth fifty miles; which the Citizens, together with their Freedom, bought of Otho the German Emperour, but loſt it to Philip Maria Viſconti, Duke of Milain, Anno 1421. to whom they yielded upon certain conditions; which being broken by the Duke, they gave themſelves unto the Seigneury of Venice, Anno 1434, Francis Foſcari being then Duke; under whom it continueth to this day. The City is very populous, the air ſound and good, the ſoil exceeding plentiful of Corn, Wine, and Fruits; and having in it Mines both of Iron and Copper, to the great enriching of the people. It was anciently the chief of the Cenomani, who coming out of Gaul, drove the Tuſcans hence, and ſeated themſelves in their habitations, till finally conquered by the Romans. It is ſituate on a little River called Garcia, which runneth through the middle of it; and is ſaid to contain at this time 50000 Inhabitants. 5. Verona, ſo called (as ſome conceit it) quaſi vere una; or as others, quaſi Brenonia, becauſe built by Brennus; both falſe and frivolous alike. It is ſituate on the Banks of the River Atheſis, and is counted the firſt City of the ſecond rank of the Cities of Italy: proud in the birth of Catullus, a well-known Poet; and in an Amphitheatre (a remainder of the Roman greatneſs) able to contain 80000 perſons. The Territories hereof are ſixty five miles in length, forty miles in breadth, enriched with many medicinal Herbs, (eſpecially on Mount Baldus, an hill therein) where the Phyſicians go a Simpling. 6. Bebriacum, or Bedriacum, as ſome Writers call it, two days march from Verona, now a ſmall Borrough named Labinia, and never of any great note when it was at the beſt. Remarkable in the Roman Stories, for the defeat here given by the Vitellians unto Otho's Army; and after by Veſpaſian's Forces unto thoſe of Vitellius. By Tacitus called in that regard duabus Romanis cladibus notus & infauſtus Vicus. 7. Crema, a Town of no great Antiquity, but ſituate in a wealthy ſoil, well peopled, and as well built for the private Edifices: ſo ſtrongly fortified, that it is reckoned the chief Bulwark of the Signeury of Venice, againſt the Millaneſe, on the borders of which State it ſtandeth. Firſt built about the year 970. by ſome remnants of the Anthropomorphites, who on the deſtruction of Parnaſſus (a Town of Lombardy) where before they lived, abjured their hereſie, and were permitted to build here. Honoured in ſucceeding times with a See Epiſcopal; and either the birth-place or preferment of John Cremenſis, a Roman Cardinal. Who being by Pope Honorius ſent into England, Anno 1225, to diſſwade the Clergy-men from Marriage; and having in a Convocation of the Clergy, called for that purpoſe, highly advanced the honour of a ſingle life, and ſhewed the inconvenience and unfitneſs of Marriage, in men preferred unto Holy Orders; was the night following (to the great diſcredit both of his cauſe and perſon) taken in Adultery. 8. Bergomo, a right ancient Town, but very well built, ſeated upon the ſide of an hill, and having a very large and beautiful Suburb; the Territory whereof hath many rough and craggy Mountains, the ſpurs and excurſions of the Alpes; but withall many rich and delightful Valleys, intermingled with them. The people of this City and Country are ſaid to ſpeak the coarſeſt language of any in Italy; but to have as fine Wits as the beſt. Places of more inferiour note are, 1. Eſte, (Ateſte in moſt Latine Writers) whence came the Family D'eſte, late Dukes of Ferrara. 2. Liniacum, a ſtrong Garriſon on the borders of Mantua; as 3. Caſtel-France is towards Ferrara; and 4. Seraval, of moſt remarkableneſs for the great quantity of Armour which is therein made. 5. Feltri, which ſtill preſerves its old name of Feltria; moſt memorable at the preſent for a See Epiſcopal. 6. Altina, a Biſhops See alſo, but deſtroyed and ruined.

This Province being anciently a part of the Ciſalpine Gaul, fell to the power of the Romans at the end of the ſecond Punick War: and being conquered by the Romans, did continue theirs, till firſt the Gothes, and afterwards the Lombards became Maſters of it. Afterwards in the fall of the Kingdom of Lombardy, it fell firſt unto the French, and after to the German Empire; from which by many mean conveyances, it came at laſt to Ottocarus, King of Bohemia and Duke of Auſtria, who bought the ſame of Ulricus the laſt Duke of Carinthia: whoſe Predeceſſor probably had been ſeized hereof, from the time that Henry Son of Eugelbert, Præfect of Hiſtria, adopted by Henry of Epperſtein Duke of Carinthia, or Karnten, ſucceeded him in that Eſtate. Upon a reconciliation made betwixt this Ottocarus and Rodolphus of Habſpurg (then Emperour of Germany) it was added (together with Auſtria it ſelf) unto the Patrimony of that Family, ſold by Duke Leopold the Ninth, to the Carara's, then Lords of Padua; in ruine of whoſe Eſtate and Family, it fell (together with that City) into the power of the Venetians, who ſtill hold the ſame.

2. FRIULI hath on the Eaſt the River Formio, which parteth it from Hiſtria; on the Weſt, Marca Treviſana, and a branch of the Alpes; on the North, the main body of the Alpes, which divide it from Germany; and on the South, the Adriatick Sea, or Gulf of Venice.

It is called Forum Julii in the Latine (of which that of Friuli is derived) from Julius Cæſar, who conducting his Armies this way, built the Town ſo named; and from that march of his, the Alpes adjoining, as 'tis thought, had the name of Juliæ. By ſome Writers of the middle times it is called Regio Aquilegienſis, as appertaining for the moſt part, by the gift of the Emperours Otho and Conradus, to the Church, or Patriarchate of Aquileia; and by the common people of Venice for the moſt part, Patria, or the Country, becauſe from theſe parts they derive their firſt Original. In which regard part of the Region of Venetia, as before was ſaid.

The Country is in a manner ſquare, each ſide fifty miles; watered with the Rivers of 1. Hydra, heretofore of no ſmall fame for the Silver Mines; 2. Tiliaventum, riſing from the Alpes, and navigable towards the latter end of its courſe: but broken into many Chanels (ſeven at leaſt in number) which makes it not ſo navigable as it would be otherwiſe; moſt of theſe Chanels being ſhallow, and eaſily forded, but ſwift and violent withal, by reaſon of their fall from the neighbouring Hills. 3. Natiſco, neighboured by the famous City of Aquileia. 4. Timavus, mentioned in the firſt of the Æneids, which riſing out of the Alpes, and running under ground for the ſpace of 330 furlongs, breaketh out again; and being branched into nine Chanels, falleth into the Gulf or Bay of Trieſte. By Niger it is now called Lareina; but by Leander named Timavo. The Soil ſufficiently fruitful, except towards the Alpes, and yielding a very pleaſant Wine, which Pliny did prefer before any in Italy.

Towns herein of moſt note and conſequence, 1. Aquileia, or Aquilegia, as ſome call it, made the Metropolis firſt of the Province of Hiſtria and Venetia, by the Emperour Antoninus; as afterwards of the whole Dioceſs of Italy, by the Weſtern Emperours. Honoured in that regard with the ſeat of the Præfectus Prætorio, or of his Vicarius or Lieutenant: tranſlated from Millain to this City as the Gate of Italy, by which the barbarous Nations were to make their entrance; never ſo like to be ſhut out, as by the power and preſence of ſo great an Officer. After this time, and on this occaſion, the Biſhop hereof had the title of Patriarch. And here the Patriarchal See had not long continued, when the City was deſtroyed by Attila, that furious Hun; 37000 of the Citizens being ſlain with the Sword, the reſt removing to ſome places of more ſafe abode. Re-edified afterwards by Narſes, but never able to recover its former luſtre. After which time fearing the like miſeries from the hands of the Lombards, the Patriarchal See was removed to Venice, as the ſafer place, and ſetled in the Iſle of Grada; yet ſo, that the ſucceeding Biſhops of Aquileia (for they ſtayed at Venice only till the times were quiet) do ſtill retain the dignity and name of Patriarchs, as well as thoſe of Grada do, and with better reaſon. For beſides the honour which it had in being made the ſeat of the Præfectus Prætorio, it had been formerly more honoured with the reſidence of Auguſtus Cæſar, who here kept his Court; whence it had the name of Roma altera, or a ſecond Rome; and of Tiberius who lived here with Julia the daughter of the ſaid Auguſtus, before his coming to the Empire. As for the City it ſelf, it is ſituate on the River Natiſco, but not well inhabited at the preſent; partly becauſe of the ill Air, partly by the removal of the Patriarch thence, drawn by the Venetians of late times, for good reaſons of State, to fix his dwelling in their City, and drawing after him a great reſort of Biſhops, and others of the Clergy of his Juriſdiction, principally by the ill neighbourhood of Venice, attracting all Trade unto it ſelf. Moſt memorable in old ſtory for enduring that famous Siege againſt Maximinus, for the ſafety of the Empire of Rome, and her Emperours Maximus and Balbinus. In whoſe cauſe the Citizens hereof were ſo reſolutely faithful, that they bereaved the women (willing to loſe that invaluable ornament of their Sex, for the common good) of the hair of their heads to make Bow-ſtrings withall. Nor did this pious conſtancy of theirs want an happy iſſue. For they beheld the Tyrant headleſs under their walls (ſlain by the hands of his own Souldiers) and ſaw the Metropolis of the World preſerved by their loyalty. And yet the matter was not ended with the death of the Tyrant; the Souldiers and people laying hands on his Children alſo, and putting all to the Sword. Of which cruelty being asked the reaſon, they returned this anſwer, That not a Whelp was to be ſpared of ſo ill a litter; none of the brood of ſuch a Cur; or in the language of the Author, Peſſimi Canis Catulus non eſt relinquendus. 2. Trieſte, of old called Tergeſtum, from whence a ſpacious Bay adjoining had anciently the name of Sinus Tergeſtinus, and is now called Golfo di Trieſte. The Bay repleniſhed principally with the water of the River Timavus, which with many ſtreams doth fall into it, and is therefore by the inhabitants of that Gulf or Bay, called Fons Maris, as Polybius in Strabo telleth us. The Town of greater Antiquity than obſervation, mentioned by Pliny and ſome others of the Ancient Writers, but not elſe conſiderable. 3. Montfalcon, famous for its medicinal herbs. 4. Porto Gruare, of old called Portus Romatinus, an Haven-Town, as the name importeth. 5. Concordia, in former times of no ſmall eſteem; but ſo demoliſhed by Attila the Hun, that it is now nothing but a ruine. The people hereof betaking themſelves to the Iſlands in the Mariſhes of Venice, where they planted in Tourcellan, Muriano. Conſtantiaca, and ſome others were adjoining to them, of which more hereafter. 6. Vtina, or Vden, the faireſt and largeſt at this time of all the Province, containing about five miles in compaſs, and about 15000 Inhabitants. Honoured for a time with the Patriarchal See, removed hither from Aquilegia, at ſome Siege thereof: of which though long ago deprived, yet it is ſtill the ordinary Seat of the Procurator or Principal Governour, ſent from Venice hither. 7. Palma, a new Town, as being built by the Venetians no longer ſince than the year 1583, but held to be the beſt fortified of any in Italy. 8. Cividad de Auſtria, firſt built by Julius Cæſar, in ſome of his marches towards Gaul, by whom it was called Julium, after Forum Julii, whence the name of Friuli (Diſtrictus Foro-Julienſis, as the Latines call it) came unto the Province. But being taken and repaired by ſome Princes of the Auſtrian Family (on the borders of whoſe Eſtate it ſtandeth) it got this new name of Cividad de Auſtria.

This Province anciently was the Seat of the Euganei, inhabiting this tract and part of Marchia Trevigiana. But thoſe being vanquiſhed by the Veneti; and the Veneti by the Ciſalpine Gauls, it became finally ſubject to the State of Rome, and in the fall of that great Empire was one of the four Dukedoms founded by the Lombards, when they conquered Italy; the other three being Turin, Benevent, and Spoleto. The Family of the Berengarii were once Dukes hereof; three of which were of ſpecial fame, and two of them Competitors for the Kingdom of Italy. But this Family being ſuppreſſed by the Emperour Otho, he gave a great part of the Country to the Church of Aquileia; to which almoſt all the reſt was added by the Emperour Conrade; yet ſo that there were divers petit Lords, who had good Eſtates in it; the name of Duke remaining unto ſome of the ancient race. One of which named Luitprandus, envying to the Venetians their increaſe of Dominion, made War againſt them: which ended in the loſs of his Country, Anno 1020, or thereabouts; ever ſince ſubject to that State: the Patriarch of Aquileia (whoſe authority in this Country began to decline, in the riſing of the State of Venice) ſurrendring all his intereſs alſo to that powerful Signeury as better able to defend it againſt all Pretenders, Anno 1420. But notwithſtanding this ſurrendry, the Patriarch hath ſtill large poſſeſſions and revenues here, and ſtill retains his Juriſdiction over the Prelates of this Country, and thoſe of Hiſtria and Trevigiana (20 in all, or thereabouts) ſix only which are thoſe of the Iſles of Venice, continuing at this day under him of Grada.

HISTRIA is invironed on the Eaſt, Weſt, and South, with the Adriatick, in the manner of a Demy-Iſland, or Peninſula, ſave where it toucheth on Friuli; and on the North is parted from Carinthia, with the Alpes of Germany. The Country very woody, and full of quarries, affording materials to Venice, both for Ships and Houſes; not comparable for fertility to the reſt of Italy; and of air ſo ſickly and unwholſom, that the Venetians were compelled to hire people to dwell there, and afterwards to grant them many large immunities. It is two hundred miles in compaſs, watered with the Rivers of 1. Formio, which they now call Riſano; 2. Nauportus, called at this day Quietus; and 3. Arſia, which runneth into the Gulf of Quevero, called anciently Sinus Flanaticus, and divides this Country from Liburnia, a Sclavonian Province.

The chief Towns of it are, 1. Cap de Iſtria, called in Pliny's time Ægide; and being afterwards repaired by the Emperour Juſtin, was called Juſtinopolis. But being taken and deſtroyed by the Genoeſe, and rebuilt again, it took the name of Caput Hiſtriæ, or Cape d' Iſtria; becauſe the principal of the Province and Biſhops See. Of this See was Vergerius Biſhop, about the time of Luther's firſt preaching in Germany; who with Antonio de Dominis Archbiſhop of Spalato, were of moſt note of any of theſe parts of the world, that fell off from the Church of of Rome to the Proteſtant party, and therefore ſhall be ſpoken of in more particulars; Spalato in his proper place: and Vergerius here. Being a man of great induſtry, and eminent parts, he was by many of the Popes employed in Germany, againſt Luther. In which negotiation he behaved himſelf with ſuch dexterity, and gave ſuch content unto the Pope, that Paul 3. An. 1541. intended to have made him Cardinal; had not ſome who envyed him that honour, accuſed him of Lutheraniſm. To purge himſelf he began to write a Book, entituled, Againſt the Apoſtata's of Germany, in the purſuit whereof pondering of Luther's reaſons he became of his opinion; which being known, he was driven from Juſtinople. He ſubmitted himſelf and his cauſe to the Fathers at Trent, but could not get a hearing. Thence he went to the D. of Mantua, from him to the State of Venice; but no where finding protection, he retired unto the Griſons, and there preached; till Chriſtopher, Duke of Wittenberg, Anno 1548, placed him in his Univerſity of Tubing, and there allowed him a ſufficiency of maintenance. It was built by Juſtinus (as before) the Nephew of Juſtinian the Emperour, as a Fortreſs againſt the incurſions of the barbarous people. 2 Pola, built by the Colchians, at their firſt coming hither, the name in their language importing as much as the place of baniſhment. It was after made a Roman Colony, and called Pietas Julia: but being firſt deſtroyed by Attila, after by the Genœſe, it recovered the old name again; and ſtill continueth with the title of a See Epiſcopal. It abutteth upon Sinus Flanaticus, or the Golf of Quevero. 3. Parenze. 4. Plinun, 5. Cita Nova, all of them ſeated in the Midland, and not much obſervable, but that Parenze, and Cita Nova are Epiſcopal Sees: this laſt being anciently called Emonia, whence the Biſhop hath the name of Emonienſis. 6. Rovigno, in a little Iſland, and mounted on an high hill, not unfruitful in Olives; beautified with a convenient Port, and that defended alſo by a very ſtrong Caſtle. The Town but poor, by reaſon of the ill neighbourhood of Venice, from which diſtant not above twenty miles; inhabited for the moſt part by Marriners, and skilful Pilots, hired by ſuch ſhips as are bound for Venice, to conduct them ſafely over the Bars of Malamocco. The Country adjoining mountainous and ſomewhat wild; but thoſe mountains covered on the outſide with Phyſical Simples; and yielding many Quarries of moſt excellent Marble, which ſo adorn the Venetian Palaces.

It is recorded that the Hiſtrians were a people of Colchis, who being ſent by King Æeta to purſue Jaſon and the Argonauts, were driven up this Gulf: and either for fear of the Kings anger, or not daring to venture their weak Veſſel to ſo long a voyage, as from hence to Colchis whence they came; ſtayed in this Country. It was after that time called Iapigia, from Iapis an Ætolian, who firſt planted here, and took the name of Itria from the Iſtri, a people on the banks of Iſter, or Danubius; who made up a conſiderable part of this plantation. Siding with the Ætolians in their Wars againſt the Romans, and making many inrodes and excurſions on them; they were invaded firſt by Manlius, without leave of the Senate: and him they charged with ſuch a fury, that they beat him out of his Camp. Where finding plenty of Wine, and all ſtore of Proviſions, they fell roundly to it; till Manlius having rallied his men again, charged them in their Cups, and killed 8000 in the place, their miſerable King being ſo hotly purſued by the Victors, that he was fain to kill himſelf for fear of Captivity. This was in Anno V.C. 575. Cl. Pulcher the next Conſul perfected the conqueſt. Sempronius long time after that, ſc. An. V.C. 625. reduced it to the form of a Province. So it continued to the time of Auguſtus Cæſar, who joining it to that of Venice (or Venetia) made out of both the eleventh and laſt Region of Italy. Under the Romans they continued whilſt that Empire ſtood, and after the decay thereof regained their liberties; which they enjoyed till by Piracy moleſting the Venetians, they loſt many of their Towns to Duke Petro Candiano, Anno 938; and the whole Country was made Tributary, by the valour of the Duke Henry Dondolo about the year 1190. After which many times rebelling, they were ſtill re-conquered.

4. The fourth member of this Eſtate with reſpect to Italy, are ſome ISLANDS in the Adriatick; which being principally under the command of this Commonwealth, is commonly called the Gulf of Venice; a Gulf extending in length 700 miles, in breadth 140 miles, in ſome places leſs; ſo called of Adria once a famous Haven Town (as before was ſaid) at the mouth of Eridanus or Po. Concerning which we are to know, that though this Gulf or Bay of the Adriatick extended no farther than the Eaſtern parts of Dalmatia, where the Sea beginneth to take the name of the Ionian; yet Mare Adriaticum, or the Adriatick Sea was of greater length. Extended by the Ancients over the Ionian, and thence South-weſtward till it meeteth with the Tuſcan Seas; and Southwards, till it come to the coaſt of Africk; inſomuch as Mare Lybicum, or the Sea of Africk, is by Oroſius made a part of the Adriatick. For ſpeaking of the Province of Tripolis (a Province of Africk) properly and eſpecially ſo called, he boundeth it on the North with the Adriatick; as he doth the Iſle of Crete, on the South-ſide of it, with the Lybian Sea, quod & Adriaticum vocant, which they alſo call the Adriatick, as his own words are. The like might alſo be made evident out of other Authors, both Greek and Latin: which I note here, becauſe Paul's being toſſed up and down in the Sea of Adria, as is ſaid Act. 27. 27. and being after caſt on ſhore in the Iſle of Maltha; occaſioned ſome to think this Melite or Malta, to be that Iſland of Dalmatia, which is now called Melida being ſeated in the Bay or Golf of Adria: whereas the Text ſpeaks plainly of that Iſle of Malta, which lieth in the furtheſt parts of the Adriatick Sea, on the Coaſts of Africk. But to return to this Golf, it was accounted heretofore to be very tempeſtuous and unſafe, as appeareth by Improbo iracundior Adria, in Horace, the Minax Adriaticum, in Catullus; and the Ventoſi tumor Adriæ, in Seneca's Thyeſtes. But when the Empreſs Helena had found the Croſs on which CHRIST ſuffered, ſhe cauſed one of the three Nails with which his body was faſtned to it, to be thrown of purpoſe into this Sea; ſince which time, as Platina hath told us in the life of Pope Sylveſter (and cites Saint Ambroſe for his Author) it hath been very calm and quiet; the ſecond nail being made into a Bridle for her Son Conſtantine's Horſe, and a Creſt for his Helmet of the third. But not to truſt too much to the truth of this miracle, certain it is that the Venetians are Lords of it, by reaſon of their Naval Power: and that it is every year eſpouſed to the Duke of Venice, by the ſolemn caſting in of a Wedding Ring; and every year Baptized on Epiphany-day, by the Biſhop of Zant. When this laſt Ceremony took beginning, I am yet to ſeek. But for the firſt, which is performed with a great deal of ſtate, every Holy-Thurſday, the Duke, and all the Magnificos being rowed in the Bucentaure (which is a rich and ſtately Gally made for ſuch Solemnities, and capable of 200 perſons, whence it had the name) it took beginning from Pope Alexander the third. Who being hardly put to it by the Emperor Frederick Barbaroſſa, fled unto Venice in the habit of a Cook; Sebaſtian Cyani being then Duke: in proſecution of whoſe quarrel, the Venetians encountred Otho the Emperors Son vanquiſhed, him, and reſtored the Pope. The Duke returning back in Triumph with his Royal Priſoners, was thus ſaluted by the Pope. Cyani, take here this Ring of Gold, and by giving it unto the Sea oblige it unto thee: a Ceremony which on this day (the Aſcention day) ſhall be yearly obſerved both by thee and thy Succeſſors; that ſo poſterity may know that you have purchaſed the dominion thereof by your valour, and made it ſubject to you, as a Wiſe to her Husband.

The principal Iſlands of this Sea, lie on the other ſide thereof, on the coaſt of Dalmatia. Some few there are upon this ſide, but thoſe (as well as theſe under the command of this Signeury) neither great nor famous. Of theſe the chief are, 1. MALAMOCCO, in Latin Methuacum, ſituate at the South-weſt end of the Bank or Cauſey called Il Lido; now only conſiderable for the Haven, which is large and deep, made by the influx of Meduacus before mentioned; in which the greater ſhips do ride, till they hire Pilots from Rovigno to croſs the Bars. It was ennobled heretofore with the Duke's Palace, and an Epiſcopal See: the See of Padua being tranſlated hither, at the ſack of that City by the Lombards. But the Duke's Palace being removed to Rialto, and the Epiſcopal See to the Iſland of Chioggia; it is now inhabited for the moſt part by none but Sea-men. 2. TORCELLAN, in which there is a little City of the ſame name, honoured with a Biſhops See, (the Biſhop of Altina with much people with him, for fear of the ſaid Lombards retiring hither) but by reaſon of the ill air not very well peopled. 3. MURIANUM, or MURIANO, three miles in compaſs, and but one from Venice, of a ſound air, and very well inhabited, the people whereof make the beſt Venice Glaſſes, ſo much uſed in all parts. 4. CHIOGGIA, called in Latin Foſſa Clodia, a little weſt of Malamocco, at the very entrance into the Mariſhes from the Adriatick: diſtant from Venice 25 miles; to which it ſerveth inſtead of a Bulwark. There is a Town in it of the ſame name, to which the Biſhops See was removed from Malamocco, Anno 1103, and near to which are many Saltpits, which yield great gain unto the people, and as much unto the Common-wealth. Near to this Iſland the Genoeſe ſo diſcomfited the Venetians in a Fight at Sea, that thereupon, (the taking of the Iſland following ſhortly after) they were offered a blank Charter to write what they would. But the Genoeſe being grown too inſolent on their good ſucceſs, made the City deſperate; who putting all to hazard, fell again upon them, beat them, purſued them home, and there utterly cruſhed them; as we ſhall tell you more at large when we come to Genoa. 5. POVEGIA, five miles from the City, firſt peopled by ſome who had raiſed a commotion in the City, on the death of Petro Tradonico the thirteenth Duke. After which much increaſed both in wealth and buildings, till deſtroyed by the Genoeſe. It is called Pupilia by the Latins. 6. JUDECHA, (in Latin called Judaica) ſo named from the Jews who did there inhabit: not above half a mile from the City, and not very large; but liberally furniſhed with moſt pleaſant Gardens. Theſe and the reſt reckoned as members of Trevigiana or appendants on it.

Betwixt theſe Iſlands and the main land of Friuli, lyeth a ſhoal of little Iſlets, in and amongſt which ſtandeth the renowned City of Venice, the head City of this Common-wealth, and the glory of Italy. Theſe Iſlets 72 in number, but joined together by many Bridges, of which here are ſaid to be 4000 at leaſt, beſides 10000 Boats for paſſage from one Iſle to the other. The compaſs of the whole aggregate body ſaid to be eight miles, the buildings fair, and generally adorned with Glaſs-Windows; an Ornament not common in Italy; where the windows for the moſt part are made with Paper to let in the light: and that Paper oiled all over to keep out the wet. The number of the Inhabitants eſtimated at 300 thouſand. By the ſituation one would think, that it was denominated from Venetia, which in the old Latin ſignifieth the ſeething or frothing of the Sea. VENETIA maris exæſtuatio eſt quæ ad littus veniat, ſaith the old Gloſſary upon Iſidore, out of Marcus Varro. But the truth is, that it was ſo called from the Veneti, the old inhabitants of the neighbouring Province of Friuli; who to avoid the fury of the barbarous Huns then threatning Italy, abandoned the main land and built this City in the bogs and mariſhes of the Sea adjoining. And that it might afford them the greater ſafety, they not only built it in the moſt inward part of the Adriatick Sea, commonly called the Gulf of Venice; but in the midſt of many Lakes of Salt-water, extending ninety miles in compaſs, and having on the Eaſt the ſaid Adriatick Sea for the length of 550 miles: betwixt which and the ſaid Lakes there is a Bank or Cauſey which they call Il Lido, made as it were by nature to defend the Iſlands which lie in this Lake, from the violent fury of the Sea. A Cauſey of 35 miles in length, bending like a Bow, and opening in ſeven places only; which ſerve as well to keep the Lakes always full of water, as for the paſſage of Veſſels to and from the City: known by the names of the Ports of 1. Brondolo, 2. Chioza, 3. Malamocco, 4. the three Caſtles, or the Caſtles of Lio. 5. S. Eraſmus, 6. Lito Maggiore, or the great ſhore; and 7. the Treports: of which that of Brondolo lieth moſt to the Southweſt, and that of Treports to the Northweſt of the ſaid great Cauſey. And through every one of theſe there is ſafe paſſage for Ships and Barks of ſmaller burden: the bigger being compelled to lie at Anchor, on the South ſide of the City, near to the Ports of Malamocco, and the Caſtles of Lio, which are very well fortified; and there muſt remain till they are brought in by ſkilful Pilots, who know the paſſages, which, by reaſon of the ſhifting of the Sands, change very often. On the Weſt and North ſides, it is compaſſed with very deep Mariſhes, about five miles diſtant from the Land; and on the South with many Iſlands, in which are ſeveral Churches and Monaſteries, like ſo many Forts; which lie between it and thoſe parts of Italy, which are not under the obedience of the Common-wealth. So that it is impoſſible to be taken, but by an Army which can ſtretch 150 miles in compaſs. It is built, as before is ſaid, on 72 Iſlands, 60 of which lie cloſe together round about the Rialto, the other at a greater diſtance. Of theſe the principal, 1. Heraclea near the firm land of Trevigiana, peopled at firſt by ſuch as followed Magnus Biſhop of Uderza, who to avoid the fury of the Lombards came and planted here: calling the Iſland and the Town which they founded in it by the name of Heraclea, in honour of Heraclius the Eaſtern Emperour in whoſe time it hapned. Made by this means a Biſhops See, and being grown populous withall, it was honoured with the firſt Seat of the Dukes of Venice, removed by Theodatus the ſeventh Duke to Malomocco, and from thence finally to Rialto. Deſtroyed by Pepin King of Italy, Son of Charles the Great; it was re-edified in the time of Angelo Partitiario the tenth Duke, and called Cita Nova; more memorable at this time for the antiquity of the Biſhops See, than the number of Citizens. 2. Jeſulan, neighbouring to Heraclea, firſt planted by ſome Country people, who flying the fury of the Lombards, brought with them a great drove of Mares, and of Horſes, whence it had the name of Equilene, or Equilia. Made afterwards a Biſhops See alſo, by the name of Jeſulanus or Equilienſis. 3. Grada, on the ſame part of the City alſo, but more towards the North, inhabited at firſt by ſuch of the City of Aquileia as betook themſelves thither to avoid the tyranny of the Hunnes: but made more eminent than before, by Paul the Patriarch of that City, who flying the fury of the Lombards, tranſported to this Iſland the Relicks and Treaſures of his Church; and ſetled where the Church of S. Euphemia had been built before. And though Helie who ſucceeded Paul, obtained of Pope Pelagius the 2. An. 580. that the Biſhops of Grada ſhould from thenceforth have the title of Patriarchs, and be eſteemed the Metropolitans of the City and Country of Venice: yet the Aquileian would not ſo be robbed of his ancient priviledges, and therefore ſtirred up many ſuits and diſputes about it. The buſineſs compromiſed at laſt to this effect, that the Patriarch of Aquileia ſhould enjoy his ancient juriſdiction over all the Churches in the Continent which belonged unto him: and that he of Grada, with the title and ſtile of Patriarch, ſhould have like juriſdiction over the Churches in the Iſlands; that is to ſay, the Biſhopricks of Heraclea (or Cita Nova) Equilia, Torcellan, Chioggia, Caprulæ, and Caſtella Olindo. His habitation near the Church of S. Sylveſter, in the third Region of the City, called de Cinaregio. 4. Caprulæ, towards the openings of the Adriatick, a Biſhops See before the time of Charles the Great, but not elſe obſervable: none of theſe four, nor of the reſidue of the twelve, which be remote from the Rialto, being much inhabited at the preſent. Caſtello Olindo, or Olivaller as ſome call it; ſituate at the Eaſt end of the City, not far from the Cauſey called IL Lido, of old a City of it ſelf (as the former were) now joined by a Bridge to the reſt of Venice; of moſt note for the Cathedral Church of S. Peter, and the Palace of the Venetian Patriarch: this City having been made a Biſhops See by Pope Adrian the firſt Anno 774. with juriſdiction over the Iſles of Olivolla, Rialto, Lupria, and Dorſe-dura. His title firſt Caſtellonenſis, but afterwards, the Biſhop of Venice, becauſe the beſt part of the City did belong unto him, inveſted by the Duke, and confirmed by the Patriarch of Grada, whoſe ſuffragans they were till the year 1450. At what time Pope Eugenius the 4. (a Native of the City of Venice) advanced the Biſhops hereof to the dignity and name of Patriarch; aſſigning the Churches of Dalmatia (of which they were entituled Primates) for their juriſdiction. By means whereof, and by perſwading him of Aquileia to fix his dwelling here alſo, as before is ſaid, there are no fewer than three Patriarchs which have their conſtant habitation in the City of Venice. 6. Rialto, which is of moſt eſteem and reputation, ſo called quaſi Rivo alto, becauſe the Mariſhes are there deeper than in other places; or quaſi Ripa alta, becauſe it lay higher above the waters than the other Iſlands. For which reaſons that Iſland getting reputation above the reſt, moſt of the Gentlemen ſetled their dwellings in the ſame; and drew thither in the end, the Dukes Palace alſo, inſomuch that in ſome ancient Writings, the whole City hath been Rialto; many of the old Records being dated in ſuch and ſuch a year of the Rialto. But as they did increaſe in numbers, ſo were they fain to ſpread themſelves from one Iſle to another; till in the end they built on all the Iſlands which lay near together, and might conveniently be joined to Boats or Bridges. By this Rialto runs the paſſage called the Grand Canale, being in length about 1300 paces, and ſome forty in breadth; adorned on both ſides with ſtately and magnificent Palaces; and covered with incredible numbers of Boats called Gondolo's, very neatly built, and veiled over with Cloth, ſo that the paſſengers may go unſeen and unknown, without the moleſtation of Sun, wind, or rain. For publick Buildings it hath in it 70 Pariſh Churches, to each of which belongeth a Market-place and a Well; 31 Cloyſters of Monks, 28 of Nuns, beſides Chappels and Alms-houſes.

The principal Church of this City is that of S. Mark, the Patron of their Common wealth, whoſe body they report to have been brought hither from Alexandria in Egypt, and intombed herein: affirmed by ſome to be the richeſt and goodlieſt Church in all the World. The building of Moſaick work, of which they boaſt themſelves to have been the Authors. A kind of work by the Grecians called Λιθόστρωτα, and by the Latine Writers Muſiva, Muſica, and Muſaica, wrought out of Stones or Metals of divers colours, into the ſhape of Flowers, Knots, Birds, Beaſts, and other fancies of the Workman; yet done with ſuch exactneſs of skill and judgment, that it ſeemeth to be all one ſtone, the work rather of Nature than Art. A Church of admirable work both within and without, compacted of moſt rare pieces of Marble, Porphyrie, and a rich ſtone which the Lapidaries called Ophitis, becauſe it is ſpeckled like a Snake; adorned on the outſide with 148 Pillars of Marble, and eight of Porphyrie near the door; beſides 600 Marble Pillars of a leſſer ſize, which carry up an open Gallery round about the Church; from whence the Magiſtrates and others of the principal Citizens, behold ſuch ſhews as are preſented in the Market place, adjoining to it. The Church in length not above 200 foot of Venice meaſure, nor above 50 in breadth; the roof whereof being of an Orbicular form, lyeth open at the very top, where the light comes in, there being no Windows in all the Church, as commonly the Churches in Italy are exceeding dark, either to ſtrike in the ſpectators a religious reverence, or to make their Candles ſhew the better. And for the inſide of the Church, the riches of it are ſo great, Images ſo glorious, the furniture of the Altars ſo above compariſon; that all the treaſures of the State, may ſeem to be amaſſed in the decking of it. And yet as goodly and as glorious as the Fabrick is, it is ſtill unfiniſhed; and, as ſome think, is kept unfiniſhed on purpoſe partly to draw on other Benefactors to advance the work, the benefit of whoſe liberality may be employed unto the uſe of the publick Treaſury; and partly, leſt Revenues which are given already ſhould be reſumed by the Heirs of the deceaſed, if the work were ended. So infinitely doth the furniture of the Church exceed the ſumptuouſneſs and beauty of the Church it ſelf.

Of other of the publick buildings, the Council-houſe, the Ducal Palace, Monaſteries, Churches, and the like, though ſtately and magnificent Structures, I forbear to ſpeak. Nor ſhall I here ſay any thing of their private houſes, ſo large and beautified, that here are ſaid to be no fewer than 200 (moſt of them on the Grand Canale) able to entertain and lodge the beſt King in Chriſtendom. All I ſhall add, and ſo leave this City, will be a word or two of their Arſenal, and publick Magazine. In the firſt of which they have in readineſs 200 Gallies, with rooms for Cables, Maſts, Sails, Victuals, and Ammunition of all ſorts; able thereby to ſet out a Navy to Sea, on the ſhorteſt warning. And in the other it is ſaid, that they have Arms ſufficient for 100000 Souldiers of all ſorts; amongſt which are affirmed to be a thouſand Coats of Plate, garniſhed with Gold, and covered with Velvet; fit for the uſe and wearing of the greateſt Princes. But of their power and forces both by Sea and Land, we ſhall ſpeak more ſhortly. In the mean time I take my leave of this gallant City in this following Epigram of Sannazarius, one of our late Italian Poets, viz.

Viderat Adriacis Venetam Neptunus in undis
Stare urbem, & toto ponere jura mari:

Nunc mihi Tarpeias quantum vis Jupiter, arces
Objice, & illa tui mœnia Martis, ait.
Si Pelago Tibrim præfers, Urbem aſpice utramque
Illam homines dices, hanc poſuiſſe deos.

In Engliſh thus:

Neptune ſaw Venice in the Adrian ſtand,
And all the Sea brought under her command;
Now Jove, ſaid he, thy Roman Towers object,
And thoſe proud Walls which Mars did once protect.
Before the Sea if Tiber thou prefer,
Behold both Cities, and thou wilt aver,
That men built Rome; the Gods placed Venice there.

Proceed we now unto their ſtory: and if we look upon them in their firſt Original, we ſhall find them to have been a people of Paphlagonia (a Province of Aſia the leſſer) called the Heneti, who aiding Priamus King of Troy in his ten years Wars againſt the Greeks, where they loſt their King, named Philemenes (or Philemon, as ſome call him) choſe rather to ſeek out new Dwellings, than return with ſhame unto their old. Upon this reſolution they join themſelves to Antenor, who with ſome remnant of the Trojans had the ſame deſign; and ſailing as the Wind and Sea conducted them, arrived at laſt in thoſe Parts of Italy, now called Friuli. So witneſſeth the Poet, ſaying.

Antenor potuit, mediis illapſus Achivis,
Illyricos penetrare Sinus, atque intima tutus
Regna Liburnorum, & fontes ſuperare Timavi.

Antenor through the Greeks could force his way,
And ſafely piercing the Illyrian Bay,
Croſs the Liburnian Realms; and conquer all,
From fierce Timavus Fountain, to his fall.

Here landing they ſubdued the Euganei (who before inhabited this Tract) and poſſeſſed their Dwellings: the name of Heneti being changed into that of Veneti. But this perhaps not done till ſubdued by the Galls, and made part of Gallia Ciſalpina; agreeably to the name of the Veneti, an old Gallick Nation, oppoſite to Iſle of Brittain. When thoſe Galls were vanquiſhed by the Romans, the Name and Nation of theſe Veneti, was ſo conſiderable, that their Territory had the name of Venetia; and together with Hiſtria, made one Province of the Roman Empire. And here they lived in peace and ſafety under the protection of the Empire, till the terrible Noiſe of the great Preparation of the Hunns, for the Conqueſt of Italy, occaſioned many of the principal Men, with their ſeveral Retinues, to betake themſelves to the Iſlands, and inacceſſible Mariſhes of the Adriatick; where in the place now called Rialto, they laid the foundation of this City, March 25. Anno 421. Exceedingly increaſed by the Deſtruction of Aquilea, and the neighbouring Cities by Attila, and the ſaid Barbarians, Anno 456. at what time it began to be called Venetia, by the name of their Nation. Not much encreaſed in Power and Greatneſs, at the fall of the Lombardian Kingdom: though ſo conſiderable at that time, that in the Diviſion of Italy made by Charles the Great, betwixt himſelf, the Popes, and the Eaſtern Emperours; the Venetians were left at liberty, as a Free-Eſtate: and they deſerved to be left in a free condition, conſidering how notably they had freed themſelves from Pepin, the Son of Charles, who invaded them with a puiſſant Army, and was well beaten for his labour, though at firſt ſucceſsful. After which, making uſe of their ſituation, they grew not only rich in trade, but ſtrong in ſhipping; and thereby did good ſervice to the Weſtern Princes, in their Wars againſt the Turks in the Holy Land. And they ſerved themſelves well by it too: getting in one Expedition only (that namely, in which the Empire of Conſtantinople was made a Prey unto the Latines, Anno 1200.) all the Iſlands which they have at the preſent, in the Ægean and Ionian Seas; many in thoſe Seas which they have loſt; and not a few good Towns in Peloponneſus, ſince conquered from them by the Turks. Contending with the Genoeſe for the Soveraignty of the Mediterranean, they received ſo great a Blow at the Naval Battel near Chioggia, (ſpoken of before) that they had utterly loſt all, if the Enemy could have uſed his Fortune with Moderation. But being recovered of that Blow, after many various ſucceſſes and Events of War, Anno 1381. they got the better of them, and made them quiet: by means whereof being Lords Paramont at Sea, they next caſt their Eyes on the main Land of Italy, which now they were at more Leiſure to look after, than they had been formerly. The Hiſtrians had before infeſted them with Piracy, and were puniſhed for it, in the time of Duke Pietro Candiano, by the loſs of many of their Towns; but in the year 1390, the whole Country is brought under the command of this Common-wealth. Padua with a great part of Trivigiana then appendent on it, they extorted from the noble Family of the Carrari, An. 1400. The City of Vincentia they poſſeſſed themſelves of in the ſame year alſo; and not long after fully perfected their Conqueſt of Hiſtria, with the Revolts whereof they had before been often troubled.

But that whereby they moſt improved their Eſtate was by a conſtant watching of their Opportunities, taking advantage of the Factions and Fractions amongſt their neighbours, and working their own Greatneſs out of others Ruines. By means whereof they came poſſeſſed of many places, of right belonging to the Empire, and the Church of Rome; as alſo of ſome Towns, pertaining to the Dutchy of Millain; and four of the beſt Havens in the Adriatick, which properly belonged to the Realm of Naples: not giving aid to any of their diſtreſſed Neighbours, without the Mortgage or Direct Sale of ſome Piece or other. Which ſordid kind of Merchandizing, drew all the Princes of thoſe parts, (Confederated together in a League at Cambray Anno 1508.) to make War upon them; every one to recover by ſtrong hand, what the Venetian had extorted from them in their neceſſity. And the Confederates thrived ſo well, that Maximilian the Emperour recovered to the Empire, the Towns and Territories of Padua, Vincentia, Verona, Trieſt, Friuli, and whatſoever elſe he laid claim unto; the Popes in Right of the Church, regained Ravenna, Cervia, Rimini (or Ariminum) and Faventia; Lewis the 12. of France in Right of the Dutchy of Millain, Bergamum, Crema, Cremona, Brixia: the King of Spain in right of the Realm of Naples, Manfredonio, Trona, Barlette, and Monopoli, all upon the Adriatick; the Duke of Ferrara gained Rovigo, and the Duke of Mantua the Town of Aſſulia. So that the Venetians being like the Jay ſtripped of all their Feathers, were fain to quit the firm land, and betake themſelves unto the Iſles and Mariſhes of their City; having not one Foot, of all their whole Dominion left them in Italy, but their Seas and Iſlands. And yet in very little time, partly by working on the Pope to whom they quitted all their intereſt in the Towns aforeſaid; and partly by dividing the reſt of the Confederates from one another; they recovered all that they had loſt, in a little time: except the Towns of Naples only, for which they were not willing to contend with the Crown of Spain.

The Government is Ariſtocratical, managed only by the principal men of all the City, both for birth and breeding; the common people having no authority in affairs of State. The chief Officers at the firſt were many, whom they called Tribunes: but experience being had of that confuſion, which a multitude of Governours carrieth for the moſt part with it, in the year 709, they made choice of one chief Officer, whom they called their Duke. Under theſe Dukes they have gotten that great Dominion which they now enjoy: The authority of which Dukes was at firſt more abſolute, but by degrees reſtrained and limited within narrower bounds. He that beholdeth him in his Robes, his gravity and outward Port, and the reſpect given him by the people, would think no Prince could be more abſolute and ſupreme. But look upon him in the exerciſe and power of Government and he is nothing in the world but an empty Title. For notwithſtanding that he enjoyeth ſo great a dignity, yet hath he a full power in nothing, not being able to determine in any point, without the preſence of his Counſellors (being ſix in number) who always ſit with him, and diſpatch affairs both publick and private; as namely, giving audience to Ambaſſadors from Foreign States, receiving Letters from their own Miniſters, granting of Priviledges, and the like; in which the Duke can do juſt nothing, if four (at leaſt) of theſe Counſellors be not preſent with him. And yet theſe Counſellors without him may conclude of any thing. Nay he is ſo reſtrained in all things to the power of the Senate, and to three Officers called the Capi, that he may not go out of the Town without their conſent; and by them is preſcribed an order in his own Apparel. So that he is but little better than a Priſoner, when within the City; and a Traytor, if he ſtir abroad: at the beſt, but an honourable Servant. And his Revenue is as little as his Authority; as being allowed out of the common Treaſury, no more than 40000 Ducats a year, towards his expence and entertainment. As for the Soveraignty of the State, that reſides wholly in the Senate; but repreſentatively in the Duke, the ſix Counſellors, and the three Heads or Preſidents of the Forty, which are thoſe Officers (as I take it) whom they call the Capi. The Senate or Great Council, conſiſts of all the Gentlemen of Venice, above five and twenty years of age, which may amount to the number of two thouſand five hundred, though ſeldom half that number do aſſemble at once, by reaſon of their ſeveral employments in affairs of the Common-wealth, in other places: who uſually do meet together every Sunday morning, and on the morning of other Feſtivals, where they chuſe Magiſtrates, and diſtribute Governments, and other matters of the State. But becauſe ſuch great Bodies move but ſlowly, and are not very capable of truſt and ſecrecy, they parcel this great Council into leſſer Members; whereof the principal are the Pregadi, and the Council of Ten. That of the Pregadi conſiſteth of 120 in which they treat of, and determine matters of the greateſt importance; and therein conclude commonly of ſuch principal points, as formerly have been propoſed and treated of in the great Aſſembly: And in this Council beſides the 120 before mentioned, the Duke, the ſix Counſellors, and the Council of Ten, and all ſuch as have born any publick Office, have their voice or ſuffrage. This is that Council which properly and more eſpecially is called the Senate; in which nothing is to be concluded or paſſed into Acts, except four of the ſix Counſellors be preſent at them, and that ſixty at the leaſt of the whole number, give their ſuffrage to it. Then for the Council of Ten, their power is univerſal, over all affairs, ſuch as the other Councils may not meddle with, as to conclude of War, or peace, to put in execution what they think moſt neceſſary for the benefit of the Common-wealth, and other things of like weight and moment: which if they were firſt treated of in the General Council or Aſſembly, and after in that of the Pregadi, as they ought to be in common courſe; could not be poſſibly managed with ſuch ſpeed and ſecrecy, as the exigencies of the State require. And in this Council, with the Prince and his ſix Aſſiſtants, the ſupreme Majeſty of the State doth reſide eſpecially. Some other Officers there are, and thoſe of great authority and reputation, as the Procurators of St. Mark, which have the charge of the publick Treaſures, and the Avogadori, or Tribunes (as one might call them) of the people, being three in all; one of which muſt be always preſent in all conſultations, leſt any thing ſhould paſs to the prejudice, and infringement of the Priviledges of the common people.

For the whole body of the City conſiſteth either of the Gentlemen, or of Artificers and Commons. Theſe laſt are the deſcendants and progeny of ſuch as came to ſettle here when the State was fixed; invited to dwell here, and to follow their occupations, by ſeveral Priviledges and Immunities which were offered to them; and theſe they neither admit into any of their Councils, nor into any of the Offices of Truſt and Power, except it be two, that namely of the Chancellor, and the principal Secretaries, which pertain only to the people. The other are the iſſue or deſcendants of thoſe, who firſt laid the foundation of their City and Common-wealth: and theſe they have in ſuch reſpect, and ſo high eſteem, that to make any Stranger (how great and eminent ſoever) a Gentleman of the City, is the greateſt honour they can beſtow; and not beſtowed but upon the beſt deſerving. Henry the 3. of France taking this City in his way out of Poland, thought himſelf graced with this attribute, which they are very dainty and ſparing of, it being the higheſt honour which they vouchſafe to impart to ſuch Commanders of their own, and Ambaſſadors of other Princes, as have well deſerved it. And that this honour may be kept up to the very height, and their Nobility grow not too cheap, by being too numerous, neither the younger Sons of theſe Gentlemen within the City, or of the Noblemen in the Country, are permitted to marry. But otherwiſe they ſuffer them to ſatisfie their luſts, with too much impunity; and for their ſakes allow of Stews, as an evil not to be voided on the former grounds.

Now, as Otho in Tacitus ſaid to the Prætorian Soldiers, Princeps è Senatu oritur, Senatus è vobis: ſo out of theſe Gentlemen are choſen the Senators, out of them the Duke. His election by Contarenus is deſcribed in this manner. In the vacancy of the place, all the Gentry above thirty years of age are aſſembled. So many as meet, caſt their names into a pot; and in another, are juſt ſo many balls, of which thirty only are gilt. Then a child draweth for each, till the thirty gilt ones be all drawn, for which thirty the child draweth again the ſecond time out of another pot, that hath only nine gilt balls. The nine ſo drawn, nominate forty, out of which forty are twelve again ſelected by the ſame kind of lot. Theſe twelve nominate five and twenty, out of which five and twenty are nine again by lot ſet apart. Theſe nine nominate 45, who are by lot again reduced unto eleven. Theſe eleven chuſe forty one, of the beſt and chiefeſt of the Senators; who after an Oath taken ſeverally, to chuſe whom they judge worthieſt, write in a ſcrole every one whom he beſt liketh. The ſcrolls are mingled together and then drawn, the fitneſs of the perſons then drawn is diſcuſſed, and he that hath moſt voices above five and twenty, is the man whom they pronounce to be elected, and adjudge with due ſolemnities to be created their Duke. By the like kind of Lottery do they chuſe Gentlemen in the Senate, and make publick Officers, inſomuch that Contarenus, who hath committed unto writing theſe publick Forms, conceiveth (I will not ſay how rightly) that the Venetian Common-wealth was modelled by Plato's Platform.

But whether this be ſo or not, certain it is, that this Common-wealth thus conſtituted, and modelled, as before is ſaid; hath laſted longer under one form of Government, than any Republick in the world, either Greek or Roman. Nor hath it only preſerved it ſelf in the ſame condition, but may moſt juſtly be accounted one of the ſtrongeſt Bulwarks of Chriſtendom againſt the incroachments of the Turks: the Wars whereof hath procured peace, and the peace thereof hath procured plenty, to the reſt of Europe. Inſomuch, that it may well be ſaid, that as Europe is the Head of the World, and Italy the face of Europe, ſo Venice is the eye of Italy, the faireſt, ſtrongeſt, and moſt active part in that powerful Body. As if the Genius of old Rome by ſome Pythagorical tranſmigration had paſſed into the body of this powerful State; and animated it with all the virtues of that City, but knit with a more permanent and conſtant temper. From ſo baſe and abject a beginning, is this City grown to be one of the beſt Supporters of the Arms of Europe.

As for the Religion of this State, they tolerate that of the Greek Church, but they themſelves profeſs no other than that of the Church of Rome: yet with ſuch caution and reſpect to their own authority, that they ſuffer not the Clergy to enjoy thoſe priviledges, which they poſſeſs in other Countries, to the publick prejudice. Hence grew the quarrel betwixt them, and Pope Paul the Fifth; in which the Signeury ſtood ſtifly to their ancient Rights, and cauſed Maſs to be duly ſaid, notwithſtanding all their Churches were under the interdict; baniſhed the Jeſuites for ever out of their Dominions, for ſtickling too buſily in behalf of the Pope: and in the end prevailed ſo far by their conſtant courage, that the Pope was fain to give over the cauſe, and reconcile them to the Church, without any ſubmiſſion. A notable example to all Chriſtian Princes, how to behave themſelves towards thoſe of Rome; who are not to be gained upon, but by ſuch reſiſtances. So eaſie a thing it is for men of conſtancy and courage, to ſhake off that yoke, which Papal Tyranny and Superſtition hath impoſed upon them.

In managing their Wars they anciently obſerved two Rules, which moſt conduced to the enlargement and ſecurity of their Common-wealth. The firſt was the exempting of their own Citizens from the Wars (not out of jealouſie, but care of their preſervation) unleſs compelled to the contrary by extream neceſſity: the body of their Armies being compounded out of the Provincial Subjects, intermixt with Mercenaries. By means whereof, they did not only keep their City in the ſame condition, able at any time, and at all times, to give Law to the reſt of their Dominions: but waſted the hot and boiling ſpirits of their Subjects, in the Wars abroad; which otherwiſe might have made too much work at home. The other was the entertaining of ſome neighbouring Prince to be the General of their Forces; whom in the concluſion of the ſervice they diſmiſſed with honour and reward. And by this courſe they avoided faction, and prevented ſervitude: Either or both of which might have hapned by employing any of their own great ones in the chief commands, who (after the example of Julius Cæſar in the ſtate of Rome) having a ſtrong party within the City, and an Army without, might perhaps have made himſelf their Prince. But this was only in the conduct of their Wars in Italy, and in ſuch times when the State was not ſo well ballanced as it hath been ſince.

As for the Forces of the State, we may behold them in relation to Sea or Land. Their Land-forces which they have in continual pay, for defence of their Dominion, conſiſt of 28000 Foot, with Captains, and all other Officers inrolled and paid; and beſides thoſe, they have a choice Band of 4000 Muſquetiers, for exerciſing of which they keep yearly Muſters, as well to improve them in experience, as to proportion them ſome gratuities, according to their well-deſervings. And as for Horſe, they maintain conſtantly 6000 men at Arms, well appointed and paid; the like whereof is not to be found in all Italy. And yet beſides this conſtant and ordinary eſtabliſhment, they are able to bring great Forces into the Field; as appeareth by their Army againſt Lewis the Twelfth: in which without diſturniſhing any of their Forts and Garriſons, they had 2000 men of Arms, 3000 light Horſe, 30000 Foot, moſt of their own natural Subjects; ſaving that they were interlined with ſome Bands of Switzers, to which people they give yearly penſions, to be aſſured of their aid upon all occaſions. Then for the Sea-Forces, beſides that they keep fifty Gallies in continual action, for defence of the Adriatick, and that they have no leſs than 200 more laid up in the Arſenal, with all manner of tackling and ammunition appertaining to them: they have 10000 men enrolled to ſerve at the Oar, and may raiſe as many as they pleaſe for thoſe kind of ſervices, out of thoſe parts of Sclavonia, which are ſubject to them. But the great evidence of the power they can make at Sea, was the great Fleet ſet out againſt the Grand Signieur for the War of Cyprus, An. 1570. in which they manned out one great Gallion, eleven great Gallies, five and twenty tall Ships, and one hundred and fifty Gallies of leſſer burden; being in all one hundred and eighty ſeven Sail, fit for preſent ſervice. To give the total ſum in brief: they held a War by Sea and Land for ſeven years together, againſt all the Princes of Chriſtendom (excepting England) confederated againſt them by the League of Cambray: in all which time they neither wanted men nor money; and in the end, were the leaſt loſers by the bargain.

By this we may conjecture alſo at the greatneſs of the publick Treaſury, and of the yearly income which ſupplies the ſame. For though it be conceived that their ordinary ſtanding Revenue be but four millions of Ducats yearly (which yet is more than any Chriſtian Prince can boaſt of, except France and Spain) yet they have many other ways to advance their Treaſury, by laying new Impoſts on commodities as they ſee occaſion; Which needs muſt riſe to vaſt and moſt conſiderable ſums, in a City of the greateſt Traffick of any in Europe, and perhaps in all the world beſides. And yet beſides ſuch Cuſtoms and Impoſts as they lay on Merchandiſe, there is nothing which the people do eat or drink, for which they pay not ſomething to the publick Treaſury: over and above which, the pooreſt Labourer in the whole Signeury payeth his Pol-money alſo. Inſomuch, that it is credibly affirmed, that the Chriſtians generally do live in a better condition under the Turk, than under the Venetians. Without ſuch helps, (though heavy and burdenſom to the Subject) they could not poſſibly have ſpent twelve millions in the War againſt Selimus the Second; and as many a little before that, in the enterpriſe of Ferrara, and the War raiſed againſt them by the League of Cambray, which was that formerly remembred.

As for the Dukes of Venice, though no Soveraign Princes, nor ſuch as do ſucceed each other in the right of inheritance: yet being they are always men of moſt eminent note, and that in their names all the buſineſs of State is acted, and all writings dated, I will ſubjoin a Catalogue of them to this preſent; to the end that meeting with their names in the courſe of Hiſtory, we may the better know in what times they lived.

The Dukes of Venice.

The principal Orders of Knighthood in this Republick are 1. of S. Mark, who is the Patron of this City, inſtituted in the year 1330, and renewed again (being grown ſomewhat out of uſe) An. 1562. The honour is commonly beſtowed on the perſon preſent, ſometimes by Letters Patents on a party abſent; as lately upon Daniel Heinſius, one of great eminence for Learning in the Netherlands. The perſon choſen is to be of noble blood, at the leaſt a Gentleman; the Word or Motto of the Order, is, Pax tibi Marce.

2. Of the glorious Virgin, firſt inſtituted by Bartholomew of Vincentia, An. 1222. Their charge is to defend Widows and Orphans, and to procure (as much as in them is) the peace of Italy. It was allowed of by Pope Urban the Fourth, An. 1262. The Arms of this Order, are a Purple Croſs, between certain Stars. The Habit a white Surcoat over a Ruſſet Cloak; and ſeems to be as well a Religious as a Military Inſtitution, like to the Spaniſh Orders, and that of Malta.

There are in the Provinces of this Commonwealth, before deſcribed,

The Great Dukedom of TUSCANIE.

HAving thus run along the Coaſt of the Adriatick, or upper Sea, from the Lands of the Church unto the Alpes, which divide Italy from Germany; let us next keep along the tract of the Tuſcan or Lower Sea, from the ſaid Lands of the Church, to that part of the Alpes which divide Italy from France. And in the firſt place we meet with the Dukedom of Florence, or the Eſtate of the great Duke of Tuſcany; divided on the Eaſt from S. Peters Patrimony, by the River Piſco; on the Weſt, from the Common-wealth of Genoa, by the River Macra, and the ſtrong Fort of Sarazena; on the North from Romandiola, and Marca Anconitana, by the Apennine Hills, and on the South-ſide it is bounded with the Tuſcan or Tyrrhenian Seas.

It taketh up the greateſt and goodlieſt part of all that which anciently was called Tuſcany, from the Greek word θύειν, which ſignifieth to Sacrifice; of which act of Religious Worſhip, or rather of ſome ſuperſtitious Ceremonies appertaining to it, they are conceived to be the Authors. And to ſay truth, they were much given to Sooth-ſayings, and Divinations, and ſuch like vanities of Gentiliſm: Tages, that Merlin of the old World, firſt appearing here, from whom they learned the greateſt part of their Superſtitions. So that this name was adventitious and accidental. For properly and originally it was called Tyrrhenian, from Tyrrhenus the Son of Atys King of Lydia, who came and planted in theſe parts about the time that Gedeon judged the Tribes of Iſrael. But theſe names ſignified the ſame both Country and people, though in divers Languages, and with reſpect to different Originations: the name of Tyrrheni, and Tyrrhenia being moſt uſed by the Greeks; as that of Tyſci, and Tyſcia, by their Neighbours of Rome, who alſo called the people Hetruſci, and the Country Hetruria, from a particular Province of it which was ſo entituled. Anciently it extended as far Eaſtward as the banks of Tiber, the other bounds being then as they are at the preſent; and in that tract gave dwelling to a potent Nation. Who not content to be reſtrained within the Appennine and the Tiber, waſted three hundred Towns of the Umbri, the next bordering Nation: and built twelve Cities on the other ſide of the Mountains, that is to ſay, Adria, Verona Vincentia, Trent, Bergamo, Mantua, Como, Vercellæ, Novara, Parma, Bononia, and Rhegium; all of eſteem and reputation to this very day. They were the firſt Nation that carried an Offenſive War to the Gates of Rome, when they gave aid to the Tarquins under King Porſena; and held it out on the Defenſive as long as any: No people in all Italy ſtanding more ſtifly in defence of their common Liberties, than the Faliſci, and Veientes, two Hetrurian Tribes. But nothing could withſtand the Fortune of that growing Empire. Twelve Nations of them were brought under by Tarquinius Priſcus, who from hence brought to Rome the Faſces and Triumphal Ornaments, and other embelliſhments of State: the Veii and Faliſci, by the Sword of Camillus; the Conqueſt perfected by the conduct of Valerius Corvinus, and Fulv. Contumalus, A.V.C. 455. So the Tuſcans were ſubdued at laſt, after they had been governed by their own Kings 1132 years; that is to ſay, from Tarchon Priſcus their firſt King, A. M. 2550, to Turenus Ceſo their laſt King, A. M. 3668.

The chief Towns of it in thoſe times were 1. Veii, and 2. Peruſia, ſpoken of before. 3. Peſulæ, then of very great fame, now a poor Village hard by Florence. 4. Ægyllina, ſituate not far from the Lake of Thraſymene, which from hence was called Vadum Agyllinum: the chief Town of the Tuſcans at the coming of Æneas into Italy, and the Seat Royal of Mezentius that noted Tyrant, ſo often mentioned by Virgil. Firſt built by the Pelaſgi, a Greek People, and by them thus named, afterwards by miſtake called Cære: by like miſtake as Peru Jucatan, and others of the American Provinces, got their preſent names: as ſhall there be ſhewn. For the Tuſcans, or the Romans as others ſay, demanding in their language of a Country-fellow, the name of the place, was anſwered in his language, χαῖρε, that is to ſay, God ſave you, or, God ſpeed you: which word they taking for the name of the Town, did ever after call it Cære. Memorable in old time for the Baths adjoining, from hence called Balnea Cæretana; more for the preſervation of the Veſtal Fire, and the other holy things of Rome, when that Town was taken by the Galls. Rewarded hereupon with all the priviledges of Rome, except right of Suffrage: from whence the Tables, in which the Roman Cenſors uſed to inroll the names of thoſe, whom they deprived of their Votes in Senate, or any other publick Council, were called Cærites Tabulæ. 5. Phaleria, on the Sea ſide, the principal Town of the Faliſci, of which there is ſome remainder extant in the Village called Falaris. 6. Cluſium, the Seat royal of King Porſena; for aiding which againſt the Galls, the Romans drew upon themſelves the fury of that turbulent people: Piſa, Aretium, and ſuch others as are ſtill in being, we ſhall ſpeak of afterwards.

The Rivers and the ſoil do remain as formerly, though the firſt altered in their names. The principal of which are, 1. Arnus, ſpoken of before, in the general ſurvey of Italy. 2. Sercius, by Ptolomy called Boactus; a River which by the excellency of its Carps and Trouts, makes ſome amends unto the people for its violent Land-floods. 3. Palia, as violent and dangerous as the other, but not ſo profitable; which falleth into Tiber, near Orviette. 4. Martha, by Ptolomy called Oſa. Here is alſo the Lake Volſinius, which is twenty four miles in compaſs; and that called anciently Sabatinus, but now Laco Braciani, from which Water was conveyed to Rome. By reaſon of theſe and other Lakes, and the frequent over-flowings of the Rivers, the Country in former times was full of Bogs, which made the air unhealthy, and the ways unpaſſable; it being in the Flats and Mariſhes of Hetruria, that Annibal was turmoiled, loſing herein the greateſt part of his Elephants, and one of his eyes. But ſince thoſe times, partly by the induſtry of the people, and the great providence of the Princes; the Fens in moſt places are well drained, and the Bogs converted to firm land: whereby the air is rectified, and the ways made pleaſant; care being alſo taken, by great Banks and Ramparts, to keep the Rivers for the moſt part within their Chanels. So that the Country is now full of very ſpacious Fields, and fruitful Vallies, ſwelled here and there with pleaſant Mountains, little inferiour in fertility to the richeſt Vales; abundantly well ſtored with delicious Wines, and plentiful, in a word, of all the bleſſings of Nature: ſave that the parts about Florence are defective in Wheat, the want of which is ſupplied from the Fields of Sienna, where there is plenty enough of it for themſelves and their Neighbours; though no ſuch ſuperfluity, as to ſpare any of it unto other Provinces.

But to return unto the ſtory, Tuſcany being thus brought under the command of Rome, was made the ſecond of thoſe eleven Regions, into which Italy was divided by Auguſtus Cæſar. In the diviſion of it made by Antoninus, and in that of Conſtantine, it made with Umbria one of the ten Provinces, which was immediately ſubject to the Præfect of the City of Rome. Afterwards in the Declination of the Roman Empire, it became a member of the Kingdom of Lombardy, then of the French, and finally of the German Empire: during which times it was Governed by an Officer of Truſt and Power, whom I find ſometimes called the Marqueſs, ſometimes Duke of Tuſcany; who had here more or leſs Authority, as they could work on the Neceſſities of their ſeveral Princes. Deſiderius the laſt King of the Lombards, had been Duke of Tuſcany, and ſo was Albericus in the time of the Berengarii; and Guido is called Marqueſs of it, under the Reign of Henricus Auceps the German Emperor. Afterwards, as the Popes grew in Power and Greatneſs, ſo they made bold to intermeddle in the affairs of this Province: giving it one while to the Kings of Naples; another while to the Dukes of Anjou, making ſome Challenge to that Kingdom. In which Diſtractions the Florentines firſt bought their own Liberty, of the Emperour Rodolphus Habſpurgenſis; and after purchaſed the Town and Territory of Cortona, of Ladiſlaus King of Naples; that of Arezzo, for 40000 Florens, of Duke Lewis of Anjou. After this time they husbanded their Affairs ſo well, that they became one of the moſt conſiderable Eſtates in Italy; and at the laſt by taking in Piſa and Sienna, they got the abſolute Dominion of the beſt and largeſt part of Tuſcany: which now is under the command of the Great Duke, and may be branched moſt fitly into theſe four Parts; that is to ſay, the Cities and Territories of 1. Florence, 2. Piſa, 3. Sienna, and 4. the Iſlands ſituate in the Tuſcan, or Tyrrhenian Seas.

1. And firſt, the Territory or Eſtate of Florence taketh up the North part of this great Dukedom, having the Apennine on the North, and the Eſtates of Piſa and Sienna on the South. So called from the City of FLORENCE, ſituate nigh unto the Conflux of the Rivers Arnus and Chianus; the former paſſing through the midſt of the City, which is joined together with four Bridges of Stone: Environed with Mountains, which do ſerve as a Fortreſs againſt Invaſions, and for defence againſt the Winds. Firſt built by L. Sylla that bloody Dictator; afterwards made a Colony by the Triumviri, Auguſtus, Antony, and Lepidus; from the flouriſhing ſituation of it being called Florentia. The Lombards upon ſome diſpleaſure razed it to the Ground, but it was rebuilt by Charlemagne; to whom and whoſe Succeſſors they continued faithful, as long as they had any thing to do with the State of Italy: but after, they betook themſelves to the Papal Faction, and were as rigid Guelfs as any. On this foundation it now ſtands, and is indeed a very fair and flouriſhing City, agreeable unto the name; the ſtreets being very ſtraight and large, paved with ſquare ſtone, and always kept exceeding clean: the ordinary buildings beautiful above any in Italy, beſides many fair and ſtately Palaces adorned with Statua's. The principal of the Palaces is that of the Great Duke, taking up the room of 50 houſes which were wont to ſtand there; capable of a great retinue: and for the largeneſs of the building, the Architecture and Ornaments of it, as alſo for the Gardens, Fountains, Statues, and other Acceſſaries, equalling, if not ſurpaſſing the goodlieſt Palaces in all Europe. The like may alſo be affirmed of the Cathredal, highly commended for the excellency of the Workmanſhip, but that eſpecially of the Steeple, which both for ſtuff and ſtructure is beyond compare. This Church is called commonly the Annunciata, and worthily accounted one of the chief Ornaments of Florence: in which Cities there are, beſides ſo many excellent pieces and curious rarities, that the Archduke Charles was wont to ſay, that it was a City not to be ſeen but on Holy-days. As for the Inhabitants of this City and the parts adjoyning, they are a very induſtrious people, and generally ſaid to be of a very great wit, ſubtle heads and of much inſight into buſines: and yet Count Imbalt, a French Gentleman, was uſed to ſay, Non ſapeve dove conſiſteſſe l'ingegne tanto celebrate di Florentini, that he could never find where that great wit of the Florentines lay. Guicciardine the hiſtorian, was without doubt a notable Stateſ-man; and Machiavel, once the Recorder of this City, a man of as ſhrewd a brain as any; and ſo were the two Coſmo's of the houſe of the Medices: but whether all the Florentines, or the major part of them, be of ſuch extraordinary wit as they ſay they are, I am not very well reſolved; nor is it much material to enquire into it.

The other Cities and chief places of this firſt diviſion, are 1. Feſulæ, one a Roman Colony, now a ſmall Village called Fieſoli; ſituate in the ſtraights of the Apennine, not far from Florence, which is thought to have riſen chiefly from the ruins of it: moſt memorable for the great defeat here given by Stilico, to the great Army of the Goths, conducted into Italy under Rhadaguſus. 2. Pizoria, or Piſtoia, ſeated on the foot of the Apennine, but ruinated with its own diſſenſions; of which the greateſt and moſt laſting, were thoſe betwixt the Neri and Bianchi (or the black men and the white) which divided Florence; and that between the Guelfs and Gibellines, which here took beginning, and for a long time exerciſed the peace of Chriſtendom. This laſt began (as ſome ſay) upon the quarrel of two Brothers, of which the one named Guelfo, ſtood for the Pope; the other named Gibellino, declared for the Emperour. The quarrel ſpreading into parties, called the Guelfs and the Gibellines, became at laſt the wonder and amazement of all good people: inſomuch as ſome are of opinion, that the fiction of the Elfs and Goblins, wherewith we uſe to fright young children, was derived from hence. As for the City it ſelf, it is ſeated in a fair and goodly plain, compaſſed with Mountains; the ſtreets paved with free ſtone, and the Church (which is Cathedral) with Marble. It was firſt walled by Deſiderius the laſt King of the Lombards, when he was Governour of this Province; but for all that, was forced to ſubmit it ſelf to the power of the Florentine, by whom it was ſubdued Anno 1150. when as yet themſelves were not the abſolute Maſters of their own City. 3. Volterra built among the mountains, the birth-place of Linus Succeſſor to St. Peter in the See of Rome. It ſtandeth on the top of an hill, the walls thereof made of ſquare ſtone ſix foot long, which are very neatly joyned together without Mortar: and in thoſe Walls five Gates for entrance, each Gate having near unto it a very fair Fountain. The Marble Statues, and ſome Epitaphs in Tuſcan Letters, do evidently declare it to be very ancient. In this Town was born Rodolphus Volteranus, one of the greateſt Reſtorers of Learning in the Weſt parts of the World. 4. Monte Pulciano, in Latin called Mons Politianus, a well fortified City, and the birth-place of Angelus Politianus, the Reviver of the Latin or Roman Elegancies. 5. Prato, another ſtrong piece of this part alſo. Neighboured by a retiring place of the Great Dukes, called Pratoline, a right pleaſant Village, beautified with a magnificent Palace; in which beſides many other ſingularities, are moſt curious Water-works, equal, if not ſuperiour unto thoſe of Tivoli. 6. Cortona, an ancient City of the Tuſcans, ſituate at the foot of the Apennine; ſold to the Florentines by Ladiſlaus King of Naples. 7. Aretium or Arezzo, one of the ancient Cities of the Tuſcans alſo, and ſold to the Florentines as the other was, this being bought for 40000 Florens of Lewis of Anjou, then the Popes Vicegerent in this Country. 8. Borgo San Sepulcro, ſeated on the Tiber, neer, or within the Spoletan Dukedom; added to this Signeury by Coſmo de Medices, the firſt of that name: by whom bought of Pope Eugenius the fourth for the ſum of 25000 Florens, and laid unto the Patrimony of this Common-wealth, to which it ſerveth for a Bulwark on that ſide of this Country.

To this diviſion alſo we may beſt refer the ſmall, but rich Signeury of Maſſa, ſituate on the borders of the ſtate of Genoa. Chief Towns whereof. 1. Maſſa it ſelf, which gives the title of a Marqueſs to the Lord hereof, of the Family of the Maleſpines. 2. Carara, three miles off from Maſſa, and more neer the Sea; of great fame for its Quarries of whiteſt Marble (much uſed in the time of the Roman greatneſs) and a breed of the faireſt Women in Italy. The Prince hereof a Feudatary to the Duke of Florence; but, amongſt his own vaſſals, Abſolute enough.

2. The ſecond member of this Eſtate, is the City and Territory of PISA, lying towards the Sea, betwixt the Genoeſe on the Weſt, and the Territory of Sienna on the Eaſt. The City firſt built by the Piſæ, a people of Elis in Greece: who following old Neſtor from Troy, were by the violence of the wind driven upon this coaſt; and here upon the River Arno, where it meeteth with Serchius, did erect this Town. In the diſtractions of the Empire it ſtood up for it ſelf, and grew ſo potent, that at one time they waged War both with the Venetians, and Genoeſe. They were once Maſters of Sardinia, Corſica, and the Baleares; but finally, being diſcomfited by the Genoeſe near the Iſle of Giglio, An. 1369. they ſubmitted themſelves to the protection of Charles the fourth, by whom it was made free. Not long after, it was taken by John Galeaze the firſt Duke of Millain, An. 1404. by John Marid his Son and Succeſſor ſold unto the Florentines; from whoſe command they freed themſelves by popular violence. The Florentines upon this beſieged them, and brought them to ſuch extremity of hunger, that they were ready to be ſtarved. Yet ſuch was the humanity of the Beſiegers, that when they entred the Town, every man carried victuals in his hand in ſtead of Weapons, to beget as it were, new life in that rebellious people. This victory the Florentines got by the valour and conduct of Sir John Hawkwood, whom the Italians call Giovanni di Aguto; who being firſt a Taylor in Eſſex, afterwards ſerved Edward the third in his French wars, where he was knighted. And when, upon the peace concluded after the battel of Poictiers, he wanted employment; he entred with his Regiment into Italy, and put himſelf into the pay of the Florentines, then in war with this City: who for his valour, have honoured him with a very fair Tomb and Monument. When Charles the 8. went into Italy, the Piſans again revolted; and were not without much labour and great Charges, reduced to their former obedience. As for the City it ſelf, it is almoſt as big as Florence; this being five miles in compaſs, and that but ſix; but very ſhort of it in the number of people, Florence being ſaid to contain 90000 ſouls, Piſa not a third part of that proportion; yet hath it very good advantages to make it populous, that is to ſay, the publick Arſenal for ſhipping, an Univerſity for Students, and the See of an Arch-biſhop: the Cathedral Church of which, is a very beautiful piece of work, the Gates thereof are braſs, and the Steeple of it of ſuch artificial and exquiſite building, that it ſheweth as if it were always falling. But the unwholſomneſs of the air over-ballanceth all theſe fair advantages.

The next place of importance within the Territory of this City is the Town and Haven of Ligorn, (Liburnum it is called in Latin) ſeated upon the influx of the River Arno; well fortified againſt the Genoeſe, by whom the works were once ſlighted, An. 1297. Upon a reconciliation made between thoſe States, it returned again to its old Maſters. And when the Piſans were ſold over to the Florentines, by the Duke of Millain; Thomas Fregoſa Duke of Genoa, ſeized upon this place and ſold it alſo to the ſame Chapmen, for 120000 Ducats. By the care of Duke Coſmo and his two Sons, it is much improved in ſtrength and beauty; and ſo well fortified, that it is thought to be one of the ſtrongeſt Cities in Chriſtendom: Cities I ſay, and not Caſtles, the Caſtles of Stockholm in Sweden, and that of Millain, being held to be the ſtrongeſt Forts in the World. After this comes in 3. Peira Sancta, on the Weſt ſide of the Arnus, (a place of great conſequence and ſtrength) one of the beſt pieces of the Piſans when a Free-Eſtate, againſt their old enemies the Genoeſe, towards whom it ſtandeth. 4. Terraciola, Eaſtward of Ligorn, neighboured with a capacious Bay on the Mediterranean. 5. Caſtellona, an Epiſcopal See. 6. Porto Barrato bordering on the Signieury of Sienna; now nothing but a ſtation for Ships (nor much uſed for that) but heretofore beautified with one of the beſt Cities of the Tuſcans, called Populonia.

3. The third number of this Dukedom is the City and Territory of SIENNA, lying betwixt the Eſtate of Piſa, and the Land of the Church. The City ſaid to be built by Brennus, who did there put his old ſickly men to ſojourn, and called it Sena: the birth-place of Æneas Sylvius, called afterwards Pope Pius the ſecond; of Francis Picolomony, after Pope Pius the third; and of Sixtus (hence ſirnamed) Senenſis, the greateſt Scholar of the three, if not of all the age he lived in. By Antonine in his Itinerarium called Senæ Juliæ; to difference it perhaps from another of that name neer the Adriatick, called Sena Gallica. Built near the Spring, or Fountain of the River Arbia, now better known by the name of Treiſſa; but built (which makes the ſituation of it exceeding pleaſant) upon an high hill, on which there is a Caſtle that commands the Town; the Streets thereof even and very plain, centring in a large and ſpacious Market-place; near to which is a very fair Palace uſed for a Senate-houſe in the Free-Common-wealth, and on the South-ſide neer the Walls the Cathedral Church, reputed to be one of the faireſt in Italy, having only one door into it, to which there is an aſcent by fair Marble Stairs, of which the pavement is made alſo. Having long held the Gibelline or Imperial faction, it bought its liberty at an eſie rate, of the Emperour Rodolphus the firſt. After, it fell into the hands of the Spaniards, then of the French; and finally, was made over to Coſmo de Medices Duke of Florence, by the King of Spain, Anno 1558. in conſideration of the great charge he had been at to beat out the French, and other ſervices expected for the time to come. Coſmo being thus inveſted in it, deprived the people of their Arms, altered the Government, and was the firſt Prince who had the abſolute command of it, after the conſtitution of their Common-wealth, neither the French nor Spaniards ruling here as Lords, but only as called in by their ſeveral factions; and ſuffered to have Garriſons in it of their own people, by the agreement of their party. And, to ſay truth, it ſtood with good reaſon of State, that the Florentine ſhould uſe all his wit to get this City; and having got it, uſe all means to aſſure it to him. For, beſides that great acceſſion which it made unto his Eſtate; by adding thereunto the yearly income of 100 and 50 thouſand Ducats, above all expences: it was alſo to be carefully looked on as a Rival, which had long time ſtood in competition with it, for the ſoveraign command of Tuſcany. Beſides, there had been mighty animoſities between the Cities; the Florentine being always of the Guelfes, and the Siennoys of the Gibelline faction. A faction at laſt ſo generally diſtaſted in all Italy, and ſo abominable to the Popes, that on an Aſhwedneſday, when the Pope being to caſt Aſhes on the Heads of the Cardinals, was to have ſaid, Memento, O homo, quòd cinis es, & in cinerem converteris, according to the uſage of the Church of Rome: ſeeing a Gibelline amongſt them, he forgot himſelf, and ſaid thus unto him, Memento, O homo, quòd Gibellinus es, & cum Gibellinis morieris. Of chief note next unto Sienna, are 1. Montolcino (Mons Alcinus in Latin) a place of great ſtrength both by induſtry and ſituation. 2. Caſtro Cartaldo ſeated upon a lofty Hill, moſt memorable for the Birth and Sepulchre of John Boccace, one of the beſt wits of his time, as his Decameron declareth; buried here with a ſorry and unworthy Epitaph, not worth the labour of tranſcribing. 3. Soana, an Epiſcopal City; as alſo are 4. Pienza, 5. Croſſetto, and 6. Chiuſi, this laſt, the Cluſum of the ancient Tuſcans ſpoken of before. Beſides theſe are 26 walled Towns within this Signeury, but of no great obſervation in the courſe of buſineſs.

There belonged alſo unto this Common-wealth, when a State diſtinct, ſome Ports and Peeces on the Sea, which when it was conſigned over to the Duke of Florence, were retained by the Spaniard: partly thereby to keep thoſe Princes at his devotion, but principally that by holding ſo many places of importance in his own hands, he might carry at his Girdle the Keys of Italy, and become Lord Paramont of thoſe Seas. Of thoſe the principal, if not all, 1. Piombino, in Latin called Plumbinum, from ſome Mines of Lead; adorned with a ſtrong Caſtle, and a plentiful Territory: the Caſtle in the hands of the Spaniard, but the Town and Territory in poſſeſſion of a Lord of its own, who receives the whole rents of the Eſtate. 2. Port Telamon, Eaſtward of Piombino, ſo called of old from Tellamon, an adjoyning Promontory, and known by this name in Plutarch, in the life of Marius. Accounted the chief City of Tuſcany in thoſe elder times, but moſt remarkable for the great Battel fought near unto it betwixt the Romans and the Galls, A.V.C. 529. the Army of the Galls conſiſting of 70000 Horſe and Foot; that of the Romans little (if at all) inferiour to it. A fight in which Attilius, one of the Conſuls being ſlain, the Victory was gotten by Æmilius his Collegue, with the ſlaughter of 40000 of the Enemies, and the taking of 10000 Priſoners: Aneroeſtus and Congolianus two Kings of the Tranſalpine Galls being ſlain or taken. A Victory which drew after it the total ſubjugation of the Ciſalpine Galls, which followed within three years after. 3. Orbitello, drawing more towards the Eaſt, the Coſſa of the ancient Writers. 4. Monte Argentorati, a Promontory or Peninſula, thruſting it ſelf into the Sea, over againſt Orbitello, by the Latins called Mons Argentarius: and thought by ſome, who have obſerved the ſcituation, ſtrength, and extent thereof, to be the fitteſt place for a Royal City to be built in, to command thoſe Seas. 5 Port Hercule, which ſtill retains its ancient name, imparted to it from ſome Temple of Hercules, which was founded in it; ſituate near the Eaſtern Iſthmus of the ſaid Peninſula. 6 Porto-Longone, a piece of ſpecial conſequence for command of the Mediterranean; and for that cauſe of late times gotten by the French (then aiming at the conqueſt of Naples) but again recovered by the Spaniard, who doth now poſſeſs it.

The fourth and laſt member of this Eſtate, are the Iſlands in the Tuſcan or Tyrrhenian Seas.. The principal whereof is, 1 Ilva, not above ten miles from Piombino, called anciently Æthalia, by the vulgar Elba. Pliny affirmeth it to contain in compaſs a hundred miles, but it proves upon a juſt meaſurement, to be but fifty. Not very well furniſhed with Corn, and leſs with fruits; but plentiful in Mines of Iron, as formerly for Steel and Copper: for which, eſpecially for Steel, of great eſteem in the time of Virgil, as appeareth by that paſſage in the tenth of his Æneids, where it is called Inſula inexhauſtis Chalybum generoſa metallis.

A noble Iſle, and known full well,
For unexhauſted Mines of Steel.

But for all that, the Steel now failing, the want thereof is ſupplyed by Iron; which Iron is of ſo ſtrange a nature, that every 25 year it reneweth again upon the Mines, and will by no means melt whilſt it is in the Iſland, but muſt be carried ſomewhere elſe. It affordeth alſo Sulphur, Allom, Tin, Lead, Marble good plenty; and in ſome parts the Loadſtone alſo. Formerly it belonged to the Lords of Piombino, who not being able to defend it againſt the Turks, if they ſhould at any time invade it, reſigned it, by the Counſel of Charles the fifth, unto Coſmo di Medices the Duke of Florence: reſerving to themſelves the Revenues of it, and the Government of all the Towns & Villages therein except thoſe that were thought fit for Fortification. It hath a very fair Haven called Porto Ferrario, capable to receive any great Fleet that ſhould come thither, and therefore if the Turks and Moors had been Maſters of it, they might eaſily have commanded all the Coaſts adjoining, as well in Provence as Italy. For the defence hereof, there are two ſtrong Caſtles, ſituate on two little Mountains, on each ſide one; ſo fortified by Art and Nature, that they are held to be impregnable, having alſo good ſtore of Cannon, and all ſorts of Warlike Ammunition. And not far off ſtands a ſtrong Town built by the ſame Duke Coſmo, and by him called Coſmopolis; well fortified, and made the ſeat of his new Order of S. Stephen, of which more hereafter.

The ſecond Iſland of note is Giglio, called Iglium anciently, juſt oppoſite to Monte Argentorato, and having ſome 25 miles in compaſs; near unto which the Genoeſe ſo diſcomfitted the Piſans in a fight at Sea, that they were never able to recover their former puiſſance. 3 Capraria, not far from Ligorn, ſo called from its abundance of Goats; and for the ſame reaſon Ægilora, by the Greek Geographers: as, 4 Gallinaria, not far off, took name from abundance of Hens. Of the reſt nothing memorable, but that ſome of them do occurr in the ancient Writers; of which ſort are 1 Melorta, heretofore Lanellum, not far from Capraria. 2 Lanuſi, formerly Artemeſia, in which there is a very good Haven. 3 Gorgona, 4 Troja, and 5 the ſmall Iſlands which are called Formicæ. 6 To theſe we may add alſo the Iſle of Planaſia, more memorable than the reſt, for the baniſhment and death of Agrippa Poſthumus, the Nephew of Auguſtus Cæſar by his daughter Julia; here murdered by the command of Tiberius, to prevent all future competition to the State Imperial, ſituate ſomewhat nearer unto Corſica, than the reſt of theſe Iſlands.

As for the MEDICES, whoſe poſterity are now Dukes hereof, they were in the Free-State (as Machiavel informs us in his Florentine Hiſtory) accounted in the chief rank of the popular Nobility: thoſe being ſuch of the ancient Nobles, as, to be capable of the Magiſtracy, and publick Offices (then wholly ſhared among the Commons) had as it were degraded themſelves; and became part of the Commonalty. About the year 1410. John de Medices, (the firſt great raiſer of this houſe) ſtoutly maintaining the Liberties of the people againſt the great ones; was by them ſo honoured and enriched, that he not only got a great party, but almoſt a Sovereignty in the City. To him ſucceeded his ſon Coſmo, one of the greateſt Stateſmen of thoſe times; who did not only much reform the Civil Government, but enlarged the Territory of the State by the addition of Caſentino, Burgo, St. Sepulchro, and ſome other pieces. Dying in the year 1464, he left the managery of the State to Peter de Medices his ſon, whoſe whole time was conſumed in ſuppreſſing ſuch Factions, as had at home been raiſed againſt him: and at his death left all his power, and the great wealth which he had gotten (but with a greater meaſure of his Fathers vertues) to Lawrence and Julian his two ſons. The people after his deceaſe, either deſirous of Novelties, as moſt people are; or fearing to be made hereditary to this powerful Family; ſeemed to incline to one of the Soderini, a man of plauſible deportment, and well beloved. But he judiciouſly conſidering, that new houſes as they are eaſily honoured, ſo are they as ſoon abandoned by the fickle multitude; conferred all the dependencies which were caſt upon him, on theſe two young men of the Medices: as being deſcended from a Family which had long governed the City. Againſt theſe two, the Pazzi, a potent houſe in Florence, conſpired, and at Maſs they ſlew Julian, but Lorenzo eſcaped: the blows which were ſtruck at him, being received by one of his ſervants, whom two days before he had delivered out of Priſon. For this Fact the Pazzi were hanged at the Palace window, together with the Arch-biſhop of Piſa, who had been of the conſpiracy. To revenge the death of this Biſhop, Pope Paul the 2, excommunicated the Florentines, & Ferdinand King of Naples warred upon them. Lorenzo, to divert this miſchief, went in perſon to Naples: where he grew ſo much into the good liking of the King, that there was a perpetual League made between them. After his death 1492, his ſon Peter, having very improvidently delivered Piſa and Ligorn, with other pieces, to the French King, was, together with his whole Family, baniſhed. John di Medices the ſon of Lawrence, and brother of Peter being made Pope, by the name of Leo the 10. reſtored again his Family; who not long after his death were again exil'd. This diſgrace Julio di Medices ſon to the above named Julian, and Pope of Rome, by the name of Clement the 7. not enduring, procured Charles the fifth to beſiege it: which requeſt was granted; and the City after two years reſiſtance, yielded. The Emperour then gave it to Alexander Medices (Granchild to Peter, by his ſon Lawrence) Anno 1531. And he to reſtrain the inſolencies of the people, built a ſtrong Citadel in the Town. This Alexander was a Prince of good parts enough, had he not been too much addicted to Luſt and Wantonneſs; which being obſerved by Lawrence di Medices his own Couſin, he trained him to a ſecret place, under colour of bringing him to the bed of a beautiful Lady, and there baſely murdered him. Which done, inſtead of calling the people to take Arms for recovery of their loſt liberty, as he firſt intended; he fearfully left the City, and fled towards Venice. So that before the people had notice of the accident, the heads of the Medices conſulted together, and ſent for Coſmo di Medices dwelling in the Country with his mother (and then about 18 years of age) to be their Prince: as being next Heir-male which was left of the Family, according to the Entail (as our Lawyers call it) made by Charles the Emperor. This Coſmo proving an excellent Stateſman, and a fortunate Commander, ſo ſwayed the affairs of Italy, that Philip the ſecond of Spain to be aſſured of his friendſhip, gave him the Signeury of Sienna, out of which he had lately driven the French; and Pius the fourth had an intent to have crowned him King of Tuſcany. But Philip of Spain (though otherwiſe his ſpecial friend) thwarted that intent, as loath to have in Italy any more Kings than himſelf. After in the year 1570 Pius the fifth crowned the ſame Coſmo in the Court of Rome, with the title of Great Duke of Tuskany, for him and his Heirs for ever. In the new Duke's Coronet he cauſed to be engraven theſe words, Pius Quintus Pont. Max. ob eximiam dilectionem & religionis Catholicæ zelum, præcipuumque juſtitiæ ſtudium, donavit. Thus forward were theſe Popes to honour this Family; but their Succeſſors have been otherwiſe affected to it. For when one of Duke Coſmo's Succeſſors did ſince intreat a ſucceeding Pope, that he might be created King of Tuſcany; the Pope not liking ſo Lordly a title, made anſwer, that he was content, He ſhould be a King in Tuſcany, but not King of Tuſcany. A Scholar-like diſtinction, but not ſo ſatisfactory to the point propoſed.

1433	2 Coſmo di Medices, the ſon of John, called the Father of the Common-wealth.
1464	3 Peter, the ſon of Coſmo.
1472	4 Lawrence di Medices, ſon of Peter, the great advancer of Learning in Italy.
1492	5 Peter di Medices II. exiled upon the coming in of Charles the 8.
	6 Lawrence di Medices II. ſon of Peter, exiled together with his Father; made Duke of Urbin by Pope Leo the 10. He was the Father of Catharine di Medices, French Queen.

The Dukes of Florence, and Great Dukes of Tuſcany.

A. D.
1531	1 Alexander di Medices, the ſon of Lawrence, the firſt Duke of Florence.
1537	2 Coſmo II. the next heir of Alexander, deſcended from Lawrence, a brother of the firſt Coſmo; the wiſeſt Stateſman of his time.
1574	3 Francis di Medices, ſon of Coſmo the 2. Father of Mary the French Queen.
1587	4 Ferdinand di Medeces, the Brother of Francis.
1609	5 Coſmo III. ſon of Ferdinand.
1621	6 Ferdinand, II. ſon of Coſmo di Medices, the twelfth of this Family, the ſixth Duke of Florence and the fifth of Tuſcany.

The length of this Eſtate is 200 miles, the breadth in ſome places not much inferior, but growing narrower where it bordereth upon that of Genoa. In all which tract, the Great Duke hath but one conſiderable Port on the main Land, which is that of Ligorn; ſo that his ſtrength in ſhipping is not very great: and yet might be greater than it is, if the Subjects did delight in Traffick, and not ſuffer their Commodities to be bought by Strangers (as generally they do in all this Country) and carried thence in foreign Veſſels. For otherwiſe being an induſtrious people, and well trained in Manufactures, their power at Sea muſt needs be greater than it is: the Great Dukes Fleet conſiſting ordinarily of no more than twelve Gallies, two Gallions, and five Galliaſſes. And for his power by Land, he hath in readineſs ſixteen thouſand Foot of his own Subjects, well trained and muſtered under experienced Commanders, to ſerve him upon all occaſions; and an hundred men at Arms, and 400 Light-horſmen, well paid, as well in times of Peace as in time of War. And beſides theſe, he keeps ſo many Forts and Towns in continual Garriſon, that his Eſtate is ſaid to be made of Iron.

What the Revenues of it were in the Free-Eſtate, I am not able to determine. That they were very great is manifeſt, in that having in thoſe five years, wherein they waged War againſt the D. of Millain, ſpent three millions and an half of Florens; their treaſury was ſo far from being exhauſted, that the next year they beſieged and endangered the City of Luca. Since the altering of the Common-wealth into a Dukedom, and the addition of a Territory and City of Sienna: the Revenues of the Duke are conceived to be a million and an half of Ducats yearly. Of which 600000 Crowns are raiſed yearly out of the Dominion of the City of Florence; 150000 more out of that of Sienna: the cuſtoms ariſing out of the Port of Ligorn, amount yearly to 130000 Ducats, the toll of Mill-ſtones only, unto 160000; that of Salt, Mines, and Iron, falls not ſhort of that: in all a million and 200000 Ducats. Then hath the Duke his ſtock going amongſt the Bankers, and trades as much as any in the way of Merchandizing; whereas in other Countries he loſeth the priviledges of a Nobleman, that betakes himſelf to Trade and Merchandize. He uſeth alſo to buy up almoſt all the Corn which is brought into the Country out of other parts, and ſell it again at his own price; forbidding any to be ſold till all his be vended. The reſt is made up by Exciſe upon all Commodities, even unto very Herbs, and Sallads, which lies very heavy on the Subject, the poor eſpecially: inſomuch that it was tartly ſaid, and perhaps not untruly, Qui ſub Medicis vivit, miſere vivit; applying an old Rule in a new ſenſe.

The only order of Knighthood in this Eſtate, is that of St. Stephen, inſtituted by Coſmo di Medices, An. 1561, and dedicated to St. Stephen, becauſe upon the Feſtival of Stephen, Pope and Martyr, being the 6. of Auguſt he won the famous battel of Marciano. Pope Pius the fourth confirmed it the ſame year, and granted them all the priviledges which they of Malta enjoy: conditioned that thoſe of this Order ſhould make a vow of Charity, of conjugal Chaſtity, and Obedience, They are to be nobly born, and in lawful Wedlock; of the Romiſh Church, and without note of infamy. The Robe is of white Chamlet, with a red Croſs on their left ſide, as well upon their military Garment, as their wearing Cloaks: intended principally againſt the Turks and Moors, for which cauſe ſettled firſt at Piſa, being near the Sea; but after at Coſmopolis in the Iſle of Ilva. The number of them is uncertain; the Great Duke the Supream Maſter of it. Other Orders are commonly ſimple, but this mixt; being partly religious, partly honourary.

The Arms are Or, five Torteaux Gules, two, two, and one, and one in chief Azure, charged with three Flower de Lyces of the firſt.

Archbiſhops 3. Biſhops 26.

The State of LUCA.

IN the Weſt part of Tuſcany, betwixt the Eſtate of the Great Duke, and the Common-wealth of Genoa, lieth the City of LUCA, ſo called from Lucumo, a King of the Tuſcans, who is ſaid to have built it: ſituate on the River Serchius, not far from the mountains of Luna, whence the Country is at this day called Lunagiana. It is about three miles in compaſs, and contains about 24000 Inhabitants, who generally are a courteous and modeſt people, men of good judgment, and diſcreet, and by their wiſdoms have preſerved themſelves a free Commonwealth, notwithſtanding the attempts of more powerful neigbours: and they are very induſtrious alſo, and well ſeen in Manufactures, eſpecially in weaving Silks and cloth of Gold, which they taught the Florentines. The City ſeated in a Plain, compaſſed with Mountains on all ſides except towards Piſtoa: ſo ſtrongly fortified by the help of Art and Nature, that this City, Zara in Dalmatia, Canea in the Iſle of Candy, and the Town of Ligorn, were thought in former times (when the Art of Fortification was leſs known) to be the four ſtrongeſt Towns in the Chriſtian World. The ſtreets thereof are narrow, but paved with broad Free-ſtone, and moſt eaſie to walk on: the buildings very fair, built of Free-ſtone alſo, and beautified with pleaſant Gardens. On the North-weſt ſtands a very ſtrong Caſtle, near which lieth the Cathedral, ſtately paved with Marble, but very dark, as moſt of the Popiſh Churches, to give the better colour to the burning of Tapers in the day.

In this Town was the meeting of the three great Captains, Cæſar, Pompey, and Craſſus, ſo pernicious to the Roman-Republick. For Pompey deſirous to maintain his authority, Cæſar to get honour, and Craſſus to encreaſe his wealth, here united their Counſels: Pompey's authority to be upheld by Cæſar's Arms, and Craſſus his riches; Cæſar's continuance in his Province to be maintained by Pompey's power, and Craſſus his money; and Craſſus his eſtate to be ſecured by Pompey's greatneſs, and Cæſar's military reputation. This done, they made a partition of the Roman Provinces among themſelves, aſſigning Gaul to Cæſar, Spain to Pompey, and to Craſſus, Syria: which ſtrong confederacy was the cauſe of that alteration which after followed in that State. For Craſſus being ſlain not long after, Pompey and Cæſar wanting a third man to poize the ballance, fell firſt to diſcontents, then to civil Wars, which at laſt made Cæſar Lord of Rome. Upon which meeting, and the breach which ſucceeded afterwards, was grounded that ſo memorated ſpeech of Cicero, that is to ſay, Utinam Pompeius cum Cæſare ſocietatem aut nunquam iniiſſet aut nunquam diremiſſet.

But to return again to the affairs of Luca, in the declining of the Empire, it became poſſeſſed by the Goths, from them recovered by Narſes with the reſt of Italy. After this it again followed the fortune of the Empire, till taken by Count Boniface the Father of that notable Virago, the Counteſs Mathildis: who being deceaſed without iſſue, and the Emperors pretending to it as to an Eſcheat, the Citizens made a common-purſe, and bought their Liberty of their Emperor Rodolphus for 10000 Crowns. Some ſay the money was disburſed for them by a Cardinal. But notwithſtanding this purchaſe and their title by it, the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria ſeized upon it again, under pretence of freeing it from the faction of Caſtruccio, who had made himſelf abſolute Maſter of it. By a German Garriſon there left it was ſold to the Genoeſe; and having paſſed through many hands, the Emperor Charles the fourth got it once again: of whom they once more purchaſed their deſired Liberties, for 25000 Florens of Gold; and to ſecure themſelves thereof, demoliſhed the Caſtle built by Caſtruccio. But being not able to maintain it by their proper ſtrength they have put themſelves under the protection of their Potent neighbours; changing their Patrons, as conduced moſt to their preſervation: and finding no ſecurity from Genoa, and as little from Florence, both which they ſeverally tried; they put themſelves at laſt into the Protection of the Dukes of Millain, and in that right are patronized by the Kings of Spain.

The Territories of this City extend in compaſs eighty miles, the chief Town next to Luca it ſelf, being that of Luna, a Biſhops See; all the reſt ordinary Farms and Villages, but of a good air, and very well peopled: which yield a Revenue to the publick Treaſury of 80000 Crowns per annum; and out of which the State is able to raiſe (if there be occaſion) about 15000 Foot, and 3000 Horſe. A great ſtrength for ſo ſmall a Signeury, but all too weak to ſave them from the Great Duke's clutches, if he did ſeriouſly attempt to force it, and would venture on the diſpleaſure of the Catholick King: beſides that, it is thought that he receives more profit thence in gifts and preſents, by letting it ſtand as it is; than it would yield (conſidering the charge of keeping it) if it were his own. As for the Government thereof, the principal Magiſtrate is called the Gonfalonere, changeable every ſecond month; aſſiſted by a certain and determinate number of Citizens, whom they change every ſixth month alſo, during which time they live together in the Palace, or Common Hall, Other inferiour Officers I inſiſt not on. And for the Government of the Church, they have two Biſhops only, which acknowledg the Archbiſhop of Florence for their Metropolitan.

The Commonwealth of GENOA.

DIrectly Weſt of Tuſcany, from which it is divided by the River Macra, lieth the Country anciently called Liguria, now Riviere di Genoa, the Coaſt of Genoa, becauſe it lieth all along the Sea of Genoa; and by ſome Il Genoveſate, from Genoa the Metropolis of this Country and Commonwealth. A Commonwealth once of a larger reputation and authority, than it is at the preſent; commanding heretofore the Iſlands of Corſica, Sardinia, and the Baleares, in the Mediterranean; Lesbos, and Chio, with ſome others in the Greekiſh Seas; the Town of Capha, or Theodoſia, in the Taurican Cherſoneſe; Pera, on the other ſide of Conſtantinople; and a good part of Tuſcany.

It was alſo then ſo ſtrong both in men and ſhipping, that they ſent ſeven ſeveral Armies to the Wars of the Holy Land: and in the ſpace of three days only armed once upon occaſion of preſent ſervice, eight and fifty Gallies, and 8 Pamphyli (being Veſſels of one hundred and forty, or one hundred and ſixty Oars apiece;) and at another time, one hundred and ſixty ſix Gallies, at a ſudden pinch. By the advantage of this ſtrength, they beat the Piſans out of Sardinia, Corſica, and the Baleares; compelling them to pay 135000 Crowns for their Peace; they got a good ſhare in the diviſion of the Empire of Conſtantinople, when that City was taken by the Latins; and held a very ſtrong hand over the Venetians. Theſe laſt they had once in ſo great an exigence, having vanquiſhed their Fleet at Sea, and taken the Iſland of Chioggia, not far from Venice; that the Senate ſent them a blank Charter bidding them write down what conditions they pleaſed, which ſhould be readily condeſcended to. But Peter Doria Admiral of the Genoan Fleet, unſeaſonably proud of his advantage, would have the City of Venice wholly at his own diſpoſal. Whereupon the Venetians, now made deſperate, aſſault the ſecure Genoeſe, and took an hundred of their Boats and Gallies. After which they always had the worſt, loſing their Iſlands in the Mediterranean to the Kings of Aragon; Capha, and Pera, with their Iſlands in the Greek Seas, to the Great Turk; moſt of their Holds in Tuſcany, to the Florentines: their power at the laſt being ſo broke by the Venetians, that in the end they were not able to ſet out a Navy fit for an enterprize. But theſe Miſfortunes were occaſioned principally by their own Diviſions; the City being miſerably torn in pieces, by continual Factions: firſt betwixt the Dorii and Spinoli, on the one ſide, the Fliſci and Grimaldi on the other, Anno 1174. Secondly, of the Negri and Mollani, againſt the Salvatici and Embriaci, An. 1289. Thirdly, between the Spinoli and Dorii themſelves, An. 1336. And fourthly between the Nobility and the Commons, 1339. Which Factions did ſo weaken them both at home and abroad, that having loſt the greateſt part of their Eſtate, they were fain to put themſelves on the protection of their Neighbours to defend the reſt; having now nothing left them but Liguria, and the Iſle of Corſica.

1 LIGURIA hath on the Weſt, the River Varus riſing about the edge of Provence in France; on the Eaſt, the River Magra, by which parted from Tuſcany: on the North, the Apennine Hills; and on the South, the Ligurian or Tyrrhenian Seas. It is in length an hundred and forty miles; that is to ſay, from the Port of Luna in the Eaſt, to that of Monaco in the Weſt, which lieth near to Provence; but the breadth not anſwerable to the length: and is divided generally into two Parts or Provinces, the Eaſt, and the Weſt, both centring upon Genoa the principal City.

The old Ligurians, were a Stout and Warlike Nation, light and ſwift of Body, well practiſed in laying Ambuſhes, and not diſcouraged by an Overthrow, but forthwith ready to fight again: to which the Nature of their Country ſerved them very well, being Rough, Mountainous, and Woody, and full of ſtraight and dangerous Paſſages; and in this Tract few open Towns, but many well-fortified Caſtles, ſo that without much Labour they could neither be taken nor beſieged. And if at any time they were vanquiſhed in the open field, they had recourſe unto theſe Caſtles, and other Faſtneſſes, hemmed round about with Woods & Mountains; in which they plaid their after-game, and tired out their Enemies and Invaders. The principal of their Tribes were the Decenti, Oxilii, Eubariades, and Inganni; all at laſt vanquiſhed by the Romans, after the ſecond Punick War: but not without much Labour and Pains, by reaſon of the Woods, and Mariſhes, and Mountains, within, and behind which they retired and ſaved themſelves, Inſomuch that it was held a matter of more difficulty to find than to conquer them; Aliquanto major erat labor invenire quàm vincere, are the words of my Author. They did divers times, after this, much moleſt the Romans, till at laſt Poſthumius ſo diſweaponed them, that he ſcarce left them Inſtruments to plough the Earth. So in the end they grew obedient to their Maſters. In the diviſion of whoſe large Territories by Auguſtus Cæſar, Liguria was made one of the eleven Regions of Italy; as it was alſo one of the ſeventeen Provinces, into which Italy was divided by the Emperour Conſtantine: Millain at that time the Metropolis or Head-City of it. What kind of men they were in the breaking of the Weſtern Empire, may be known by their actions both by Sea, and land, ſpoken of before: now more addicted to Merchandiſe than War, but moſt of all to Uſury. A Vice which the Chriſtians learned of the Jews, and are now thought to equal, if not exceed their Teachers. It was the ſaying of a merry fellow, that in Chriſtendom there were neither Scholars enough, Gentlemen enough, nor Jews enough. And when Anſwer was made, that of all theſe there was rather too great a plenty than any ſcarcity, he replyed that if there were Scholars enough, ſo many would not be double or treble beneficed; if Gentlemen enough, ſo many Peaſants would not be ranked among the Gentry; and if Jews enough, ſo many Chriſtians would not profeſs Vſury. The women are very fair and comely, wearing for the moſt their hair in treſſes which they caſt over their backs: they wear no upper Garments but of cloth, as being only allowed by the Laws; but their under Garments of the pureſt ſtuff. The women here are priviledged above all in Italy, having free leave to talk with whom they will, and be courted by any that will, both privately and publickly. Which liberty it is likely they gained at ſuch time as the French were Maſters of this Eſtate; who do allow their wives ſuch exceſs of liberty, as no Italian would allow of in a common Curtizan. And though it cannot be affirmed, that the women of the Country or the City it ſelf, do abuſe this liberty; yet the Italians being generally of a different humour, reckon them to be paſt all ſhame; as they eſteem the Genoan Merchants, (who make little reckoning of their promiſes, if not bound by writing) to be men without faith. Of which and other things concerning this Eſtate, they have made this Proverb, Montagne ſenza legni, &c. that is to ſay, Mountains without wood, Seas without fiſh, Men without faith, and Women without ſhame.

The Country, as before ſaid, is very mountainous in the In-lands, and full of craggy Rocks towards the Sea: ſo that by Sea and Land it is very ill travelling. But amidſt thoſe Hills are Vallies of as rich a vein, as moſt others in Italy, abounding in Citrons, Limons, Olives, Oranges, and the like fruits; with ſuch variety of Flowers at all times of the year, that the Markets are ſeldom unfurniſhed of them in the month of December. It yieldeth alſo great plenty of moſt pleaſant wines, which the Inhabitants call La Vermozza; and another which they call Le lagrime di Chriſto, or Lachrimæ Chriſti: this laſt ſo pleaſing to the taſte, that it is ſaid, a Dutchman taſting of it as he travelled in theſe parts, fetcht a great ſigh, and brake out into this expreſſion: How happy had it been with us, Si Chriſtus lachrimatus eſſet in noſtris regionibus, if Chriſt had ſhed ſome of his tears in the Country of Germany! Their greateſt want is that of Corn, and therewith they do ſupply themſelves out of other places.

The principal Towns and Cities of it in the Eaſtern part, are, 1 Sarenaza, a ſtrong Fortreſs againſt the Florentines, and one of the beſt pieces of this Republick. 2 Pont-Remuli (Pons Remuli, as the Latins call it) of as great conſequence as that, but poſſeſſed by the Spaniard. 3 Lerigi, an Haven in the Tuſcan or Tyrrhenian Sea. 4 Seſtri, a reaſonable good place, remarkable for as white bread, and as pleaſant Wine, as any in Italy. 5 Fino, a Haven or Port Town, not far from Genoa, anciently called Portus Delfinus. Few of the Towns in this part are of any greatneſs: but they are ſet ſo thick, and intermingled with ſo many goodly houſes both on the hills and the vallies that for the ſpace of twenty miles, the whole Country ſeems to be one continual building.

In the weſt part the Towns of moſt importance are 1 Monaco, of old called Monœcus, and Portus Herculis, beautified with a commodious Haven: belonging not long ſince to the Spaniard, who bought it for 100000 Crowns of the Grimaldi, then its proper Owners; but of late gotten by the French under colour of a late contract. 2 Vintimiglio, a good Town, and ſweatly ſeated. 3 Savona, taken by the Genoeſe, An. 1250. before which time it had a Prince of its own. Remarkable for the interview betwixt Ferdinand the Catholick & Lewis 12. of Fr. A. 1507. who having been deadly enemies, upon the taking of the Realm of Naples from the French by the Spaniard, met at this Town, and here moſt ſtrangely relyed upon one another: Lewis firſt boarding Ferdinand's Gally, and Ferdinand for divers days feaſting with Lewis in this Town then in his poſſeſſion, as Protector of the Eſtate of Genoa. Which kind of interviews (I note this only by the way) as they chance but ſeldom; ſo when they do, they prove for the moſt part dangerous unto one of the parties: great enmities not being eaſily forgot by perſons of a publick Intereſt. Nay, that notable Stateſman Philip de Comines utterly diſliketh all ſuch meetings of Princes, though in amity and good correſpondence with one another; as many times producing effects quite contrary to their expectations. And this he proveth by the example of Lewis the 11th of France, and Henry of Caſtile; who meeting purpoſely, Anno 1463. to change ſome friendly words together, took ſuch diſlike at each others perſons and behaviour, that they never loved one another after it. The like example he bringeth of an interview betwixt Edward the fourth of England, and the ſame King Lewis: and betwixt Frederick the Emperor, and Charles Duke of Burgundy; with divers others. His reaſons I purpoſely omit, as not pertinent to my preſent undertaking, and make haſte again unto the Town; which is about a mile and an half in circuit, and hath many ſtately buildings in it. It was called anciently Sabate or Sabatia, and hath been under the command of divers Lords: being taken from the Genoeſe by the Viſconti, and the Sforzas, Dukes of Millain, from them by the French, and at laſt recovered again by thoſe of Genoa. I further note, that this one Town hath yeilded to the Church of Rome three Popes, viz. Gregory the 7. Julio the 2. and Sixtus the 4. which is as much as Genoa it ſelf can brag of. 4. Nola, upon the Sea-ſide, a commodious Haven. 5. Finali, a goodly Port-Town alſo, and very well fortified; honoured a long time with the title of a Marquiſate, one of the ſeven founded by the Emperor Otho, (of which more hereafter;) but taken from the laſt Marqueſs by the Count of Fuentes, then Governour of Millain for the King of Spain, and garriſoned immediately with 200 Spaniards, the poor Marqueſs being put off with an Annual Penſion, Anno 1602. 6. Mileſimo, a ſmall Town adjoyning, poſſeſſed upon the ſame right by the Spaniard alſo; who by theſe pieces hath a ſtrong command on the Trade of Genoa. 7. But the great Ornament of thoſe parts of Italy, is the City of Genoa, firſt built, ſay ſome, by Janus the Son of Saturn; as others ſay, by Janus Genius Priſcus, an Italian or Tuſcan King. But by whomſoever it was built, certain it is, that it was miſerably deſtroyed by Mago the Brother of Annibal, repaired by Lucretius Surius, at the command of the Senate of Rome, for whoſe cauſe and quarrel it was ruined: once again ſpoiled and waſted by Rotharis a great Prince of the Lombards, Anno 660. or thereabouts, but built more beautiful than before by Charles the Great. On his Foundation it now ſtands, ſituate on the ſhore of the Liguſtick or Ligurian Seas, to which, being partly built on the declivity of an hill, full of ſtately Palaces, it giveth a moſt pleaſant and magnificent proſpect. It is in compaſs ſix miles, of an orbicular from, fortified towards the Sea by Art; towards the Land by Art and Nature: there being but one way to come to it by Land, and that over ſteep and craggy Rocks. The Streets are narrow, paved with Flint, and moſt of them on the ſides of the hill; which is the reaſon that they uſe Horſe-litters here inſtead of Coaches, and moſt of the better ſort are carried on mens ſhoulders in Sedans or Chairs: which from hence came hither into England. But that which they call La Strada Nueva, or the New-ſtreet, reaching form the Weſt to North-eaſt, is of a very fair breadth: each houſe whereof is built with ſuch Kingly Magnificence, that it is thought to be the faireſt ſtreet in the World. In all the reſt the buildings for the height of two ſtories are made of Marble, curiouſly wrought; but the Laws forbid Marble to be uſed any higher. The Haven of it is very fair and capacious, ſafe from the violence of Tempeſts, and well fortified: ſo that the Spaniards uſe to ſay, that were the Catholick King abſolute Lord of Marſeilles in Provence, and Genoa in Italy he might command the whole World. After the re-edifying of it by Charles the Great, the People here continued ſubject to his Succeſſors; till the Berengarii, as Kings of Italy, made them free, Anno 899. in which condition they remained till the year 1318. when being ſhrewdly weakened in their Eſtate, they were fain to give themſelves to Pope John the 22. after to Robert King of Naples. But being ſoon weary of a foreign Government, the people in a popular tumult made choice of one Simon Bocca Negra, to be their Duke, Anno 1339. which Government continued till the French were called in by the Gueiſian Faction, in the raign of Charles the 7. under whom they continued thirteen years; and then expelling thence the French for their many inſolencies, they put themſelves under the protection of the Dukes of Millain, Anno 1403. Long time they lived under the protection of thoſe Princes, in great tranquillity, who never carried towards them any rigorous hand; ſave that once D. Lodowick Sforza exacted of them a great maſs of money. But as the tale goeth, his Agent being invited to the houſe of a Genoeſe, and walking in a Garden with him, was ſhewed an herb growing there called Baſil, which ſtroking gently he ſmelt thence a moſt pleaſing ſavour, but as unſavoury a ſmell when he ſtrained it hard. The Genoeſe hereupon inferred, Sir, if our Lord Duke Lodowick will gently ſtroake the hand of his puiſſance over this City, it will prove pliant to him by obedience; but may chance to prove rebellious if he do oppreſs it. But Lodowick being taken Priſoner by King Lewis the 12. the firſt came under the command of the French, and then of the Spaniard; according as thoſe Nations had poſſeſſion of the State of Millain; and after many changes and alterations, obtained again their freedom of King Francis the firſt. Which being not able to preſerve by their proper ſtrength, they finally put themſelves under the ſhelter of the Spaniard, who is now their Protector; and that not for nought; he being indebted to them, Anno 1600. a Million and a half of Gold; that being the remainder of 18. Millions, cut off by the Pope's Authority; that ſo the King might be indebted to that See; for moſt of his Lands were formerly engaged to the Money-Maſters of this City. The ſame courſe of non-payment the King took with the reſt of his Creditors in Florence, Ausburg, and the reſt, inſomuch that it was commonly ſaid in Italy, that the King of Spain had made more ill faces upon the Exchange in one day, than Michael Angelo the famous Painter, had ever made good in all his life. And thus you ſee this great City which commanded the Ocean, the Lady of ſo many Iſlands, and a great Moderator of the affairs of Italy, fain to put her ſelf into the protection of a foreign Prince, and that too at the charge of a great deal of Treaſure; which he continually raiſeth from them in the way of Loan, of which he often proves but a ſorry Pay-maſter. And if the Wars he had with England did ſo drain their purſes (for it was that War, and the War which he had in the Netherlands; that made him ſo indebted to the Banks of Genoa) no queſtion but the revolt of Catalogne, and the laſting Wars made againſt him by the French in ſo many places, have plunged him in as deep as ever. Which notwithſtanding this people do ſo thrive under his protection, and draw ſo great commodity from their Trade with Spain, that it is thought their private men were never richer, the publick Treaſury never fuller than it is at the preſent.

CORSICA is an Iſland in the Liguſtick or Ligurian Sea, oppoſite to the City of Genoa, from whence it is diſtant about ſixty miles; and lying juſt North of the Iſle of Sardinia, from which it is diſtant ſeven miles. It comprehends in length an hundred and twenty miles, ſeventy in breadth, and three hundred twenty five in circuit; and lyeth under the fifth Climate, the longeſt day being almoſt fifteen hours.

The people are ſtubborn, poor, unlearned; ſuppoſed to be more cruel than other Nations, and ſo affirmed to be by Cæſar in his Book of Commentaries; the Progeny, as ſome ſay, of the 52 Daughters of Theſpius, who being all got with child in one night by Hercules, were by their Father put to the mercy of the Sea; by which they were brought unto this Iſland, after peopled by them. From one of theſe ſons named Cyrnus, the Iſland had the name of Cyrnos, by which it oftentimes occurreth in ſome old Greek Writers. This is the conceit of Fabius Pictor, one of Annius his Authors. And that of Euſtathius, a far more credible Writer, is not much unlike, who will have it called Corſica from a woman ſo named, dwelling in the coaſt of Liguria; who following her Bull hither, was the firſt that diſcovered it. But theſe Originals I look on, the firſt eſpecially, as the worſt kind of Romances: the name of Cyrnos being more like to be derived from the Punick Keranoth, which ſignifies a horn or corner, by reaſon of the many Promontories with which it ſhoots into the Sea. Corſica inſula multis promontoriis anguloſa eſt, as it is in Iſidore, Lib. 15. cap. 6. And for the name of Corſica, I ſhould derive it rather from the Corſi (by which name the Inhabitants hereof are called in moſt Latin Writers) one of the two Nations of moſt note in the neighbouring Iſland of Sardinia. Celeberrimi in ea populorum Balari, & Corſi, as we find in Pliny. Which Corſi, or ſome of them, being overborn by ſome new Invaders (which the Iſland of Sardinia was ſeldom free of) were fain to ſhift their ſeat, and came over hither.

This Country yieldeth excellent Dogs for game, good Horſes, fierce Maſtiffs; and a beaſt called Muſoli, not found in Europe, excepting in this Iſland, and Sardinia only, but there called Muſrones, or Mucriones, (for I conceive they are the ſame under divers names) ſaid to be horned like Rams, and ſkinned like Stags; which ſkin is of ſuch incredible hardneſs, that the beaſt being caſt headlong againſt a Rock, receives no hurt, but nimbly flies from his Enemy to his den.

The ſoil by reaſon of the mountains (which every where are too thick and barren in it) is not very fruitful; producing Corn in leſs plenty, but the beſt Wines, and ſuch as the old Romans well reliſhed, in good meaſure. It produceth alſo Oyl, Figs, Raiſons, and Honey: the firſt three in a mediocrity of goodneſs, the laſt ſomewhat bitter, and by many deemed unwholeſom. It aboundeth alſo with Alom, Box-trees, Iron Mines, and the Tree called Taxus, whoſe poyſonous Berries, though in taſte pleaſing, are much fed on by Bees: and therefore thought to be the cauſe of the bitterneſs of the Honey. In ſome few places where the Rivers have their currents, eſpecially towards Liguria, it recompenceth by its fertility, in bearing all manner of grain, the barrenneſs of the mountains. Which mountains cutting through the midſt of it, divide the whole Iſland into Ciſmontanum, being that towards Genoa; and Tranſmontanum, lying towards Sardinia; yet ſo, that the people on each ſide call themſelves the Ciſmontanes, and the other the Tramontanes. Both of them ſpeak a corrupt Italian, in which there is not a little mixture of French and Spaniſh.

For Rivers, there are none of note; the principal of thoſe which the Iſland yields, being called Gelo, and Travignano. And as for Cities, ſome of the Ancients reckoned 33. which Strabo doth conceive to be Caſtles only; there being but four Towns or Cities in it in his time: of which four, two were Roman Colonies, the one planted by Marius, called Mariana; the other by L. Sylla, in the Town called Alleria; a place of ſome Antiquity before that time, and at this day a Biſhop's See. But now the place of moſt importance, is the Town of Baſtia, ſeated in the North-eaſt part of the Iſland, oppoſite almoſt unto Alleria, with a commodious Haven to it, and a ſtrong Garriſon to defend it: as being the ordinary ſeat of the Governour ſent hither from Genoa; and of the Biſhop of Alleria, who makes there his reſidence. 2. Aiazze, a reaſonable ſtrong Town, and a Biſhop's See; and ſo is alſo 3. Nebbio, called Chaſunum by Ptolomy. Then there is 4. Porto Vrechio, built not long ſince in the place of an old decayed Haven, and peopled by a Colony ſent from Genoa. 5. St. Florence, a Port-town in the Northern part in the midſt betwixt Nebbio and Mariana: and 6. St Boniface, called by Ptolomy, Portus Syracuſanus, juſt oppoſite unto it in the South corner of the Iſle; both of them places of good ſafety, and capable of the greateſt veſſels that frequent thoſe Seas.

Who were the firſt Inhabitants is not eaſily known. That the Phœnicians or Tyrians had ſome footing here, is manifeſt by that of Callimachus an old Greek Poet, who calleth it Φοίνιακα Κύρνος, the Phœnician Cyrnus; and by that of Diodorus Siculus, affirming that the Carthaginians and Tyrrheni (which queſtionleſs he miſtook for Tyrii) caſt the Phocenſes out of this Iſland. But whether theſe Phocenſes did firſt inhabit, or only had a Colony in ſome part thereof, is not demonſtrable from thoſe Authors. The Carthaginians after this made a Conqueſt of it, and held it till the time of the firſt Punick War; when they were driven thence by the valour of Cornelius Scipio. Yet was it not totally ſubdued, nor brought into the form of a Roman Province, till ſome time after; when it was fully conquered by C. Papyrius, A.V.C. 541. This Iſland and Sardinia at the firſt being joyned together, governed by one Prætor only; but afterwards made two diſtinct Provinces, immediately ſubject to the Præfect of the City of Rome, and conſequently members of the Roman Patriarchate. In the falling of the Roman Empire, it became a prey unto the Vandals, who uſed to ſend their condemned perſons out of Africk hither, to fell Timber for ſhipping; the Country even till then being very much over-grown with Woods. Afterwards with the reſt of the Iſlands of the Mediterranean, it was under the power of the Saracens, againſt whom Ademar the Count or Governour of Genoa armed a Fleet of Gallies, and vanquiſhed them in a fight at Sea, but loſt his life in the action: which notwithſtanding the Genoeſe following their good fortune, ſeiſed on the Iſland, and carried thence 13 of the Enemies Ships. The Piſans after this got poſſeſſion of it, but being vanquiſhed by the Genoeſe in the fight near Giglio (before mentioned) they were fain to leave it to the Conquerors. Since that, it hath always followed the fortune of Genoa, ſave that it remained ſomewhat longer than that City did in the hands of the French, who in the year 1554. ſeized on it by the aid of the Turks, whom (to the great diſhonour of Chriſtianity) they entertained in their Wars againſt Charles the fifth; but in the end, reſtored it to the Common-wealth, upon the peace made betwixt France and Spain, Anno 1559. And for ſecuring of this Iſland to the State of Genoa, they fell upon this handſom project: imploying none but natural Genoeſe to ſerve in the Garriſons of the Iſlands, the better to keep under this untractable People; and filling all their Garriſons upon the Continent with natural Corſicans, whereby the Iſland is unfurniſhed of its ableſt men, who alſo ſerve for Hoſtages of the Publick Faith.

Having thus took a brief view of the ſeveral parts and members of this Common wealth, let us next look upon the whole, as to the Government, Forces, and Revenue of it. Firſt for the Government, the principal of their Magiſtrates hath the name of Duke; as titular as the Duke of Venice, but of leſs eſteem: that Duke continuing in his Office for term of life, but this being alterable and removed at the two years end. So that he may be called moſt properly the Mayor of Genoa. For theſe two years he dwells in the publick Palace, and hath 500 Germans for the Guard of his Perſon; in nothing like a Prince but that: and for that time, he alone hath the power of propounding any thing to the Senate, which carrieth ſome reſemblance of a Negative Voice. His time expired, he returns unto his houſe as a private Perſon, but ſo, that during life he hath the office of a Procurator in the Common-wealth. To him there are aſſiſtant eight principal Officers, who ſit upon the ſame Form with him, and continue in their office for two years alſo; which eight, together with the Duke, are called the Signeury: but he, and they, in matters of moſt weight and moment, ſubordinate to the General Council, conſiſting of 400 Perſons, all of them Gentlemen of the City; who with the nine before remembred do conſtitute the body of the Common-wealth. Under this form they have continued, ever ſince by the power and Goodneſs of Andreas Doria (who might have made himſelf their Prince) they were diſcharged of their Subjection to the French, Anno 1528. never in danger of relapſing to their former ſervitude, but in the treaſonable practice of the Fliſchi, a remarkable Family of the City; who hoping to poſſeſs themſelves of the Principality under Protection of the French, had ſo laid their plot, that Auguſtine di Fliſchi, who was deſigned to be their Duke, had in the night time ſeized on the Navy, and ſlain John Doria who had the command thereof. But leaping from one Gallie to another, to make ſure of all, ſtumbled and fell into the Sea, where he and his ambitious treaſons were both drowned together.

As for their Forces, there are within the Signeury 10000 men ready to arm at any time, as they ſee occaſion; 25 Gallies always ready in the Publick Arſenal, and four continually at Sea for defence of their Trading. Sufficient ſtrength to ſave them from a petit force, though not to guard them from the power of a ſtrong Invader. But the chief ſtrength which they rely on, is the King of Spain; whoſe protection, though it coſts them dear, is worth their money; and they have proſpered ſo well by it, that notwithſtanding all the Loſſes which they have ſuſtained, it is ſuppoſed that the Revenue of the Common-wealth (beſides the Treaſury of St. George, which is very rich, and managed as a diſtinct body from the Publick, by its own Officers) amounteth to no leſs than 430000 Crowns per annum.

As for the Treaſury of St. George, though it contain no part of the publick Patrimony, but be governed by its own Officers, as a State diſtinct: yet is it of ſuch ready uſe, ſo able at all times to furniſh the Republick with vaſt ſums of money; that the ſecurity and preſervation of this Common-wealth, depends much upon it. The Inſtitution and Adminiſtration whereof, together with the benefit which from hence reboundeth unto this Eſtate, I cannot better preſent to the Readers View, than in the words of Machiavel the greateſt Politick of his times; who in his Hiſtory of Florence hath expreſſed it thus. ‘Poſt diuturnum illud bellum quod Genoenſes multis abhinc annis cum Venetis geſſere, &c. After that tedious War between the Genoeſes, and Venetians, was ended in the year 1381. and that the Genoeſe found themſelves unable to repay thoſe monies, which they had taken up of their private Citizens in purſuit thereof, they thought it beſt to aſſign their ordinary Taxes over to them, that ſo in tract of time the whole debt might be ſatisfied; and for that end alotted them a Common Hall, there to deliberate and determine of their affairs. Theſe men, thus made the Maſters of the publick Taxes, elect among themſelves a Common-Council of an hundred; and over them eight Officers of eſpecial power, to order and direct the reſt, and to diſpoſe of the Intrado: which Corporation ſo eſtabliſhed, they intituled St. Georges Bank. It hapned afterward, that the Republick wanting more moneys, was glad to have recourſe unto St. George; who growing wealthy by the orderly managing of his ſtock, was beſt able to relieve them in their neceſſities: and as before they aſſigned their Taxes over to him, ſo now, ditionem ſuam oppignorabant, they Mortgaged all their Demain. So that St. George continually waxing richer, and the State poorer, this Corporation became poſſeſſed at laſt, of almoſt all the Towns and Territories of the Common-wealth: all which they governed by their own Magiſtrates, choſen by common ſuffrage from among themſelves. It followed hereupon, that the common People bearing leſs reſpect unto the Publick, applyed themſelves unto St. George; this being always orderly and prudently governed; that many times inclining to Tyranny; this never changing Officers, or form of Government, that ſubject to the proud ambitious luſts of each Uſurper, whether Domeſtical or Foreign. Inſomuch that when the two potent Families of the Fregoſi and Adorni, contended for the Soveraignty in this Eſtate, moſt of the People looked upon it as a quarrel which concerned them not: St. George not medling more in it, than to take an Oath of the prevailing Faction, to preſerve his liberties. Rariſſimo ſanè exemplo, &c. A moſt excellent and rare thing (ſaith he) never found out by any of the old Philoſophers in their imaginary Forms of a Common-wealth: that in the ſame State, and the ſame People, one may ſee at the ſame time, both Tyranny and Liberty Juſtice and oppreſſion, Civility and Miſgovernments: This only Corporation preſerving in the Common-wealth its ancient Luſtre. So that in caſe St. George ſhould in the end become poſſeſſed of the remainder of the Patrimony and Eſtate thereof, as it is poſſible it may; the State of Genoa might not alone be equalled with that of Venice, but preferred before it. So far, and to this purpoſe that great Maſter of State-craft; a man of leſs impiety, and more regular life, than ſome of thoſe who have traduced him for an Atheiſt.

Here are within this Common-wealth,

The Eſtates of LOMBARDIE.

LOMBARDIE, is bounded on the Eaſt with Romandiola, and the Eſtate or Territory of Ferrara; on the Weſt, with that part of the Alpes, which divides Italy from France; on the North, (reckoning Marca Trevigiana within the bounds hereof) with that part of the Alps which lieth towards Germany; and on the South, with the Apennine, which parteth it from Liguria, or the State of Genoa.

It was called anciently Gallia Ciſalpina, whereof we ſhall ſpeak more anon; and took this new name from the Lombards, or Longobardi, a people of Germany (of whom we have already ſpoken, but ſhall ſpeak more at large when we come to Hungary;) who coming out of Pannonia poſſeſſed themſelves of a great part of Italy, but left their name to this Tract only. A Tract of ground of which it may be truly ſaid, that, as Italy is the Garden of Europe, ſo Lombardy is the Garden of Italy, or the faireſt Flower in all that Garden. A Country of ſo rich a mixture, that ſuch another piece of ground for beautiful Cities, goodly Rivers, for Fields and Paſtures ſhaded with ſuch excellent fruits, for plenty of Fowl, Fiſh, Corn, and Wine, cannot be found again in our Weſtern World. So that it is no wonder, that the two great Kings of France and Spain, have ſtrived ſo eagerly and with ſuch an effuſion of Chriſtian blood for the Dutchy of Millain, a part only (though the richeſt part) of this goodly Country; and but a ſpot of Earth compared to their own Dominions.

Anciently it was of more extent than now it is, containing beſides the Principalities hereafter mentioned, the Provinces of Romandiola, and Trevigiana; even all, which in the infancy and growth of the Roman Empire, had the name of Gallia Ciſalpina: called Gallia from the Galls, who being drawn over the Alps by the taſte of the ſweet Italian Wines, in the time of Tarquinius Priſcus King of Rome, under the conduct and command of Beloveſus ſon of Ambigatus Kings of the Celtæ, ſubdued the Natives, and poſſeſſed themſelves of all the Country, from the Weſt parts of the Tuſcan Sea and Apennine Hills to the Adriatick; and from the Alps to the River Rubicon on the North-Eaſt, and the River Arnus on the South-Eaſt. Ciſalpina it was called becauſe it lay on that ſide of the Alps which was near to Rome, to difference it from Gallia on the other ſide of the Mountains, which had the name of Tranſalpina. It was alſo called Gallia Togata becauſe the people of it being civilized, conformed themſelves to the Roman habit: that on the other ſide of the Alps being called Braccata becauſe they kept themſelves to their former Mantles (reſembling thoſe now worn by the vulgar Iriſh) which by the Latines were called Braccæ. For though the word Braccæ in ſome of our common Dictionaries be rendred Gally-ſlops or Breeches (and poſſibly the word Breeches may be thence derived) which made me conceive that the habit heretofore of thoſe Galls was a kind of Trouzes, ſuch as thoſe uſually worn by the Iriſh Foot-men: yet when I find in approved Authors, that it was Tunica Sago impoſita, a Garment which they wore over their Coats and Caſſocks, I conceive I had good reaſon to tranſlate it otherwiſe.

They were generally divided into four great Nations, that is to ſay, 1. the Inſubres, inhabiting from the Alps to the River Arnus, and conſequently ſpreading over the Dukedoms of Millain, Parma, Modena, Mantua, Piemont, and ſome part of the Dukedom of Florence: 2. The Cenomani who lay next the Inſubres poſſeſſing the greateſt part of Trevigiana: 3. The Boii, taking up the reſt of Trevigiana, with the Dukedom of Ferrara, and ſo much of Romandiola as lyeth on the North Weſt ſide of the River Rubicon: 4. The Senones who paſſing over the Rubicon inhabited the reſt of Romandiola and the Dukedom of Vrbine. Of theſe the Senones (or Semnones as Ptolemie calls them) were of greateſt fame. Theſe were the men that under the conduct of Brennus, having defeated the Roman Armies at the Battel of Allia, followed their victory unto Rome, which they ſacked and burned: nothing made good in all the City but the Capitol only, which alſo had been taken by them, ni anſeres diis dormientibus vigilaſſent, as S. Auguſtine ſcoffs it, if the Geeſe had not been more watchful than their Gods, or Guards. Failing herein they compounded for 1000 pound weight of Gold to forſake the City: but before the money was received, they were aſſaulted by Camillus, driven out of the Town and vanquiſhed in a ſet Battel, about eight miles off; who is therefore called Rome's ſecond Founder. This hapned Anno V. C. 364. Vanquiſhed again at the River Aniene, by T. Quinctius the Dictator; and after this Anno V. C. 404. by the ſaid Camillus, being then 80 years old, in the Pontine fields: they got the Boii to aſſiſt them, and after joyned with the Samnites, Tuſcans, and other Nations in a common War. But being for the moſt part beaten, and the War carried to their own doors a little before the coming of Pyrrhus into Italy, by M. Curius the Conſul: they were by him driven out of their own Country; and finally ſo ſlaughtered by Dolabella at the Lake of Vadimon, Anno V. C. 470. that there was ſcarce any left of all that Nation, to brag that any of their Anceſtors had ſet fire on Rome.

The Senones being thus deſtroyed, the Romans ſuffered the reſt of the Gallick Nations to remain in quiet till the end of the firſt Punick War, when being grown of more ſtrength, and at very good leiſure, they took up Arms againſt the Boii, who fearing the like fortune as the Senones had found before, called to their Aid both the Inſubrians and Tranſalpines; making in all an Army of 50000 Foot, and 20000 Horſe. An. V.C. 528. Diſcomfited by Æmilius the Roman Conſul, near Talamon a City of Tuſcany, with the ſlaughter of 40000 of their men; they were ſet upon in their own Country ſhortly after by the Conſul Flaminius, vanquiſhed and mulcted with the loſs of one half thereof: moſt of them after this diſaſter paſſing into Germany, where we are like to hear more of them. And for the Inſubres and Cenomani, being thus left unto themſelves (the remainders of the Tranſalpines excepted only) they were invaded the next year after, (Anno V. C. 431.) under the Conſuls M. Claudius Marcellus, and Cornelius Scipio: to whom upon the loſs of their Armies, and ſome of their beſt Towns, they did yield themſelves: the Romans ſo becoming Maſters of all this Country. And yet it was accompted as a Province diſtinct from Italy, until the ſetling of the Empire in Auguſtus Cæſar, who dividing Italy into eleven Regions, made three of them out of this Ciſalpina; that is to ſay, Gallia, Venetia, and Italia Tranſpadana: as afterwards it made up four of the ſeven Provinces of the Dioceſs of Italy, according to the diſtribution of it which was made by Conſtantine. How it came with the reſt of Italy into the power of the Lombards, and how from them taken by the French, with the reſt of that Kingdom, had been ſhown already. Won by the French, and from the French transferred with the Empire to the Kings of Germany; it did ſo far preſerve the reputation of a Kingdom, that the Emperours were ſometimes Crowned at Millain with an Iron Crown for the Kingdom of Lombardy: as at Aken (a Town of Cleveland) with a Silver Crown for the Realm of Germany; and with a Golden Crown at Rome, for the ſacred Empire. But the Emperour being weakned by the Artifices of the Popes of Rome, this goodly Country was torn from it; and parcelled, in concluſion, amongſt many Princes, as it ſtill continueth.

The Lombards being Maſters of it, and having given it their own Name, divided it by the River Po into Longobardia Ciſpadna, lying betwixt the Po, and the Apennine Mountains: and Tranſpadana, lying betwixt the Po and the Alps: the firſt of which the old Romans called Æmilia, from Æmilius Lepidus, the Founder of the City of Reggio (then called Regium Lepidi) once Proconſul of it. In the diviſion of Italy by Auguſtus Cæſar it had the name of Gallia. The other was by him honoured with the name of Italia Tranſpadana, by which name it was known in the times of Tacitus; and by him called, Florentiſſimum Italiæ latus, the moſt flouriſhing part of all Italy. But this diviſion being long ſince worn out of uſe, and the whole Country being cantoned into many Eſtates, as before was ſaid, we will conſider it at the preſent as it ſtands divided into the Dukedoms of Millain and Mantua, which with Trevigiana, deſcribed already, make up Tranſpadana: and thoſe of Modena, Parma, and Montferrat, which with the Principate of Piemont, make up Ciſpadana.

The Dukedom of MILLAIN.

THE Dukedom of MILLAIN hath on the Eaſt, the Eſtates of Mantua and Parma; on the Weſt, Piemont, and ſome part of Switzerland, one of the Provinces of the Alpes; on the North Marca Trevigiana; and on the South, the Apennine which parteth it from Liguria, or the State of Genoa. In elder times the habitation of the Inſubres, originally a Tribe of the Hedui inhabiting in thoſe parts of the Gallia beyond the Alpes, which now make up the Dukedom of Burgundy: but croſſing the Mountains with the reſt of the Gallick Nation ſpoken of before, they ſetled here, built the City of Millain, and finally became one of the greateſt Tribes of the Ciſalpine Galls: from thence, this Country hath the name of Inſubrium Ducatus in ſome of the nearer Modern Writers; but commonly is called Ducatus Mediolanenſis, from Mediolanium, or Millain, the chief City of it.

Principal Rivers of it, 1. Padus, 2. Addua, 3. Ollius, and 4. Ticinus; of which ſomewhat hath been ſaid already; and beſides thoſe it hath alſo in it the Lake called anciently Lacus Larius, but now Lago di Como (from the City of Como which it neighboureth) 60 miles in length.

The chief Cities and places of note are, 1. Modoecum, not far from Millain, of more fame than greatneſs, the fame thereof ariſing from the Iron Crown kept in a Monaſtry here, wherewith ſome of the Emperours have been crowned by the Archbiſhops of Millain. A cuſtom taken up from the Kings of Oſtrogoths, who are ſaid to have firſt uſed the ſame, in teſtimony that they had won their Eſtates by Iron. 2. Pavie, or Papia, ſeated on the Flood Ticinus, united to Millain by John Galeazi, the firſt Duke thereof; made an Univerſity by Charles the Fourth, Anno 1361. And famous for the Battel in which Francis the Firſt of France was taken Priſoner by Charles the Fifth, Anno 1525. It is ſeated, as before was ſaid, on the Flood Ticinus, about four miles from the Po, or Padus: the River carrying at this City ſo great a breadth, that the Bridge over it is no leſs than 200 walking paces long, built of Free-ſtone, and covered over head with a roof ſupported all along with Pillars. From this River the City it ſelf was anciently called Ticinum: and took the name of Papia from its great affection to the Popes; or, as ſome ſay, quaſi Patria piorum (the two firſt ſyllables of thoſe words being joyned together by reaſon of the many godly men it did produce. It lyeth in length from Eaſt to Weſt, a new fair ſtreet dividing it in the very midſt: on the Weſt ſide whereof are two handſom Market-places, and a ſtrong Caſtle built by Galeazi, the firſt Duke of Millain; whoſe Tomb, together with that of Luitprandus King of the Lombards, are here ſtill remaining; the Kings of Lombardy being ſo pleaſed with the ſituation of the place, that they made it the Seat-Royal of their Kingdom. The Cathedral here is one of the beſt endowed in Italy, if not in Europe; the Revenues of it amounting to 300000 Crowns per annum. 3. Como, the Birth-place of both the Plinies; a rich and handſom Town ſituate on the South-ſide of the Lacus Larius, which from this Town hath now the name of Lago di Como: into which Lake and through it runs the Addua, and yet the waters do not mingle: that of the River paſſing over thoſe of the Lake. About this Lake are many fair houſes and handſom Villages, which do much beautifie the place; and in the midſt thereof an Iland called Comacina, in which there was a ſtrong Fortreſs in former times, wherein the Longobardian Kings did preſerve their Treaſure. 4. Lodi, or Lauda in the Latine, ſeated in a proſperous ſoil, and bleſſed with a painful and induſtrious people. 5. Novara, ſituate upon an high Hill, in which live many ancient and noble Families: of right belonging to the Spaniard, as Dukes of Millain; but at the time when Maginus wrote, conſigned over upon ſome conditions to the Dukes of Parma. But this Town, though it appertained to the Dukes of Millain, is ſituate within the Dukedom of Monſerrat; and ſo is, 6. Alexandria alſo, once a poor ſmall Village, known by the name of Roboretum, from a Grove of Oaks adjoyning to it: afterwards being raiſed to its preſent greatneſs, by the joynt Purſes of the Citizens of Cremona, Millain, and Placentia; in honour of the Emperor it was called Cæſirea. But in ſhort time theſe people ſiding with the Popes, drew on themſelves the anger of the Emperour Frederick Barbaroſſa: who having in a manner deſolated the City of Millain, the people thereof, at the deſtruction of the City, retired to this Town; calling it in honour of Pope Alexander the Third, whoſe part they then took againſt the Emperour, by the name of Alexandria, which it ſtill retaineth. It is now the ſtrongeſt outwork of the whole Dutchy, well fortified againſt all aſſaults and batteries, which may come from France. 7. Marignan, ſituate South from Millain, remarkable for the great defeat here given the Switzers, by King Francis the Firſt, and now the title of a Marqueſs. 8. Cremona, ſituate on the Banks of the River Po, in a very rich and healthful ſoil; an ancient Colony of the Romans, but a beautiful City to this day; and of ſuch fidelity to its Prince, that it hath got the name of, Cremona the faithful. It was built in the firſt year of the ſecond Punick War, and burnt to the ground by Veſpaſians Souldiers, after the defeat of Vitellius his Forces: which defeat was given under the Walls of this Town. For when Antonius, Veſpaſians General, firſt after his Victory entred into it, he went into a Bath to waſh away the ſweat and blood from his body: where finding the water ſomewhat too cold, he ſaid by chance, that it ſhould anon be made hotter. Which words the Souldiers applying to their greedy deſires, ſet fire on the Town, and ſpent four days in the pillage of it. By the encouragement of Veſpaſian it was again re-edified, and is now grown famous for the high Tower, from which the by-word, Una turris in Cremona, unus Petrus in Roma, unus portus in Ancona. 9. Millain, a fair Town, once the Metropolis of the Province of Liguria, and afterwards of the whole Dioceſs of Italy; called therefore Μετρόπολις τ̃ Ιταλίας, the Metropolis or Mother-City of Italy, as Dionyſius one of the Biſhops hereof is called the Metropolitan of Italy by St. Athanaſius. At this time the faireſt and the biggeſt of all Lombardy, having a Caſtle ſo ſtrongly fortified, with natural and artificial Ramparts, that it is deemed impregnable. A City very populous, containing 200000 perſons; and of great Trade, here being private Shops equalling the publick Store-houſes of other places; the people conſequently ſo rich, that the wife of every mechanick will flant it in her Silks and Taffeties. This City is ſaid to have been built by the Galls, 359 years before Chriſt. It is ſeven miles in circuit, and honoured with an Univerſity, wherein flouriſhed Hermolaus Barbarus, Cœlius Rhodoginus, and Cardanus. Seated it is, in as commodious a Soil as any in Italy, environed with Water by two great Chanels; the one drawn from the River of Addua, the other from the Teſis or Atheſis: which run hard by it, and convey all things to the City in ſo great abundance, that things there are at very cheap rates; and add much alſo to the induſtry of the Inhabitants in the vending and diſperſing of their Manufactures, which are of great eſteem in moſt parts of the World. The buildings of the City generally are fair and ſtately, but three eſpecially commended for their magnificence; that is to ſay, The Caſtle, the Hoſpital, and the Cathedral. For matter of Religion it doth uſe to glory, that Barnabas the Apoſtle was its firſt Biſhop, and Saint Ambroſe one of his Succeſſors; that formerly their Biſhop ſtood on even terms with the Popes of Rome, and their Church as much priviledged as that; and that ſince thoſe times they have given unto the World four Popes, that is to ſay, Alexander the ſecond, Urban the third, Celeſtine the fifth, and of late, Gregory the fourteenth.

As for the fortunes of it, it continued in the power of the French, and the Kings of Italy of that Nation, from the deſtruction of the Lombards, till the Kingdom of Italy fell from the houſe of Charles the Great, and came at laſt into the hands of the German Emperors. Under them it continued till the time of Frederick Barbaroſſa, from whoſe obedience it revolted Anno 1161, in behalf of Pope Alexander the Third; the Emperor divers times defacing the City, and the people ſtill miniſtring freſh occaſions of diſlike and quarrel. Beatrix the Wife of Frederick coming to ſee the City, without any ill intentions to it; was by the irreverent people firſt impriſoned, and then moſt barbarouſly uſed. For ſetting her upon a Mule, they turned her face towards the tail, which they made her hold inſtead of a Bridle; and having thus ſhewed her up and down the City, they brought her unto one of the Gates, and there kicked her out. To revenge this horrible affront, the Emperor beſieged and forced the Town; adjudging all the people to die without mercy, but ſuch as would undergo this ranſom. Between the buttocks of a skittiſh and kicking Mule, there was faſtned a bunch of Figs; one or more of which, ſuch as deſired to live muſt ſnatch out with their teeth, their hands bound behind them, as the Mule was pacing through the ſtreets. A condition which moſt of them excepted; and thereupon gave occaſion to the cuſtom uſed among the Italians: who when they intend to ſcoff or diſgrace a man, are wont to put their thumb betwixt two of their fingers, ſaying Ecco la Fico; a diſgrace anſwerable to that of making Horns (in England) to him that is ſuſpected to be a Cuckold. The City after this, rebelling and again taken by the Emperor, he levelled it unto the ground, pulled down the walls; and cauſed the whole ground on which it ſtood, to be plowed up, and ſowed with Salt; ſeeming to threaten by that Emblem, that it ſhould never be re-edified. Which notwithſtanding, the City was not only new built again, but the Pope with the help of theſe Millaneſe and Venetians, had at laſt the better of the Emperor; whom he enjoined, after a vile ſubmiſſion, to undertake a journey to the Holy Land. Freed from the Emperor, they began to live after the form of a Republick; in which condition they continued about 56 years: when Otho, ſurnamed Veſconti (quaſi bis Comes, becauſe he was Lord of Millain and Angerona) aſſumed the title to himſelf, and ſettled it upon that Family after his deceaſe; but ſo that for the moſt part they were under the command of the German Emperors, and to them accomptable. Galeaze the firſt, ſo called (as ſome write) becauſe the Cocks crowed more than ordinarily at the time of his birth, added to the Eſtate hereof the Cities of Crema, and Cremona. In the perſon of John Galeazo it was advanced unto a Dukedom by the Emperor Wenceſlaus, for 100000 Crowns in ready money; which John, increaſed ſo mightily in wealth and power, that he had 29 Cities under his Command; and died as he was going to Florence to be crowned King of Tuſcany. To him ſucceeded John Maria, and after him his brother Philip: who in his life had married his only daughter (but illegitimate) to Franciſco Sforza, the beſt Commander of his times; and at his death appointed Alfonſo of Aragon, King of Naples, for his Heir and Succeſſor. Before Alfonſo could take any benefit of this deſignation, Sforza was quietly poſſeſſed both of the City and the loves of the people. This Francis Sforza (I muſt needs crave leave to tell this ſtory) was the ſon of James Altendulo, a plain Country-man, who going to his labour with his Axe in his hand, whilſt a great Army was paſſing by him, compared the miſery and unpleaſingneſs of his preſent condition, with thoſe fair probabilities which a Martial life did preſent unto him. And being in a great diſpute within himſelf what were beſt to do, he preſently fell upon a reſolution of putting the queſtion to the determination of the Heavenly Providence, by caſting his Axe unto the top of a Tree next to him: conditioning with himſelf, that if the Axe came down again, he would contentedly apply himſelf to his wonted labour; but if it hung upon the boughs, he would betake himſelf unto higher hopes, and follow the Army then in paſſage. He did ſo, the Axe hung upon the boughs, he went after the Army, and thrived ſo well in that imployment, that he became one of the beſt Captains of his time; ſirnamed de Cotoniogla from the place of his dwelling, and Sforza from the greatneſs of his noble courage. By Antonia the Daughter of Francis di Caſalis, the Lord of Cortona, he was the Father of this Francis Sforza whom now we ſpeak of; who was ſo fortunate a Commander in the Wars of Italy, that to oblige him to his party, Philip the Duke of Millain beſtowed his daughter upon him, and thereby a fair title to this great Eſtate, which he ſucceſſively obtained againſt all pretenders. In his line it continued till the coming of Lewis the Twelfth of France, the Son of Charles, and Nephew of Lewis, Dukes of Orleans, by Valentina the ſole Daughter of John Galeaze the firſt Duke: who getting Duke Lodowick Sforza (betrayed by the Switzers) into his hands, carried him priſoner into France, and poſſeſſed himſelf of the Eſtate. Outed not long after by the Confederate Princes of Italy, who were jealous of ſo great a neigbour; he left the cauſe and quarrel unto Francis the firſt, his next ſucceſſor in that Kingdom: in purſuance whereof, it is ſaid by Bellay a French Writer, that the uſe of Muskets was firſt known. But Francis being in concluſion taken at the Battel of Pavie, and carried priſoner into Spain; for his releaſe, was forced to releaſe all claim unto this Eſtate. A releaſe long before endeavoured by ſome French Politicians, becauſe the pretenſions hereunto had brought ſuch damage unto that Crown: and no leſs eagerly oppoſed by Chancellor Prat (on the ſame reaſon that Scipio Naſica did oppoſe the deſtruction of Carthage, that is to ſay) becauſe it did not only keep the French Nation in continual diſcipline of War; but ſerved for a purgation of idle and ſuperfluous people. Yet notwithſtanding this releaſe, Francis renewed the War again, and laid ſiege to Millain, then under the command of Antonio di Leva, and a Spaniſh Garriſon: during which War, the wretched Millaneſe endured the worſt of miſeries. For firſt the Governor, under colour of providing pay for his Souldiers, got all the victuals of the Town into the Caſtle, to be ſold again at his own price: which many of the poorer ſort not able to pay, periſhed of Famin in the ſtreets. And on the other ſide, his Souldiers which were quartered in moſt parts of the City, uſed when they wanted money, to chain up their Hoſts, and then to put them to a ranſom. Such as upon this barbarous uſage fled out of the City, had their Goods confiſcate: on which there followed ſuch a diſconſolate deſolation, that the chief ſtreets were over-grown with Nettles and Brambles. In this miſerable eſtate it continued, till Charles the Emperor having totally driven out the French, reſtored it to Francis Sforza, brother to the laſt Duke Maximilian, and ſon of that Ludowick, who to advance himſelf unto this Eſtate, had moſt improvidently taught the French the way into Italy. But this Francis dying without iſſue, and the houſe of Sforza failing in him; the Emperor entred on the Dukedom as right Lord thereof, and left the ſame to his ſucceſſors in the Realm of Spain. This ſaid, we will ſum up the whole ſtory of this Eſtate, in the enſuing Catalogue of

The Lords and Dukes of Millain.

1277 1 Otho Viſconti Archbiſhop of Millain.

1295 2 Matthew, Brothers Son to Otho, confirmed in his command of Millain by Albertus the Emperor.

1322 3 Galeaze Viſconti, Son of Matthew, diſſeized of his command by Lewis of Bavaria Emperor.

1329 4 Actio Viſconti, Son of Galeaze, confirmed in his Fathers power by the ſame Lewis the Emperor.

1339 5 Luchino Viſconti, Brother to Galeaze.

1349 6 John Viſconti, the Brother of Luchino.

1354 7 Galeaze II. Son of Stephen, the Brother of John.

1378 8 John Galeaze, Son of the firſt Galeaze, created by the Emperor Wenceſlaus, the firſt Duke of Millain, An. 1395.

1402 9 John Maria, Son of John Galeaze, ſlain by the people for his horrible tyrannies.

1412 10 Philip Maria, the laſt of the Viſconti, which commanded in Millain; a Prince of great power in ſwaying the affairs in Italy. He died Anno 1446; the Millaneſe for ſome years reſuming their former liberty.

1461 12 Galeaze Sforze, a valiant but libidinous Prince cruelly murdered by his own Subjects.

1477 13 John Galaze Sforze, privately made away (as it was ſuppoſed) by his Unkle Lodowick.

1494 14 Lodowick Sforze, the Son of Francis, and Brother of Galeaze, who to ſecure himſelf of his ill-got Dukedom, drew the French into Italy.

1501 15 Lewis the XII. of France, Son unto Charles, and Nephew to Lewis Duke of Orleans, by Valentina Daughter to John the Firſt Duke of Millain; vanquiſhed Ludowick, carried him priſoner into France, and took the Dukedom to himſelf.

1513 16 Maximilian Sforze, the ſon of Ludowick, reſtor'd to the Dukedom by the power of the Switzers, and Venetians; but again outed of it by Francis the firſt, Son-in-law and Succeſſor to King Lewis the twelfth in the Kingdom of France.

1529 17 Francis Sforze, Brother of Maximilian, reſtored to the Eſtate, and the French expelled by the puiſſance of Charles the fifth; who after the death of this Duke Francis (the laſt of the Sforzes) Anno 1535, united it for ever to the Crown of Spain.

This Dukedom is not now of ſuch great extent, and power, as in former times; there being but nine Cities remaining of thoſe 29, which were once under the command of the Dukes hereof; the reſt being gotten in by the State of Venice, the Florentines; the Dukes of Mantua, and Parma. And yet is this accompted the prime Dukedom of Chriſtendom (as Flanders was accompted the prime Earldom of it) affording the Annual Revenue of 800000 Ducats to the King of Spain. A good Revenue, might it come clear unto his Coffers. But what with the diſcharge of his Garriſon-ſoldiers, the defraying of his Vice-roy, the Salaries of Judges and inferior Miniſters; it is conceived that he ſpends more on it than he getteth.

The Arms hereof are Argent, a Serpent Azure, Crowned Or; in his Gorge, an Infant Gules. Which was the Coat-Armour of a Saracen, vanquiſhed by Otho the firſt of the Viſconti in the Holy-Land.

The Dukedom of MANTUA.

THE Dukedom of MANTUA, is bounded on the Weſt, with Millain; on the Eaſt, with Romandiala; on the North, with Marca Trevigiana; and on the South, with the Dukedom of Parma.

The Country about Mantua is reaſonably good, and yieldeth all ſorts of Fruits being well manured: plentiful in Corn and Paſtures, the very High-ways by the Fields being planted with Elms, to train up the Vines which grow there intermingled in every place, as generally it is in all parts of Lombardy. But the Inhabitants are conceived not to be ſo civil, and well-bred, as the reſt of Italy; childiſh in their apparel, without manly gravity, poor in the entertainment of their friends, and exacting all they can from ſtrangers.

The places in it of moſt note are, 1 Mercaria, bordering next to Millain. 2 Bozilia, a ſmall, but pleaſant habitation, belonging to ſome Princes of the Ducal family; built with fair Cloyſters towards the Street, in which paſſengers may walk dry in the greateſt rain. 3 Petula, a ſmall Village, but as famous as any, in regard it was the place wherein Virgil was born: but generally ſaid to be born in Mantua (Mantua Virgilio gaudet, as the old Verſe is) becauſe the Village is ſo near the City of Mantua (being but 2 miles diſtant) that his birth might very well be aſcribed unto it. 4 Mantua, ſeated on the River Nincius, now called Sarca; which coming out of Lago di garda falleth not far off into the Po, from whence there is a paſſage unto Venice. By Nature ſtrong, environed on three ſides with a running water, half a mile in breadth; and on the fourth ſide with a wall. The Dukes to take their pleaſure on the Lakes and Rivers, have a Barge called the Bucentaure, five ſtories high, and capable of two hundred perſons (whence it had the name) furniſhed very richly both for ſtate and pleaſure. Ocnus the Son of Manto the Propheteſs, the Daughter of Tireſias, is ſaid to have been the Founder of it, and to have given unto it his Mother's name; but I more then doubt it, though Virgil a Native of thoſe parts do report port it ſo; this City being one of thoſe which the Tuſcans built beyond the Apennine, as the ſoundeſt Antiquaries do affirm. Made memorable (by whomſoever built at firſt) in the declining times of Chriſtian purity, for a Council holden in it, Anno 1061, wherein it was decreed, that the chooſing of the Pope ſhould from thenceforth belong unto the Cardinals. A Prerogative which of old belonging to the Emperors, was firſt by Conſtantine the third, ſirnamed Pogonatus, given to the Clergy and people of Rome, in the time of Pope Benedict the ſecond, Anno 684, reſumed by Charles the Great, when he came to the Empire; and now appropriated only to the Colledg of Cardinals. But to return unto the Town: on the Eaſt-ſide of a Bridg of about 500 paces long, covered over head, and born up with Arches, ſtands the Duke's Palace for the City; and not thence the Domo, or Cathedral Church of St. Peter. The Palace very fair and ſtately, but far ſhort for the pleaſures and delights thereof, of his Palace at Mirmirollo, five miles from the City: which though it be of a low roof (after the manner of ancient buildings) yet it is very richly furniſhed, and adorned with very beautiful Gardens: able to lodg, and give content to the beſt Prince in Chriſtendom. Here are alſo many other Towns, as 5 Caprana, and 6 Lucera, of which nothing memorable.

As for the fortunes of this Dukedom, it is to be obſerved that Mantua followed for long time the fortunes of the Weſtern Empire; till given by Otho the ſecond, ſon to Theobald Earl of Canoſſe, for the many good ſervices he had done him. Boniface who ſucceeded him, had to Wife Beatrix the Siſter of Henry the ſecond; and by her was the Father of Mathildis, that famous Warriioureſs, who carried ſo great a ſtroke in the ſtate of Italy. Being diſpoſſeſſed of her Eſtate by Henry the Third, ſhe joyned in Faction with the Popes, recovered all her own again, and diſmembred from the Empire many goodly Territories, which at her death (having had three Husbands, but no iſſue) ſhe gave in Fee for ever to the See of Rome, Anno 1115. After her death, Mantua continued under the protection of the Empire. But that protection failing them, by little and little it was brought under by the Family of the Bonacelſi: who Lording it over a Free-people with too great ſeverity, contracted ſuch a general hatred, that Paſſavino the laſt of them, was ſlain in the Market-place by the people, under the command and conduct of Lewis de Gonzaga, a noble Gentleman; who preſently with great applauſe took to himſelf the Government of the Eſtate, Anno 1328. which hath continued in his houſe to this very day, with a great deal of luſtre. Whoſe Succeſſors take here as followeth, under the ſeveral Titles of The Lords, Marqueſſes, and Dukes of Mantua.

A. Chr.
1328	1	Lewis Gonzaga, the firſt of this Line, Lord of Mantua.
1366	2	Guido, Son of Lewis.
1369	3	Lodowick, or Lewis II. Son of Guido.
1382	4	Francis Gonzaga, Son of Lewis II. highly extolled by Pagio the Florentine for his Wiſdom and Learning; who valiantly repulſed the attempts made againſt his Eſtate, by John Galeaze, the firſt Duke of Millain.
1407	5	John Franciſco Gonzago, created the firſt Marqueſs of Mantua, by the Emperour Sigiſmond.
1444	6	Lodowick, or Lewis III. Son of John Franciſco, who entertained the Emperour Frederick, and the King of Danemark, with great magnificence.
1478	7	Frederick Son of Lewis the Third.
1484	8	Francis II. Son of Frederick.
1519	9	Frederick II. Commander of the Armies of the Pope, and Florentines, entertained Charles the Fifth with great ſolemnity; by whom he was made Duke of Mantua, 1530. and declared Marqueſs of Montferrat, in right of his Wife.
1540	10	Francis III. Son of Frederick the ſecond Duke of Mantua, and Marqueſs of Montferrat.
1550	11	William the Brother of Francis the Third, created the firſt Duke of Montferrat.
1587	12	Vincent, Son of William, Duke of Mantua, and Montferrat.
	13	Francis IV. Son of Vincent, had to Wife Margaret the Daughter of Charles Emanuel Duke of Savoy, and by her a Daughter named Mary; in whoſe behalf, the Duke of Savoy undertook the War againſt her Uncle, for Montferrat.
1613	14	Ferdinand, the Brother of Francis the Fourth, ſucceeded him in both Eſtates, notwithſtanding the oppoſition of the Duke of Savoy.
	15	Vincent II. the Brother of Ferdinand and of Francis the Fourth.
1628	16	Charles Gonzaga, Duke of Nevers in France, by his Mothers Line; and of Mantua, and Montferrat by his Father Lewis Gonzaga, the third Son of Frederick the firſt Duke of Mantua; ſucceeded on the death of Vincent the Second: but not without great oppoſition of the Spaniſh Faction, who ſacked Mantua, diſtreſſed Caſal, and much impoveriſhed both Eſtates. But the Buſineſs was at laſt compoſed by the Power of the French, and the Inveſtiture conferred upon him, by the hands of the Emperour.

The Territories of this Duke (reckoning in that of Montferrat alſo) are in circuit nigh unto thoſe of Florence; but his Revenues fall much ſhort, which amount to about 500000 Ducats only; but might be greater, if either the Duke would be burdenſom to his Subjects, as Florence is; or if he were not on all ſides Land-locked from Navigation and Traffick.

The chief Order of Knighthood in theſe Dukedoms, is, of The Blood of our Lord JESVS CHRIST, inſtituted Anno 1608. The Author of it was Duke Vincent Gonzaga, when the Marriage was ſolemnized between his Son Francis and Lady Margaret, Daughter to the Duke of Savoy. It conſiſteth of twenty Knights, whereof the Mantuan Dukes are Soveraigns; and was allowed by Pope Paul the Fifth. The Collar hath Threads of Gold laid on fire, and interwoven with theſe words, Domine Probaſti. To the Collar are pendent two Angels, ſupporting three drops of Blood, and circumſcribed with, Nihil iſto triſte recepto. It took this name, becauſe in St. Andrews Church in Mantua, are ſaid to be kept as a moſt precious Relique, certain drops of our Saviours Blood (thou canſt not, O Reader, but believe it) with a piece of the Sponge.

The Arms of Mantua are Argent, a Croſs Petee Gules, between four Eagles Sable, membred of the ſecond, under an Eſcocheon in Feſſe, charged quarterly with Gules a Lion Or, and Or three Bars Sable.

The Dukedom of MODENA.

THE Dukedom of MODENA containeth the Cities of Modena and Reggio, with the Territories adjoyning to them: both of them ſituate in that part of Lombardy which is called Ciſpadana; and conſequently partake of the pleaſures and commodities of it.

The people of this Dukedom are ſaid to be better natured than moſt of Italy: thoſe of Modena being quick in their reſolution; eaſie to be pacified when wronged, and friendly in their entertainment of Srangers; the Reggians being affable, of preſent wits, and fit for any thing they can be imployed in: the women in both Towns of a mild diſpoſition, neither too courtly, nor too froward, as in other places.

The firſt principal City is that of Modena, anciently better known by the name of Mutina, and famous in thoſe times for the firſt battel betwixt Antony and Auguſtus Cæſar; this latter being then not above eighteen years of age, and yet made head of a new League againſt Antonius, whom the Senate and people looked upon as a common Enemy. The managing of the War was left to Hirtius and Panſa then Conſuls; the fortune of the day ſo equal, that Antony left the field, and the Conſuls their lives; leaving Auguſtus the abſolute command of a powerful Army, into whoſe favours he ſo cunningly did work himſelf, that he made them the foundation of his future greatneſs. It was at that time a Roman Colony, but being ruined by the fury of the Goths and Lombards, was afterwards new built at the charge of the Citizens, ſituate near the Appennine in a very good ſoil, and of indifferent fair buildings. In the diſtractions of Italy betwixt the Emperors and the Popes, Guido the Pope's Legate, and then Biſhop thereof, conſigned it over to Azo of the houſe of Eſte, Lord of Ferrara, Anno 1304. the Pope himſelf conſenting to it, upon the payment of a yearly tribute of 10000 Crowns: ſince which time it hath been for the moſt part in the power of that houſe: Borſius the Marqueſs of Ferrara, being by Frederick the third made Duke of Mantina. 2. Reggio, the ſecond Town of note, hath taſted much of the ſame fortune; at firſt a Roman Colony called Regium Lepidi, afterwards ruined by the Goths when they came firſt into Italy; repaired and compaſſed with a Wall by its own inhabitants, and for a time under the command of the Earls of Canoſſe. But being weary of that yoke, they recovered their liberty; which being unable to maintain in thoſe buſtling times, they gave themſelves unto Obizo the Father of Azo, Anno 1292, and after that in the year 1326, to the See of Rome. Paſſing through many other hands, it was at laſt ſold for 60000 Ducats to the Viſconti, Lords of Millain, Anno 1370, and in the end recovered by the houſe of Eſte, Anno 1409, and gave the title of a Duke to the aforeſaid Borſius, whom Frederick the third made Duke of Modena, and Reggio, 1452.

The ſucceſſors of this Borſius are before laid down in the ſucceſſion of Ferrara; who held the whole Eſtate together till the death of Aphonſo the laſt Duke. He dying without lawful iſſue, Anno 1595, left his Eſtate to Cæſar de Aſte, his Nephew by a baſe ſon, called Alphonſo alſo; betwixt whom and Pope Clement the 8*th*. a War was threatened for the whole: but at laſt compromiſed upon theſe conditions, That the Church of Rome ſhould have Ferrara, with all the Lands and Territories appertaining to it, as an Eſtate anciently holden of that See; and that Modena, and Reggio, being Imperial Fiefes, ſhould remain to Cæſar; but to be held in fee of the Papal Throne. Duke Cæſar to have leave to carry away all his movable goods, to ſell ſuch of his lands as were not of the ancient demain of the Dukedom; and to have one half of the Ordnance and Artillery. By which agreement the Cities of Modena and Reggio, became a new erected State, diſtinct, and independent of any other: each City being well fortified, and garriſoned, and furniſhed with Ordnance for defence thereof. But what they yield unto the Prince in the way of Revenue, and what Forces he is able to raiſe out of his Eſtates, I cannot poſitively determine: but by the Tribute formerly paid unto the Popes for the City of Mutina, and the rich Territory of both Towns, and the great Revenues of the Dukes of Ferrara; I conceive they cannot yield leſs than 100000 Crowns of yearly In-come. The Arms of this Duke the ſame with thoſe of Ferrara, before blazoned.

The Dukedom of PARMA.

THE Dukedom of PARMA hath on the North the Dukedoms of Millain and Mantua, from which it is parted by the Po, on the South the Appennine, which divideth it from Liguria; on the Eaſt the Country of Modena, and Romandiola, from which laſt parted by the River Scultenna now called Panaro; on the Weſt Montferrat: ſituate, as Modena is, in Lombardia Ciſpadana; and much of the ſame nature both for ſoil, and air, and other the commodities of thoſe parts of Italy.

The principal Cities of it are, 1. Parma, an ancient City, and made a Colony of the Romans at the end of the ſecond Punick War; as Mutina and Aquileia at the ſame time were. It is ſeated on a ſmall River of the ſame name, which runneth almoſt through the midſt of it; beautified with very handſom buildings, and peopled by a race of ingenious men, whether they do betake themſelves unto Arts or Arms. The grounds about this City are of excellent paſturage, and yield great plenty of the Cheeſe which is called Permeſan. 2. Placentia, ſeated on the Po, one of the firſt Colonies which the Romans planted amongſt the Ciſalpine Galls; and famous for the reſiſtance which it made both to Annibal, and Aſdrubal, who ſeverally in vain beſieged it: made afterwards the Metropolis of the Province of Æmelia, yet nothing the leſs beautiful for ſo great an age. The fields adjoyning have the ſame commendation with thoſe of Parma, for moſt excellent Cheeſe; but go beyond for Salt-pits and Mines of Iron, which the other wanteth. 3. Mirandula, a proper Town built in the time of Conſtans the ſon of Conſtantine the Great: the Patrimony of the noble Family of the Pici (of which was Picus de Mirandula that renowned Scholar) but held by them as Feudataries to the Dukes of Parma. 4. Briſcello, called anciently Brixellum, not far from the chief City Parma; of no great note at the preſent time, but memorable in the Roman ſtory for the death of the Emperor Otho, who here killed himſelf. For hearing here that his Forces were overthrown by Valens, and Cecina, Commanders of the Forces of Vitellus, then his Competitor for the Empire; he rather choſe to fall by his own ſword, than that the Romans ſhould be forced, for his ſake, to renue the war. And this he did with ſo much honour to himſelf, that many of his Souldiers ſlew themſelves at his Funeral Pile; not out of conſciouſneſs of crime, or for fear of puniſhment, but to teſtifie their affections to him, and to follow ſuch a brave example as was laid before them. So as we may truly ſay of him, as he is ſaid by Tacitus to have ſaid of himſelf, viz. Alii diutius imperium tenuerunt, nemo tam fortiter reliquit. 5. Monticella, in the middle way almoſt between Parma and Placentia, and oppoſite unto Cremona, a chief Town of the Dutchy of Millain, from which parted by the River Po.

Theſe Towns (as others in theſe parts) have been partakers of the diverſities of fortune, as being (after the declining of the Weſtern Empire) ſometimes under the Venetians, moſt times under the Millanoys; and at laſt conquered by Pope Julius the ſecond in the confuſions and deſtructions of the Dukedom of Millain, under the two laſt Princes of the houſe of Sforza. By Paul the 3*d*. being of the houſe of the Farneſis, the Cities of Parma and Palcentia with their Appendixes, were given unto his ſon Petro Aleigi (or Petrus Aloyſius, as the Latins call him) with the title of Duke, An. 1549. The Signeury of Camerine, which he had lately taken from the Dukes of Urbin, being given in recompence to the Church. This Petro being a man of moſt vicious life, had amongſt other villanies committed an unſpeakable violence on the perſon of Coſmus Chirius the Biſhop of Fanum; and ſoon after poyſoned him. For which moſt deteſtable fact, he received no other chaſtiſement of his Father than this, Hæc vitia me non commonſtratore didicit, that he was ſure he had not learnt thoſe vices by this example. But going on in theſe wicked courſes, he was ſlain at laſt by Count John Aguzzola; and Placentia, after a ſhort ſiege, yielded to Ferdinand Gonzaga (Vice-roy in Millain for the Emperor Charles the fifth) conceived to be privy to the murder. Octavian the ſon of Petro Luigi, hearing what had hapned, fortified himſelf in Parma as well as he could: but being hated by the new Pope, and diſtruſtful, not without good cauſe, of the Emperor's purpoſes, he had quite loſt all, if Henry the ſecond of France, had not taken him into his protection. For the Emperor Charles fully determined (notwithſtanding that Octavian had married his baſe daughter) to have made himſelf Lord of the Town: and the French King was loth to ſee ſo great a ſtrength added to the Emperor's poſſeſſions in Italy. When the war had now laſted four years, Philip the ſecond (who afterwards ſucceeded Charles) conſidering how neceſſary it was for his affairs in Italy, to have this Octavian his friend, reſtored unto him the City of Plaiſance or Placentia, and ſo withdrew him from the French faction, Anno 1557. Yet becauſe he would be ſure to keep his houſe in a perpetual dependence on Spain, he reſtored it not abſolutely at the preſent, but held the Citadel thereof with a Spaniſh Garriſon, till the year 1583: when in regard of the good ſervices, which Alexander Prince of Parma had done him in his Wars againſt the Hollanders, and others of the revolted Provinces; he cauſed it to be ſurrendered into the hands of his Father Octavian. By which, and by his ſetling upon this houſe the Town and Territory of Novara, in the Dukedom of Millain, and other perſonal favours which they have conferred on the Princes of it; the Kings of Spain ſeem to have given ſome ſatisfaction to this houſe for ſtepping betwixt them and the Kingdom of Portugal; to which they might have made ſuch a probable title, as would have troubled his Eſtate, had they ſtood upon it.

The Dukes of Parma.

A. Chr.
1549	1	Petro Luigi Farneſis, ſon to Paul the third, made by the Pope, his Father, the firſt Duke of Parma.
1550	2	Octavian Farneſis, ſon to Petro Luigi, married Margaret baſe daughter to Charles the fifth; afterwards Governeſs of the Netherlands.
	3	Alexander, ſon of Octavian and Margaret of Auſtria, one of the moſt renowned Souldiers of his time, Governor of the Netherlands for King Philip the ſecond.
1592	4	Rainutio Farneſis, ſon of Alexander and Mary of Portugal, eldeſt daughter of Edward ſon to King Emanuel; one of the Competitors for that Crown.
	5	Odordo Farneſis, ſon of Rainutio.

The Dukedom of MONTFERRAT.

THE Dukedom of MONTFERRAT, is ſituate betwixt Lombardy and Piemont, on the Rivers of Tenarus and Po, on the Eaſt, and Weſt; extended North, and South, in a line or branch, from the Alpes to the borders of Liguria; of which laſt it was ſometimes counted part, and called Liguria Ciſapennina for diſtinction ſake.

It took this name either à Monte ferrato, from ſome Mountain of it ſtored with Iron; or elſe à Monte feraci, as ſome rather think, from the fertility of the Mountains. And to ſay truth, though the whole Country ſeem to be nothing elſe than a continual heap of Mountains; yet are they Mountains of ſuch wonderful fruitfulneſs, that they will hardly give place to any Valley in Europe.

The principal River of it is the Tenarus, above mentioned, which ſpringing out of the hills about Barceis, a Town of the Marquiſate of Saluzzes, falleth into the Po not far from Pavie. The principal Cities of it are; 1. Alba, called by Pliny, Alba Pompeia, ſituate on the banks of the ſaid River, in a rich and fertil ſoil, but a very bad air: near to which, in a poor Village called Zobia, the Emperor Pertinax was born. Who being of mean and obſcure parents, after the death of Commodus, was called by the Conſpirators to the Roman Empire. But being over-zealous to reform the corruptions of the Souldiers, he was by the Prætorian Guards (hating their Princes for their vertues, as much as formerly for their vices) moſt cruelly murthered; and the Imperial dignity ſold to Julianus, for 25 Seſtertiums a man. 2. Caſal, vulgarly called Saint Vas, from the Church there dedicated to Saint Evaſius (or Saint Vas, as they ſpeak it commonly) the ſtrongeſt Town in all this Country; well built and peopled with many ancient and noble Families, of which the Family of St. George is one of the principal; and made a Biſhops See by Pope Sixtus the fourth, Anno 1474. It was in former times, the chief ſeat of the houſe of Montferrat, and for that cauſe compaſſed with a ſtrong wall, and a fair Caſtle: but of late fortified after the modern manner of Fortifications, and ſtrengthened with an impregnable Citadel by Duke Vincent Gonzago, as the ſureſt Key of his Eſtate, in which new Citadel the Governor of the Province holds his uſual reſidence. 3. Aique, in Latin Aquenſis, famous for its Baths or Fountains of hot and medicinal waters. 4. Saint Saviours, where there is a very ſtrong Fortreſs, as there is alſo in. 5. Ponſture, or Pont di Stura, ſo called of the River Stura. 6. Oſoniano, anciently Occimianum, the old ſeat of the firſt Marqueſſes of this Montferrat. 7. Belzale, 8. Liburn, and many others of leſs note.

Here are alſo within the limits of this Dukedom, the Towns of Aſt, Cherian, and Chivaſco, belonging to the Dukes of Savoy, in the deſcription of whoſe Country we may ſpeak more of them; together with Novara and Alexandria appertaining to the Dukedom of Millain, which we have ſpoken of already. And hereunto alſo I refer the ſtrong (and in thoſe times) impregnable Fortreſs, by the Latin Hiſtorians called Fraxinetum, from ſome Grove of Aſhes near unto it: ſituate in the advantages of the Mountains, and not far from the Sea, by conſequence better able to defend it ſelf and admit relief; and therefore made the receptacle or retreat of the Saracens, at ſuch time as they had footing in theſe parts of Italy. Firſt took and fortified by them in the year 891. recovered afterwards by the proweſs and good Fortune of Otho the Emperour, deſervedly ſurnamed the Great, about ſixty years after. Of great note in the ſtories of thoſe middle times. By Luitprandus placed near the borders of Provence; by Blondus, and Leander, near the River Po, and the Town of Valenza, once called Forum Fulvii; and finally by Sigonius in the Coctian Alpes: and ſo moſt fit to be referred unto this Country, though now ſo deſolated that there is no remainders of the ruins of it.

This Country was made a Marquiſate by Otho the ſecond, 985. one of the ſeven by him erected and given to the ſeven Sons of Waleran of Saxony, who had married his Daughter Adelheide. A Military Family, conſpicuouſly eminent in the Wars of Greece, and the Holy Land; where they did many acts of ſingular Merit: inſomuch as Baldwin and Conrade, iſſuing from a ſecond branch hereof, were made Kings of Hieruſalem; and Boniface one of the Marqueſſes, got the Kingdom of Theſſaly, and many fair Eſtates in Greece. But the Male-iſſue failing in Marqueſs John, the Eſtate fell to Theodorus Palæologus, of the Imperial Family of Conſtantinople, who had married the Heir-General of the Houſe; continuing in his name till the year 1534. when it fell into the hands of the Dukes of Mantua. In the perſon of Duke William Gonzaga raiſed to the honour of a Dukedom, as it ſtill continueth; the beſt and richeſt part of the Duke's Eſtate, and the faireſt flower in all his Garden. The reſidue of the ſtory may be beſt collected out of the following Catalogue of The Marqueſſes of Montferrat.

A.C.
985	1	William, one of the Sons of Waleran and Adelheide, made the firſt Marqueſs of Montferrat.
	2	Boniface, the Son of William.
	3	William II. who accompanied the Emperour Conrade the III. and St. Lewis of France, to the Holy-Land.
1183	4	Boniface II. Son of William the II. his younger Brother William being deſigned King of Hieruſalem, and Reyner another of them made Prince of Theſſaly, ſucceeded his Father in Montferrat. Aiding his Nephew Baldwin, the Son of William, in recovering the Kingdom of Hieruſalem; he was took priſoner by Guy of Luſignan, Competitor with him for that title.
	5	William III. Son of Boniface, poiſoned in the Holy Land, where he endeavoured the reſtoring of his Brother Conrade, to that languiſhing Kingdom.
	6	Boniface III. Son of William the Third, for his valour in taking of Conſtantinople, made King of Theſſaly.
1254	7	Boniface IV. Son of Boniface the Third, added Vorcelli and Eporedium unto his Eſtate.
	8	John, ſurnamed the Juſt, the laſt of this houſe.
	9	Theodore Palæologus Son of the Emperour Andronicus Palæologus the elder, and Toland his Wife, Daughter of Boniface the Fourth.
	10	John Palæologus, Son of Theodore.
	11	Theodorus II. Son of John, a great builder and endower of Religious houſes.
	12	Jacobus Johannes, Son of Theodore the ſecond.
	13	John III. eldeſt Son of Jacobus Johannes.
1464	14	William IV. Brother of John the Third, Founder of the City and Monaſtery of Caſal.
1487	15	Boniface V. Brother of John and William, the two laſt Marqueſſes, inveſted by the Emperor Frederick the Fourth; Blanca Maria the Daughter of William ſurrendring her Eſtate unto him.
	16	William V. Son of Boniface the Fifth.
1518	17	Boniface VI. Son of William the Fifth.
1530	18	John George, Brother of William the Fifth, ſucceeded his Nephew in the Eſtate; which he held but four years. After whoſe death, Anno 1534, this Marquiſate was adjudged to Frederick the firſt Duke of Mantua, who had married Margaret Daughter of William the Fifth, and next heir to George.

Whoſe Succeſſors may be ſeen in the former Catalogue of the Dukes of Mantua.

The Arms hereof are Gules, a Chief Argent.

Here are in this Eſtate.

And now according to my method, I ſhould proceed to the deſcription and ſtory of the Principality of Piemont, the laſt and moſt Weſtern part of Italy. But being it lieth partly in, and partly at the foot of the Alpes, was anciently a part of the Province called Alpes Coctiæ, and is now part of the Eſtate of the Duke of Savoy: we will defer till we come to thoſe Alpine Provinces, which are next to follow. And ſo much ſhall ſuffice for Italy, in which there are, beſides thoſe of Piemont,

OF THE ALPES.

Before we can come out of Italy into France, we muſt croſs the Alpes; a ridge of Hills wherewith (as with a ſtrong and defenſible Rampart) Italy is aſſured againſt France and Germany. They are ſaid to be five days journey high, covered continually with Snow, from the whiteneſs whereof they took this name; that in the Sabine Dialect being called Alpum, which in the Latine was called Album.

They begin about the Mediterranean or Liguſtick Seas, and croſſing all along the Borders of France and Germany, extend as far as to the Gulf of Cornero, in the Province of Iſtria; and are in ſeveral parts called by ſeveral names, which we will muſter up as they lie in order from the Mediterranean to the Adriatick. And firſt thoſe which lye neareſt to the Mediterranean, are for that cauſe called Maritimæ, from the nearneſs to Liguria, called by ſome Liguſticæ. 2. Then follow thoſe called Cottiæ, from Cottius, a King of the Allobroges: And 3. thoſe named Graiæ, from the paſſage of Hercules and his Græcian Followers; of which, both amongſt the Poets and Hiſtorians, there is very good evidence. 4. After we come to the Pœninæ, ſo named from the march of Annibal and his Carthaginians, whom the Latin Writers call by the name of Pœni; or from the Mountain-God Pœninus, worſhipped by the Veragri, the Inhabitants of it. 5. Next come we to the Lepontiæ, ſo named from Lepontii, who did there inhabit: As 6. the Rhæticæ, which lye next to them, from the Rhæti, once a powerful people of that mountainous tract. 7. Then follow thoſe called Juliæ, from the paſſage of Julius Cæſar over them, in his march towards Gaul: and ſo at laſt we come unto thoſe called Carnicæ, extending to the ſhores of the Adriatick, denominated from the Carni who did here inhabit, and who gave name alſo to Carniola, an adjoining Province.

The ancient Inhabitants of theſe mountainous Countries, beſides the Allobroges, Veragri, Lepontii, Rhæti, and Carni, ſpoken of before; were the Sedani, Salii, Valenſes, Vacontii, and divers others of leſs note and eſtimation: all vanquiſhed by the indefatigable induſtry of the Romans. After whoſe ſubjugation, and the ſetlement of the Roman Empire, theſe Mountains, and ſome part of the Vales adjoining, made five ſeveral Provinces; viz. The Province of the Cottian Alpes, containing Walliſland, and Piemont. Secondly, of Rhætia Prima, comprehending the Griſons, and part of the Dukedom of Millain, now in poſſeſſion of the Switzers; both which were members of the Dioceſe of Italy. Thirdly, of the Alpes Maritimæ, now part of Daulphine and Provence. Fourthly, of the Graiæ and Pœninæ Alpes, and the greateſt part of Maxima Sequanorum, including ſome part of Savoy, and moſt part of Switzerland; both which were members of the Dioceſe of Gaul. And fifthly, of Noricum Mediterraneum; comprehending Carniola, Carinthia, and the parts near hand; which were members of the Dioceſe of Illyricum Occidentale. The people anciently, as now, by reaſon of their drinking Snow-water, diſſolving from the tops of the Hills, and ſometimes falling thence with as great a violence as the Cataracts of Nilus are ſaid to do; were generally troubled with a ſwelling in the throat, which the Latines call Struma: being the ſame with that which we call the Kings-Evil; becauſe by ſpecial priviledge curable by the Kings of France and England. Quis tumidum guttur miratur in Alpibus? as the Poet hath it.

Of theſe vaſt Hills, the loweſt are the Carnicæ and Maritimæ, lying neareſt to the ſeveral Seas before remembred: The Cottiæ and the Graiæ not ſo high, but that the paſſages lie open for the moſt part of the year. The reſt, by reaſon of their deep and dreadful præcipices, their tedious and ſteep aſcents, narrow ways, dangerous craggy Rocks, fierce whirlwinds, and huge balls of ſnow, tumbling with an incredible violence from the tops of the Mountains; are hardly paſſable by Horſe, not at all by Waggon. And yet amongſt theſe dreadful hills, there are obſerved to be ſome Vallies of great fertility, not giving ground for fruitfulneſs to the beſt in Europe; and for the ſweetneſs of the temperature going much beyond them. With ſuch an equal hand, doth the heavenly Providence diſpenſe the benefits of Nature to his whole Creation; that plenty bordereth upon want, and pain on pleaſure.

And yet for all the Difficulty and Danger of theſe Alpine Paſſages, Covetouſneſs, or Curioſity, or Deſire of Conqueſt, have found a way to make them paſſable in many places; and that not only for private and particular Paſſengers, but for vaſt Multitudes and numerous Armies, ſuch as thoſe led by Annibal and Julius Cæſar. But eſpecially the barbarous people found out five ways to break into Italy, which have been ſince much travelled by divers Nations; of which three be out of France, and two out of Germany. The firſt from France is through Provence, and ſo cloſe to the Liguſtick Seas; eaſieſt for private Paſſengers, but too ſtrait and narrow for great Armies: there being many paſſages in the Country of Nizze, ſo narrow, that ten men may make head againſt ten thouſand; as in that called the Pace of the Virgin for one. The ſecond is over the Hills called Gencure, into the Marquiſate of Saluzzes, and ſo to the other parts of Lombardy; which was the way that Charles the eighth marched towards Naples, and by the Italians, is commonly Strada Romana, becauſe the ordinary Paſſage betwixt France and Rome. The third way is over the greater Cenis, (which ſome call the leſſer St. Barnard) ſo to Aoſt, or Turin; which (if we may believe Antiquity) was firſt opened by Hercules, and after followed by Annibal: who found the Paſſages ſo cloſed up, that he was forced to break his way (as Plutarch telleth us) with Fire and Vinegar; whence that ſo memorable a ſaying, Viam Annibal, aut inveniet, aut faciet. From the paſſage of thoſe Worthies, this Tract, and that adjoining were called Alpes Graiæ, and Pœninæ. Or if (as others think) Annibal took the former way, and came directly upon Turin, which Town it is moſt certain that he took in his march; then theſe Pœninæ muſt take name from the Paſſage of Aſdrubal, or of ſome part of Annibal's Army, which probably was too great to go all one way: or elſe from the Mountain-God Pœninus, as before was ſaid.

The firſt way out of Germany into Italy, is through the Country of the Griſons, by the Valtolin, which the Spaniard ſeized into his hands. So that by the keeping of the Veltlyn, or Valtolin, and manning of the Fort Fuentes, which he alſo erected; he was in a manner the Lord of this Paſſage: not only to the diſcontent of the Natives, but to the diſtaſt of his neighbours the Savoyards and Venetians. The other way out of Germany into Italy, is through the Country of Tirolis, by the Towns of Inſpruch and Trent. This paſſage is commanded by the Caſtle and Fort of Eresberg, ſeated on the Confines of this Country towards Suevia, and from Inſpruch, is two days journey diſtant. Which Fort, in the War which the Proteſtant Princes made againſt Charles the fifth was ſurprized by Captain Scherteline, ſo to hinder the coming of the Pope's Forces into Germany: for which the Emperour ſo hated him, that when all the reſt of that Faction were pardoned, he only continued a Proſcript, his head being valued at 4000 Crowns. The taking alſo of this Fort, and the Caſtle adjoining, by D. Maurice of Saxony, made the ſaid Charles then being in Inſpruch, to fly out of Germany; and ſhortly after to reſign his Empire to his Brother Ferdinand.

Out of theſe Mountains riſe the Springs of many of the moſt Renowned Rivers in theſe Weſt parts of the World; as, 1. The Rhene, which ſpringeth from two ſeveral Fountains, the one which they call the Nearer Rhine, out of the Lepontiæ; and the other which they term the Vorder, or further Rhine, out of the Rheticæ; which meet together about a Dutch mile from Chur the chief Town of the Griſons, and ſo go on by Conſtance to Germany. 2. Rhoſne, which riſeth in that part of the Lepontiæ, which is called Die Furchen, about two Dutch miles from the head of the Nearer or Hinder Rhine, and ſo through Walliſland into France. 3. Padus, or Po, which hath his head in a branch of the Cottian or Coctian Alpes, heretofore called Mons Veſulus, and ſo through Piemont into Italy. Out of them alſo ſpring the Rivers of Ruſſe, Durance, and Atheſis; the firſt a Dutch, the ſecond a French, and the third an Italian River alſo; not to ſay any thing of others of inferiour note. The great Lakes which are found in this mountainous Tract, we ſhall hereafter meet with in their proper places.

Let us next look upon the Countries and Eſtates here ſituate, which bordering upon Italy, France, and Germany, and partaking ſomewhat of them all, do belong to neither; but reckon themſelves to be free and abſolute Eſtates, Supreme, and independent upon any others, as indeed they are. Such other of theſe Alpine Countries, which are under the command of the German Princes, as ſome parts of Schwaben and Bavaria, together with Tirol, Carniola, and the reſt which belong to Auſtria, ſhall be conſidered in the Hiſtory of thoſe States and Princes, to which of right they do belong. But for the reſt, which as they lye entire together without intermixture, ſo they are abſolute in themſelves, and owe nor ſuit nor ſervice unto any other; we will conſider them in this place, under the name of the Alpes, or the Alpine Provinces.

The ALPES then, or the Alpine Provinces, call them which you will, are bound on the Eaſt with Tirol in Germany, and the Dukedoms of Millain and Montferrat in Italy; on the Weſt with Provence, Daulphine, and La Breſs, parts of the Continent of France, on the North with the County of Burgundy in France, and Suevia or Schawben in High Germany; and on the South, with Lombardy, and a branch of the Mediterranean Sea. Called in the middle times by the name of Burgundia Tranſjurana, becauſe it contained that part of the Kingdom of Burgundy, which lay beyond the Mountain Jour. A Mountain which beginning near the City of Baſil, and not far from the Rhine, paſſeth South-weſtward by the Lakes of Bieler-Zee, Newenburger Zee, and that called Lemane, till it come almoſt unto the Rhoſne: dividing by that means the Provinces of Switzerland, and Savoy, from the County of Burgundy.

It lieth under the ſixth Climate, and ſome part of the ſeventh, ſo that the longeſt day in Summer is fifteen hours, and three quarters. Of different nature in regard both of Soyl and People; which will beſt ſhew it ſelf in the ſurvey of the ſeveral Provinces, into which divided; that is to ſay, 1. the Dukedom of Savoy, 2. the Signeury of Geneva; 3. the Reſorts of Walliſland, 4. the Cantons of the Switzers, and 5. the Leagues of the Griſons. Which ſeveral States, though they be reckoned to belong to the German Empire, and that the Biſhops of Chur, Sion, and Baſil are generally accounted for Princes of it: yet they neither come unto the Diets, nor are ſubject to the publick Taxes, nor comprehended within any of thoſe ten Circles into which the Empire is divided.

The Language herein ſpoken, partakes ſomewhat of all three, as before was ſaid: the French being wholly ſpoke in Savoy, the lower Walliſland, and generally by the Switzers, bordering on the Lake Lemane; the Dutch being common to the greateſt part of the Switzers, the Griſons about Chur, and the upper Walliſland: and finally the Italian, uſed by the generality of the Griſons, the Præfectures appertaining unto them and the Switzers both in Piemont, and thoſe parts of Savoy which lie next unto it.

The principal Souldiers of theſe mountainous Provinces, 1. Rodolph, Earl of Habſpurg, the Founder of the preſent Auſtrian Family. 2. Thomas, and 3. Peter, Earls of Savoy, this laſt ſur-named Charlemain the ſecond. 4. Emanuel Philibert, one of the later Dukes hereof Commander of the Armies of the King of Spain. 5. John Tzerclas, commonly called Count Tilly, General of the Imperial Armies in the War of Germany. For Scholars of more ſpecial note for which we are beholding to theſe Countries, we have 1. Philip Theophraſtus Bombaſtus à Boenham, commonly called Paracelſus, the Author, or Inſtaurator of Chymical Phyſick; born in the Mountains of Helvetia, as he ſaith himſelf: a man of moſt prodigious parts, and of no mean vices. 2. Zuinglius one of the chief Agents in the Reformation. 3. Muſculus, and 4. Oecolampadius, two Divines, his ſeconds. 5. Henry Bullinger, one of the ſame profeſſion alſo. 6. Sebaſtian Caſtalio, of as much learning as the beſt of them, though of different judgment. 7. Dan. Toſſanus the Hebrician. To which we may add 8. Calvin alſo, who though he had his birth in France, had his being here; and never grew to any eminency in Fame or Learning, till he was ſetled in Geneva.

For matter of Religion, it is of a very mixt condition alſo, in all theſe Countries: that of the Romiſh only having publick countenance in the Dukedom of Savoy, and Piemont; but ſo that the Reformed is tolerated in ſome parts thereof; eſpecially in the next parts Daul- phine, to which the neighbourhood of Geneva gives a great encreaſe. In Switzerland there are four Cantons which are wholly for the Reformation, viz. Zurich, Bern, Baſil, and Schaffhauſen: Seven that ſtand wholly for the Doctrine of the Church of Rome, i.e. Uren, Switz, Underwalden, Lucern, Zug, Friburg, and Solothurn: in Apenzel, and Glaris, they allow of both. The Griſons are confuſedly divided betwixt both Religions; but the Italian Præfectures admit no other but the Romiſh. The cauſe of which diviſion came upon the preaching of Zuinglius, a Canon of the Church of Zurich: who being animated with Luther's good ſucceſs in Germany, began about the year 1519 to preach againſt the Maſs, and Images, and other the corruptions of the Church of Rome. In which his party ſo increaſed, that on a publick Diſputation which was held at Zurich, the Maſs was abrogated in that Canton by the authority of the Senate, Anno 1526, and Images deſtroyed at Bern, 1528. After which proſperous beginnings, the Reformation began to ſpread it ſelf amongſt the Confederates; and had prevailed further both in France and Germany, but for a difference which aroſe betwixt him and Luther about the Sacrament of the Supper: in which Luther did not only maintain a real Preſence, but a Conſubſtantiation alſo in the ſacred Elements; which Zuinglius maintained to be only a bare ſign and repreſentation of Chriſts bleſſed body. For reconciling this difference, wherein the enemies of both did extreamly triumph; a conference was held between them at Marſpurg, a Town of Hiſſia, by the procurement of that Lantgrave, but without ſucceſs: Luther profeſſing that he durſt not agree in that point with Zuinglius, Ne principes ſuos interpretatione tantopere Pontificiis exoſa, magis inviſos redderet; for fear of drawing too great hatred on the Princes of his own profeſſion. From this time forwards all brake out into open flames, the names of Ubiquitarians, and Sacramentarians, being reciprocally caſt upon one another; to the great hinderance of the cauſe which they had in hand: yet ſo that the Lutheran opinions got ground in Germany, the Zuinglians amongſt theſe Mountains, and in France it ſelf; and finally prevailed by the means of Calvin in many parts in Germany alſo. But hereof more hereafter in convenient place.

As for the ſtory of thoſe Countries, before they were divided into ſo many hands, we are to know that the old Inhabitants hereof (mentioned before) were conquered ſeverally by the Romans: as ſhall be ſhewn in the deſcription of the ſeveral Provinces. Won from the Romans by the Burgundians, in the time of Honorius the Weſtern Emperour, they became a member of their Kingdom; except the Country of the Griſons, and ſome parts of Switzerland, which fell under the Almans, united afterwards in the new Kingdom of Burgundy, or the French erection, when ſubdued by that Nation. But Charles the Bald, the laſt of the French Kings of Burgundy, having united it to the Kingdom of France, divided that Kingdom into three Eſtates; that is to ſay, the Dukedom of Burgundy on this ſide of the Soaſne, the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Soaſne, and the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Jour. This laſt, containing the greateſt part of all theſe Alpine Provinces (except Piemont only) was by the ſaid Charles given to Conrade a Saxon Prince, the Son of Witikind the Third, and younger Brother of Robert, the firſt Earl of Anjou; by the name of Earl of Burgundy Transjurane or Burgundy beyond the Jour. Rodolph his Son and Succeſſor, by Eudes the King of France, his Couſin German, was honoured with the title of King: to make him equal at the leaſt, with Boſon Earl of Burgundy beyond the Soaſne, whom Charles the Groſs, about the ſame time had made King of Arles. But Rodolph finding it offenſive to the German Emperors, abandoned it on the death of Eudes, and took to himſelf the title of Duke. The reſidue of the ſtory we ſhall have in the following Catalogue of

The Earls, Dukes, and Kings of Burgundy Transjurane.

1 Conrade the firſt Earl of Burgundy Transjurane.
890 2 Rodolph. Earl, King, and Duke of Burgundy Transjurane.
912 3 Rodolph II. elected King of Italy againſt Berengarius; which title he exchanged with Hugh de Arles, who was choſen by another Faction, for the poſſeſſion of the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy; on the aſſuming of which Crown, he reſigned this Dukedom to his Brother Boſon.
4 Boſon the Brother of Rodolph the Second, ſucceeded his Brother in the Dukedom of Burgundy, beyond the Jour; as afterwards he ſucceeded Rodolph, his Brothers Son, in the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy.
965 5 Conrade II. Son of Boſon, King of Arles and Burgundy, and Duke of Burgundy Transjurane.
699 6 Rodolph III. Son of Conrade, who dying without iſſue, left his Eſtates to Henry ſurnamed the Black, the Son of his Siſter Giſela, by Conrade the Second; Emperour and King of Germany: united ſo unto the Empire, till by the bounty and improvidence of ſome following Emperours, it was cantoned into many parts; of which more anon.

It is now time to lay aſide this diſcourſe as to the general condition and affairs of theſe Alpine Provinces; and to look over the particulars: beginning firſt with the Eſtate of the Duke of Savoy, ſituate wholly in the Mountains, and lying next to Italy, where before we left.

The Dukedom of SAVOY.

THE Dukedom of SAVOY is bounded on the Eaſt with Millain and Montferrat in Italy; on the Weſt, with Dauphine in France; on the North, with Switzerland, and the Lake of Geneva; and on the South, with Provence, and the Mediterranean. The Country of ſo different nature, that it cannot be reduced under any one character: and therefore we muſt look upon it in the ſeveral parts into which divided; that is to ſay, 1. the Principality of Piemont, and 2. Savoy, eſpecially ſo called.

1. PIEMONT, in Latin called Regio Pedemontana, becauſe ſituate at the foot of the Mountains (as the name in both Languages imports) is bounded on the Eaſt, with Millain and Montferrat; on the Weſt, with Savoy, on the North with the Switzers; and on the South, it runneth in a narrow Valley to the Mediterranean, having Montferrat on the one ſide, Provence and a part of the Alpes upon the other. The Country wonderfully fertile compared with Switzerland, and Savoy, which lie next unto it; but thought to be inferiour to the reſt of Italy. It containeth, beſides Baronies, and Lordſhips, 15 Marquiſates, 52 Earldoms, 160 Caſtles or walled places: and is ſo populous withal, that once a Piemonteſe being demanded the extent of his Country, made anſwer, that it was a City of three hundred miles in compaſs.

The principal Cities of it are, 1. Turin, called of old Auguſta Taurinorum, becauſe the head City of the Taurini, once the Inhabitants of this Tract: from which Taurini, it deriveth the name of Turin, and not as ſome conceive from the River Duria, on whoſe banks it ſtandeth. In this City is the Court and Palace of the Duke of Savoy (who is the Lord of this Country), the See of an Archbiſhop, and an Univerſity, in which the renowned Scholar Eraſmus took his degrees in Divinity. It is ſituate on the River Po, in a place very important for the guard of Italy; for which cauſe the Romans ſent a Colony hither, and the Lombards made it one of their four Dukedoms. Adjoining to it is a Park of the Dukes of Savoy, watered with the Duria, Sture, and Po, ſix miles in circuit, full of Woods, Lakes, and pleaſant Fountains; which make it one of the ſweeteſt ſituations in Europe. 2. Mondeni, ſeated on the ſwelling of a little hill, with very fair Suburbs round about it; in one of which the Dukes of Savoy built a Church and Chappel to the bleſſed Virgin; intended for the burial place of the Ducal Family. It is the beſt peopled Town, for the bigneſs of it, of any in Italy. 3. Auguſta Prætoria, now called Aoſt, ſituate in the furtheſt corner of Italy to the North and Weſt. 4. Vercelli, a ſtrong Town bordering upon Millain, to which it formerly belonged; and was given firſt in Dower with Blanch the Daughter of Philip Maria Duke of Millain, to Amadee the third Duke of Savoy; anciently the chief Town of the Libyci, who together with the Salaſſi and Taurini, were the old Inhabitants of this Country. 5. Inuria called by Ptolomy Eporedia, ſituate at the very jaws of the Alpes, an Epiſcopal City. 6. Nicæa, or Nizze, an Haven on the Mediterranean, at the influx of the River Varus, which divides it from Provence; beautified with a Cathedral Church, the Biſhops Palace, a Monaſtery of Nuns, and an impregnable Citadel. A place ſo naturally ſtrong, that when as yet the Fortifications were imperfect, it reſiſted the whole Forces of Barbaroſſa the Turkiſh Admiral, An. 1543, lying before it with a Navy of two hundred ſail, and battering it continually with incredible fury. Firſt fortified by Duke Charles, upon occaſion of ſome words of the Duke of Burbon, who paſſing this way with his Army, Behold, ſaith he, a ſituation of which they know not the importance: the Citadel being after added by Emanuel Philibert, and garriſoned for the moſt part with 400 Souldiers. 7. Suſe, ſeated in the ordinary thorough-fare betwixt France and Italy, called of old Segovio; and honoured in thoſe times with a ſtately Sepulchre of King Coctius, a King of the Allobroges: one of the ſeven Marquiſates in the middle times erected by the Emperour Otho. 8. Pignarolle, fortified with a Caſtle of great importance, which commandeth all the adjoining Vallies, ſold by Duke Charles Emanuel to Lewis the 13. of France, together with the Fort and Vally of Perouſa, (and in them both to the number of ten or twelve Towns and Villages) for the ſum of 494000 Crowns, to be for ever in the propriety and Soveraignty of the Kings of France; and thereby giving to the French commodious paſs from Daulphine into Italy upon all occaſions, and no ſmall influence and command on his own Eſtates. 9. Quiers, adorned with many goodly Churches, fair Convents, and noble Families. 10. Ville Franche, a place of great ſtrength, more towards the Sea. 11. Savillan, ſeated in ſo pleaſant a Country, that Duke Emanuel Philibert had once a purpoſe to ſetle his abode in it, and make it the chief of his Eſtate. 12. Buſque, a Marquiſate, another of the ſeven erected for the Sons of Waleran. 13. Hereunto we may add the City of Aſt (though properly within the limits of Montferrat) anciently a Colony of the Romans, and now to be compared, for the greatneſs and beauty of her Palaces, to the moſt ſtately Cities of Lombardy; ſituate betwixt the two Rivers of Po and Tenarus, very rich and populous.

Here is alſo in this Country the Marquiſate of Saluzzes, (of the ſame erection as the former, but a greater Eſtate) the cauſe of ſo many differences betwixt France and Savoy. The principal Town whereof is called alſo Saluzze (from the Salaſſi queſtionleſs who dwelt hereabouts) ſeated about the Spring of the River Po: reaſonably big, and fortified with a very large Caſtle, fitted with rooms for all uſes, and for every ſeaſon. 2. Carmanvogla, which gave name to that famous Captain who carried ſo great a ſway in the Wars of Italy. A Town ſo fortified and ſtored with all ſorts of Ammunition, that it is thought impregnable. 3. Ravelle, a well fortified place. 4. Doglian, the thorow-fare for the greateſt part of the Trade which is driven betwixt Piemont, and the River of Genoa. The Arms hereof Argent, a Chief Gules.

The ancient Inhabitants of this Country were the Salaſſi, Libyci, and Taurini, as before is ſaid, all vanquiſhed by the Romans, and their Country made a Province of that Empire, by the name of the Province of Alpes Coctiæ, in the time of Nero; of which Genoa was the Metropolis or principal City. The preſent are deſcended, for the moſt part, of the Heruli, who under the Conduct of Odoacer conquered Italy; whereof he was proclaimed King by the Romans themſelves; but Odoacer being vanquiſhed near Verona, by Theodorick King of the Goths, the Heruli had this Country allotted to them by the Conquerour for their habitation. They had not held it long when ſubdued by the Lombards, of whoſe Kingdom it remained a part, till given by Aripert the ſeventeenth King of the Lombards, to the Church of Rome; affirmed by ſome to be the firſt temporal Eſtate that ever the Popes of Rome had poſſeſſion of. But lying far off, and the donation not confirmed by the Kings ſucceeding, the Popes got little by the gift: ſo that in the ſubverting of the Kingdom of the Lombards, it was at the devotion of the Kings of Italy; of the houſe of Charles the Great: and afterwards of his Succeſſors in the Empire, by whom diſtracted into ſeveral Eſtates and Principalities; Thomas and Peter, Earls of Savoy, made themſelves Maſters of the greateſt part of it, by force of Arms: the former in the year 1210, the latter in the year 1256. Since that time the firſt Son of Savoy is ſtiled Prince of Piemont. The Marquiſate of Saluzzes, containing almoſt all the reſt, was added by the marriage of a daughter of this Marquiſate, with Charles Duke of Savoy, An. 1481. Of which marriage though there was no iſſue, yet the Savoyards always held it as their own, till the French upon as good a title poſſeſſed themſelves of it: Recovered by the Savoyard, An. 1588, the Civil Wars then hot in France. But finding that he was not able to hold it againſt Henry the fourth (who looked upon it as a door to let his Forces into Italy) he compounded with him, An. 1600, the Country of Breſſe being given in exchange for his Marquiſate: Of which, together with the reſidue of Piemont, and ſome pieces of importance in the Dukedom of Montferrat, that noble Family of Savoy doth now ſtand poſſeſſed.

The Arms of this Principality are Gules, a Croſs Argent, charged with a Label of three points Azure.

2. SAVOY, ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called, is bounded on the Eaſt with Walliſland, and part of Piemont; on the Weſt, with Daulphine, and La Breſſe; on the South, with ſome parts of Daulphine only; and on the North with Switzerland, and the Lake of Geneva.

The Country is for the moſt part hilly and Mountainous, tainous, overſpread with the branches of the Alpes, healthy enough, as commonly all Hill Countries are, but not very fruitful, except ſome of vallies which lie nearest to the Weſtern Sun, and the plain tract about the Lemanian Lake, lying towards Geneva. By reaſon of the difficult and narrow ways, and thoſe full of Thieves, it was once called Malvoy: but the paſſages being opened by the coſt and induſtry of the people, and purged of Thieves by good Laws and exemplary Juſtice, it gained the name of Savoy, or Salvoy, quaſi ſalva via: as Maleventum, a Town of the Realm of Naples, on the like conſiderations got the name of Benevent. By the Latines of theſe later times it is called Sabaudia, a name not known to any of the ancient Writers; who knew it by no other name than that of the Allobroges, or Allobrogum Regio.

The common people are naturally very dull and ſimple, ſo groſs of underſtanding for all their continual converſe with other Nations, who take this Country in their way to Italy; that they believe the Duke of Savoy to be the greateſt Prince in the World: and ſo unwarlike, that a few men of another Nation well trained and diſciplined, will make a great number of them flie. But on the other ſide, the Gentry are of a very pleaſing converſation, civil, ingenious, and affecting all good exerciſe: ſo as there may be daily ſeen in Chambery as much good company, and as well appointed and behaved, as in many of the beſt Towns of France or Italy. The number of both ſorts (taking in Piemont who are not intereſſed in the firſt place of this character) are thought to be 800000.

The chief Cities are, 1. Chambery, ſituate on the banks of the River L'Arch, in a very pleaſant Valley, compaſſed round with Mountains; the principal of the Dukedom on that ſide of the Alpes: honoured with the Dukes Court when he reſideth in this Country, the ordinary ſeat of Juſtice, and many neat houſes which belong to the Gentry, fortified of late with a ſtrong Caſtle and ſufficient Outworks; but not recovered of the damage it received, Anno 1600, when it was forced by King Henry the fourth of France, in his Wars with Savoy. 2. Tarentaiſe, an Archbiſhops See, ſituate in the midſt of the Mountains; heretofore the Metropolis of the Province of the Alpes Graiæ, and Pœninæ, and called by Antoninus, Civitas Centronum, from the Centrones who inhabited about this Tract. 3. Lunebourg, in the Country of the old Medulli; betwixt which and Suſe, a Town of Piemont, lyeth the moſt ordinary road betwixt France and Italy. 4. Aque belle, ſituate at the foot of a craggy Rock. 5. Rapaille, a ſweet and fruitful ſituation, on the South-ſide of the Lake Lemanus, the chief Town of the Signeury of Foſſigney: where Amadee the firſt Duke of Savoy, having given over his Eſtate, lived a Monaſtick life, and was thence choſen Pope by the Fathers at Baſil, An. 1440. 6. Nun or Nevidum (by ſome of the old Latins called Noviodunum) an ancient City, laid deſolate in or before the time of Julius Cæſar, repaired again in the Empire of Veſpaſian; the Seat of late times of the Biſhops of Geneva, ſince their expulſion out of that City. 7. Bele, on the Rhodanus, or Rhoſne. 8. Albon, founded about the year 456. 9. Conflans, fortified by the late Dukes of Savoy, but otherwiſe of ſmall importance. 10. Annunciada, not much obſervable, but for being the ſeat or place of Solemnities, for an order of Knights called by that name. 11. Maurienne, or St. John de Maurienne, an Archbiſhops See, ſituate in a Valley of the Alpes ſo called; the chief City of the old Medulli, who dwelt hereabouts; from whence the Princes of this houſe were firſt entituled Earls of Maurienne only. 12. Charboneers, a well fortified place. Here is alſo the ſtrong Town and Fort of Montmelian, which held out four Months againſt Henry the fourth, and many thouſand ſhot of French Cannon, An. 1600, and the impregnable Fortreſs of St. Catharines, which yet ſubmitted to that King; the Government whereof being denyed to the Duke Byron, plunged him in diſcontent and Treaſon, to the loſs of his head.

The many Tribes in and about this Mountainous Country, of which we have mentioned ſome before, paſs generally in moſt ancient Writers, by the name of Allobroges; becauſe the moſt powerful of them all. Of whom the firſt mention which we find in ſtory, is the Atonement made by Hannibal in his paſſage this way, between Bruncus and his Brother, about the ſucceſſion of the Kingdom. Afterwards ſiding with the Salii a Gallick Nation, in a War againſt Marſeilles, then a confederate of the Romans, they drew that people on their backs: by whom they were in fine ſubdued, with the loſs of no leſs than 120000 Galls, under the ſeveral conducts of Cn. Domitius Ænobarbus, and Qu. Fabius Maximus: by which laſt, Bituitus, or Bitultus King of the Auverni, one of the Confederates, was led in triumph unto Rome. The Country and people at that time were much alike, Cælum atrox perviaci ingenio, a ſharp air, and a ſtubborn people, as it is in Florus: not without commendation in the following Ages, for diſcovering Catilines conſpiracy, by which the whole Roman State was in danger of ruine. After which we find Coctius one of the Kings of theſe Allobroges to have been in ſpecial favour with Auguſtus Cæſar: affirmed to be the Founder of twelve Cities in this mountainous Tract, whence it had the name of Alpes Coctiæ; and by that name reduced into the form of a Province, by the Emperour Nero. In the declining of that Empire, this Province became a part of the Kingdom of Burgundy; and paſſed, with other rights of that falling Kingdom, to the Emperors of Germany, by the gift of Rodolph the laſt King. To them it did continue ſubject till the year 999, in which Berald of Saxony, Son of Hugh of Saxony (which Hugh was Son of Otho, and Brother to Otho the third) for killing Mary the laſcivious Wife of his Unkle, fled from Germany; and ſetled himſelf here, near France. His Son Humbert, (ſurnamed Blanchmanis, that is Whitehand) was by the ſpecial favour of the Emperor Conradus Salicus, made Earl of Maurienne; which is a Town of this Country, An. 1027. And by this Marriage with Adela, the Daughter and Heir of the Marqueſs of Suſe, added that noble Marquiſate (one of the ſeven erected by Otho the ſecond, and given amongſt the Sons of Waleran) unto his Eſtate. Humbert the ſecond gained by Conqueſt the Town and Territory of Tarentaiſe; as Ame, or Amadee the third did the Counties of Vaulx, and Chablais, Anno 1240, or thereabouts. Ame, or Amadee the fourth, by the Marriage of Sibille Daughter and ſole Heir of Ulric Earl of Breſſe, added that Earldom to his houſe: as Ame or Amadee the Ninth, did the Town and Territory of Vercelli, upon the contract betwixt Philibert his Son and Succeſſor, with Blanch the baſe daughter of Philip Maria Duke of Millain, who afterwards was married unto Francis Sforza. Ame, or Amadee the ſecond Earl of Maurienne was by the Emperor Henry the Fifth, inveſted with the title of Earl of Savoy; and Amadee the eighth, created the firſt Duke, by the Emperor Sigiſmund, An. 1397. But the main improvement of the power and patrimony of this Houſe, came by the valour and good ſucceſs of the two Earls, Thomas, who in the year 1210, and Peter one of his Sons and Succeſſors (for his manifold Conqueſts, ſurnamed Charlemain the Junior) An. 1256, by conqueſt got a great part of Piedmont; to which the Marquiſate of Saluzzes, containing almoſt all the reſt, was united by a marriage of the daughter of the Marquiſate, to Charles

Duke of Savoy: and though he dyed without iſſue by her, An. 1489. yet his Succeſſors ſtill kept the poſſeſſion of it, till Francis the Firſt, pretending ſome title to it in the right of his Mother (a Daughter of the Houſe of Savoy) laid it unto the Crown of France; from which it was again recovered by the Savoyard, during the French Civil Wars, An. 1588, and now is peaceably poſſeſſed. The Country of Breſſe being given to the French, for their pretenſion to this Marquiſate, An. 1600. Theſe Dukes of Savoy have a long time been devoted to the Faction of Spain, eſpecially ſince the French Kings took in the leſſer States bordering on them, as Burgundy, Bretagne, &c. Charles the third ſided ſo conſtantly with the Emperour Charles the Fifth, that denying Francis the Firſt a paſſage for his Army through the Country into Italy; he was by the ſaid King deſpoiled of his Eſtates, An. 1536. The Emperour to recover it left nothing undone, but in vain; for the French encountring his force in the open field, vanquiſhed them, with the ſlaughter of fifteen thouſand of his men. In the year 1558, peace being made between Henry and Philip, Succeſſors to thoſe great Princes: Emanuel Philibert, Son to Duke Charles, was reſtored to all his Rights. His Son and Succeſſor having married Katherine the Daughter of King Philip the Second, depended wholly upon Spain, notwithſtanding many quarrels which did grow betwixt them; his Sons receiving thence many great penſions and preferments. For at the ſame time, Prince Amadee Victorio the ſecond Son, during the life of Philip his elder Brother, was chief Commander of that King's Gallies; and had in penſion a hundred thouſand Crowns per annum; Philibert the third Son, was Vice-roy of Sicil: Maurice the Fourth a Cardinal, had a moity of the Revenues of the Arch Biſhoprick of Toledo; and Don Thomaza, though then young, had his penſions alſo. But Amadee Victorio, who ſucceeded him, marrying Madam Chriſtiane, a daughter of King Henry the Fourth of France, changed his dependences, and held more cloſe to France than any of his Predeceſſors: but whether to the hurt or benefit of his Eſtates, future times will ſhew. For leaving his Heir a Minor, in the hands of his Mother, the French upon pretence of preſerving the Country for him, againſt the incroachments of the Spaniard, have made themſelves Maſters of the greateſt parts of it: which when they will reſtore to the proper owner, is beyond my cunning to determine. But now behold the Catalogue of the Earls and Dukes of Savoy.

999	1	Beral of Saxony.
1027	2	Humbert, the firſt Earl of Maurienne.
1048	3	Ame, or Amadee I.
1076	4	Humbert II.
1109	5	Ame, or Amadee II. the firſt Earl of Savoy.
1154	6	Humbert III.
1201	7	Thomas, Son of Humbert.
1234	8	Ame, or Amadee III.
1246	9	Boniface, Son of Ame III.
1256	10	Peter, a young Son of Earl Thomas, called Charlemagne the leſs.
1268	11	Philip, Brother of Peter, .
1285	12	Ame, or Amadee IV. Nephew of Thomas the 7. Earl, by a Son named Thomas.
1323	13	Edward, Son of Ame IV.
1329	14	Ame, or Amadee V. the Brother of Edward.
1342	15	Ame, or Amadee VI.
1385	16	Ame, or Amadee VII.
1397	17	Ame, or Amadee VIII. the firſt Duke of Savoy:
1434	28	Lewis, Son of Ame VIII.
1491	19	Ame, or Amadee IX.
1475	20	Philibert, Son of Ame 9th.
1481	21	Charles, Brother of Philibert.
1489	22	Charles II.
1495	23	Philip II. Son of Lewis, the ſecond Duke.
1496	24	Philibert II.
1504	25	Charles III. the Brother of Philibert, outed of his Eſtate by King Francis the Firſt.
1559	26	Emanuel Philibert, reſtored upon his Marriage with Margaret the Daughter of King Francis the Firſt, made Knight of the Garter by Queen Mary.
1580	27	Charles Emanuel.
	28	Ame X. called alſo Amadee Victorio, Son of Charles Emanuel, married Chriſtiane the Daughter of King Henry the Fourth.
1637	29	Charles Emanuel II. Son of Amadee Victor, or Ame the Tenth, at the age of three years ſucceeded his Father.

The Forces of this Duke conſiſt eſpecially in his Forts and Garriſons, whereof he hath good ſtore in Savoy, and Piemont, well fortified and plentifully furniſhed with all manner of Ammunition. And it concerneth him ſo to have; conſidering, what dangerous neighbours he hath near him, and that his Country is a continual thorowfare, for the Armies both of France and Spain, upon all occaſions. Nor doth it leſs conduce to his preſervation, that he hath ſo many retreats of natural ſtrength, as are not eaſily acceſſible by a conquering Army: of which laſt ſort is, amongſt many others, the Valley of Aoſt (which ſome reckon for a part of Savoy, and ſome of Piemont) ſo ſtrong by reaſon of the narrow entries, the uneaſie paſſages, and the great multitudes of the people which inhabit in it; that thoſe who have made themſelves Maſters of the reſt of the Country, durſt never attempt it. And of the firſt, beſides thoſe formerly deſcribed, is the Town of Nizze, ſo fortified and flanked upon all acceſſes, that it ſeems rather to be an aſſembly of Forts, than a ſingle Fortreſs. Out of which Garriſons, the Duke is able to draw great Forces for preſent ſervice; beſides the readineſs of the Piemonteſe upon all occaſions, which are for the moſt part given to Arms.

The ordinary Revenue of this Dukedom (taking Piemont) are ſaid to be above a Million of Crowns per annum. But his extraordinary is ſo great, that Duke Charles Emanuel, during his Wars with Henry the fourth, in a very few years drew out of Piemont only 11 Millions of Crowns; beſides the charge which they were put to in quartering of Soldiers. By which it may appear, that the Dukes are not like to want money to ſerve their turns, when they ſhall deſire it of the Subject; and yet not charge them more than they are able to bear.

The only Order of Knighthood in this Duke's Eſtate is that of the Annunciada ordained by Amadee the firſt Duke, at what time he defended Rhodes from the Turks, An. 1409. Their Collar is of fifteen Links, to ſhew the fifteen myſteries of the Virgin: at the end is the portraiture of our Lady, with the hiſtory of the Annuntiation. Inſtead of a Motto, theſe letters, F.E.R.T. id eſt, Fortitudo Ejus Rhodum Tenuit, are engraven in every plate or link of the Collar: each link being interwoven one within the other, in form of a True-lovers knot, The number of the Knights are fourteen, beſides the Duke, who is the Sovereign of the Order: the ſolemnity was held antiently on our Lady-day, in the Caſtle of Saint Peter in Turin; but of late time in the Town of Annunciada, from hence ſo denominated. So from this victory (for every repulſe of the beſieger, is a victory to the beſieged) there aroſe a double effect; firſt, the inſtitution of this Order; ſecondly the aſſumption of the preſent Arms of this Dutchy, where are G. a Croſs A. This being the Croſs of Saint John of Jeruſalem, whoſe Knights at that time were owners of the Rhodes. Whereas before, the Arms were Or, an Eagle diſplayed with two heads, Sable, Armed Gules ſupporting in Feſſe, an Eſcotchion of Saxony, that is Barrewiſe ſix pieces Sable and Or, a Bend flowered Vert. A Coat belonging to the Emperours of the houſe of Saxony, from whom the firſt Earls of Savoy did derive themſelves.

3. The Signeury of GENEVA.

GENEVA is a City in the Dukedom of Savoy, formerly ſubjects to its Biſhops, acknowledging the Dukes of Savoy for the Lord in chief: now reckoned as a Free-Eſtate, bordering cloſe upon the Switzers, and with them confederate; and ſo more properly within the courſe and compaſs of the Alpine Provinces. It is ſituate on the South-ſide of the Lake Lemane, oppoſite to the City of Lozane in the Canton of Bern, from which it is diſtant ſix Dutch miles: the River Rhoſne (having paſſed through the Lake with ſo clear a colour, that it ſeemeth not at all to mingle with the waters of it) runneth through the lower part thereof, over which there is a paſſage by two fair Bridges. This lower part is ſeated on a flat or level, the reſt on the aſcent of an Hill: the buildings fair and of Free-ſtone, well fortified on both ſides both by Art and Nature; in regard of the pretenſions of the Duke of Savoy (whom they ſuffer not to arm any Gallies upon the Lake) and other jealouſies of State. The compaſs of the whole City is about two miles, in which there are ſuppoſed to be about ſixteen or ſeventeen thouſand ſouls. One of their Bridges is more ancient, and better fortified than the other, belonging anciently to the Switzers (or Helvetians, the old inhabitants of that tract) but broken down by Julius Cæſar, to hinder them from paſſing that way into Gallia.

The people of the Town are generally of good wits in the managery of publick buſineſs, but not very courteous towards Strangers, of whom they exact as much as may be; modeſt and thrifty in Apparel, and ſpeak for the moſt part the Savoyard, or worſt kind of French. So that the great reſort of young Gentlemen thither, is not ſo much to learn that Language (which is no where worſe taught) as out of an opinion which their Parents have, that the Reformed Religion is no where ſo purely practiſed and profeſſed as there. By means whereof, the fry or ſeminary of our Gentry being ſeaſoned in their youth with Genevan Principles; have many times proved diſaffected to the forms of Government (as well Monarchical as Epiſcopal) which they found eſtabliſhed here at home: to the great embroilment of the State, in matters of moſt near concernment. The Women are ſaid to be more chaſte (or at leaſt more reſerved) than in any other place in the World: which poſſibly may be aſcribed to that ſeverity, with which they puniſh all Offenders in that kind. Dancing by no means tolerated in publick or private; Adultery expiated by no leſs than death: Fornication, for the firſt offence with nine days faſting upon bread and water in priſon; for the ſecond, with whipping; for the third with baniſhment. But notwithſtanding this ſeverity, they make love in ſecret, and are as amorous in their dalliances, as in other places.

The Territories of it are very ſmall, extending not above two Leagues and an half from any part of the Town: but the ſoil, if well manured, bringeth Grain of all ſorts, and great ſtore of Wine. There is likewiſe plenty of paſture and feeding grounds, which furniſh the City with fleſh-meats, Butter, and Cheeſe, at very reaſonable rates: the nearneſs of the Lake affording them both Fiſh and Wild-Fowl in good meaſure, and amongſt others (as ſome ſay) the beſt Carps in Europe.

But the main improvement of this State is by the induſtry of the people, and the convenient ſituation of the City it ſelf: the City being ſituated very well for the Trade of Merchandiſe, in regard it is the ordinary paſſage, for tranſporting Commodities out of Germany, to the Marts at Lyons; and from thence back again to Germany, Switzerland, and ſome parts of Italy. And for the induſtry of the people, it is diſcernable in that great ſtore of Armour, and Apparel, and other Neceſſaries, brought from hence yearly by thoſe of Bern; and their Manufactures in Sattin, Velvet, Taffatee, and ſome quantities of Cloth, (fine, but not durable) tranſported hence yearly into other places.

The Soveraignty of this City was anciently in the Earls hereof, at firſt Imperial Officers only, but at laſt the hereditary Princes of it. Betwixt theſe and the Biſhops (Suffragans to the Metropolitan of Vienna in Dauphine) grew many quarrels for the abſolute command thereof. In fine, the Biſhops did obtain of the Emperor Frederick the Firſt, that they and their Succeſſors ſhould be ſole Princes of Geneva; free from all Taxes, and not accomptable to any but the Emperour. Which notwithſtanding, the Earls continuing ſtill to moleſt the Biſhops, they were fain to call unto their aid the Earl of Savoy; who took upon him firſt as Protector only, but after by degrees as the Lord in Chief. For when the rights of the Earls of Geneva, by the Marriage of Thomas Earl of Savoy, with Beatrix a Daughter of this Earl's, fell into that houſe; then Ame or Amadee the ſixth of that name, obtained of the Emperour Charles the Fourth, to be Vicar-general of the Emperor in his own Country, and in that right ſuperior to the Biſhop in all Temporal matters: and Ame or Amadee the firſt Duke, got from Pope Martin (to the great prejudice of the Biſhops) a grant of all the Temporal juriſdiction of it. After which time, the Biſhops were conſtrained to do homage to the Dukes of Savoy, and acknowledge them for their Soveraign Lords: the Authority of the Dukes being grown ſo great (notwithſtanding that the people were immediately ſubject to their Biſhop only) that the Money in Geneva was ſtamped with the Duke's name and figure: Capital Offenders were pardoned by him; no ſentence of Law executed till his Officers were firſt made acquainted; nor League contracted by the people of any validity, without his privity and allowance: and finally the Keys of the Town preſented to him as often as he pleaſed to lodge there; as once (for inſtance) to Duke Charles the third, coming thither with Beatrix his Wife, a Daughter of Portugal. And in this ſtate it ſtood till the year 1528, the Biſhop being all this while their immediate Lord, and having jus gladii & alias civilis juriſdictionis partes, as Calvin himſelf confeſſeth in an Epiſtle to Cardinal Sadolet. But in that year, Religion being then altered in the Canton of Bern, near adjoining to them, Viret and Farellus did endeavour it in Geneva alſo. But finding that the Biſhop and his Clergy did not like their doings, they ſcrewed themſelves into the people, and by their aid in a popular tumult compelled the Biſhop and his Clergy to abandon the Town. And though the Biſhop made them many fair overtures, out of an hope to be reſtored to his Eſtate; yet would they never hearken to him, nor admit of him any more being once thruſt out. Nor did they only in that tumult alter the Doctrine and Orders of of the Church before eſtabliſhed; but changed the government of the State alſo; diſclaiming all allegiance both to Duke and Biſhop, and ſtanding on their own Liberty, as a Free-Commonwealth. And though all this was done by Viret and Farellus, before Calvin's coming to that City, which was not till the year 1536, yet being come, ſuffragio meo comprobavi, as he ſaith himſelf, no man was forwarder than he to approve the Action.

But Calvin being come amongſt them, made their Divinity Reader, and one of the ordinary Preachers, he firſt negotiated with them to abjure the Papacy, and never more admit their Biſhop; to which he found a cheerful and unanimous conſent in all the people. Then finding that no Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline was in uſe among them, he dealt with them to admit of one of his own compoſing: which at laſt he obtained alſo, but with very great difficulty; and got it ratified by the Senate, July the 20. 1537. The next year after, the people weary of this yoak, and he and his Colleagues (Farellus, and Coraldus) as reſolute to hold them to it; they were all three baniſhed the Town in a Popular humor; and with like levity ſued to, to return again: to which he would by no means yield, except they would oblige themſelves by a ſolemn Oath, to admit of ſuch a Form of Diſcipline, as he with the advice of their other Miniſters, ſhould preſcribe unto them. This being condeſcended to by that fickle multitude, he returns in triumph to Geneva, September the thirteenth, 1541, and got his new Diſcipline eſtabliſhed on the twentieth of November following. The ſum of the Device was this; All Miniſters to be equal amongſt themſelves; two Lay-men to be ſuper-added unto every Miniſter; the Miniſter to continue for term of life; the Lay Elders to be annually choſen: theſe being met together to be called the Presbytery; and to have power of Ordination, Cenſures, Abſolution, and whatſoever elſe was acted by the Biſhop formerly. Hitherto is related to Geneva only, which being but one City, and a ſmall one too, was not capable of more than one Presbytery. The names and notions of Claſſical, Provincial, and National Aſſemblies, came not in till afterwards, as it got ground in Kingdoms, and larger Provinces. This Platform though of purpoſe framed to content the people; yet ſince the Lay-Officers were to be but annual, and after ſubject to the laſh like other Mortals; it gave but ſorry ſatisfaction unto wiſer men. And being built withal on a falſe foundation, was for a long time hardly able to ſtand alone, and fain at twelve years end to borrow a ſupport from Zurich, and others of the Proteſtant Cantons: whom Calvin earneſtly ſolicited to allow his project, againſt which one Perinus, and ſome principal Citizens, had begun to ſpurn. And ſo we have the true beginning of the Genevan Diſcipline; begotten in Rebellion, born in Sedition, and nurſed up by Faction.

Being born in the World by the means aforeſaid, ſome other helps it had to make it acceptable, and approved of, in other Churches. As firſt the great content it gave to the common people, to ſee themſelves entruſted with the weightieſt matters of Religion; and thereby an equality with, if not (by reaſon of their number, being two for one) a ſuperiority above their Miniſters: Next, the great reputation, which Calvin for his diligence in Writing and Preaching, had attained unto; made all his Dictates as authentick amongſt ſome Divines, as ever the Popes Ipſe dixit in the Church of Rome. Whereby it came to paſs, in a little time, that only thoſe Churches which imbraced the Doctrines and Diſcipline authorized by Calvin, were called the Reformed Churches: thoſe in high Germany, and elſewhere, which adhered to Luther, being generally called by no other names than the Lutherans, or the Luthern Churches; as not reformed enough from the dregs of Rome. Then comes in his endeavours to promote that Platform, in all other Churches, which he had calculated from the Meridian of Geneva only: commending it to Gaſper Olevianus, Miniſter of the Church of Triers, as appears by his Letters dated April the twelfth 1560, congratulating the reception of it in the Churches of Poland, as appeareth by others of his Letters. And for the laſt help, comes in Beza, who not content to recommend it as convenient, for the uſe of that Church (beyond which Calvin did not go) impoſed it as a matter neceſſary upon all the Churches: ſo neceſſary, ut ab ea recedere non magis liceat, quam ab ipſius Religionis placitis, that it was utterly as unlawful to recede from this, as for the moſt natural points of the Chriſtian Faith. So he, Epiſt. 83. By means whereof their followers in moſt of the Reformed Churches drove on ſo furiouſly, that rather than their Diſcipline ſhould not be admitted, and the Epiſcopal Government deſtroyed, in all the Churches of CHRIST, they were reſolved to depoſe Kings, ruin Kingdoms, and to ſubvert the fundamental Conſtitutions of all Civil States. And hereunto their own Ambition gave them ſpur enough, affecting the ſupremacy in their ſeveral Pariſhes; that they themſelves might Lord it over God's Inheritance, under pretence of ſetting CHRIST upon this Throne. Upon which love to the preheminence, they did not only prate againſt the Biſhops, with malitious words (as Diotrephes for the ſame reaſon did againſt the Apoſtles) but not therewith content, neither would they themſelves receive them, nor permit them that would, caſting them out of the Church, with reproach and infamy. Which proud ambition in the ordinary Parochial Miniſter, was cunningly fomented by ſome great perſons, and many Lay-Perſons in all places, who under-hand aimed at a further end: the one to raiſe themſelves great fortunes out of Biſhops Lands; the other to keep thoſe Tythes themſelves, to which by the Law they only were to nominate ſome deſerving Perſon. Such were the helps, by which this new device of Calvin was diſperſed and propagated.

But to return unto Geneva, though Calvin for his time did hold the Chair as a perpetual Moderator, and Beza too, until Danæus ſet him beſide the Cuſhon: yet after that, the power of the Presbytery was ſhrewdly leſſened in Geneva, and the good members ſo reſtrained in the exerciſe of it; that they have no power to convent any man before them, but by the authority of a Syndick or Civil Magiſtrate. And as for maintenance, they hold their Miniſters ſo ſtrictly to a ſorry pittance, as would be ſure to keep them from preſuming too much on their power in the Conſiſtory. Tythes of all ſorts were to be taken up for the uſe of the State, and laid up in the publick Treaſury; and ſtipends iſſued out to maintain the Miniſtry: but thoſe ſo mean, that Beza's ſtipend whilſt he lived, hardly amounted to eighty pounds per annum, the reſidue of the City Miniſters not to ſixty pound, thoſe of the Villages adjoyning, having hardly forty pounds, enough to keep them always poor, and miſerably obnoxious to the wealthier Citizens. And that they may not ſteal the Gooſe, and ſtick up a feather, the State doth uſe to make ſome poor allowance to the wives and daughters of their deceaſed Miniſters, if they die poor, or leave their children unprovided; or otherwiſe have deſerved well in the time of their lives. In reſpect hereof though the Miniſters are very ſtrict in forbidding Dancing, and have writ many Tracts againſt it; yet to give ſome content to the common people (who have not leiſure to attend it at other times) they allow all Man-like exerciſes on the Lords-day, as ſhooting in Pieces, Long-bows, Croſs-bows, and the like, and that too in the morning, both before and after the Sermon, ſo it be no impediment to them, from coming to the Church at the times appointed.

As for the Government of the State, it is directed principally by the Civil or Imperial Laws; the Judge whereof is called the Lieutenant-criminal; before whom all cauſes are tried, and from whom there lyeth no Appeal; unleſs it be unto the Council of two hundred, whom they call the Great Council, in which the ſupreme power of the State reſideth. Out of this Council of two hundred, there is choſen another leſſer Council of five and twenty, and out of them four principal Officers whom they call the Syndicks, who have the ſole managing of the Common-wealth; except it be in ſome great matter, as making Peace or War, offenſive or defenſive Leagues, hearing Appeals, and ſuch like general concernments: which the great Council of two hundred muſt determine of. They have a cuſtom ſuperadded to the Civil Law, that if any Malefactor from another place flye to them for refuge, they puniſh him after the cuſtom of the place in which the crime was committed. Otherwiſe their Town being on the borders of divers Princes, would never be free from Vagabonds. Examples hereof I will aſſign two: the firſt of certain Monks, who robbing their Convents of certain Plate, and hoping for their wicked prancks at home to be the welcomer hither, were at their firſt acquaintance advanced to the Gallows. The ſecond is of a Spaniſh Gentleman, who having fled his Country for clipping and counterfeiting the King's Gold; came to this Town, and had the like reward. And when for defence he alleadged, that he underſtood their City being free, gave admiſſion to all Offenders; True (ſaid they) but with an intent to puniſh them that offended: a diſtinction which the Spaniard never till then learned, but then it was too late.

As for their ordinary Revenue, it is proportionable to their Territory, if not above it, conceived to amount to 60000 pounds per annum; which they raiſe upon the demain of the Biſhop, and the Tythes of the Church, and on ſuch impoſitions as are laid upon fleſh and Merchandiſe. But they are able to raiſe greater ſums if there be occaſion, as appears plainly by the ſending of 45000 Crowns to King Henry the third, before they had been long ſetled in their own eſtates.

And as for Military Forces, they are able to impreſs two thouſand men, and have Arms of all ſorts for ſo many in the publick Magazines: as alſo twelve or fourteen pieces of Ordnance, with all manner of Ammunition appertaining to them; and on the Lake ſome Gallies in continual readineſs, againſt the dangers threatned them by the Dukes of Savoy. And for the greater ſafety of their Eſtate, and the preſervation of their Religion, they joyned themſelves in a conſtant and perpetual League with the Canton of Bern, Anno 1582, communicating to each other the Freedom of their ſeveral Cities; and by that means, are reckoned for a member of the Common-wealth of the Switzers, which is no ſmall ſecurity to their affairs. But their chief ſtrength, as I conceive, is, that neighbouring Princes are not willing to have it fall into the hands of that Duke; or any other Potentate of more ſtrength than he. Inſomuch that when that Duke beſieged it, Anno 1589, they were aided from Venice with four and twenty thouſand, and from England, with thirteen thouſand Crowns, from Florence with Intelligence of the Enemies purpoſes. Another time, when the Pope, the French King, the Spaniard, and Savoyard had deſigns upon it; the Emperor offered them aſſiſtance both of Men and Money: yea and ſometimes the Dukes of Savoy have aſſiſted them againſt the others, as being more deſirous that the Town ſhould remain as it doth, than fall into any other hands than his own. So ordinary a thing it is for ſuch petit States, to be more ſafe by the intereſs of their jealous neighbours, than any forces of their own.

The Arms of Geneva, when under the command of the Earls thereof, were Or, a Croſs Azure. But for the title of Geneva after it had been born a while by the Earls of Savoy, it was given to Philip youngeſt ſon of Ame or Amadee the firſt Duke, to Janus the third ſon of Lewis the ſecond Duke; and finally to Philip Duke of Nemours, the fourth ſon of Philip the ſeventh Duke of Savoy, in whoſe poſterity (Dukes of Nemours) it doth ſtill continue.

4. WALLISLAND.

EAſtward from Savoy, in a long and deep bottom of the Alpes Pœninæ, lyeth the Country of WALLISLAND: ſo called either quaſi Wallenſland, or the land of the Valenſes, once the inhabitants of the Country about Martinacht, a chief town hereof; or quaſi Vallies-land, or the Land of Vallies, of which it totally conſiſts. It reacheth from the Mountain de Furken, to the Town of St. Maurice, where again the hills do cloſe, and ſhut up the valley; which is ſo narrow in that place, that a Bridge laid from one hill to another (under which the River Rhoſne doth paſs) is capable of on more than one Arch only, and that defended with a Caſtle and two ſtrong Gates. On other parts it is environed with a continual wall of ſteep and horrid Mountains, covered all the year long with a cruſt of Ice; not paſſable at all by Armies, and not without much difficulty by ſingle paſſengers: ſo that having but that one entrance to it, which before we ſpake of, no Citadel can be made ſo ſtrong by Art, as this whole Country is by Nature. But in the bottom of thoſe craggy and impaſſable Rocks, lies a pleaſant Valley, fruitful in Saffron, Corn, Wine, and moſt delicate fruits; and happily enriched with Meadows, and moſt excellent Paſtures, which yield a notable increaſe of Cheeſe and Butter: And in the Country about Sion they diſcovered in Anno 1544 a Fountain of Salt: and have alſo many hot Baths, and medicinal waters very wholſom. Of Springs, and River-water, they are very deſtitute; having ſcarce any but what they fetch from the Rhoſne, with a great deal both of charge and trouble (the common people uſing ſnow-water for the moſt part for domeſtick uſes): which made one pleaſantly obſerve, that they pay dearer for their Water, than they do for their Wine. Cattel they have ſufficient to ſerve their turn, and amongſt others, a wild Buck, equal to a Stag in bigneſs, footed like a Goat, and horned like a fallow Deer, leaping with wonderful agility from one precipice to another, and ſo not eaſily caught but in Summer time, for then the heat of that ſeaſon makes him blind.

It is divided into the Upper and the Lower Walliſland: the Upper lying towards the Mountain di Furken, in the very bottom of the Valley; and the Lower ſtretching out to the Town of St. Maurice, which is at the opening of the ſame: the length of both ſaid to be five ordinary days journey, but the breadth not anſwerable. The Upper Walliſland containeth the ſeven Reſorts, of 1. Sion, or Sedune, 2. Leuck, 3. Brig, 4. Nies, 5. Rawwren, 6. Sider, 7. Gombes, in which are reckoned thirty Pariſhes: the Lower comprehending the ſix Reſorts of 1. Gurdis, 2. Ardoa, 3. Sallien, 4. Martinacht, 5. Juremont, and 6. St. Maurice: in which are 24 Pariſhes. The people in both parts ſaid to be courteous towards ſtrangers, but very rough and churliſh towards one another.

The ſeveral Reſorts before mentioned, are named according to the names of their principal Towns: which according to their reckoning are thirteen in number. The chief of which are 1 Sedunum, Sittim, or Sion, a Biſhops See, ſuffragan to the Metropolitan of Tarentuniſe; the chief of all this little Country: of no great beauty in it ſelf, but neat and gallant in reſpect of the Towns about it. Situate in a Plain on the River of Rhoſne, under a Mountain of two tops; on the one of which being the lower, is ſeated the Cathedral Church, and the Canon's houſes; and on the other, looking downwards with a dreadful precipice, a very ſtrong Caſtle, the dwelling place of the Biſhop in the heat of Summer: which being built upon an hill of ſo great an height, and ſo hazardous an aſcent, is impoſſible almoſt to be took by force; the ſharpneſs of the Rocks keeping it from the danger of aſſaults, and the highneſs of the hill from the reach of the Gun-ſhot. 2 Marchinacht, by Cæſar called Octodurus, and Civitas Valenſium by Antonius, remarkable for its antiquity only. 3 St. Maurice, or St. Morits, antiently Auganum, the Key of the whole Country; but in Winter eſpecially, when all the other paſſages are frozen up, that there is no other entrance but by the Bridge at this Town, which for that cauſe is very well manned and fortified to avoid ſurpriſal; and therefore alſo choſen for the ſeat of the Governour of the Lower Walliſland.

This Country now called Walliſland, is in moſt Latin Writers called by the name of Valeſia, but corruptly, as I think, for Valenſia, as the Dutch or Engliſh name for Wallenſland: which name I ſhould conceive it took from the Valenſes, the old inhabitants of this Vally, of whom Octodurus (now called Marchinacht) is by Antonius made to be the Metropolis, or principal City. It was made ſubject to the Romans by Julius Cæſar, at ſuch time as the Helvetians were conquered by him: and falling with the Weſtern parts of the Roman Empire unto Charles the Great, was by him given to Theodulus Biſhop of Sion, Anno 805. Under his ſucceſſors they continue to this very day; but ſo, as that the Deputies of the ſeven Reſorts have not only voices with the Canons in his Election, but being choſen and inveſted unto the place, they join with him alſo in the Diets for chooſing Magiſtrates, redreſſing grievances, and determining matters of the State. The Lower Walliſland obeyeth the upper, made ſubject by long War, and the chance of Victory, and hath no ſway in the publick Government, but takes for Law that which their Governours agree of. The ſame Religion is in both, being that of Rome. For maintenance whereof they combined themſelves with the ſeven Popiſh Cantons of Switzerland, Anno 1572, or thereabouts: as alſo for their mutual defence and preſervation againſt Foreign Enemies, and keeping amity and concord amongſt one another.

5. SWITZERLAND.

NEXT unto Walliſland lyeth the Country of the SWITZERS, having on the Eaſt, the Griſons, and ſome part of the Tirol, in Germany; on the Weſt, the Mountain Jour, and the Lake of Geneva, which parts it from Savoy, and Burgundy, on the North, Suevia, or Schwaben, another Province alſo of the upper Germany; and on the South, Walliſland and the Alpes, which border on the Dukedom of Millain.

The whole Country heretofore divided into three parts only, that is to ſay, 1 Argow, ſo called from the River Aaz, whoſe chief Town was Lucern: 2 Wiſliſpurgergow, ſo called from Wiſliſpurg an old Town thereof, the chief City whereof is Bern: And 3 Zurichgow, ſo named from Zurich, both formerly and at this preſent the Town of moſt note in all this Tract; but ſince the falling of theſe Countries from the houſe of Auſtria, divided into many Cantons, and other members, of which more anon.

It is wholly in a manner over-grown with craggy Mountains, but ſuch as for the moſt part have graſſie tops, and in their bottoms afford rich Meadows, and nouriſhing paſtures, which breed them a great ſtock of Cattel, their greateſt wealth. And in ſome places yields plenty of very good Wines, and a fair increaſe of Corn alſo, if care and induſtry be not wanting on the Huſband-mans part, but neither in ſo great abundance, as to ſerve all neceſſary uſes, which want they do ſupply from their neigbouring Countries. And though it ſtand upon as high ground as any in Chriſtendom, yet is no place more ſtored with Rivers, and capacious Lakes; which do not only yield them great abundance of Fiſh, but ſerve the people very well in the way of Traffick, to diſperſe their ſeveral Commodities from one Canton to another. Of which the principal are, Bodenſee, and the Lake of Cell, made by the Rhene; Genſer-ſee, or the Lake of Geneva, by the Rhoſne; Wallſtet-ſee, and the Lake of Lucern, made by the Ruſſe; Namonburger and Bieter-ſees, by the Orbe; and Zurich-ſee, by the River of Limat, or Limachus.

It is in length two hundred and forty miles, an hundred and eighty in breadth; conceived to be the higheſt Country in Europe (as before is ſaid) the River which do iſſue from it running through all quarters of the ſame; as Rhene, through France and Belgium, North; Po, through Italy to the South; Rhodanus, through part of France, to the Weſtern Ocean; and the Inn, which falling into the Danubius paſſeth through Germany, and Hungary, into Pontus Euxinus.

And as the Country is, ſuch are the Inhabitants, of rude and rugged diſpoſitions, more fit for Arms than any civil occupations, capable of toyl and labour, which the neceſſities of their Country do inure them to, not able otherwiſe to afford them an hungry livelihood: the poverty whereof makes them ſeek for ſervice, which they ſhift and change according as they like the conditions of their entertainment; and having no way to vent their ſuperfluous numbers by Navigation, are able to ſpare greater multitudes to a Foreign War, than a man would eaſily imagine. In a word, the people are naturally honeſt, frugal and induſtrious, impartial in the adminiſtration of Juſtice, and great lovers of liberty.

In matters of War, they were once of ſuch a reputation, on the defeats given by them to Charles of Burgundy, that no Prince thought himſelf able to take the Field, or ſtand his own ground in defence of his Dominions if he had not Switzers in his Army: And to advance their reputation, the Wars which followed in Italy about the Dutchy of Millain, ſerved exceeding fitly. For being borderers on that Country, they could be hired better cheap by the French, or Spaniards, than any Army could be brought out of France, or Spain. And having had ſome good ſucceſſes to increaſe their fame, they grew ſo terrible at laſt; that the Spaniards in the War of Guien were more afraid of one band of Swiſſe, than of all the reſt of the French Army. But being found withal to be falſe and treacherous, and eaſily bought off by the better purſe (which they moſt evidently diſcovered in betraying Duke Lodowick Sforza, who had put himſelf and his eſtate into their hands); and thoſe Italian Wars growing unto an end, they did decay ſo faſt in their reputation, that firſt the neighbouring Princes could do well without them; and at laſt uſed them not at all, or at leaſt very ſparingly. And now it is their honour that they are choſen of the Guard to the French King, and the Popes of Rome, and the Dukes of Genoa; and that the greateſt Princes of Europe give them yearly penſions. Which penſions were given heretofore to be aſſured of their aid upon all occaſions, but now to keep them from engaging on the other ſide.

For matter of Religion it is proportionably mixt; ſome of the Cantons being wholly Popiſh, ſome wholly Proteſtant; in others, both Religions uſed promiſcuouſly. At firſt the differences were ſo eagerly purſued on both ſides, that notwithſtanding the mediation of ſome potent Neighbours, it broke out into a Civil War; the Cantons of Switz, Vren, Vnderwald, Lucern, and Zug, (which the Latin Writers of this ſtory call the Quinquepagici) arming againſt Vrich, Bern, and others which adhered to Zuinglius. In the beginning of which War, the Proteſtant party was diſcomfited, Zuinglius himſelf ſlain in the head of the Battel, and his body burnt: his heart remaining in the midſt of the fire, whole and untouched as Archbiſhop Cranmer's alſo did) when all the reſt of his body was conſumed to aſhes. But thoſe of the Reformed party would not ſo give over. Another field they fought for it, and therein had the better of the adverſe party. Wearied at laſt with reciprocal defeats, they agreed the buſineſs, indulging each to other the free exerciſe of their own Religions. So it continueth at this day, diverſity of opinions not drawing them from a due care of the publick intereſs, nor giving any interruption to that bond of peace which was ſo firmly knit amongſt them in their firſt Confederacy.

Now for the body of their State, it conſiſts of three diſtinct parts, or members, which are to be conſidered in this diſcourſe, viz. the Swiſſe themſelves, the Præfectures which are ſubject to them, and the States that are confederates with them. The Swiſſe are ſubdivided into thirteen Cantons, that is to ſay, Switz, Vren, Vnderwald, Lucern, Zug, Bern, Zurich, Baſil, Friburg, Soloturn, Apenzel, Glaris and Schaffhauſen. Theſe properly make the body of that Common-wealth, enjoying many rights, priviledges and preheminences which the others do not; as power to determine of War and Peace, to diſpoſe of the Præfectures, and divide amongſt themſelves the ſpoil of the enemy. The firſt confederacy was made betwixt the Cantons of Switz, and Vnderwald, Anno 1315. Of which the Switz being the moſt potent, the moſt exaſperated, and that which did moſt hotly proſecute the combination, gave to the reſt the name of Switzers, firſt made for ten years only, in defence of themſelves againſt the violences of Albert the firſt, Emperor and Duke of Auſtria; intending to alienate them from the Empire, and add them by ſtrong hand to his own Eſtates, Anno 1309. but made perpetual after their great victory obtained againſt Duke Leopold ſon of Albert, in the fields of Mortgarten, of which more anon. Lucern was added to the three, Anno 1332. Zug, Zurich, and Glaris, came not into the confederacy till the year 1352; nor Bern until the year next after. Friburg and Soloturn came in Anno 1481. Baſil and Schaffhauſen united with them in the year 1501. And Apenzel, which was the laſt which was admitted into their confederacy, Anno 1513. So that there paſſed within little of two hundred years, from the firſt beginning of theſe Leagues, to the finiſhing of them.

The ſecond Member of this body, are the Towns and States, Confederates with them, for the preſervation of their common Liberties, viz. the Town and Abbot of Saint Gall, the Towns of Rotwel, Mulhauſen, Nuenberg, and Biel, ſituated on the Lake thence named: (of which the firſt belonged heretofore to the Earls of Longeville in France, the latter to the Biſhops of Baſil) with the City and Signeury of Geneva: And of theſe, Rotwel and Mulhauſen are confederate with all the Cantons; the reſt, with ſome particulars only. The Abbot of St. Gall firſt entered into League with Zurich, Lucern, Switz, and Glaris, for the preſervation of his Lands and Towns then revolting from him: and the Town following his example, confederated with Zurich, Bern, Switz, Lucern, Zug, Glaris, the better to preſerve themſelves from the power of their Abbot, who was before their natural and immediate Lord. This was in Anno 1452. Rotwel, and Mulhauſen, two Imperial Towns in the Province of Schawben, confederated in a perpetual League with all the Cantons, the firſt, Anno 1515, the other, 1519, Newenberg, Biel, and Geneva, with Bern only.

As for the Præfectures of the Switzers, they are ſuch leſſer parcels and additaments, as have accrewed to their Eſtate, and are ſubject unto their authority; either by gift, purchaſe, or the chance of War: ſome lying in Switzerland it ſelf, ſome amongſt other parts of the Alpes, and ſome in Italy. Theſe are the Towns and Countries of Baden, Brengarten, Millingen, Rappenſwyll, Wagenthall, interpoſed here and there amongſt the Switzers: the Town and Country of Sargans, lying amongſt the Rhætian Alpes, not far from the Griſons; and Rhineck, lying in a valley of the Alpes, on the left ſhore of the Rhene, near the Lake of Conſtans; and finally the vallies of Locarno, Magia, and Lugano, Mendriſio, and Belinzano, ſituate in and amongſt the Alpes, near the Dukedom of Millain, to which they formerly belonged. Of which the Præfectures of Badin, and Mellingen appertain to the eight firſt Cantons: Wagemhall, the Sargans, and Rhineck to the ſeven firſt Cantons; Rappenſwyll to Vren, Switz, Vnderwald, and Glaris; and Thurgow, unto the ten firſt Cantons: Belinzano to the three firſt only; and all the reſt of the Italian Præfectures to the Cantons generally, excepting Apenzel, which was not entred into the confederacy when theſe Præfectures were given unto the Switzers, by Maximilian Sforza Duke of Millain; which was in Anno 1513. ſome months before the taking in of Apenzel to the reſt of the Cantons.

Such is the number of the Cantons, Præfectures, and States-confederate, amongſt all which there are few Towns or Cities of any note: there being no City nor walled Town in the Cantons of Switz, Vren, Vnderwalden, Glaris, Apenzel, nor in any of the States confederate ſituate amongſt the Switzers, but St. Gall only; nor in any of the Præfectures but that of Baden. So that the places worthy of conſideration are not like to be many. Of thoſe that are, the principal are, 1 Zurich, a large City, and a renowned Univerſity, ſituate on both ſides of the River Liman, where it iſſueth out of the Lake called Zurich-See. It had antiently two Monaſteries in it, in one of which Huldericus Zuinglius was a Canon, ſlain near this Town in the Battel ſpoken of before, Anno 1531, now giving name to the moſt honourable of the Cantons, to which belongeth the authority of ſummoning the general Diets as of thoſe alſo of the Proteſtants; the Legats thereof preſiding in both aſſemblies. 2 Friburg, ſituate on the River Sana, on the declivity of an uneven and rocky hill, founded by Bertold the fourth Duke of Zeringen. 3 Solothurn, (the Solothurum of Antoninus) on the River Aar, famous for the Martyrdom of S. Vrſus, and his 66 Theban Souldiers, in the time of the Emperor Diocleſian. A Town of great Antiquity, but not ſo old by far as the people make it: who would have it to be built in the time of Abraham. 4 Baſil, ſo called either of a Baſiliſk ſlain at the building of the City; or of the German word Paſel, ſignifying a path; or of Βασίλεια, ſignifying Kingly. It was built Anno 382, and is famous for an Univerſity founded by Pius the ſecond, Anno 1459. It was made a Canton, Anno 1501; and is honoured with the Sepulchres of Oecolampadius, Eraſmus, Pontanus, Glarienus, and Hottoman the famous Civilian. In this City, Anno 1431, was held that notable Council, wherein though the Papal authority was then at the height, it was declared that a general Council was above the Pope. What was then enacted, was immediately put in practice; the Council depoſing Pope Eugenius the fourth, and placing in his room Amadeus Duke of Savoy, afterward called Felix the fourth; who having held the See nine years in a time of Schiſm did willingly in order to the peace of Chriſtendom, reſign the Popedom to Nicholas the fifth, who had before been choſen by the oppoſite Faction. The City is great, rich, and populous, ſometimes a Town Imperial, ſtill a Biſhops See: the Biſhop being ſubject to the Archbiſhop of Beſanſon, in the County of Burgundy: ſeated upon the River Rhene (where it receiveth Weis and Byrſa, two leſſer Brooks) by which it is divided into the greater Baſil lying towards France, and the leſſer lying towards Germany. 5 Lucern, ſituate on both ſides of the Ruſſe, where it iſſueth out of the Lake of Lucern; ſo called from Lucern, i. e. the Lanthern, which was placed here on an high Tower, to give light to Water-men in the night. A City well traded and frequented by ſtrangers, becauſe the ordinary road from Germany into Italy, paſſing from hence through the Country of the Griſons; and in regard that the Diets for the Popiſh Cantons, which heretofore were held at Vren, are removed hither. Not far from this Town is the Mountain called Pilates hill, of Pontius Pilate, whoſe ghoſt (as the common people are made to believe) doth walk once a year on the banks of this Lake in his Judges Robes. And to be ſure the fiction ſhall not be confuted, they add, that whoſoever ſeeth him ſhall die that year. 6 Bern, compaſſed almoſt round with the River Aar, and taking up the whole extent of a little Mountain; the houſes of free-ſtone, neatly and uniformly built. A Town which gives name to the largeſt and moſt potent of all the Cantons; one of the firſt which did embrace the Reformation, and the firſt of all which purged it ſelf of Images, thoſe excellent Inſtruments of Superſtitition and Idolatry; defaced here in a popular tumult, Anno 1548. 7 Lauſanna in the Canton of Bern, a Biſhops See, Suffragan to the Archbiſhop of Beſanſon; ſeated on the banks of the Lake of Lemane, and compaſſed with mountains always covered with Snow, which open themſelves on the Eaſt ſide only, which is towards Italy. 8 Schaffhauſen, the only Town of all the Cantons, which lyeth on the other ſide of the Rhene; of right belonging unto Suevia, or Schawben, a Province of Germany, and reckoned as a part thereof, before it was incorporated into this Confederacy.

Next for the Præfectures, and Confederate States; they have not many Towns of note (excepting Rotwel, and Mulhauſen, two Imperial Cities, which properly belong to another place.) Of thoſe which be, the principal amongſt the Confederates, lying within the bounds of this Country, is the Town of Saint-Gall, (Sengall as they corruptly call it) an Imperial City, ſituate amongſt the Mountains near the Boden See. A rich, populous, and well-governed Town, taking name from the Monaſtery of S. Gall, a famous Scot, and the Apoſtle of thoſe parts, Anno 630, or thereabouts; the Abbot of which having great poſſeſſions in this tract (before Apenzel, and this Town revolted from him) was a Prince of the Empire. The Anabaptiſts were once very prevalent here, in ſo much that one of them cut off his brothers head in the preſence of his Father and Mother, and ſaid (according to the humour of that ſect, who boaſt much of dreams, viſions, and Enthuſiaſms) that God commanded him ſo to do. The principal amongſt the Præfectures is the Town of Baden, or (to difference it from Baden a Marquiſate in Germany) the Upper Baden: ſeated on a little Mountain near the River Limat, almoſt in the middle of the Country: and for that cauſe the place of meeting for the Council of Eſtate of all the Confederates. It taketh name from the Baths here being, two of which only are publick, the reſt in private houſes: conſcious, as it is thought, to much laſciviouſneſs. For whereas it is ſaid of Adrian, that Lavacra pro ſexibus ſeparavit; here men and women promiſcuouſly bathe together; and which is worſt, in private: where as Munſter telleth us, Cernunt viri uxores tractari, cernunt cum alienis loqui, & quidem ſolam cum ſolo; and yet are not any of them diſturbed with jealouſie. The Baths are much frequented, yet not ſo much for health as pleaſure. Their chiefeſt vertue is the quickning power they have upon barren women. But as the Friers uſe to ſend men whoſe wives are fruitleſs, in pilgrimage to Saint Joyce, the Patroneſs of fruitfulneſs; and in the mean time to lie with their Wives: ſo it may be with good reaſon thought, that in a place of ſuch Liberty as this is, the luſty young Gallants that haunt this place, produce greater operation of barren women, than the waters of the Bath it ſelf. No other Town of eminent note amongſt the Præfectures of the Swiſſes, except Rhineck it ſelf, the ſeat of the Governour for the Switzers, ſituate near the Lake of Conſtance: and none of any note at all amongſt the Italian Præfectures, except Belinzana, and Locarno, neither of them containing four hundred Houſes, and thoſe none of the handſomeſt.

Within the limits of this Country, and in that part thereof which was called Argow, containing the now Cantons of Vren, Switz, Underwald, Glarona, and Lucern; with ſome of the adjoining parts of Germany, and ſome part of the Dukedom of Savoy; did ſometimes ſtand the famous and renowned Caſtle of HABSPURG: from the Lords whereof the houſe of Auſtria, and moſt of the Kings and Princes of the Chriſtian World do derive themſelves. Firſt founded, as ſome ſay, by Ottopert the third Prince of this line, at or before the year 700; as others ſay, by Rapato the ſon of Betzeline, about the year 1020. Situate on the River Aar (by the Latins called Arula) near a Town called Bruck; now ſo decayed, that there is no tracing of the ruins. Preſerved in memory by the Lords and Princes of it, deſcended in a direct line from Sigebert the eldeſt ſon of Theodebert King of Mets, or Auſtraſia; firſt ſettled in theſe parts by Clotaire the ſecond, King of the French, with the title as ſome ſay, of Duke of Upper Almain (the Lower Almain being that which is now called Suevia or Schawben, an adjoining Province of Germany). Being ſoon weary of that empty, but invidious title, they were ſometimes called Earls of Habſpurg, by the name of this Caſtle; ſometimes Earls of Altemburg, another Caſtle not far off, of their own foundation. And after, cloſing in with the Kings of Burgundy Transjurane, and the German Emperors, they received of them a great part of the Country of Argow; from which ſome of them were called Earls of Argow. Not known diſtinctly by the title of Earls of Habſpurg, till the time of Rapato above-mentioned; when thoſe of Altemburg and Argow became diſcontinued. Howſoever we will here lay down the whole ſucceſſion of this famous family, either Earls, or the Progenitors of

The Earls of Habſpurg.

A. Ch.

635 1 Sigibert, ſon of Theodobert King of Metz, by Clotaire the ſecond of that name, French King, diſpoſſeſſed of the Kingdom of his Father, and afterwards by him indowed with a great part of thoſe Countries, which are now called Switzerland, with the title of Duke of Vpper Almain.

2 Sigibert II. ſon of Sigibert the firſt, Duke of Vpper Almain.

3 Ottopert, or Otbert, the ſon of Sigibert the ſecond, the founder, as ſome ſay, of the Caſtle of Altemburg and Habſpurg, of which promiſcuouſly called Earl.

4 Bebo, the ſon of Ottopert, the laſt Duke of Vpper Almain; which title he exchanged for that of Earl of Altemburg, and Habſpurg.

5 Robert, or Rother, as ſome call him, the ſon of Bebo, Earl of Altemburg.

766 6 Hertopert, the ſon of Robert, who added unto his Eſtate that part of Schwaben, or Suevia, which is called Briſgow.

8 Guntram, the ſon of Rampert, Earl of Altemburg.

9 Luithard, the ſon of Guntram.

909 10 Luitfride, the ſon of Luithard.

929 11 Hunifride, the ſon of Luitfride, who added unto his Eſtates the Territory now called Sungow, bordering on Alſatia, a Province of Germany; recovered after his deceaſe by the Dukes of Schwaben.

950 12 Guntram II. ſon of Hunifride, the firſt who took unto himſelf the title of Earl of Argow: from whoſe ſecond ſon named Berthilo, deſcended the Dukes or Earls of Zeringen, poſſeſſed of almoſt all Briſgow, and a good part of Switzerland, which they inherited from Berthold, the ſon of Gebiro the third ſon of Guntram; Who having founded the Caſtle of Zeringen, and acquired great poſſeſſions in adjoining parts of Schwaben, left them at his deceaſe (being childleſs) to Berthold the ſon of Berthilo, and his Couſen German.

13 Betzo, or Betzeline, the eldeſt ſon of Guntram the ſecond, Earl of Argow.

14 Rapato, ſon of Betzeline, the founder or repairer of the Caſtle of Habſpurg, from whence both he and his ſucceſſors were conſtantly called Earls of Habſpurg. Great Grand-father by Theodorick his youngeſt ſon, of Rodolph Earl of Rhinefelden, and Duke of Schwaben, elected Emperor (at the inſtigation of the Pope) againſt Henry the fourth.

15 Warner, by ſome called Berenger, or Berengarius, the ſon of Rapato.

1096 16 Otho, the ſon of Warner or Berenger.

1108 17 Warner II. ſon of Otho, enriched by the Emperor Henry the fourth, with ſome fair Eſtates belonging to the Dukes of Schwaben.

18 Albert, the ſon of Warner the ſecond, ſurnamed the Rich.

19 Albert II. ſurnamed the Wiſe, ſon of Albert the firſt, added to his Eſtates a great part of the Vpper Alſatia; which he had by the right of Heduigis his wife, one of the daughters and heir of Simon the laſt Earl thereof.

1238 20 Rodolph, the fortunate ſon of Albert the ſecond, added to his Eſtate the reſt of the Vpper Elſate, elected Emperor of the Romans, Anno 1273. Of which he made ſo good advantage, that he added unto his Eſtates the great Dukedom of Auſtria, with all the incorporate Provinces thereunto belonging, and laid the firſt foundation of the Auſtrian greatneſs; of which more in Germany. Here only note, that beſides the following Princes of the Houſe of Auſtria, thoſe of the line Collateral ſtill retained the title of Earls of Habſpurg (according to the ill cuſtom of Germany) increaſed with the addition of the Earldom of Kyburg, of which more hereafter: and ſo continued till the expiring of that line in the perſon of Rodolph the fourth, the laſt that bare the title of Earl of Habſpurg, Anno 1356, by whoſe death many fair Eſtates were added to the Auſtrian Family.

Having on the occaſion of theſe Earls of Habſpurg, beheld ſo much of the affairs of this Country, as related unto that puiſſant and illuſtrious family, let us go forward to the reſt: firſt taking in our way the ancient Eſtate hereof, in the time of the Romans. At what time this whole mountainous tract, containing many ſeveral Nations (ſome of them ſpoken of before) was comprehended under the general name and notion of the Helvetii; the greateſt and moſt populous of all the reſt: ſo called, as Verſtegan will have it, Quaſi Hil-vites, or the Vites of the Mountains, to difference them from the Vites of the lower parts, inhabiting in that part of Cimbrick Cherſonneſe, which is now called Juitland; and from thoſe dwelling in the middle, betwixt both extremes in the little Province ſtill called Voitland. Grown by long peace, and want of opportunity by traffick into foreign parts, to ſo great a multitude, that the Country barren of it ſelf, was no longer able to maintain them; they ſet fire on their Towns and Houſes, and with a general reſolution went to ſeek new dwellings. The total number of men, women, and children, which went upon this deſperate action, are ſaid to have amounted to the number of 3680000, whereof 900000 were fighting men. They had not long before overthrown L. Caſſius a Roman Conſul, ſlain the Conſul himſelf, and ſold his Souldiers for Bond-ſlaves: upon the apprehenſion of which good ſucceſs, they thought no body able to withſtand them. But they found Cæſar of a ſtronger metal than L. Caſſius. Who having ſtopped their paſſage by hewing down the Bridge of Geneva, till he was grown ſtrong enough to bid them battel; ſo waſted them in ſeveral ſkirmiſhes and defeats, that they were forced to crave leave of him to go home again, and to rebuild thoſe Towns and Villages which they had deſtroyed before this enterpriſe: which he upon delivery of Hoſtages, did vouchſafe to grant. It is conceived, that at the leaſt two Millions of them periſhed in this journy, and not ſo much by the Sword (though that ſpared them not) as for want of neceſſaries. After this they continued Members of the Roman Empire, till conquered in the times of Honorius and Valentinian the third, by the Burgundians and Almans, betwixt whom divided; the River Ruſs parting their dominions. From them being taken by the French, it was made a part of the Kingdom of Burgundy; ſome parts firſt taken out, and given to the Progenitors of the Earls of Habſpurg, as before was noted. Given with the reſt of that Kingdom to the Emperor Conrade the ſecond, by Rodolph the laſt King thereof: parcelled out by the German Emperours (as their cuſtom was) into divers States; moſt of the which were drawn in by the Dukes of Schwaben, the Earls of Habſpurg, Kyburg, Werdenburg, &c. and the Dukes of Zeringen; as afterwards in the fall of the one, and as heirs to many of the other, by the Dukes of Auſtria. By means of which united titles the Auſtrian family was poſſeſſed of ſo much of this Country, as now makes up five Cantons, and as many of the principal Præfectures; that is to ſay, the Cantons of Zug, Glarona, Lucern, Friburg, and Schaffehauſen, the Præfectures of Baden, Brengarten, Mellingen, Wagenthall, Roperſwyll; together with a great part of the Country of Targow, wherin ſtands the City of St. Gall, now a Confederate with the Switzers; ſome of the reſt, as Vren, Switz, Vnderwalden, being brought under by the power of the Emperor Albert, the ſon of Rodolph of Habſpurg, who had a purpoſe to unite them to the houſe of Auſtria; becauſe obnoxious alſo to the power of thoſe Princes. But the people being at laſt over-burthened by the tyranny of thoſe Governors, whom the Dukes of Auſtria and their other Lords had ſent among them; ſeeing withal the Empire by the Pope's Fulminations diſtracted into many Factions, and the Auſtrian Family weakned by a ſub-diviſion of that great Eſtate into many parcels; they contracted an Offenſive and Defenſive League amongſt themſelves, for defence of their Liberty: into which firſt entred thoſe of Switz, Vren, and Vnderwalden, Anno 1385. Not all united into one Confederation till the year 1513, as before was noted. At their firſt beginning to take Arms, Frederick, one of the many Dukes of Auſtria (to whoſe ſhare they fell) ſent his Brother Leopold againſt them with a puiſſant Army which they encountred near Mortgarten a Village of the now Canton of Vnderwalden, and there overthrew him: but more by the convenience of thoſe narrow paſſages, through which his Army was to march, than by any valour. In which it was no ſmall help to them, that the ways were all ſo filled with Ice, that he was able to do no ſervice with his Horſe, and his Souldiers ſo amazed at the preſent difficulties, that the Confederates only caſting ſtones on them from the tops of the Mountains, made them leap into the Lakes adjoyning. This hapned in the year 1315. Grown confident by this ſucceſs, they brought the new Canton of Lucern into their confederacy by the force of Arms, Anno 1332, and that of Zurich by their reputation and like hope of Liberty, Anno 1351, in which year thoſe of Zug, and Glaris invaded by the former five and willing to diſcharge themſelves of their Lordly Maſters, were united to them, as was the new Canton of Bern in the year next following. In the year 1381, the Towns of Solothurm and Friburg, deſcended from the houſe of Zeringen, (at the expiration of that line) upon thoſe of Habſpurg, revolted from their natural Lords and admitted Cantons, occaſioned Leopold ſon of Albert the ſhort, and brother of Albert the fourth, Dukes of Auſtria, to make War upon them: in which War being vanquiſhed and ſlain near Sempach a Village of the Canton of Lucern, with the Flower of his Nobility and Gentry, Anno 1386, and the ſucceeding Dukes not venturing any more againſt them, the reſidue of the Cantons and Confederates were in time made up.

Having thus cleared themſelves of the Houſe of Auſtria, they continued free and unmoleſted, but never came to any reputation for their valour, till the War made upon them by Charles Duke of Burgundy, whom they diſcomfited in three great Battels, and ſlew him alſo in the third. A War commenced by him at the firſt on ſmall occaſions, and leſs hopes: the Country being ſo barren, and the people ſo poor; that their Ambaſſador to the Duke (as Comines reporteth) proteſted, that if all their Country-men were taken; they would not be able to pay a Ranſom, to the value of the Spurs and Bridle-bits in his Camp. Certainly at that time they were ſo poor, that they knew not what riches was. For having won the firſt Battel at Granſon (the other two were thoſe of Morat and Nancy) one of the goodlieſt Pavilions in the World was by them torn in pieces, and turned into Breeches and Side-coats: divers ſilver plates and diſhes they ſold for a French Sous (each Sous a little more than an Engliſh penny) ſuppoſing them to be but pewter; and a great Diamond of the Dukes, which was the goodlieſt Jewel in Chriſtendom, was ſold to a Prieſt for a Guilder; and by him again to ſome of the Lords of the Country for three Franks. After their valour ſhowed in theſe Battels, Lewis the eleventh took them into penſion, giving them yearly forty thouſand Crowns, viz. thenty thouſand to the Cantons, and twenty thouſand to particular perſons: and bowed ſo much beneath the Majeſty of the moſt Chriſtian King, as to tearm himſelf one of the Burgeſſes of their Corporation; and to contend with the Duke of Savoy, which of them ſhould be held for their firſt Allie. By theſe arts, and the nearneſs of their Forces for thoſe occaſions, he wreſted Burgundy out of the hands of Mary the daughter of Charles; and Lewis the twelfth won Millain from Ludowick Sforze, whom they perfidiouſly betrayed as was ſaid before. Upon the merit of theſe ſervices, they required an augmentation of their penſions: which when this Lewis the twelfth denyed, they withdrew themſelves from the Amity of the French, and entered into the ſervice of Pope Julio the ſecond; who therefore ſtiled them the Defenders of the Church, Anno 1510. The fruits of which entertainment was the defeat of the whole forces of King Lewis, and the loſs of Millain; into which Maximilian Sforze, the ſon of Ludowick, was ſolemnly re-inſtated by the Confederates: who to oblige the Switzers more firmly to him, gave them thoſe Towns and Vallies in the Alpes of Italy (formerly members of that Dukedom) which now belong unto the Switzers; reckoned amongſt the Præfectures of their Common-wealth. Francis the firſt in purſuance of his claim to Millain, gave them a great and memorable overthrow at the Battel of Marignan. Yet afterwards conſidering what damage his Realm had ſuſtained by the revolt of the Auxiliaries to his Enemies, he renewed the Confederation with them, on condition that he ſhould reſtore the antient penſion of forty thouſand Crowns; ſecondly, that he ſhould pay unto them at certain terms, ſix hundred thouſand Crowns; thirdly that he ſhould entertain four thouſand of them in his pay continually; fourthly, that for the reſtoring of ſuch places as they had taken from the Dutchy of Millain, he ſhould give unto them thirty thouſand Crowns: fifthly, that he ſhould give them three months pay beforehand: ſixtly and laſtly, that Maximilian Sforze, whom they had eſtated in Millain, and were now going to diſpoſſeſs, might by the King be created Duke of Nemores, endowed with twelve thouſand Franks of yearly revenue, and married to a daughter of the blood royal. On theſe conditions, as honorable to them as burthenſom to the King, was the League renewed, Anno 1522, ſince which time, they have obtained, that ſix hundred of their Country are to be of the French King's Guard; five hundred of which wait without at the gates of the Court, the other hundred in the great Hall. And yet the French Kings did not ſo ingroſs the Market, though they raiſed the price of the commodity, but that all other Princes might have them alſo for their Money: the Kings of Spain and others bidding fair for them, but never going ſo high as the French had done. At laſt, upon the differences which grew amongſt themſelves in point of Religion they grew to be divided alſo in point of Penſion: the Popiſh Cantons taking penſions of the Pope, and the King of Spain; the Proteſtants of the French; the mixt, of both; and all, of the Venetians. By which means being bribed and corrupted by all, they came in very little time to be truſted of none. Which ſudden ſinking of that fame and reputation which they had attained to, together with the reaſons of it; that notable Stateſman and Hiſtorian Guicciardine doth deſcribe as followeth: "The name (ſaith he) of this wild and uncivil Nation hath got great honour by their Concord, and glory by Arms. For being fierce by nature, inured to War, and exact keepers of Military diſcipline, they have not only defended their own Country, but have won much praiſe in foreign parts: which doubtleſs had been greater, if they had ſought to inlarge their own Empire, and not for wages to inlarge the Empire of others; and if nobly they had propounded unto themſelves any other ends, than the gain of money; by the love whereof being made abject, they have loſt the opportunity of becoming fearful to Italy. For ſince they never came out of their confines, but as mercenary men, they have had no publick fruit of their Victories: but by their covetouſneſs have become intolerable in their actions where they overcame, and in their demands with other men; yea at home froward and obſtinate in their concluſions, as well as in following their commands under whoſe pay they ſerve in War. Their chief men have penſions of ſeveral Princes to favour them in their publick meetings: and ſo private profit being preferred before the good of the publick, they are apt to be corrupted, and fall at diſcord amongſt themſelves, with great leſſening of their reputation which they had gotten amongſt ſtrangers. So he, relating the occurances of the year 1511, which the following iſſue of affairs hath fully verified.

As for the Government of this State, it is meerly popular, and that not only in the particular Cantons, but the aggregate body of their Council: the Gentry and Nobility being either rooted up in thoſe long wars which were betwixt them and their Vaſſals, juſtly provoked by thoſe intolerable preſſures and exactions which they laid upon them; or elſe worn out of memory and obſervation, for want of ſway and ſuffrage in the Councils of the Common-wealth. Only in Schaffehauſen, Baſil, and Zurich, are ſome Gentry left, not capable of any place or ſufferage in the Senate of the ſaid Cantons (from which they are excluded by the Common people, becauſe they joyned not with them in their firſt revolt) unleſs they wave their Gentry, and be enrolled amongſt the number of Plebeians. The reſt they have (it ſeemeth) in ſo poor eſteem, that Porters and Mechanicks of the meaneſt Trades, in all occaſions of War, are numbred with, and amongſt theſe Gentlemen; making up one ſociety only, and joyning with them in electing the Maſter of their Company, who is one of the Senate. But becauſe that every Canton hath his proper Magiſtrates, but more or fewer, according as it is in greatneſs, or in the number of its ſeveral Reſorts, or Sub diviſions; it will not be amiſs to ſhew what number of Reſorts are in every Canton: that is to ſay, in Vnderwalden only two, in Switz ſix, in Vren ten, in Zug five, in Glaris or Glarona fifteen, in Apenzel ſix, in Lucern ſeven, in Solothurn no more than one, in Friburg nineteen, in Baſil and Schaffehauſen but one apiece (the Cantons there and in Solothurn, reaching but little further than the Towns themſelves) in that of Zurich thirty one, and thirty in that of Bern; in all one hundred forty and eight. Of theſe conſiſts the body of this Common-wealth. In ordering whereof, every particular Canton hath its proper Magiſtrate, choſen by the Commonalty of that Canton (whom they call the Wuaman) together with a ſtanding Council aſſiſtant to him, choſen out of the people, for the directing and diſpoſing of their own affairs; which meet and ſit in the chief Town and Village of that Diſtrict. But if the cauſe concern the Publick, then every Canton ſendeth one or more Commiſſioners to the general Diets; where they determine of the buſineſs which they meet about, according to the major part of the Votes: the Commiſſioners of every Canton having one Vote only, though many may be ſent from each, to add the greater weight to their conſultations. The places of meeting is moſt commonly at the Town of Baden, in reſpect of the commodity of the Inns and Houſes, the pleaſant ſituation and famous Medicinal Baths: and becauſe it is ſeated in the very centre of Switzerland, and ſubject to the eight firſt Cantons. And here they do determine of War, Peace, and Leagues; of making Laws, of ſending, receiving, and anſwering Ambaſſadors; of Governments, and diſtributing the publick Offices; and finally of difficult Cauſes and Appeals, referred unto the judgment of the Great Council. In which the City Zurich, chief of the Cantons, hath the firſt place, not by antiquity, but dignity, and of old cuſtom hath the greateſt authority of calling together this Great Council, ſignifying by Letters to each Canton, the cauſe, time, and place of meeting: yet ſo, that if any Canton think it for the publick good, to have an extraordinary meeting of their Commiſſioners, they write to them of Zurich to appoint the ſame. That which the greater number do reſolve upon, is without delay put in execution.

The Forces of theſe Swiſſe conſiſt altogether of Foot, Horſe being found unſerviceable in this Mountainous Country. And of theſe Foot, Boterus reckoneth that they are able to raiſe ſixſcore thouſand. Which poſſibly may be true enough, if it be underſtood of all that be able to bear Arms. For otherwiſe de facto, the greateſt Army that ever they brought into the field, conſiſted but of one and thirty thouſand men, which was that wherewith they aided the confederate States of Italy againſt the French, and reſtored Maximilian Sforze to the Dukedom of Millain. Their ordinary ſtanding Forces are conceived to be ſixteen or ſeventeen thouſand, which they may bring into the field leaving their Towns and Forts well furniſhed. And for their Revenue, it is not like to be very great, conſidering the poverty of their Country, and their want of Traffick with other Nations. That which is ordinary and in common, ariſeth out of the Annual penſions which they receive from Foreign States; the profits ariſing out of their Dutch and Italian Prefectures, the Impoſt laid on Wines ſold in Taverns, and Corn uſed by Bakers; and the Rents of a diſſolved Monaſtery called Kings-field (or Conings-field) becauſe many Kings and Queens have been cloyſtered there, amounting to forty thouſand Guldans yearly. Which Monaſtery was built in the year 1380, in memory and honour of the Emperor Albertus, ſlain by his Nephew Spantback, not far from Baſil. Their extraordinary doth conſiſt of ſpoils that be gotten in the War; which if it be managed in common, are divided in common; but if by two or three of the Cantons only, the reſt can claim no ſhare in the booty gotten.

But this is only in relation to the Switzers themſelves. For otherwiſe taking in the Confederate States as well without as within the bounds of that Country, they are able to raiſe fifty or threeſcore thouſand men; that is to ſay, the Switzers themſelves ſeventeen thouſand men, the Griſons ten thouſand, thoſe of Walliſland ſix thouſand, the Abbot and Town of S. Gall four thouſand, the City of Geneva two thouſand; beſides what Rotwell and Mulhauſen, two Imperial Cities, are able to contribute towards it; the Dukes of Savoy being bound by their antient Leagues to aid them with ſix hundred Horſes, at his own charges; beſides two thouſand ſix hundred Crowns in Annual penſions. But the Revenue of thoſe States is ordered by it ſelf apart, and never comes within the computation of the publick; unleſs it be on the repulſing of a common Enemy, in which they are equally concerned. In which caſe, and others of a general intereſt, they communicate both heads and purſes: the Delegates and Commiſſioners of all the States of this Confederacy, meeting together to conſult of the Common Cauſe, which meeting they entitle the Greateſt Council. But this is very ſeldom held, publick affairs being generally ordered by the Commiſſioners of the Switzers only: though they themſelves diſclaim that name of Switzers, as too mean and narrow, and call themſelves Eidienoſſen, that is to ſay, Partakers of the ſworn Leagues. More of this Common-wealth he that liſts to ſee, may ſatisfie himſelf in Simler, who purpoſely and punctually hath deſcribed the ſame.

The Leagues of the GRISONS.

THE Country of the GRISONS comprehendeth all that part of the Alpes, which lieth between the Springs of the Rivers Rhene, Inn, Adice or Atheſis, and Adua: being bounded on the Eaſt, with the Country of Tirol; on the Weſt, with Switzerland; on the North, with Suevia or Schwaben, and a part of the Switzers; on the South, with Lombardy. A Country far more mountainous than any of this Alpine tract, and having leſs natural commodities to boaſt it ſelf of, more than the Fountains of thoſe Rivers before mentioned.

The People of it by moſt Latin Writers of theſe times, are called by the name of Rhæti, the Country Rhætia: and ſo far properly enough, as that the ancient Rhæti did inhabit all the Lands poſſeſſed by the Griſons: though the Griſons do not inhabit a fourth part of thoſe Lands, which were poſſeſſed heretofore by the ancient Rhæti: For anciently the Rhæti did extend their dwellings as far as from the Alpes of Italy, to the River of Danow; comprehending beſides this of the Griſons, a great part of Suevia or Schwaben, Tirol, Bavaria, and ſo much alſo of the Switzers, as was not in poſſeſſion of the old Helvetii. Within which Tract there were not only many rich Valleys and fruitful Fields; but a moſt pleaſant race of Wines called Vina Rhætica, much drank of by Auguſtus Cæſar, and by him preferred before all others; which no man can conceive to grow in this barren Country. More properly Ammianus Marcellinus calleth this Tract by the name of Campi Canini, Mountainous Fields, which the continual Snow made to look of an hoary hue: and by alluſion thereunto, the Dutchmen call this Nation at the preſent by the name of Graunpuntner, that is to ſay, the hoary or gray Confederates.

As for the Rhæti, take them in the former latitude, they were ſubdued by Druſus and Tiberius the Sons-in-law and adopted children of Auguſtus Cæſar, A.V.C. 739. And in the time of Antoninus made up two Provinces of the Empire, viz. Rhætia prima, and Rhætia ſecunda, both of them appertaining by Conſtantines new model, to the Dioceſe of Italy. A Nation in the firſt Original, of Italian race, and ſo more properly to be aſſigned to that Dioceſe; but had inhabited this Tract, from the time that Belloveſus the Gal ſeiſed on part of Tuſcany, expelling thence the ancient inhabitants thereof: who under the conduct of Rhætus, a great man amongſt them, poſſeſſed themſelves of theſe Mountains, and afterwards of the Vales adjoyning, which they called Rhætia, by the name of their Captain General. This hapned in the time of Tarquinius Priſcus, in the firſt cradle, as it were, of the Roman Empire: in the declining age whereof, during the reign of Valentinian the third, and Anaſtaſius, thoſe parts which lay neareſt unto Germany, and were worth the conquering, were ſubdued by the Almains, and Boiarians; by them incorporated with the reſt of their ſeveral States. The reſidue of this Mountainous Tract, as not worth the looking after, continued a member of the Empire; till given by Charles the Great to the Biſhop of Chur; whoſe ſucceſſors, being ſeveral ways moleſted by their potent neighbours, confederated with the Switzers for their mutual aid and preſervation, Anno 1497. By whoſe aid they ſo valiantly made good their ground againſt the Auſtrians, that at the laſt, after the loſs of twenty thouſand men on both ſides, the points in difference were accorded, and a peace concluded.

This is the ſubſtance of this ſtory, as to former times, to which there cannot much be added in the way of Hiſtory; little or no alteration hapning in their affairs, but a more perfect ſetling of them in a form of Government. Concerning which we muſt obſerve that this whole Tract is caſt into three Diviſions; that is to ſay, the Upper League or Liga Griſa, 2. Liga Cadi Dio, or the League of the houſe of God; 3. The Lower League called alſo Liga Ditture, or the League of the ten Commonalties. The eight Italian Præfectures will make a fourth. Their buildings generally in the three firſt being cold and mountainous, are of free-ſtone, but low, and for three parts of the year covered with Snow: the windows thereof glazed and large, of which for the ſaid three parts of the year they only open a little quarry of Glaſs, and preſently ſhut it cloſe again; the outſide of the windows having leaves of wood, to keep the heat of their Stowes from going out, or any cold from coming in. And as for travelling, the ways are for the moſt part unſafe and dangerous, by reaſon of the ſtraight paſſages, dreadful precipices, and thoſe almoſt continual Bridges which hang over the terrible falls and Cataracts of the River Rhene, deſcending with great violence from the higheſt Mountains: huge hills of Snow tumbling into the Valleys, with a noiſe as hideous as if it were a clap of thunder.

For the particulars, the Upper League lieth in the higheſt and moſt mountainous parts of the Alpes of Italy, having therein thoſe vaſt Mountains of Locknannier, and Der Vogel; out of which the two ſtreams of the Rhene have their firſt Original. By the French it is called Liga Griſe, or the Gray League, (the word Gris, or Griſe, in that Language, being Gray in ours) in the ſame ſenſe as the Dutch call it Graunpuntner, that is, Confæderati cani, which we may render properly the Confederate Griſle-pates: either becauſe the Mountains are continually covered with a perriwig of hoary Iſicles, or from the heads of the people, Gray before their time. It conſiſteth of nineteen Reſorts or Commonalties, according to the number of their Vales and Villages; of which four only ſpeak the Dutch, all the reſt a corrupt Italian: and was the firſt which did confederate with the Switzers, from whence the name of Griſons came unto the reſt, who after joyned with them in the ſame confederacy. It hath no City nor Town of note. The principal of thoſe that be, are 1. Ilanter, the place ſometimes of the General Diets for theſe Leagues. 2. Diſerntis, where is a very rich Monaſtery. 3. Saint Bernardino, ſituate at the foot of the Mountain Vogel. 4. Maſox, ſometimes an Earldom, giving name to the Valley Maſoxer-tal. 5. Galanckter, whence the Vale ſo named, inhabited by none but Basket-makers. 6. Ruffla, ſituate on the River Mueſa, near Belinzano, on the skirts of Italy.

2. The ſecond League, is Liga Cadi Dio, or the League of the houſe of God, ſo called becauſe it was the proper Patrimony of the Biſhop and Church of Chur: and may be called the middle League, as being ſituate between the upper League on the Weſt, and the lower League upon the Eaſt. It is the greateſt of the three, containing twenty one Reſorts or Commonalties: of which nine lie on this ſide the tops of the Mountains towards Germany, the reſt towards Italy: and yet two only ſpeak the Dutch, the others a corrupt Italian. The places of moſt note are, 1. Tintzen, the Tinnetio of Antoninus, ſeated amongſt high and inacceſſible Mountains, betwixt Chur and the Valley of Bergel. 2. Mur, (called Murus by the ſame Antoninus) in the Valley of Bergel; a Valley extending from the head of the River Maira, towards Chiavenna, one of the Italian Præfectures. 3. Stalla, called Bevio by the Italians, becauſe the way doth in that place divide it ſelf. 4. Jacomo (in the vally of Compoltſchin) called Travaſede by Antoninus. 5. Sinnada, in the vally of Engadin. And 6. Chur, by ſome Coira, but more truly Curia, ſo called from the long ſtay that Conſtantine the Great made here with his Court and Army, in a War intended againſt the Germans; built afterwards by ſome part of his Forces which continued here, Anno 357, about half a Dutch mile from the meeting of the two ſtreams of the Rhene, in form triangular, the buildings indifferent in themſelves, but not uniform with one another. High on a Hill; in one corner of which ſtandeth the Cloſe, and therein the Cathedral Church, a ſtately Edifice, but more in accompt of the Natives who have ſeen no fairer, than it is with ſtrangers: and near the Church the Biſhop's Palace, and the houſes of the Canons, all well built, and handſomly adorned. The Biſhop of this City, and of all the Country of theſe Leagues (for they recieved their Biſhop and the Faith together, Anno 489) acknowledgeth the Archbiſhop of Mentz for their Metropolitan; is reckoned for a Prince of the Empire, and the rightful Lord both of this City and the whole League: but on the introduction of the Reformed Religion, which they had from the Switzers and Genevians, the Citizens withdrew themſelves from their obedience to the Biſhop, and govern the City in the manner of a Free State. So far conformable to him, for their own preſervation, that as the Biſhop and his Canons, with the reſt of this League, upon occaſion of the wrongs done them by the Houſe of Auſtria, Lords of the neighbouring Tirol; joyned in confederacy with the ſeven firſt Cantons of the Switzers (which was in the year 1498.) So did the Citizens of Chur, after they had withdrawn themſelves from the command of their Biſhops, concur with them at laſt in that mutual League.

3. The third League of theſe Griſons, is the Lower League, called alſo Liga Ditture, or the League of the ten Juriſdictions; ſituate cloſe upon Tirol, in the North-eaſt part of the whole Country. Of all the ten, two only, which are thoſe of Malans and Meienfield, obey the joynt commands of the three Leagues of the Griſons: the other eight being ſubject to the Arch-Duke of Auſtria under whom they are ſuffered to enjoy their ancient priviledges, for fear of uniting with the Switzers; which hitherto they have not done. Only they did unite together in one common League, Anno 1436, conditioning their mutual defence againſt all Enemies, preſervation of their peace, and maintenance of their priviledges; reſerving notwithſtanding their obedience to their natural Lords. In which reſpect, and by reaſon of the intereſs and ſociety which they have with the reſt of the Griſons, they are in friendſhip with the Swiſſe, but in no confederacy. City or Walled-Town they have none. The chief of thoſe they have, are 1. Caſtels, the ſeat of the Governour for the Arch-Duke of Auſtria: 2. Malans, and 3. Meienfield, both bordering upon the Rhene. 4. Tanaas, giving name to the firſt and greateſt of the ten juriſdictions, the chief Town of this League, in which are held the General Diets for the ſame; and where are kept Monuments and Records which concern their Priviledges. In this League is the Mountain called Rhætico-mons, by Pomponius Mela, but now Prettigower-berg, becauſe it is at the end of the vally which the Dutch call Prettigow.

4. As for the Italian Præfectures they are eight in number, and were given unto the Griſons by Maximilian Sforze, Duke of Millain, Anno 1513, at ſuch time as he gave the like preſent to the Cantons of Switzerland. Of theſe the firſt is called Plurs, ſo called from the chief Town of the ſame name, in Latin Plura, once ſeated in a Plain at the foot of the Alpes, near the River Maira, the chief of ſundry Villages lying in the ſame bottom; now nothing but a deep and bottomleſs Gulf. For on the 26 of Auguſt 1617, an huge Rock falling from the top of the Mountains, overwhelmed the Town, killed in the twinckling of an eye 1500 people, and left no ſign or ruin of a Town there ſtanding; but in the place thereof a great Lake of ſome two miles length. 2. Chiarama, ſituate in a pleaſant valley ſo called, near the River Maira, and ten Italian miles from the Lake of Como. Antoninus calleth it Clavenna, and the Dutch Clevener-tal, or the valley of Cleven, more near unto the ancient name. 3. The Valtoline, Vallis Tolina in the Latin, a pleaſant valley, extending threeſcore miles in length, from the head of the River Aada, unto the fall thereof in the Lake of Como: the Wines thereof are much commended, and frequently tranſported on this ſide the Alpes. It is divided into ſix Præfectures, according to the names of the principal Towns. The chief whereof, are 1. Bormio, ſeated near the head of the River Aada. 2. Teio, the chief Fortreſs of the whole valley. 3. Sondrio, the chief Town, and the Seat of the Governour, or Lieutenant General of the whole Country. This Valley lying opportunely for the paſſage of the King of Spain's Forces, out of Millain into Germany, by the practices and treaſons of Rodolphus Planta one of the Natives of it, and of the Romiſh Religion; was delivered to the Duke of Feria, being then Governour of Millain, Anno 1622, the whole Country brought under the obedience of that King, Chur it ſelf forced and taken by them, and the Religion of Rome ſetled in all parts thereof. But two years after, by the joynt Forces of the French, Venetians, and Savoyards, the whole Vally was recovered from the Spaniards, and after a long treaty between France and Spain, the Griſons re-eſtated in their juſt poſſeſſions, Anno 163 ſave that the Spaniard ſtill holds the Fort of Fuentes, for the ſafer paſſage of his Forces, if occaſion be.

Such is the ſtate of the three Leagues conſidered ſeverally and apart from one another. In reference to the whole, they make up one Government, or Commonwealth; for ordering whereof they hold a General Diet, once in every year, conſiſting of threeſcore and three Commiſſioners: that is to ſay, 28 from the Upper League, 23 from the League of the Houſe of God, and 14 from the League of the ten Juriſdictions.

Theſe

heſe have authority to determine of Appeals from

OF FRANCE.

HAving thus croſſed the Alpes, we may indifferently diſpoſe our ſelves for France or Germany. But, we will follow the Courſe and Fortunes of the Roman Empire, which firſt paſſed into France, before it medled with the Germans; and had brought Spain & Britain under the Form of Roman Provinces, when Germany was looked on at a greater diſtance.

FRANCE then, according to the preſent dimenſions of it, is bounded on the Eaſt, with a branch of the Alpes, which divide Dauphine from Piemont; as alſo, with the Countries of Savoy, Switzerland, and ſome parts of Germany, and the Netherlands; on the Weſt, with the Aquitan Ocean, and a Branch of the Pyrenean Mountains, which divide it from Spain; on the North, with the Engliſh Ocean, and ſome parts of Belgium; and on the South, with the reſt of the Pyrenean Mountains, and the Mediterranean.

The Figure of it, is almoſt Square, each ſide of the Quadrature being reckoned 6000 miles in length. But, they that go more exactly to work upon it, make the length hereof to be 660 Italian miles; the breadth 570 only; the whole Circumference to amount to 2040. Seated in the Northern Temperate Zone, between the middle Parallel of the Fifth Clime, where the longeſt day is 15 hours; and the middle Parallel of the Eighth Clime, where the longeſt day is 16 hours and an half.

It hath this preſent Name of France, from the Franci, or Franks, a people of Germany, who ſeiſed upon thoſe parts of it which lay neareſt to the Rhene, in the time of Valentinian the third; and, having afterwards ſubdued Paris, and made it the Seat-Royal of their growing Empire, they cauſed the Country thereabouts, to be called France. Which Name, as they enlarged their borders, they impoſed on, or communicated rather, to the reſt of this Country, and to thoſe parts of Germany alſo, which were conquered by them. At which time, for diſtinction ſake, they called the Eaſt parts of their whole Empire, by the name of Ooſten-reich, or Auſtraſia, lying now wholly out of France, in Germany, and that part of Belgium, which is ſubject to the King of Spain: and for the Weſt parts thereof, they have the name of Weſten-riech, or Weſtraſia, (in the barbarous Latin of that Age) Weſt France, or Francia Occidentalis; to which, the name of France was at laſt appropriated, according to the limits before laid down.

Anciently, it was called Gallia, and the people, Galli; and by that name occurrs, moſt commonly, in the Writers of the Roman ſtory: and Gallia Tranſalpina, becauſe ſituate on the further ſide of the Alpes, from Italy, to difference it from the Country of thoſe Gauls, which being planted in thoſe parts which we now call Lombardy, was called Ciſalpina. Sometimes it was called Galatia alſo, and by that name known amongſt the Greeks: by Ptolomy called Celto-Galatia, or the Galatia of the Celtæ, a potent Nation of old Gaul; to diſtinguiſh it from Galatia one of the Provinces of Aſia minor, denominated from the Galatians, or Gauls, of this Country. Whence it became ſo named, is not yet determined. Some think it was called Gallia, from the Greek word Γάλα (Gala) ſignifying Milk, quia Lacteos, i. e. albos homines producebat, for the milky and white complexion of the people, compared to the Greeks and Romans, who firſt impoſed it. Others, and amongſt them, Diodorus Siculus, derive the name from Galata, a ſon of Hercules; to which that of Galatia comes as near as may be. That Hercules was ſometimes in this Country, is affirmed alſo by Ammianus Marcellinus; who further adds, That after he had ſuppreſſed thoſe Tyrants which oppreſſed the people, he begat many Children on the principal Women; Et eas partes quibus imperitabant, nominibus ſuis appellaſſe, Lib. XL, Who gave their own names to thoſe parts over which they ruled. But, in another place, acknowledging, That the Græcians call this people, Galatæ, (ita enim Gallos ſermo Græcus appellat) he telleth us from Timogenes an ancient Author, one very diligent in the ſearch of the Gallick Antiquities, that the Aborigines, or firſt Inhabitants hereof, called themſelves Celtæ, by the name of one of their Kings, whom they highly honoured; Et matris ejus vocabulo Galatas, and Galatæ, from the name of his Mother Galata; who, properly enough, might be a daughter of Hercules, miſtook by Diodorus, for one of his ſons.

Of the Original of this people, more anon. In the mean time, we may take ſo much notice of the ancient Gaul as to affirm him (out of Cæſar, and other Authors) to be quik-witted, of a ſudden and nimble apprehenſion; but withal, very raſh and hair-brain'd, (ut ſunt ſubita Gallorum ingenia, is a note ſet upon them by the Pen of Cæſar:) ſo full of Law-ſuits and Contentions, that their Lawyers near wanted work. Gallia Cauſidicos, &c. as that Poet hath it, of vehement affections, and precipitate in all their actions, as well Military, as Civil: falling on like a Clap of Thunder, and preſently going off in Smoak. Primus impetus major quàm virorum, ſecundus minor quàm fœminarum, was a part alſo of their Character, in the time of Florus the Hiſtorian. And though the preſent French be generally of another Original; yet, there is ſo much of the old Gaul ſtill left among them, either by the impreſſion of the Heavenly Bodies, or by Inter-marriages with the Gauls, as they overcame them; that all the qualities are ſtill predominant in the French; not differing from the ancient Gaul, but in Name and Habit. For further evidence whereof, take with you a Compariſon, homely I muſt confeſs, but to the life expreſſing the nature of the French, compared with the Dutch and Spaniſh, in matters of War. The French is ſaid to be like a Flea, quickly ſkipping into a Country, and ſoon leaping out of it; as was the Expedition of Charles the Eight, into Italy. The Dutch is ſaid to be like a Lowſe, ſlowly maſtering a place, and as ſlowly (yet at laſt) driven out of their hold; as was their taking and loſing of Oſtend and Gulick. The Spaniard is ſaid to be like a Crab, or Pediculus inguinalis, which being once crept into a place, is ſo rooted there, that nothing but the extremity of Violence, can fetch him out again. In which, I think I need not inſtance; it being generally obſerved, that the Spaniards will endure all poſſible hardſhip, before they will part with any thing that they are poſſeſſed of. It is uſed alſo for a By-word, That the Italian is wiſe before-hand, the Dutch in the time of action, and the French after it is done: a Wiſdom much like that of the ancient Gauls. Nor are they leſs Litigious than the old Gauls were: inſomuch as it is thought, that there are more Law-ſuits tryed among them in ſeven years, than have been in England from the Conqueſt, till the time of King James. They are great Scoffers, yea even in matters of Religion, as appeareth by the ſtory of a Gentleman lying ſick on his death-bed, who, when the Prieſt had perſwaded him, that the Sacrament of the Altar was the very Body and Blood of CHRIST, refuſed to eat thereof, becauſe it was Friday. Nor can I forget another in the ſame extremity; who ſeeing the Hoſt (for ſo they call the Conſecrated Elements) brought unto him by a Lubberly Prieſt, ſaid, That CHRIST came to him, as he entred into Jeruſalem, riding upon an Aſs. As for the Women, they are ſaid to be witty, but apiſh, wanton, and incontinent; where a man at his firſt entrance, may find acquaintance; and at his firſt acquaintance, may find an entrance. So Dallington, in his View of France, deſcribeth them. But I have ſince heard this Cenſure condemned of ſome Uncharitableneſs, and the French Gentlewomen highly magnified for all thoſe Graces which may beautifie and adorn that Sex. And it is poſſible enough, that it may be ſo in ſome particulars, though it be more than any man would gueſs at, that cometh amongſt them. For, generally, at the firſt ſight you ſhall have them as familiar with you, as if they had known you from your Cradle; and are ſo full of Chat and Tattle, even with thoſe they know not, as if they were reſolved ſooner to want Bread, than Words; and never to be ſilent, but in the Grave.

As to the perſons of this People, they are commonly of a middle ſtature, and for the moſt part, of a ſleight making; their Complexion being generally hot and moiſt; which makes them very ſubject to the heats of luſt, and eaſily inclinable unto thoſe Diſeaſes which are concomitants thereof. Their Conſtitution ſomewhat tender, if not dilicate; which rendereth them impatient of Toil and Labour; and is, in part, the cauſe of thoſe ill ſucceſſes which have hapned to them in the Wars; in which they have loſt as much for want of conſtancy and perſeverance in their Enterprizes, as they have gained by their Courage in the undertaking. And for the Women, they are, for the moſt part, very perſonable, of ſtraight bodies, ſlender waſts, and a fit ſymmetry of proportion in all the reſt; their hands white, long, and ſlender, and eaſily diſcernable to be ſo; for, either they wear no Gloves at all, or elſe ſo ſhort, as if they were cut off at the hand-wriſt. To theſe, the Complexion of their Faces, and the Colour of their Hair, too much enclining to the black, holds no true Decorum. 'Tis true, the Poets commend Leda for her black hair, and not unworthily; Leda fuit nigris, conſpicienda comis, as it is in Ovid. But this was ſpecially, becauſe it ſet off, with the greater luſtre, the amiable ſweetneſs of her Complection; for in that caſe, the Hair doth ſet forth the Face, as Shadows commonly do a Picture; and the Face ſo becometh the Hair, as a Field Argent doth a Sable bearing; which kind of Coat, our Critical Heralds call the moſt fair. But when a Black Hair meets with a Brown or Swarthy complexion, it falls ſhort of that attractiveneſs of Beauty, which Ovid, being ſo great a Craſts-Maſter in the Art of Love, did commend in Leda.

The chief Exerciſes they uſe, are, 1. Tennis; every Village having a Tennis-Court, Orleans 60, Paris many hundreds. 2. Dancing; a ſport to which they are ſo generally affected, that were it not ſo much inveighed againſt by their ſtraight-laced Miniſters, it is thought that many more of the French Catholicks had been of the Reformed Religion. For, ſo extreamly are they bent upon this diſport, that neither Age, nor Sickneſs, no nor Poverty it ſelf, can make them keep their heels ſtill when they hear the Muſick. Such as can hardly walk abroad without their Crutches or go as if they were troubled all day with a Sciatica, and perchance have their raggs hang ſo looſe about them that one would think a ſwift Galliard might ſhake them into their nakedneſs, will to the Dancing-green howſoever, and be there as eager at the ſport as if they had left their ſeveral infirmities and wants behind them. What makes their Miniſters (and indeed, all that follow the Genevian Diſcipline) inveigh ſo bitterly againſt Dancing, and puniſh it with ſuch ſeverity when they find it uſed, I am not able to determine, nor doth it any way belong unto this Dicourſe. But being it is a Recreation which this People are ſo given unto, and ſuch a one as cannot be followed, but in a great deal of company, and before many witneſſes and ſpectators of their carriage in it; I muſt needs think the Miniſters of the French Church more nice than wiſe, if they chuſe rather to deter men from their Congregations by ſo ſtrict a Stoiciſm, than indulge any thing unto the jollity and natural gaiety of this People, in matters not offenſive, but by accident only.

The Language of this People is very voluble and pleaſant; but rather Elegant, than Copious; and therefore much troubled for want of proper words to find out Periphraſes: beſides that very much of it is expreſſed in the action; the head and ſhoulders move as ſignificantly toward it, as the lips and tongue; and he that hopeth to ſpeak it with any good grace, muſt have ſomewhat in him of the Mimick. A Language enriched with great plenty of Proverbs, and conſequently, a great help to the French humour of Scoffing; and ſo naturally diſpoſed for Courtſhip, as makes all the people complemental; the pooreſt Cobler in the Pariſh, hath his Court-cringes, and his Beaubeniſte de Cour, his Court-holy-water, (as they call it) as perfectly as the beſt Gentleman-Huiſher in Paris. Compared with that of other Nations, the Language of the Spaniards is ſaid to be Manly; the Italian, Courtly; and the French, Amorous. A ſweet Language it is, without queſtion, the people leaving out in their pronunciation, many of their Conſonants; and thereby giving occaſion to this By-word, That the French man pronounceth not as he writes, ſingeth not as he pricketh, nor ſpeaks as he thinketh. In the Original thereof, it is a compound of the old Gallick, German, and Latin Tongues; the old Gallick being queſtionleſs the ſame with the Welſh or Britiſh, as appeareth clearly by theſe Reaſons. 1. The Latin words are known to have been received from the Romans; and the German words, at the coming in of the Franks and Burgundians; but the Welch words which they have, we can give no reaſon, but that they are the remainder of their ancient Language; of which Welch words, which ſtill continue in that Language, Cambden, in his Britannia, reckoneth not a few. 2. It is ſaid by Tacitus, that the Britans were the Deſcendents of the Gauls; and this he proveth, as by other Arguments, ſo from the identity or near reſemblance of the Language which both Nations ſpeak. Utriuſque ſermo haud multum diverſus, as his own words are. And 3. it is ſaid by Cæſar, That the Gauls uſed to paſs into Britan, to be inſtructed in the Rites and Learning of the Druids; which ſhoweth that both People ſpake but one common Tongue; there being, in thoſe times, no one Learned Language which other Nations ſtudied, beſides their own.

The ſoyl is extraordinary fruitful, and hath three Load-ſtones to draw riches out of other Countries, Corn, Wine, and Salt; in exchange for which, there is yearly brought into France 1200000*li.* Sterling, the Cuſtom of Salt, only to the King, being eſtimated at 700000 Crowns per annum. And indeed, the benefit ariſing on this one Commodity, is almoſt incredible; it being conſtituted by the King's Edict, (which is all in all) That no man ſhall have any Salt for Domeſtick uſes, (except by ſpecial Priviledg, and that dearly paid for) but what he muſt buy of the King's Officers, and that upon ſuch prices too, as they pleaſe to ſell it. Nor can it but be very well ſtored with Fiſh: for, beſides the benefit of the Seas, their Lakes and Ponds belonging to the Clergy only, are ſaid to be 135000. Their other Merchandizes are, Beeves, Hogs, Nuts, Wood, Skins, vaſt quantities of all ſorts of Linen. And, to ſay truth, there are not many Countries in the Chriſtian World, to which Nature hath been ſo prodigal of her choiſeſt bleſſings, as ſhe hath to this; the Fields thereof, being large and open, and thoſe ſo intermingled with Corn and Vines, and every hedg-row ſo beſet with choice of Fruits, that never any covetous or curious Eye, had a fairer object. And yet ſo miſerable is the condition of the common Peaſant; partly by reaſon of the intolerable Taxes laid upon him by the King; and partly, by thoſe great, but uncertain Rents, which are ſet upon him by his Landlord, (for, the poor huſband-man is Tenant only at the will of his Lord) that there is many one amongſt them, who farmeth yearly thirty or forty Acres of Wheat and Vines, that never drinks Wine, nor eats good Bread, from one end of the year unto the other.

The Chriſtian Faith was planted firſt amongſt the Gauls, by ſome of St. Peter's Diſciples, ſent hither by him at his firſt coming to Rome: Xyſtus, Fronto, and Julianus, the firſt Biſhops of Rhemes, Perigort, and Mants, (Cenomanenſium, in the Latin) being ſaid to be of his ordaining, in the Martyrologies. The like may be affirmed (but on ſurer grounds) of Trophimus, the firſt Biſhop of Arles. For, on a Controverſie betwixt the Arch-biſhops of Vienna and Arles, for the dignity of Metropolitan, in the time of Pope Leo the firſt, it was thus pleaded in behalf of the Biſhop of Arles, Quod prima inter Gallias, &c. That Arles, of all the Cities of Gaul, did firſt obtain the happineſs of having Trophimus ordained Biſhop thereof, by the hands of St. Peter. Nor is St. Paul to be denied the honour of ſending ſome of his Diſciples thither alſo to preach the Goſpel; Creſcens ſent by him, as he telleth us, 2 Tim. 4. into Galatia, being the firſt Biſhop of Vienna, ſpoken of before, as, not the Martyrologies only, but Ado Viennenſis, an ancient Writer of that Church, doth expreſly ſay. And that it was into this Country that he ſent that Creſcens at that time, and not unto Galatia in Aſia minor, the teſtimonies of Epiphanius and Theodoret, which affirm the ſame, and that which hath been ſaid before of this name of Galatia, may confirm ſufficiently. But Chriſtianity being deſtroyed by the French at the firſt coming hither, was again planted by the induſtry of St. Remigius, the firſt Biſhop of Rhemes; Clovis, or Clodivæus the fifth, King of the French, giving way unto it for his Wives ſake, who was zealous in it; and after taking unto himſelf that holy Calling, on a great victory which he won againſt the Almains; by whom, being over-laid in the day of Battel, he made his prayers to CHRIST, whom his Wife Clotilda worſhipped; vowing to be of that Religion, if he got the Victory: Which Vow he had no ſooner made, (as the Story telleth us) but Alemannos invaſit timor, a ſudden fear fell upon the Almains, and the French were Conquerors.

At this time they are divided in Religion, as in other places; ſome following the Doctrine of the Church of Rome; and others, that of thoſe Reformed Churches which adhere to Calvin. But this diviſion is more ancient than Calvin's days; the ſame opinions (as they relate unto the Errors in the Romiſh Church) being maintained formerly by the Albigenſes, the Waldenſes, or Pauperes de Lugduno, (the Vaudoys, as the French Writers call them) of whom we ſhall ſpeak more, when we come to Lyons. Suffice it in this place to note, That the Doctrine of the Reformed Churches was not new in France, when Zuinglius firſt preached againſt the ſuperſtitions of the Maſs, and the worſhip of Images; and Calvin travelled in advancing the Reformation, though much ſuppreſſed as to the outward profeſſion of it. But, being revived by their endeavours, it ſprung out again, and ſpread it ſelf ſo ſpeedily in this Kingdom, that there were reckoned in the year 1560, above 1240 Churches of them; which cannot, in ſuch a long time, but be wonderfully augmented, though ſcarce any of them have ſcaped ſome Maſſacre or other. Of theſe Maſſacres, two are moſt memorable, viz. that of Merindol and Chabriers, as being the firſt; and the Maſſacre of Paris, as being the greateſt. That of Merindol hapned in the year 1545; the Inſtrument of it, being Minier, the Preſident of the Council of Aix: for, having condemned this poor people of Hereſie, he muſtred a ſmall Army, and ſet fire on the Villages. They of Merindol, ſeeing the flame, with their Wives and Children fled into the Wood; but were there butchered, or ſent to the Gallies. One Boy they took, placed him againſt a Tree, and ſhot him with Calievers; 25 which had hid themſelves in a Cave, were in part ſtifled, in part burned. In Chabriers, they ſo inhumanly dealt with the young Wives and Maids, that moſt of them dyed immediatly after. The Men and Women were put to the Sword; the Children were re-baptized; 800 Men were murdered in a Cave, and 40 Women, were put together in an old Barn, and burned. Yea, ſuch was the Cruelty of theſe Souldiers to theſe poor Women, that when ſome of them had clambred to the top of the Houſe, with an intent to leap down, the Souldiers beat them back again with their Pikes. The Maſſacre of Paris was more cunningly plotted. A Peace was made with the Proteſtants; for the aſſurance whereof, a Marriage was ſolemnized between Henry of Navarre, chief of the Proteſtant Party, and the Lady Marguerite the King's Siſter. At this Wedding, there aſſembled the Prince of Conde, the Admiral Coligni, and divers others of chief note; but there was not ſo much Wine drank, as Blood ſhed at it. At midnight the Watch-Bell rung, the King of Navarre and the Prince of Conde are taken priſoners, the Admiral murdered in his bed, and 30000, at the leaſt, of the greateſt and moſt potent men of the Religion, ſent by the way of the Red Sea, to find the neareſt paſſage to the Land of Canaan, Anno 1572. Yet notwithſtanding theſe Maſſacres, and the long and frequent Wars which were made againſt them by their Kings, they grew ſo numerous, and got unto ſo great a Power; that partly by Capitulations with the French Kings, at the end of every Civil War; but principally, by the connivence of King Henry the fourth, who was ſometimes the Head of their party, they had gotten above Three hundred Walled Towns and Garriſons, and were abſolute Maſters, in effect, of all thoſe Provinces which lye along the Aquitain ſhore, and the Pyrenees, from the Mediteranian Sea, to the River of Loyre. But, being grown too inſolent by reaſon of ſo great a Strength, and ſtanding upon terms with the King, as a Free Eſtate, (the Commonwealth of Rochel, as King Henry the fourth was uſed to call it) they drew upon themſelves the Jealouſie and Fury of King Lewis the thirteenth. Who ſeeing that he could not otherwiſe diſſolve the Knot of their Combination, than by the Sword, drew it out at laſt; and was ſo fortunate in the ſucceſs of his Undertakings, that in Two years, (viz. Anno 1621, 1622) he ſtripped them of all their Walled Towns, except Montalbon and Rochel only; and thoſe two he reduced not long after, by the power of his Arms, leaving them nothing to rely on for their future ſecurity, but the Grace and Clemency of their King, promerited by their Obedience and Integrity. And it hath ſped ſo well with them ſince that time, that they never had the exerciſe of their Religion with ſo much freedom, as they have hitherto enjoyed ſince the reducing of their Forts and Garriſons to the Kings obedience.

The other Party in Religion, having the countenance of the State, and the preſcription and poſſeſſion of ſo many years to confirm the ſame, is in as proſperous a condition both for Power and Patrimony, as any that acknowledgeth the Authority of the Popes of Rome. In point of Patrimonny, the Author of the Cabinet computes the Tythes and Temporal Revenues of the Clergy, beſides Proviſions of all ſorts, to 80 Millions of Crowns: but this accompt is diſallowed by all knowing men. Bodin reporteth from the mouth of Monſieur Alemant, one of the Preſidents of Accompts in Paris, that they amount to 12 Millions, and 300000 of their Livres, which is 1200000 l. of our Engliſh money: and he himſelf conceiveth, that they poſſeſs ſeven parts of twelve, of the whole Revenues of that Kingdom. The Book, entituled Comment d' Eſtat, gives a lower eſtimate; and reckoning that there are in France 200 millions of Arpens (which is a meaſure ſomewhat bigger than our Acre) aſſigneth 47 millions, which is near a fourth part of the whole, to the Gallican Clergy. And then it is reſolved by all that the Baiſemain, (as they call it) which conſiſts of Offerings, Churchings, Burials, Dirigies, and ſuch like Caſualties, amounteth to as much per annum, as their ſtanding Rents. Upon which ground Sir Edwin Sandys computeth their Revenue at ſix millions yearly. And to ſay truth, there needs a very great Revenue to maintain their numbers; there being reckoned in this Kingdom, 13 Arch-biſhops, 104 Biſhops, 1450 Abbots, 540 Arch-Priories, 12320 Priories, 567 Nunneries, 700 Convents of Friers, 259 Commanderies of Malta: beſides the Colledges of the Jeſuites, which being of a late foundation, are not here accompted. And for the Pariſh-Prieſts, they are reckoned at 130000 of all ſorts, taking in Deacons, Sub-deacons, and all thoſe of Inferior Orders, which have ſome Miniſtry in their Churches, the number of which was reckoned, in the time of King Lewis the 11*th*, to be little leſs than 100000. But then 'tis like, that Chanteries and Free Chappels went in that accompt; or elſe the Hugenots in the Wars have deſtroyed more Churches than they are like to build again in haſte; there being found in France on a juſt Accompt, no more than 27400 Pariſh-Churches, beſides Oratories and Chappels of Eaſe appertaining to them. In which there are ſuppoſed to live 15 millions of people, whereof the Clergy, and the Miniſters depending on them, do make up 3 millions, which is a fifth part of the whole. And for their Power, the Gallican Clergy ſtands more ſtoutly to their natural Rights againſt the Uſurpations and Encroachments of the See of Rome, than any other that lives under the Pope's Authority; which they acknowledg ſo far only, as conſiſtent with their own Priviledges, and the Rights of their Soveraign. For neither did they in long time ſubmit to the Decrees of the Council of Trent; nor have they yet admitted of the Inquiſition; nor yield ſuch ſtore of Griſt to the Pope's Mill, as probably might redound to him from ſo rich a Clergy. And for his Temporal Power over Kings and Princes, it is a Doctrine ſo averſe from the Poſitions and Principles of the Gallican Church, that in the year 1610, the Divines of Paris publiſhed a Declaration, in which it was affirmed, that the Doctrine of the Popes Supremacy was an erroneous Doctrine, and the ground of that Helliſh Poſition, of Depoſing and Killing Kings. And this, indeed, hath conſtantly been the Doctrine of the Gallican Church, ſince the time of Gerſon, maintaining the Authority of a Council, above that of the Pope.

But to proceed; The men moſt eminent for Learning of either ſide, have been, (beſides thoſe mentioned in the Alpine Provinces) Peter du Moulin, highly commended for his Eloquence, by the Pen of Balſac: Fr. Junius, a moderate and grave Divine; Chamier the Controverſer, and Philip de Morney, Lord of Pleſſis. Of the other Party, Claudius Eſpencæus, a Sorbon Doctor, the famous Cardinal of Peron; Genebrard the Hiſtorian, Petavius a learned Jeſuit, &c. In the middle times, St. Bernard, Abbot of Clarevalle; Pet. Lombard, Biſhop of Paris, John Gerſon, Chancellor of that Univerſity. More anciently, Proſper of Aquitain, Caſſianus the Hermit, Irenæus the renowned Biſhop of Lyons, (though not here a Native.) And as to men of other Studies, Auſonius the Poet Hottoman and Gotfredus, the Civilians; Duarenus the Canoniſt, Barn. Briſſonius the great Antiquary, Iſaac Caſaubon that renowned Philologer, Budæus that great Maſter of the Greek Language, Thuanus the Hiſtorian, Laurentius the Anatomiſt, &c. And as for Military men, it hath been famous for the valour of Clovis the firſt Chriſtian King of the French; Charles Martel, that ſtout Champion of the Church againſt the Saracens; and Charles the Great, the Fourth of the Weſtern Empire. In the middle times for Godfery of Bouillon, one of the Nine Worthies, (as they call them) the ſon of Euſtace, Earl of Boulogn in Picardy: and in theſe latter days, for King Henry the fourth; Francis and Henry, Dukes of Guiſe; Charles Duke of Bayenne, Charles Duke of Biron, &c.

The Laws of this Kingdom are either Temporary, and alterable at pleaſure; or Fundamental, which neither King nor Parliament (as they ſay) can alter. Of this laſt ſort, the principal are, the Salique Law, and the Law of Apennages. By that of the Apennage, the younger Sons of the King are not to have partage in the Kingdom with their Elder Brother. Which Law was made by Charles the Great, before whoſe time we find the children of the Kings eſtated in their ſeveral Thrones, and the Realm parcelled out among them into many Kingdoms. But by this Law, they are to be entituled to ſome Dutchy or County, (though they are content ſometimes with Annual penſions) with all the Rights and Profits thereunto belonging; all matters of Regality (as Levying Taxes, Coynage, and the like) excepted only; which, upon the failing of the Maſculine line, do return again unto the Crown. The name thereof derived from Albamago, a German word, ſignifying a Portion.

But the main Law they ſtand on, is the Salique Law, by which the Crown of France may not deſcend unto the Females or fall from the Lance to the Diſtaff, as their ſaying is. Which Law, one undertaking to make good out of Holy Writ, urged that Text of St. Matthew, where it is ſaid, Mark the Lilies, (which are the Arms of France) and ſee how they neither labour nor ſpin. This Law they pretend to have been made by Pharamond the firſt King of the French; and that the words Si aliqua, ſo often uſed in it, gave it the name of the Salique Law. But Haillian, one of their beſt Writers, affirms, That it was never heard of in France, till the time of Philip the Long Anno 1315: and that it could not poſſibly be made by Pharamond; who though he was the firſt King of the French, had not one foot of Land in France: Clodion, the ſon of Pharamond, being the firſt of the French Kings which paſſed over the Rhene; their third King, Merovee. the firſt that ever fixed his ſeat in the Modern France. Others ſay, it was made by Charles the Great, after the Conqueſt of Germany; where the incontinent lives of the Women, living about the River Sala, (in the Modern Miſnia) gave both the occaſion, and the name. De terra verò Salica, nulla portio hæreditatis mulieri veniat, ſed ad virilem Sexum tota terræ hæreditas perveniat, are the words thereof. This Terra Salica, the Learned Selden in his Titles of Honour, Engliſheth, Knights-Fee, or Land that is holden by Knights Service, as our Lawyers call it; and proveth this Interpretation, by a Record of the Parliament of Bourdeaux, cited by Bodinus; where an old Will or Teſtament being once produced, in which the Teſtator had bequeathed unto his Son all his Salique Land; it was reſolved by the Court, That thereby was meant, his Land holden in Knights Service. And then the ſenſe thereof muſt be, That in Lands holden of the King by Knights Service; or the like Military tenure, the Male-children ſhould inherit only; becauſe the Females could not perform thoſe Services for which thoſe Lands were given, and by which they were holden. And for this there may be good reaſon, though in England we deal not ſo unkindly with the Female Sex, but permit them after the age of 15 years, to enjoy ſuch Lands, becauſe they may then take ſuch Husbands as are able to do the King thoſe ſervices which the Law requireth. But this interpretation (how good and genuine indeed ſoever it be) cannot ſtand with the French Gloſs. For then the Crown, being held of none but God, and ſo not properly to be called a Fee or Feiſe, could not be brought within the compaſs of the Salique Law, becauſe not to be counted for Salique Land. Give them therefore their own Gloſs, their own Etymology and Original; and let us ſee by what right their Kings Daughters are excluded from their ſucceſſion to the Diadem. For firſt, ſuppoſing that to be the Salique Land which lyeth about the River Sala, in the Modern Miſnia; I would fain know how it could reach unto the King's Daughter in France, ſo far diſtant from it; or with what honeſty they can lay on them the like brand of Incontinency, as was ſuppoſed to have been found in thoſe Women of Germany? And next, ſuppoſing that the Law had been made by Pharamond, I would fain learn how it can be applyed to the Crown of France, to which Pharamond had then no title, nor ſo much as one foot of Land on that ſide of the Rhene. And finally, ſuppoſing that the Law was made in ſuch general terms, as to extend to all the Countries, which the French in time to come ſhould conquer, and conſequently unto France when once conquered by them: I would then ask, Whether it did extend to the Crown alone, or to all ſubordinate Eſtates which were holden of it? If unto all Eſtates holden of that Crown, I would fain know with what pretence they could give ſentence in behalf of Charles of Blais, againſt John de Montfort, in the ſucceſſion to the Dukedom of Bretagne: Charles of Blais claiming by his Mother, the Neece of Arthur the ſecond, by his ſecond ſon Guy: where as John de Montfort was the third ſon (and the next Heir-male) of the ſaid Duke Arthur. If only to the Crown of France, it would be known by what right they detain that Dukedom from the true Heirs of Anne the Dutcheſs; whoſe Daughter and Heir, the Lady Claude, being married unto Francis the firſt, had iſſue, Henry the ſecond, and other Children. Which Henry, beſides Francis the ſecond, Charles the ninth, Henry the third, and Francis Duke of Anjou, all dying without iſſue, had a Daughter named Iſabel, or Elizabeth, married to Philip the ſecond, King of Spain, by whom ſhe was made the Mother of Iſabella, the late Arch-Dutcheſs, and of Katharine, the Wife of Charles Emanuel, the late Duke of Savoy. Not to ſay any thing of the pretenſions of the Houſe of Lorrein, deſcending from the Lady Claude, the ſecond daughter of King Henry the ſecond, and ſiſter of Iſabel, or Elizabeth, Queen of Spain. Nor do we find, that the French ſo ſtand upon this Law, as not to think, that a Succeſſion by and from the Females, is, in ſome caſes, their beſt Title. For thus we read, That Pepin having thruſt his Maſter Childerick into a Monaſtery, to make good his Title to the Crown, (or ſome colour for it) derived his Pedigree from Plythilda, one of the Daughters of Clotaire the firſt, married to Auſpert the Grandfather of that Arnulphus, who was the firſt Mayre of the Palace of Pepin's Family. As alſo, how Hugh Capet, putting aſide Charles of Lorrein, the right Heir of this Pepin, to make his lawleſs Action the more ſeemingly lawful, drew his deſcent from ſome of the Heirs General of Charles the Great; his Mother Adeltheid, being the Daughter of the Emperor Henry the firſt, ſirnamed the Fowler; who was the ſon of Otho Duke of Saxony, by Luitgardis, the daughter of the Emperor Arnulph, the laſt Emperor of the Romans (or Germans) of the Houſe of Charles. And it is ſaid of Lewis the ninth ſo renowned for ſanctity amongſt them, That he never enjoyed the Crown with a quiet Conſcience, till it was proved unto him, That by his Grandmother, the Lady Iſabel of Hainalt, he was deſcended from Hermingrade the Daughter of Charles of Lorrein. Add here, that this ſuppoſed Salique Law, not only croſſeth the received Laws of all Nations elſe, which admit of Women to the ſucceſſion in their Kingdoms, where the Crown deſcends in a ſucceſſion; and have a great reſpect both unto their Perſons and Poſterities in ſuch Kingdoms alſo where the Kings are ſaid to be Elective, as in Poland, Hungaria, and Bohemia: but, that even France it ſelf hath ſubmitted to the Imperious Command of two Women of the Medices; and at the preſent, to the Government of a Spaniſh Princeſs. So that it is evident, that this Law, by whomſoever made, and how far ſoever it extended, is of no ſuch force, but that the Labels of it may be eaſily cut in pieces by an Engliſh Sword well whetted, if there were no other bar to the Title of England, than the Authority and Antiquity of the Salique Law.

But for my part (if it be lawful for me to diſpute this point) I am not ſatisfied in the right of the Engliſh Title; ſuppoſing the Salique Law to be of no ſuch force as the French pretended; and meaſuring the ſucceſſion in the Crown of France, to be according to ſucceſſions in the Realm of England, on which King Edward the 3. ſeemed to ground his claim. For if there were no Salique Law to exclude ſucceſſion by the Females, as the Engliſh did pretend there was not: yet could not Edward coming from a Siſter of the three laſt Kings, which reigned ſucceſſively before Philip of Valois, againſt whom he claimed, be ſerved in courſe, before the Daughters of thoſe Kings (or the Males at leaſt deſcending of them) had had their turns in the ſucceſſion of that Kingdom. Of the three Brethren, two left iſſue, viz. Lewis, and Philip. Lewis ſirnamed Hutin, Son of Philip the fair, and Joan Queen of Navarre, had a Daughter named Joan, married to Philip Earl of Eureux, who was King of Navarre in right of his Wife; from which marriage iſſued all the ſucceeding Kings of that Realm, the rights whereof are now in the houſe of Burbon. Philip, the ſecond Brother, ſirnamed the Long, by Joan the daughter of Othelin Earl of Burgundy, had a daughter named Marguerite, married to Lewis Earl of Flanders; from whom deſcended thoſe great Princes of the race of Burgundy, the rights whereof are now in the houſe of Spain. If then there were no Salick Law to exclude the Women and their Sons, Charles K. of Navarre the ſon of Q. Joan and of Philip de Eureux, deſcended from Lewis Hutin the elder brother; & Lewis de Malarine Earl of Flanders and Burgundy, the ſon of Lewis E. of Flanders, and of Marguerite the daughter of Philip the Long, the ſecond brother, muſt have precedency of title before King Edward the third of England, deſcended from a Siſter of the ſaid two Kings, their iſſue ſeverally and reſpectively, before any claiming or deſcending from the ſaid K. Edward. So that K. Edward the third had ſome other Claim than what is commonly alledged for him in our Engliſh Hiſtories; or elſe he had no claim to that Crown at all: and I conceive, ſo wiſe a King, would not have ventured on a buſineſs of ſo great conſequence, without ſome colourable title; though what this title was is not declared for ought I know, by any Writers of our Nation. I believe therefore, that he went upon ſome other grounds, than that of ordinary ſucceſſion by the Law of England, and claimed that Crown, as the eldeſt heir male and neareſt Kinſman to the laſt King. For being Siſters Son to the King deceaſed, he was a degree nearer to him than either the King of Navar, or the Earl of Flanders, who were the Grand-children of his Brethren: and having priority of either in reſpect of age, had a fair title before either to the Crown of that Kingdom. And on theſe grounds King Edward might the rather go, becauſe he found it a ruled caſe, in the diſpute about the ſucceſſion in the Kingdom of Scotland. For though King Edward the firſt meaſuring the order of ſucceſſion by the Laws of England, and perhaps willing to adjudge the Crown to one who ſhould hold it of him; gave ſentence in behalf of John Baliol, the Grandchild of the eldeſt daughter of the Earl of Huntingdon: yet was this ſentence diſavowed and proteſted againſt by the other Competitors. Rob. Bruce ſon of the 2*d.* Daughter of the ſaid Earl of Huntingdon, as a degree nearer to the laſt King, though deſcended from the younger Siſter, who not only thought himſelf wronged in it, but had the whole Scottiſh Nation for him to aſſert his right: by whoſe unanimous conſent his ſon was called to the Government of the Realm of Scotland, during the life of Baliol and his Patron both. Proximity in blood to the King deceaſed, was meaſured by nearneſs of degrees, not deſcent of birth, and on this Plea, though different from the Laws of England, as Bruce had formerly poſſeſſed himſelf of the Crown of Scotland; ſo on the ſame, though different from the Laws of Caſtile, did Philip the ſecond ground his claim to the Crown of Portugal. For being eldeſt ſon of Mary, the ſiſter of Henry the laſt King (and this was juſt King Edward's caſe to the Crown of France) he thought himſelf to be preferred before the Prince of Parma, and the Duke of Bragance, deſcended from the daughters of Edward the ſaid Kings brother; becauſe the eldeſt male of the Royal Blood, and nearer to the ſaid King Henry by one degree. In the purſuance of which title, as Philip openly avowed, that the Laws of Portugal were more favourable to him than the Laws of Caſtile: ſo in like caſe, the Laws of France might be more favourable to King Edward, than the Laws of England. In claims to Crowns, the Rules of Regal Succeſſion differ in many Countries; and in few Countries are the ſame with that of the Succeſſion into mean Eſtates: as may be proved by many particulars in the Realm of England, in which the Law of the Crown differeth very much from the Law of the Land; as in the Caſe of Parceners, the whole blood, (as our Lawyers call it) the Tenure of courteſie, and ſome others; were this a time and place fit for it. But to return again to France; Whether the Salique Law were in force or not, it made not much unto the prejudice of K. Edward the 3. though it ſerved Philip the Long to exclude the daughter of K. Lewis Hutin, and Charles the fair to do the like with the daughter of Philip; as it did Philip of Valoys, to diſpoſſeſs the whole Linage of K. Philip le Bel.

Machiavel accounteth this Salique Law to be a great happineſs to the French Nation, not ſo much in relation to the unfitneſs of Women to Govern (for therein ſome of them have gone beyond moſt men) but becauſe thereby the Crown of France is not endangered to fall into the hands of ſtrangers. Such men conſider not how great Dominions may by this means be incorporate to the Crown. They remember not how Maud the Empreſs being married to Geofry Earl of Anjou, Tourain, and Main, conveyed thoſe Countries to the Diadem of England, nor what rich and fertile Provinces were added to Spain, by the Match of the Lady Joan to Arch-Duke Philip: neither do they ſee thoſe great advantages of power and ſtrength which England now enjoyeth by the conjunction of Scotland, proceeding from a like marriage. Yet there is a ſaying in Spain, that as a man ſhall deſire to live in Italy, becauſe of the civility and ingenious natures of the People; and to dye in Spain, becauſe there the Catholick Religion is ſo ſincerely profeſſed: ſo he ſhould wiſh to be born in France, becauſe of the nobleneſs of that Nation, which never had any King but of their own Country.

The chief enemies to the French have been the Engliſh and Spaniards. The former had here great poſſeſſions, divers times plagued them, and took from them their Kingdom; but being called home by civil diſſentions, loſt all. At their departure, the French ſcoffingly asked an Engliſh Captain, When they would return: Who feelingly anſwered, When your ſins be greater than ours. The Spaniards began but of late with them, yet have they taken from them, Navarre, Naples, and Millain: they diſplanted them in Florida; poiſoned the Dauphine of Viennois (as it was generally conceived) murdered their Soldiers in cold blood, being taken priſoners in the Iſle of Tercera; and by their Faction raiſed even in France it ſelf, drave Henry the third out of Paris, and moſt of his other Cities; and at laſt cauſed him to be murdered by Jaques Clement, a Dominican Frier. The like they intended to his Succeſſor K. Henry the 4. whoſe coming to the Crown they oppoſed to their utmoſt power, and held a tedious War againſt him. Concerning which laſt War, when they ſided with the Duke of Mayenne, and the reſt of thoſe Rebels which called themſelves the Holy League (of which the D. of Guiſe was the Author) againſt the two Kings Henry the 3. and 4. a French Gentleman made this excellent alluſion. For being asked the cauſe of theſe civil broils, he replyed they were Spania and Mania; ſeeming by this anſwer to ſignifie Σπανία, penury, and Μανία, fury, which are indeed the cauſes of all inteſtine tumults: but covertly therein implying the King of Spain, and the Duke of Mayenne: ſince which time the French, upon the turn of Fortune,(notwithſtanding the croſs Marriages between the Kings of both Kingdoms, and their ſeveral Siſters) have had as great a hand upon the Spaniards; outing them by their plots and practices of the whole Kingdom of Portugal, and the Country of Catalogne in the main land of Spain it ſelf, and of many of the beſt parts of Artois, Hainalt, and other of the Belgick Provinces, by the force of Arms. So little conſtancy there is, either in the favours of Fortune, or the affection of great Princes, that no wiſe man can truſt the one, or depend ſafely on the other. For in the former times, as we read in Comines, there were no Princes more friendly than theſe two, the Kings of Caſtile and France being the neareſt confederate Princes in Chriſtendom. For their League was between King and King, Realm and Realm, Subject and Subject; which they were all bound under great curſes to keep inviolable. But of late times, eſpecially ſince the beginning of the Wars betwixt Charles the fifth, and Francis the firſt, for the Dukedom of Millain; there have not been greater animoſities, nor more implacable enmities betwixt any Nations, than betwixt France and Spain. Which ſeconded by the mutual jealouſies they have of each other, and the diverſity of Conſtellations under which they live; hath produced ſuch diſſimilitude betwixt them in all their ways, that there is not greater contrariety of temper, carriage, and affections, betwixt any two Nations in the world, than is between theſe Neighbours, parted no otherwiſe from one another, than by paſſable Hills. Firſt in the Actions of the Soul, the one Active and Mercurial, the other Speculative and Saturnine; the one ſociable and diſcourſive, the other reſerved and full of thought; the one ſo open, that you cannot hire him to keep a ſecret; the other ſo cloſe, that all the Rhetorick in the world cannot get it out of him. Next in their Faſhion and Apparel, the French wears his hair long, the Spaniard ſhort; the French goes thin and open to the very ſhirt, as if there were continual Summer, the Spaniard ſo wrapt up and cloſe, as if all were Winter; the French begins to button downward, and the Spaniard upwards; the laſt always conſtant in his Faſhion, the firſt intent ſo much on nothing as on new fancies of Apparel. Then for their Gate, the French walk faſt, as if purſued on an Arreſt, the Spaniard ſlowly as if newly come out of a Quartane Ague; the French go up and down in cluſters, the Spaniards but by two and two at the moſt; the French Lacqueys march in the Rere, and the Spaniſh always in the Van; the French ſings and danceth as he walks the ſtreets, the Spaniard in a grave and ſolemn poſture, as if he were going a Proceſſion. The like might be obſerved of their Tune, their Speech, and almoſt every paſſage in the life of man: for which I rather chuſe to refer the Reader to the ingenious James Howel's Book of Inſtructions for Travel, than inſiſt longer of it here. Only I add, that of the two ſo different humours, that of the Spaniards ſeems to be the more approvable. Inſomuch as the Neopolitans, Millanois, and Sicilians, who have had tryal of both Nations, chuſe rather to ſubmit themſelves to the proud and ſevere yoke of the Spaniards, than the luſts and inſolencies of the French, not ſufferable by men of even and well ballanced ſpirits. And poſſible enough it is, that ſuch of the Netherlands, as have of late been won to the Crown of France, will find ſo little comfort in the change of their Maſters; as may confirm the reſidue to the Crown of Spain, to which they naturally belong.

The chief Mountains of this Country, next to the Pyrenees which part France from Spain, the Jour or Jura which ſeparates it from Savoy and Switzerland; and the Vauge or Vogeſus, which divides it from Lorrein; are thoſe which Cæſar calleth Gebenna, Ptolomy Cimmeni, being the ſame which ſeparate Auvergne from Languedoc, called therefore the Mountains of Auvergne; the only ones of note which are peculiar to this Continent of France, which for the moſt part is plain and champain; the others before mentioned, being common unto this, with the bordering Provinces.

This Country is wonderfully ſtored with Rivers, the chief whereof, 1. Sequana or Seine, which ariſing in Burgundy, watering the Cities of Paris and Roan, and receiving into it nine navigable ſtreams, diſburdeneth it ſelf into the Britiſh Ocean. 2. Some, in Latin called Samona, which riſing near the Town of St. Quintin, firſt cutteth between Picardy and Artoys, afterwards paſſeth through the fair City of Amiens, and the goodly Town of Abbeville, and finally having received eight leſſer ſtreams, loſeth it ſelf in the ſame Sea alſo. 3. Legeris or Loyre, on which are ſeated Nantes, and Orleance. It riſeth about the Mountains of Auvergne, (being the greateſt in France) and having run 600 miles, and augmented his Chanel with the entertainment of 72 leſſer Rivulets, mingleth his ſweet waters with the brackiſh Aquitane Ocean. 4. Rhodanus, or the Rhoſne, which ſpringeth from the Alpes, three Dutch miles from the head of the Rhene, paſſeth by Lyons and Avignon; and having taken in thirteen leſſer Brooks, falleth into the Mediterranean Sea, not far from Arles. 5. The Soaſne, by the old Latins called Araris, which riſing out of the Mountain of Vogeſus or Vauge, in the borders of Lorrein and Alſatia, divideth the two Burgundies from each other; and falleth into the Rhoſne at the City of Lyons. 6. Garumna or the Garond, which iſſuing out of the Pyrenean Mountains, paſſing by Tholouſe and Burdeaux, and having ſwallowed up ſixteen leſſer Rivers (of which the Dordonne is the chief) diſburdeneth it ſelf into the Aquitane Ocean, near the Town of Blay: that part hereof which is betwixt the main Ocean, and the influx of the River Dordonne, being called the Giarronne. Of theſe it is ſaid proverbially, that the Seine is the richeſt, the Rhoſne the ſwifteſt, the Garond the greateſt, and the Loyre the ſweeteſt. And by theſe and many other Rivers this Kingdom is enriched with 34 excellent Havens, having all the properties of a good Harbour; that is to ſay, 1. Room, 2. Safety, 3. Eaſineſs of defence, 4. Reſort of Merchants.

As for ſo much of the Story hereof as concerneth the whole, it was firſt peopled, if we may give credit to Annius, (as I think we may not in this point) by Samothes the ſixth Son of Japhet (affirmed by them, and ſuch as adhere unto them, to be that Son of his, who in the Scripture is called Meſech) in the year of the world 1806. But thoſe which are better converſant in the courſe of Hiſtory, have utterly laid aſide this device of Annius. Even Functius, though a great Beroſian, doth confeſs ingenuouſly, Quis hic Samothes fuerit, incertum eſt, that it is unreſolved who this Samothes was. And Vignier a French Antiquary doth confeſs with Functius, Mais un ne ſcay quil il eſtoit, that no body can tell us who he was. They who have better ſtudied this point than Annius, derive the Gauls from Gomer, Japhet's eldeſt Son, whoſe offſpring were firſt called Gomerians, afterwards Cimmerians, at laſt Cimbri: firſt planted (as before was ſaid) in the Mountainous places of Albania, where the Mountains called Cimmerini long preſerved his memory, and after changing that unfruitful and unpleaſant dwelling for the Plains of Phrygia, wherein the City Cimmeris did retain ſomewhat of his name, in the times of Pliny. Afterwards his proceeded further in the leſſer Aſia, and in long tract of time filled Germany, Gaul, and Britain, with his numerous iſſues: the Gauls and Cimbri being clearly of the ſame Original, though known amongſt the Romans by two different names. From whence they had the names of Gauls, and Celtes, and Galatæ, hath been ſhewn before. It ſhall ſuffice us now to add, that being originally of the Cimbri, and having ſomewhat in them of the blood of Hercules; they proved a very valiant and warlike Nation, without whoſe love, no King could ſecure himſelf from eminent dangers. They were very ſparing in their diet, and uſed to fine any one that outgrew his Girdle. With theſe men the Romans fought at firſt for their own preſervation, rather than out of any hope by the conqueſt of them to improve either their fame or their Dominions. Inſomuch that when they had invaded Italy with a numerous Army, in favour of the Ciſalpine Galls, under the conduct of Aneroeſtus and Congelianus, two of their Kings, and pierced as far as Telamon a City of Tuſcany; the Romans thought they had done enough in diſcomfiting their Forces, and clearing their own Provinces of them; not holding it for a point of wiſdom to purſue them, or invade their Country; though by the conqueſt of Liguria: but few years before, they had enlarged their Dominions to the borders of it. But to enumerate more particularly their great atchievements in the Wars, theſe were they who under the conduct of Belloveſus, paſſing over the Alpes, conquered the neareſt parts of Italy, called afterwards Gallia Ciſalpina; and under that of Segoveſus, over-run all Germany, and following their ſucceſſes as far as Scythia, founded the potent Nation of the Celto-Scythæ. Theſe were the men, whoſe iſſue under the command of Brennus, diſcomfited the Romans, at the River Allia; ſacked the City, and beſieged the Capitol, An. M. 3577. V.C. 365. In which action they ſo terrified the Romans, that after their expulſion from Rome by Camillus, there was a Law made, that the Prieſts, though at all other times exempted from Military employments, ſhould be compelled to the War, if ever the Gauls came again. And finally, theſe were the men, who under the command of Belgius, and another Brennus, ranſacked Illyricum, Pannonia, Thrace, and Greece, in which they ſpoiled and plundered the Temple of Delphos; for which Sacriledge they were viſited with the Peſtilence. Such as ſurvived this Plague, went into Aſia, and there gave name to that Country now called Galatia; of whom thus Du Bartas:

> The ancient Gaul in roving every way,
> As far as Phœbus darts his Golden Ray;
> Seiz'd Italy, the World's proud Miſtreſs ſackt,
> Which rather Mars than Romulus compact.
> Then ſpoils Piſidia, Myſia doth enthral;
> And midſt of Aſia plants another Gaul.

Yet at laſt the Romans undertook the War, but not till they had conquered almoſt all the reſidue of the (then know) World. Attempted firſt by Fulvius Flaccus, a Roman Conſul, called in by the Maſſilienſes to aſſiſt them againſt the Salii their unquiet Neighbours, A.V.C. 628, that part hereof which afterwards was called Narbonenſis, being brought into the form of a Roman Province at the concluſion of the War againſt the Allobroges and Arverni, (undertaken on the like complaint of the Hedui) about five years after. Not totally ſubdued until the time of Julius Cæſar, and not eaſily then. For though the War was managed then by the ableſt Captain that ever the State of Rome gave life to; yet was it not more eaſily vanquiſhed by the valour and fortune of the Romans, than by want of good intelligence and correſpondence amongſt themſelves. Nor did they ſell their liberty ſo good cheap, as thoſe other Nations, with whom the Romans had to deal: Cæſar himſelf affirming, That he had ſlain 1192000 of them before they would ſubmit to the Roman yoak. But at the laſt they were brought under the power of Rome by whom the whole Country was divided into theſe four parts, viz. 1. Narbonenſis, called ſo from the City of Narbon, then a Roman Colony, containing Languedoc, Provence, Daulphine, and ſome part of Savoy, called alſo Braccata at the firſt conqueſt by the Romans, from the uſual habit of the people (reſembling the Mantles uſed by the Wild Iriſh) called in Latin Braccæ: attempted firſt by Fulvius Flaccus, in his War againſt the Salii, as before is ſaid; and finally ſubdued, A.V.C. 633, by Fabius Maximus, and Cn. Domitius Ænobarbus, in their War againſt the Allobroges, and their Confederates, before mentioned, about 70 years before the coming in of Julius Cæſar. 2. Aquitannica, ſo called from the City of Aquæ Auguſtæ (now D'Acqs, in Guienne) lying upon the Pyrenees, and the wide Ocean, which comprehendeth the Provinces of Gaſcoyn, Guienne, Xaintoygne, Limoſin, Quercu, Perigort, Berry, Burbonoys, and Anvergne; extending from the Pyrenees to the River Loyre, and conſequently ſtretching over all the middle of Gaul. 3. Celtica, ſo named from the valiant Nation of the Celtæ; (called alſo Lugdunenſis, from the City of Lyons; and Comata from the long hair worn amongſt this people) extending from the Loyre to the Britiſh Ocean, and comprehending the Provinces of Bretaigne, Normandy, Anjou, Tourin, Main, La Beauſſe, the Iſle of France, part of Champagne, the Dukedom of Burgundy, and the County of Lyonnoys. 4. Belgica, from the Belgæ, a potent Nation of that tract, taking up all the Eaſt parts of Gaul, viz. Picardy, the reſt of Champagne, the County of Burgundy, together with ſo much of Germany and the Netherlands, as lyeth on this ſide of the Rhene, belonging now unto the Empire and the Kings of Spain. In the new modelling of the Empire by Conſtantine the Great, Gaul was appointed for the ſeat of one of the four Præfecti Prætorio, deſigned for the four Quarters of it. His Title Præfectus Prætorio Galliarum; his Government extending over the Dioceſes of Gaul, Spain, and Britain: this Dioceſs of Gaul being caſt into ſeventeen Provinces, that is to ſay, Lugdunenſis Prima, 2 Secunda, 3. Tertia, 4. Quarta, 5. Belgica Prima, 6. Secunda, 7. Germania Prima, 8 Secunda, 9. Narbonenſis Prima, 10. Secunda, 11. Aquitania Prima, 12. Secunda, 13. Novempopulonia 14. Viennenſis, 15. Maxima Sequanorum, 16. Alpes Graiæ & Pœninæ, 17. Alpes Maritimæ. Of theſe ſeventeenth, Germania Prima & Secunda, all Belgica Prima, and a great part of Secunda, all that of the Alpes Graiæ & Pœninæ, and ſo much of Maxima Sequanorum, as lieth in Switzerland; are now diſmembred from the name and accompt of France. What principal Nations of the Gauls, and what Provinces of the preſent France, the reſt contained, ſhall be declared in our Survey of the particulars.

But long it ſtood not in this ſtate: For within ſixty years after the death of Conſtantine, during the Reigns of Honorius and Theodoſius, the Burgundians, a great and populous Nation, were called in by Stilico, Lieutenant to Honorius the Weſtern Emperour, to keep the borders of the Empire againſt the French; then ready with ſome other of the Barbarous Nations to invade the ſame. The Goths not long after by agreement with the ſame Honorius, leaving their hold in Italy, were veſted in Gaul Narbonoys, by the gift of that Emperour; with a good part of Tarraconenſis, one of the Provinces of Spain: Aquitain being after added, in regard of the ſervice they had done the Empire, in driving the Alani out of Spain, then likely to have made a great impreſſion on that Country. And in the reign of Valentinian the third, the French who had long hovered on the banks of the Rhene, taking advantage of the diſtractions of the Empire, ventured over the River; firſt made themſelves Maſters of Gaul-Belgick; and after, ſpread themſelves over all the reſt of the Provinces which had not been ſubdued by the Gothes and Burgundians; excepting a ſmall corner of Armorica, then poſſeſſed by the Britans. So that the Romans being outed of all the Country, it was divided between the Nations above mentioned, and that with more equality than could be imagined: The Gothes poſſeſſing all Aquitain, and Narbonenſis, containing now the Provinces of Provence, Languedock, Gaſcoigne, Guienne, Xantoigne, Poictou, Berry, Limouſin, Perigort, Quercu, and Avergne; the Burgundians having for their ſhare, the Alpine Provinces, together with Nivernois, Bourbon, Beau-Jolais, Forreſt, the Countries of Lyonois, La Breſſe, Daulphine, and both the Burgundies, from them ſo denominated. The reſt (except that part thereof which we now call Bretagne) was poſſeſſed by the French, who in ſhort time repulſed the Viſigothes, or Weſtern-Gothes, (then buſie in the Conqueſt of Spain) out of all the Provinces of the Roman Aquitain, by the Valour of Clouis the Great, their firſt Chriſtian King, before they could challenge a Preſcription of 60 years. Nor was it long, before Provence alſo was reſigned to Theodorick the French King, of Mets by Amalaſunta, Qu. of the Oſtro-Gothes, or Gothes of Italy; nothing being left unto that Nation, of all their Gallick Conqueſts, but Languedock only. In which reſpect, the Gothiſh Provinces of Gall, (except Provence only) together with ſo much of the Burgundians which was after laid to Weſt-France, ſhall paſs in the account of the French part of this Country; the reſt of the Burgundian Conqueſts which lye within the bounds of the Modern France, (having Provence added to them) ſhall be conſidered by themſelves in the deſcription and affairs of the Kingdom of Burgundy; a diſtinct Realm from that of France, and not reduced but by piece meal, and by ſeveral Titles, (and yet not wholly ſo neither) to the Crown thereof. Finally, of the French themſelves, and the ſucceſſion of their Kings, we will ſpeak at laſt, when we have brought all the chief parts and Provinces of this flouriſhing Country into their poſſeſſion. The principal Provinces are, 1. France, ſpecially ſo called, 2. Champagne, 3. Picardy, 4. Normandy, 5. Bretagne, 6. The Eſtates of Anjou, with its members, 7. La Beauſſe, 8. Nivernois, 9. The Dukedom of Bourbon, with the Provinces dependant on it; being all (excepting Bretagne) the firſt acqueſts of the French. Then follow the chief Provinces of the Gothiſh Kingdom; that is to ſay, 10. Berry, 11. Poictou, 12. Limoſin, 13. Perigort, and 14. Quercu, 15. Aquitain, with the members of it; and 16. Languedoc: and laſt of all, the Burgundian Kingdom; of which there now remain in France, the Counties of 17. Provence, 18. Daulphine, 19. La Breſſe, 20. Lionois, 21. The Dutchy, and 22. the County of Burgundy, 23. The Iſlands in the Aquitain, and Gallick Ocean, in the cloſe of all. Of ſome of which, La Nove, a French Author, hath paſſed this cenſure: The men of Berry are Leachers, they of Tourein, Thieves; they of Languedoc, Traytors; they of Provence, Atheiſts; they of Rhemes (or Champagne) ſuperſtitious; they of Normandy, inſolent; they of Picardy proud, & ſic de cæteris. But here we are to underſtand, that all theſe Provinces (though paſſing by the name and account of France) are not under the Command of the French King; the Iſles of Jarſey and Guernzey, being poſſeſſed by the Engliſh; the Counties of Burgundy and Charolois, by the King of Spain; the Dutchy of Bar, belonging to the Dukes of Lorrein; the Principality of Orange, to the Houſe of Naſſaw; and Avignon, to the Popes of Rome. And on the other ſide, the French Kings are poſſeſſed of ſome Towns and Cities, not lying within the bounds of France, as the Imperial Cities of Mets, Toul, and Verdun; lying within the Dukedom of Lorrein, the Fort and Paſs of Pignerolle, in the Dukedom of Savoy, and the Port of Monaco, in Liguria; Baſe Navarre, in Spain; not to ſay any thing of their late acqueſts in Spain and Flanders, which I look not on as parts of the French Dominions.

FRANCE, ſpecially ſo called.

THE firſt place which the Franks, or French, had for their fixt Habitation, was by that People honoured with the name of FRANCE; the firſt green Turf of Gallick ground, by which they took livery and ſeiſin of all the reſt. A Province now bounded on the Eaſt with Champagne, on the North with Normandy, on the Weſt and South, with La Beauſſe. To difference it from the main Continent of France, it is called the Iſle of France, as being circled almoſt round with ſeveral Rivers; that is to ſay, the Oiſe on the North, the Eure on the Weſt, the Velle on the Eaſt, and a Vein-riveret of the Sein, towards the South. A Country not ſo large as many of the French Provinces; but ſuch as hath given name unto all the reſt; it being the Fate of many ſmall, but puiſſant Provinces, to give their name to others which are greater than they, if conquered and brought under by them. For, thus we ſee the little Province of Poland, to have maſtered and given name to the Mazovii, Pruteni, and other Nations of Sarmatia Europæa, as that of Moſco, to the Provinces of Aſiatica. And thus have thoſe of Sweden conquered and denominated almoſt the great Peninſula of Scandia, whereof it is one of the ſmalleſt Provinces. And thus this Iſland, being the Seat-Royal of the French, in Gallia, gave name to all the reſidue of it, as they made it theirs. A Country generally ſo fruitful and delectable, (except in Gaſtinois) that the very Hills thereof are equal to the Valleys in moſt places of Europe: but the Vale of Montmorency (wherein Paris ſtandeth) ſcarce is to be fellowed in the World. An argument whereof may be, That when the Dukes of Berry, Burgundy, and their Confederates, beſieged that City with an Army of 100000 men, neither the Aſſailants without, nor the Citizens within, found any ſcarcity of Victuals; and yet the Citizens, beſides Souldiers, were reckoned at 500000.

It was formerly part of the Province of Belgica ſecunda, & Lugdunenſis quarta; the chief inhabitants thereof being the Pariſii, the Bellovaci, and the Silvanectes: and is now divided into four parts; that is to ſay, the Dukedom of Valois, 2. Gaſtinois, 3. Heurepoix, and that which is properly called the Iſle of France; by ſome, the Provoſte, or County of Paris.

1. Dukedom or County of VALOIS, lyeth under Picardy: the principal Cities of it, 1. Senlis, (in Latin, Silvanectum) a Biſhops See. 2. Compeigns, (Compendium) ſeated on the River Oiſe, a retiring place of the French Kings for Hunting, and other Country pleaſures. 3. Beauvois, the chief City of the Bellovaci, by Ptolomy called Cæſaromagus; a fair, large, well-traded Town; from which the Country round about hath the name of Beauvoiſin. The Patrimony, in former times, of Roger, the third Son of Theobald, the ſecond Earl of Blais, and younger Brother of Odon, the firſt Earl of Champagne, who enjoyed it with the Title of Earl of Beauvois:

vois; and at his death, gave it for ever to the Biſhops hereof: for anciently this City was a See Epiſcopal; the Biſhop whereof is one of the twelve Peers of France. Philip, one of the Biſhops here in times ſucceeding, a Military man, and one that had much damnified the Engliſh Borders, was fortunately taken by King Richard the Firſt. The Pope being made acquainted with his impriſonment, but not the cauſe of it, wrote in his behalf unto the King, as for an Eccleſiaſtical perſon, and one of his beloved Sons. The King returned unto the Pope the Armour which the Biſhop was taken in, and theſe words engraven on the ſame, Vide an hæc ſit tunica filii tui, vel non; being the words which Jacobs Children ſpake unto him, when they preſented him with the Coat of their Brother Joſeph: which the Pope viewing, ſwore, That it was rather the Coat of a Son of Mars, than a Son of the Church: and ſo left him wholly to the Kings pleaſure. 4. Clermont, a Town of good note in the County of Beauvoiſin; memorable for giving the Title of Earl of Clermont, to Robert the fifth Son of the King St. Lewis, before his marriage with the Daughter and Heir of Bourbon: afterwards, to the eldeſt Sons of that Princely Family: and finally, to Catharine de Medices, created Counteſs of Clermont and Boulogne, at her marriage with Henry Duke of Orleans, Succeſſor to King Francis the firſt, in the Realm of France. 5. Luzarch, a Town belonging to the Count of Soiſſons. 6. Brenonville, 7. St. Loup, on the Confines of Picardy, ſo called from a Monaſtery dedicated to St. Lupus, Biſhop of Troys in Champagne, ſent into Britain with St. Germanus, to ſuppreſs the Pelagian Hereſies, which were there beginning. But of this part of France, nothing more obſervable, than that it gave denomination to the Royal Family of the French Kings, (13 in number) from hence entituled de Valois: beginning in Philip de Valois, Anno 1328, and ending in Henry the third, Anno 1589. As for the Earls hereof, (from whom that adjunct or denomination had its firſt Original) the firſt who had the Title of Earl of Valois, was Charles, the ſecond Son of Philip the third, in right of his Wife; Earl of Anjou alſo: after whoſe death, it deſcended upon Philip de Valois, his eldeſt Son, who carried the Crown of France from our Edward the third. On his aſſuming of the Crown, it fell to Lewis his ſecond Brother; and he deceaſing without iſſue, Anno 1391, to Lewis Duke of Orleans, Son of Charles the Fifth; amongſt the Titles of which Houſe, it lay dormant, till the expiring of that Line in King Lewis the twelfth; and lately given unto the Monſieur, or Duke of Orleans, Brother to Lewis the thirteenth, and Uncle to K. Lewis the fourteenth, now reigning, upon the firſt reconciliation made betwixt him and his Brother; adding thereby to his Eſtate, no leſs than 10000 pounds Sterling of yearly Rents, which make up 100000 Franks or Livres, in the French accompt. I only add, that Charles, the firſt Earl of this Family, as he was the Son of Philip the third, Brother of Philip the fourth, ſirnamed the Fair; and Father of Philip de Valois: ſo was he Uncle to Lewis Hutin, Philip the Long, and Charles the Fair, all in their order Kings of France. In which regard it was ſaid of him, That he was the Son, Brother, Father, and Uncle of Kings; yet no King himſelf.

2. The ſecond part of this Province, is called HEUREPOIX; beginning at the little Bridge of Paris, on the River of Sein, and going up along the River, as far as the River of Verine; which divides it from Gaſtinois. The chief Towns of it are, 1. Charenton, three Miles from Paris, where the French Proteſtants of that City, have their Church for religious exerciſes, it being not permitted them to hold their Aſſemblies in any Walled Cities, or Garriſon Towns, for fear of any ſudden ſurprize, which ſo great a multitude might eaſily make. Which Church (or Temple, as they call it) being burnt down by the hot-headed Pariſians, on the news of the Duke of Mayennes death, ſlain at the Siege of Montalban, Anno 1622, was preſently re-edified by the command of the Duke of Mombazon, then Governour of the Iſle of France, at the charge of the State: to let thoſe of the Reformed Party underſtand that it was their Diſobedience, and not their Religion, which cauſed the King to arm againſt them. 2. Corbeil, ſeated on the confluence of Sein and Eſſons. 3. Moret, which gives the Title of an Earl to one of the natural Sons of Henry the Fourth, begotten on the Daughter and Heir of the former Earl. 4. Melun, by Cæſar called Melodunum, the principal of this Heurepoix, and the ſeat of the Bailiff for this Tract. Here is alſo in this part the Royal Palace of Fountainbleau, ſo called from the many fair Springs and Fountains amongſt which it ſtandeth; but otherwiſe ſeated in a ſolitary and woody Country, fit for Hunting only; and for that cauſe, much viſited by the French Kings in their times of leiſure; and beautified with ſo much coſt by King Henry the Fourth, that it is abſolutely the ſtatelieſt and moſt magnificent Pile of Building in all France.

3. GASTINOIS, the moſt dry and barren part of this Province, but rich enough, if compared with other places; lieth between Paris, and the Country of Orleanoys. The chief places of it are, 1. Eſtampes, in the middle way betwixt Paris and Orleans, on the very edge of it, towards La Beauſſe, a fair large Town, having in it five Churches, and one of them a Colledge of Chanoins, with the ruines of an ancient Caſtle; which, together with the Walls and demoliſhed Fortifications of it, ſhew it to have been of great importance in the former times. Given, with the Title of an Earl, by Charles Duke of Orleans, then Lord hereof, to Richard, the third Son of John of Montford, Duke of Bretagne, in marriage with his Siſter the Lady Marguerette; from which Marriage iſſued Francis Earl of Eſtampes, the laſt Duke of Bretagne. 2. Montleberry, famous for the battel betwixt King Lewis the eleventh, and Charles Earl of Charolois, (after Duke of Burgundy) in which both ſides ran out of the field, and each proclaimed it ſelf the Victor. It ſtandeth in the road betwixt Paris and Eſtampes. And ſo doth, 3. Caſtres, of the bigneſs of an ordinary Market-Town; not to be mentioned in this place, but for a Chamber or Branch of the Court of Parliament here ſetled by King Henry the Fourth, for the uſe and benefit of his Subjects of the Reformed Religion; in Latin called Camera Caſtrenſis. 4. Nemours, upon the River of Loyre, the chief of Gaſtinoys in name, but not in beauty, (wherein inferiour to Eſtampes) a Town which hath given the Title of Duke to many eminent perſons of France. Here is alſo in this part, the County of Rochfort, and the Towns of 1. Milly, 2. Montargis, &c. More there occurreth not worth the noting, in this part of the Country, but that being part of the poſſeſſions of Hugh the Great Conſtable of France, and Earl of Paris. It was given by him, together with the Earldom of Anjou, to Geoffry, ſirnamed Gryſegonelle, a right Noble Warrier, and a great ſtickler in behalf of the Houſe of Anjou, then aiming at the Crown it ſelf, which at laſt they carried. Continued in his Line till the time of Fulk the ſecond, (the fifth Earl of Anjou of this Family) who gave it back again to King Philip the firſt, that by his help he might poſſeſs himſelf of the Earldom of Anjou, from his part wherein he was excluded by his elder Brother. Never ſince that, diſmembred from the Crown of France, in Fact or Title.

4. But the great glory of this Province, is that which is more properly called the ISLE OF FRANCE, and ſometimes κατ' ἐξοχὴν, the Iſle, cauſed by the Circlings and Embracements of the Rivers of Sein and Marn; the abſtract of the whole Beauties and Glories of France, which in this rich and pleaſant Valley are ſummed up together.

Chief places in it, 1. S. German, ſeated on the aſcent of an Hill, ſeven miles from Paris, down the water; a pretty neat and handſom Town, honoured with one of the faireſt Palaces of the French Kings; which being built (like Windſor) on the top of a fine Mountainet on the Rivers ſide; affordeth an excellent proſpect over all the Country. The excellent Water-works herein, have been deſcribed on occaſion of thoſe of Trivoli, a Town of the Popes in Champagna di Roma, ſo much extolled by the Italians. It was firſt built by Charles the fifth, ſirnamed the Wiſe; beautified by the Engliſh when they were poſſeſſed of this Country: but finally, re edified and enlarged by King Henry the Fourth, who brought it into that Magnificence in which now we ſee it. It took name from S. German, Biſhop of Auxerre, Companion with S. Lupus before mentioned, in the Britiſh Journey againſt Pelagius. 2. Poiſſie, upon the ſame River, or rather on the confluence of it, and the Marn which falleth into the Sein; ſituate not far from S. Germans, a Bailiwick belonging to the Provoſt of Paris, and one of his ſeven Daughters, as they uſe to call them. 3. Chantilly, the chief Seat of the Dukes of Montmorency, the ancienteſt and moſt noble Family of all Chriſtendom, whoſe Anceſtors were the firſt fruits of the Goſpel in this part of Gaul, and uſed to ſtile themſelves, Les primiers Chriſtiens, & plus veilles Barons de la France, i.e. The firſt Chriſtians, and moſt ancient Barons of France. A Family that hath yielded unto France more Admirals, Conſtables, Marſhals, and other like Officers of Power, than any three in all the Kingdom; now moſt unhappily extinct in the perſon of Henry the laſt Duke, executed by the command of the late Cardinal of Richlieu, for ſiding with the Monſieur (now Duke of Orleans) againſt King Lewis the 13. his Brother. The Arms of which illuſtrious and moſt noble Family, (for I cannot let it paſs without this honour) were Or, a Croſs Gules, cantoned with ſixteen Alerions Azure, four in every Canton. What theſe Allerions are, we ſhall ſee in Lorrein: take we notice now, that from the great poſſeſſions which this Noble Family had in all this Tract, it was, and is ſtill called the Vale of Montmorency. 4. S. Denis, ſome three miles from Paris, ſo called of a Monaſtery built here by Dagobert, King of France, about the year 640, in memory of S. Denis, or Dionyſe, the firſt Biſhop of Paris, martyred (on Mont-martyr, an Hill adjoining) in the time of Domitian. Some of the French Kings, becauſe it lay ſo near to Paris, beſtowed a Wall upon the Town, now not defenſible; nor otherwiſe of any conſideration, but for a very fair Abby of Benedictines, and therein the Sepulchres of many of the French Kings and Princes: neither for Workmanſhip nor Coſt, able to hold compariſon with thoſe at Weſtminſter. But being the Sepulture of their Kings, the French men uſe to ſay facetiouſly, that to this place none of their Kings do ever go with a good will. In this Town alſo is the Church of S. Maclon, where the Kings, with a Faſt of Nine days, and other Penances, uſe to receive the famous Gift of healing the Kings-Evil, with nothing but a Touch: a Priviledge enjoyed only by thoſe Kings, and the Kings of England. 5. St. Cloud, (or the Town of St. Claudus) unfortunately memorable for the Murder of King Henry the third, who lying here at a Siege of Paris, from whence he was compelled to flye by the Guiſian Faction, was wretchedly aſſaſinated by Jaques Clement, a Monk; employed in that ſervice by the Heads of the Holy League. 6. PARIS, the chief City not of this Iſle alone, but of all the Kingdom. By Cæſar, and Ammianus Marcellinus, called Civitas Pariſiorum, from the Pariſians, a Nation of Gaul Celtick, whoſe chief City it was: by Strabo called Lutetia, Lucotetia by Ptolomy, q[illegible]i in Luto ſita, as ſome conjecture from the dirtineſs of the ſoil in which it ſtandeth. A ſoil ſo dirty, (as commonly all rich Countries are) that though the Streets hereof are paved, (which they affirm to be the work of King Philip Auguſtus) yet every little daſh of rain, makes them very ſlippery; and worſe than ſo, yields an ill ſavour to the noſe. The Proverb is, Il deſtaint comme la fauge de Paris, it ſtaineth like the Dirt of Paris: but the Author of the Proverb might have changed the word, and turned it to Il peut, &c. It ſtinketh like the Dirt of Paris: no ſtink being more offenſive than thoſe ſtreets in Summer. It is in compaſs about eight miles, of an Orbicular form, pleaſantly ſeated on the diviſions of the Sein: a fair, large, and capacious City, but far ſhort of the brags which the French make of it. It was thought in the time of King Lewis the Eleventh, to contain 500000 people of all ſorts and ages; which muſt be the leaſt: the ſame King at the entertainment of the Spaniſh Ambaſſadors, ſhewing 140000 of this City in Arms, all in a Livery of red Caſſocks, with white Croſſes. A gallant ſight, though poſſibly the one half of them were not fit for ſervice: the Pariſians being for the moſt part an effeminate people, wanton enough, and apt to mutiny upon all occaſions; but little addicted to the Wars, as appears plainly by their ſuffering K. Henry the Fourth, to hold S. Dennis ſo long againſt them, with no conſiderable Garriſon, and by that means to ſhut them up from all relief on that ſide of their City. And yet their multitudes, which ſince the time of that King, muſt needs be very much encreaſed, are the chief ſtrength of the Town; the Fortifications being weak, and of ill aſſurance: Inſomuch, that when once a Pariſian bragged, that their Town was never taken by force; an Engliſh man returned this Anſwer, That it was, becauſe on the leaſt diſtreſs it did uſe to capitulate. It is ſeated (as before was ſaid) on the River Sein, which ſerveth it with Boats and Barges, (as the Thames Weſtward doth London) the River ebbing and flowing no higher than Pont del' Arche, 75 miles diſtant from the City.

We may divide it into four parts; The Town, the City, the Univerſity, and the Suburbs. La Ville, or that part of it which is called The Town, is ſituate on the North ſide of the River; the biggeſt, but pooreſt part of the Four; inhabited by Artizans and Tradeſmen of the meaner ſort. In this part are the Hoſtel de Ville, or the Guild-Hall, for the uſe of the Citizens: the Arſenal, or Armory, for the uſe of the King; and that Magnificent Building called the Place-Royal, new built and beautified at the charges of King Henry the Fourth, for Tilts and Turnaments, and ſuch Solemnities of State. And in this alſo, near the banks of the River, ſtands the Kings Palace of the L'ouvre; a place of more Fame than Beauty; and nothing anſwerable to the report which goes commonly of it. A Building of no elegance or uniformity; nor otherwiſe remarkable, but for the vaſt Gallery begun by King Henry the Fourth, and the fine Gardens of the Tuilleries adjoining to it. The City is that part of it which takes up the circumference of a little Iſland, made by the embracements of the Sein; joined to the other parts on both ſides, by ſeveral Bridges. The Paris or Lutetia of the old Gauls, was no more than this, the Town on the one ſide, and the Univerſity on the other, being added ſince. This is the richeſt part, and beſt built of the whole Compoſitum. And herein ſtand the Palace,or Courts of Parliament; the Chappel of the Holy Ghoſt,and the Church of Noſtre-dame, being the Cathedral; of ancient times a Biſhop-See, but of late raiſed unto the dignity of a Metropolitan. On the South-ſide of the River lieth that part which is called the Univerſity,from an Univerſity here founded by Charles the Great, An. 792,at the perſwaſion of Alcuinus an Engliſh-man, the Scholar of Venerable Bede,and the firſt Profeſſor of Divinity here. It conſiſteth of 52 Colledges or places for ſtudy, whereof 40 are of little uſe; and in the reſt, the Students live at their own charges, as in the Halls at Oxon, or Inns of Court or Chancery at London; there being no Endowment laid unto any of them, except the Sorbonne, and the Colledge of Navarre. Which poſſibly may be the reaſon why the Scholars here are generally ſo debauched and inſolent: a ruder rabble than the which,are hardly to be found in the Chriſtian world. Senſible of this miſchief, and the cauſe thereof, Francis the Firſt, whom the French call the Father of the Muſes, at the perſwaſion of Reuchline and Budæus, thoſe great reſtorers of the Greek and Hebrew Languages, intended to have built a Colledge for 600 Students, and therein to have placed Profeſſors for all Arts and Sciences, endowing it with 50000 Crowns of yearly Revenue, for their conſtant maintenance. But it went no further than the purpoſe; prevented by the inevitable ſtroak of death, from purſuance of it. In bigneſs this is little inferiour to the Town of Ville, and not ſuperiour to it for wealth and beauty; few men of any wealth and credit, affecting to inhabit in a place of little Government. The fourth and laſt part, is the Suburbs, (or the Faux-bourgs, as the French call them) the principal whereof is that of S. Germans, (ſo called from an ancient Abby of that name) the beſt part of the whole Body of Paris, for large Streets, ſweet Air, choice of the beſt Company, magnificent Houſes, pleaſant Gardens, and finally, for all thoſe Contentments which are wanting commonly in the throngs of moſt populous Cities.

Here are alſo in this Iſle, the Royal Houſe of Madrit, a retiring-place of the Kings, built by King Francis the Firſt, at his return from his impriſonment in Spain. 2. Ruall, a ſweet Country-houſe of the late Queen Mothers. And, 3. Boys de Vincennes,remarkable for the untimely death of our Henry the Fifth. I add this only,and ſo end; That this Iſle hath always followed the Fortune of the Crown of France; never diſmembred from the Soveraignty of the ſame, though ſometimes out of the poſſeſſion of the French Kings; as when the Engliſh kept it againſt Charles the 7. and the Leaguers againſt Henry the 4. A thing which hardly can be ſaid of any other of the Provinces of this flouriſhing Country: the French Kings of the race of Merovee, and Charles the Great, alienating from the Crown, many goodly Territories; contented only with a bare and titulary Homage from them. By means whereof, more than three parts of the whole Kingdom was ſhared firſt amongſt the great Princes of the French; which afterwards, by inter-marriages, and other titles, fell into the hands of ſtrangers; moſt of them enemies of this Crown, and jealous of the Grandeur and Power thereof. Which kept the French Kings generally very low and poor, till by Arms, Confiſcations, Marriages, and ſuch other means, they reduced all theſe Rivulets to their firſt and original Chanel; as ſhall be ſhewn in the purſuance of this Work.

2. CHAMPAGNE.

CHAMPAGNE is bounded on the North with Picardie; on the South, with the Dukedom of Burgundie; on the Eaſt, with Lorrein; on the Weſt, with France ſpecially ſo called.

The Country, for the moſt part, very plain, and pleaſant, (whence it had the name) adorned with ſhady Woods,and delectable Meadows; fruitful in Corn, and not deficient in Wines. The Seat, in elder times, of the Tricaſſes, Catalauni, Remi, the Lingones, and Senones, (of which laſt Tribe or Nation, were thoſe Ciſalpine Gauls who ſacked Rome under the Conduct of Brennus) part of them, Celts; and part, Belgians; and ſo accordingly diſpoſed of: the Belgians, into the Province of Belgica ſecunda, the Metropolis whereof was Rhemes: the Celts into Lugdunenſis quarta, of which the Metropolis was Sens; both Cities ſeated in this Country. The chief Rivers of it, 1. Bloiſe, 2. Marne, 3. Yonne, 4. Sault.

Chief places of that part hereof which belonged to Belgica ſecunda,or the Province of Rhemes, are 1. Chalon, on the River Marne, an Epiſcopal See, Suffragan to the Arch-biſhip of Rhemes; called anciently, Civitas Catalaunorum. 2. Joinville, ſituate on the ſame River, belonging to the Houſe of Guiſe; the eldeſt Son of which Family, is called Prince of Joinville: in the Caſtle whereof, ſeated upon an high and inacceſſible Hill, is to be ſeen the Tomb of Claude, the firſt Duke of Guiſe; the richeſt Monument, of that kind, in all France. The Barony of William Lord Joinville, third Son of Euſtace,Earl of Boulogne, and of Ida his Wife, who brought the Dukedom of Bouillon for her Dower or Portion; and Brother of Godfrey and Baldwin, Dukes of Lorrein, and Kings of Jeruſalem. But, whether it came to him by the gift of his Mother, as part of the Dukedom of Bouillon, or that he had it by his Wife,a daughter of Theobald Earl of Champagne, I am not able to determine. Left by him after his deceaſe, to Godfrey his youngeſt Son (Thierry his eldeſt Son, ſucceeding his Uncle Baldwin in the Dukedom of Lorrein): upon the failure of whoſe line, it fell unto the Dukes of Lorrein, as next heirs thereof, and ſo unto the Dukes of Guiſe, as deſcended from them. 3. St. Urben, a Town of the Territory of Joinville, from which it is about two leagues diſtance. 4. Pierre-Fort,defended with a Caſtle of ſo great ſtrength, that in the Civil-Wars of France, An. 1614, it endured 1100 ſhot of Cannon, and yet was not taken. 5. Vaſſey,upon the River Bloiſe,a Town of as ſweet a ſituation, as moſt in France. Theſe laſt, ſituate in that part of Champagne which is called Vallage: ſo named, as I conceive, from the River Vaſle. 6. Vitrey, upon the confluence of the Sault & Marne, the chief Town and Balliage of that part which is named Parthois (Ager Pertenſis in the Latin);ſo called of 7. Perte,another Town thereof, but now not ſo eminent. 8. Chaumont, upon the Marne, the chief Town of Baſſigni;and ſtrengthned with a Caſtle mounted on a craggy Rock. 9. Dedior,or St. Deſier, (Fanum Sancti Deſiderii) royally fortified after it had been ruined, An. 1544. 10. Rhemes (Durocortorum Rhemorum) an Arch-biſhops See, who is one of the Twelve Peers of France, ſituate on the River of Vaſle. At this City, the Kings of France are moſt commonly crown'd,that ſo they may enjoy the Unction of a ſacred Oyl, kept in the Cathedral Church hereof; which, as they ſay, came down from Heaven, and never decreaſeth. How true this is, may be eaſily ſeen,in that Gregory of Tours, who is ſo prodigal of his Miracles,makes no mention of it,but ſpecially (for Argumentum ab authoritate negativè parum valet) ſince the Legend informeth us, that this holy Oil was ſent from Heaven at the anointing of Clovis, the firſt Chriſtian King of the French. Whereas Du Haillan, one of their moſt judicious Writers, affirmeth Pepin, the Father of Charles the Great, to have been their firſt anointed King; and that there was none de la primiere lignee oinct, ny ſacre à Rhemes, ny allieurs, none of the firſt or Merovignian line of Kings, had been anointed at Rhemes, or elſewhere. But ſure it is (let it be true or falſe, no matter) that the French do wonderfully reverence this (their ſacred) Oil; and fetch it with great ſolemnity from the Church in which it is kept. For it is brought by the Prior, ſitting on a white ambling Palfrey, and attended by his whole Convent; the Arch-biſhop hereof, (who by his place is to perform the Ceremonies of the Coronation) and ſuch Biſhops as are preſent, going to the Church-doors, to meet it, and leaving for it, with the Prior, ſome competent pawn; and on the other ſide, the King, when it is brought unto the Altar, bowing himſelf before it with great humility. But to return unto the Town; it took this name from the Rhemi, once a potent Nation of theſe parts, whoſe chief City it was; and now an Univerſity of no ſmall eſteem: in which, among other Colledges, there is one appointed for the education of young Engliſh Fugitives. The firſt Seminary for which purpoſe, (I note this only by the way) was erected at Doway, An. 1568. A ſecond at Rome, by Pope Gregory the thirteenth. A third at Valladolid in Spain, by K. Philip the ſecond. A fourth in Lovaine, a Town of Brabant: And a fifth, here (ſo much do they affect the gaining of the Engliſh to the Romiſh Church) by the Dukes of Guiſe. 11. Ligni, upon the River Sault.

In that part of it which belonged to Lugdunenſis quarta, or the Province of Sens, the places of chief note are, 1. Sens, Civitas Senonum in Antoninus, anciently the Metropolis of that Province, by conſequence the See of an Archbiſhop alſo. The Country hereabouts called Le Paris Senonis, was part of the habitation of the ancient Senones, ſome of which paſſing over the Alpes, with other Nations of the Gauls, planted thoſe parts which afterwards were for long time called Gallia Ciſalpina. Of which the Senones were the moſt valiant, though far leſs in numbers; as thoſe which had not only the honour of ſacking Rome, but of managing an offenſive War againſt that State, for the ſpace of 100 years and upwards. What afterwards became of them, hath been ſhewn already when we were in Lombardy. 2. Langres, or Civitas Lingonum, (by Ptolomy called Audomaturum (ſituate in the Confines of Burgundy, not far from the fountain or ſpring-head of the Seine: the See of a Biſhop, who is one of the Twelve Peers of France. 3. Troys, Civitas Tricaſſium, ſeated on the Seine; a fair, ſtrong and well-traded City, honoured with the title of the Daughter of Paris; a See Epiſcopal, and counted the chief of Champagne, next Rhemes. A City of great note in our French and Engliſh Hiſtories, for the meeting of Charles the ſixth, and Henry the fifth, Kings of France and England; in which it was agreed, That the ſaid King Henry, eſpouſing Katherine Daughter of that King, ſhould be proclaimed Heir apparent of the Kingdom of France; into which he ſhould ſucceed on the ſaid King's death, and be the Regent of the Realm for the time of his life, with divers other Articles, beſt ſuiting with the will and honour of the Conquerour. 4. Provence, (by Cæſar called Agendicum) ſeated upon the Seine, in a pleaſant Country, abounding in all fragrant flowers, but eſpecially with the ſweeteſt Roſes, which being tranſplanted into other Countries, are called Provence Roſes. 5. Meaux, ſeated on the River Marne, anciently the chief City of the Meldi, whom Pliny, & others of the old Writers, mention in this Tract; now honoured with a Biſhops See, and neighboured by 6. Monceaux, beautified with a magnificent Palace built by Katharine de Medices, Queen-Mother of the three laſt Kings of the houſe of Valois. 7. Montereau, a ſtrong Town on the confluence of the Seine & the Yonne. 8. Chaſteau-Thierri, (Caſtrum Theodorici, as the Latins call it) ſituate on the River Marne. Theſe five laſt, ſituate in that part of Champagne which lyeth next to France ſpecially ſo called; known of long time by the name of Brie: which being the firſt or chief poſſeſſion of the Earls of Champagne, occaſioned them to be ſometimes called Earls of Brie, and ſometimes Earls of Brie and Champagne. Add here, 9. Auxerre, in former time a City of the Dukedom of Burgundy, but now part of Champagne; of which more hereafter. And 10. Fontenay, a ſmall Town in Auxerrois, in the very borders of this Province; memorable for the great battel fought near unto it, An. 841, between the Sons and Nephews of Ludovicus Pius, for their Father's Kingdoms: in which ſo many thouſands were ſlain on both ſides, that the Forces of the French Empire were extreamly weakned; and had been utterly deſtroyed in purſuit of this unnatural War, if the Princes of the Empire had not mediated a Peace between them; allotting unto each, ſome part of that vaſt Eſtate, diſmembred by that means into the Kingdoms of Italy, France, Germany, Lorein, & Burgundy; never ſince brought into one hand, as they were before.

Adjoining unto Champagne alſo, where it looks towards Lorrein, lies the Country and Dutchy of BAR; belonging to the Dukes of Lorrein, but held by them in chief of the Kings of France. The Country commonly called BARROIS, environed for the moſt part with the two ſtreams of the River Marne; of which, the one riſing in the edge of Burgundy, and the other in the borders of Lorrein, do meet together at Chalons a City of Champagne. Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Bar le Duc, ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from Bar on the River Seine, and Bar upon the River Albi; a well fortified Town. 2. La Motte, 3. Ligni, 4. Arqu, of which nothing memorable, but that they are the chief of this little Dukedom. Of what antiquity this Dukedom is, and by whom firſt founded and made an abſolute Eſtate, I am yet to ſeek; though probable it is, that it might take its firſt riſe (as many other petit Signeuries did) out of the ruine & diſmembring of the Kingdom of Lorrein, or otherwiſe might be erected by the Earls Palatines of Champagne, out of ſome part of that Eſtate. But whether it were ſo or not, certain it is, that it came firſt to the preſent houſe of Lorrein, by the gift of Rene Duke of Anjou, and titular King of Naples, Sicil, &c. who ſucceed in it in the right of Yoland, or Violant, his Mother, Daughter of Don John the firſt King of Aragon, and of Yoland or Violant, the heir of Bar; and dying gave the ſame, together with the Towns of Lambeſque, and Orgon, to Rene Duke of Lorrein, his Nephew, by the Lady Violant his Daughter. From this Rene, it was taken by Lewis the 11. who having put a Garriſon into Bar, repaired the Walls, and cauſed the Arms of France to be ſet on the Gates thereof. Reſtored again by Charles the 8. at his going to the Conqueſt of Naples: to buy him out by that means, (if I gueſs aright) of his pretenſions to that Kingdom, which were fair and ſpecious; ſince which time quietly enjoyed by the Dukes of Lorrein, till the year 1633, when ſeized on by Lewis the 13. upon a Judgment and Arreſt of the Court of Parliament in Paris, in regard the preſent Duke had not done his Homage to the King as he ought to have done.

The Arms hereof are Azure, two Barbels back to back, Or; Seme of Croſs Croſſet, Fitche, of the ſecond.

But to return again to Champagne; it pleaſed Hugh Capet at his coming to the Crown of France, to give the ſame to Eudes, or Odon, Earl of Blais, whoſe Daughter he had married in his private Fortunes, before he had attained the Kingdom) with all the Rights and Priviledges of a County Palatine. Which Eudes, or Odon, was the Son of Theobald Earl of Blais, and Nephew of that Gerlon, a noble Dane, to whom Charles the Simple gave the Town and Earldom of Blais, about the year 920, and not long after the time, that he conferred the Country of Neuſtria upon Rollo the Norman, whoſe Kinſman and aſſiſtant this Gerlon was in haraſſing and waſting the coaſts of France. In the perſon of Theobald the third, the Earls hereof became Kings of Navarre, deſcended on him in right of the Lady Blanch his Mother, Siſter and Heir of King Sancho the eighth, Anno 1234. By the Marriage of Joan Queen of Navarre, and Counteſs of Champagne, to Philip the Fourth of France, ſurnamed the Fair, both theſe Eſtates were added to the Crown of France: enjoyed by him and his three Sons one after another, though not without ſome prejudice to the Lady Joan, Daughter and Heir of Lewis Hutin. But the three Brethren being dead, and Philip of Valois ſucceeding in the Crown of France, he reſtored the Kingdom of Navarre to the ſaid Lady Joan: and for the County of Champagne (which lay too near the City of Paris to be truſted in a foreign hand) he gave unto her and her Poſterity, as in the way of exchange, ſome certain Towns and Lands in other places; though not of equal value to ſo rich a Patrimony.

Count Palatines of Champagne.

An.Chr.
999	1	Odo, Earl of Champagne, Brie, Blais, and Toureine, Son of Theobald the elder, Earl of Blais.

1101	3	Theobald, eldeſt Son of Stephen.
1151	4	Henry, Son of Theobald, a great adventurer in the Wars of the Holy Land.
1181	5	Henry II. an Aſſociate of the Kings of France and England in the Holy Wars; King of Hieruſalem, in right of Iſabel his Wife.
1196	6	Theobald II. Brother of Henry, added unto his houſe the hopes of the Kingdom of Navarre, by his Marriage with the Lady Blanche, Siſter and Heir of Sancho the 8.
1201	7	Theobald III. Earl of Champagne, Son of Theobald the ſecond, and the Lady Blanche, ſucceeded in the Realm of Navarre, Anno 1234.
1269	8	Theobald IV. Son of Theobald the 3. King of Navarre, and Earl of Champagne, &c.
1271	9	Henry IV. Son of Theobald the 4. King of Navarre, and Earl of Champagne, &c.
1284	10	Philip IV. King of France, in right of Joan his Wife King of Navarre, and Earl of Champagne.
1313	11	Lewis Hutin, Son of Philip, King of France and Navarre, and Earl of Champagne.
1315	12	Philip the Long, Brother of Lewis Hutin, King of France and Navarre, and Earl of Champagne.
1320	13	Charles the Fair, Brother of Philip King of France and Navarre, & the laſt Earl of Champagne; united after his deceaſe by Philip de Valois to the Crown of France: the Earldom of March near Angoleſme, being given for it, in exchange to the Lady Joan, Daughter of King Lewis Hutin, and Queen of Navarre married to Philip Earl of Eureux, in her right honoured with that Crown, from whom deſcend the Kings of France and Navarre of the Houſe of Bourbon.

The Arms of theſe Palatines of Champagé, were Argent, two Bends cotized, potencee and counterpotencee of three pieces, Or.

3. PICARDIE.

PICARDIE hath on the Eaſt, the Dukedom of Luxemburg, and Lorrein; on the Weſt, ſome part of Normandy, and the Engliſh Ocean; on the North, the Counties of Artois and Hainalt; and on the South, Champagne, and France ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called. A Country ſo well ſtored with Corn, that it is accounted the Granary or Store-houſe of Paris; but the few Wines which it produceth are but harſh, and of no good relliſh, eſpecially in the Northern and colder parts of it.

The ancient Inhabitants of it were the Sueſſiones, Ambiani and Veromandui, conſiderable Nations of the Belgæ; and therefore reckoned into the Province of Belgica ſecunda: but why they had the name of Picards, I am yet to ſeek. Omitting therefore the conjectures of other men, ſome of the which are groundleſs, and the reſt ridiculous; I only ſay, as Robert Biſhop of Auranches, hath affirmed before me, Quos itaq; ætas noſtra Picardos appellat, vere Belgæ dicendi ſunt, qui poſtmodum in Picardorum tranſmigrarunt.

The whole Country as it lieth from Calais to the Borders of Lorrein, is divided into the Higher and the Lower: the Lower ſubdivided into Sainterre, Ponthieu, Boulognois, and Guiſnes: the Higher into the Vidamate of Amiens, Veromandois, Rethelois, and Tieraſche; in every of which there are ſome places of importance and conſideration,

In LOWER PICARDIE & the County of GUISNES, the chief Towns, 1. Calais, by Cæſar called Portus Iccius (as the adjoining Promontory, Promontorium Iccium, by Ptolomy) a ſtrong Town cloſe upon Artois, at the entrance of the Engliſh Chanel: taken by Edward the third after the ſiege of eleven months, Anno 1347, and loſt again by Queen Mary in leſs than a fortnight, Anno 1557. So that had Monſieur de Cordes then lived, he had had his wiſh; who uſed to ſay, That, he would be content to lie ſeven years in Hell, on condition that Calais were taken from the Engliſh. The loſs of which Town was a great blow to our Eſtate, for till that time we had the Keys of France at our Girdles: and as great a grief unto Queen Mary, who ſickning preſently upon it, ſaid to thoſe which attended her, That, if ſhe were opened, they ſhould find Calais next her heart. 2. Hamme, a ſtrong piece, one of the beſt Out-works of Calais. 3. Fiennes, on the borders toward Artois, which with the Country joining to it made an ancient Barony; the Patrimony in times paſt of the Earls of S. Paul, by whom given to Theobald the younger Brother of Lewis Earl of S. Paul and Conſtable of France, (of whom more hereafter) and from that Family conveyed to the houſe of Egmond by the marriage of Francis heir hereof to John Earl of Egmond, who died in the year 1528, and was the Father of that Earl, who after was beheaded by the Duke of Alva, Anno 1568. 4. Andres, more towards the borders of Boulognois, memorable for the interview of Henry the Eighth, and Francis the Firſt; and many meetings of the Engliſh and French Commiſſioners. 5. Guiſnes, which gives name to this Diviſion, called the County of Guiſnes (of which the Land of Oye wherein Calais ſtood (by the French called commonly Pais de Calais) was eſteemed a part). The Earldom anciently of the illuſtrious houſe of Graie, of which more anon.

2. In BOVLOGNOIS, neighbouring on the Country of Guiſnes, the places of moſt note, 1. Blackneſs, a ſtrong Fort on the Sea-ſide, betwixt Calice and Boulogne. 2. Chaſtillon, oppoſite to Boulogne, on the other ſide of the water. 3. Boullenberg, more with the Land, an Outwork to Boulogne. 4. Boulogne, by Pliny called Portus Geſſoriacus, part of the Country of the Morini, ſpoken of by Cæſar; divided into the Baſe or Low Town lying on the ſhore ſide, well built, and much frequented by Paſſengers, going to, or coming out of England; and the High Town ſtanding on the riſe of an Hill, well garriſoned for defence of the Port beneath it, and honoured with a a Biſhops See, tranſlated hither from Tourney when that City was taken by the Engliſh. The Town and Country taken by King Henry the eighth, with infinite expence of treaſure, Anno 1544, but yielded not long after by King Edward the Sixth: the French redeeming it at leſs than a fourth part of the money, which the gaining of it had coſt the Crown of England. As for the fortunes of this Country, it was once an Earldom of it ſelf, during which time it gave one King unto Hieruſalem, and another to England. The firſt Earl of it which we meet with, was that Euſtace, who by his marriage with Ida, the Daughter of Geoffry or Godfrey the ſecond, Duke of Lorrein, added the Dutchy of Bovillon in Gaul-Belgick to his Earldom of Boulogne. To him ſucceeded in both theſe Titles and Eſtates, Godfrey, ſirnamed of Bovillon his eldeſt Son: who after the death of Godfrey the third his Couſin-german attained unto the Dukedom of Lorrein, and finally was the firſt and moſt renowned King of the Weſtern Chriſtians reigning in Hieruſalem. Godfrey being dead, Euſtace the youngeſt of his Brethren became Earl of Boulogne: whoſe daughter Maud brought this Eſtate and Title to Steven of Blais, who afterwards was King of England. Euſtace the only Son of Steven dying without iſſue, the rights hereof remained in his Siſter Mary, the Abbeſs of Ramſey, married to Matthew Brother of Philip of Elſats Earl of Flanders. And though Matthew was commanded by the Pope to reſtore her again unto the Abbey out of which he had taken her; yet he kept this Country for her Children. Conveyed by Ida the eldeſt Daughter of this Bed to Reginald of Chaſtris her third husband; by Maud his daughter to Philip ſecond Son of Philip Auguſtus King of France, by another Maud (he dying without iſſue) to Alfonſo of Portugal, who ſucceeding after in that Kingdom, ſent her back to Boulogne: and finally by Joan daughter and heir of William, this Alfonſus Grandchild to Philip Earl of Artois, the Son of Eudes Duke and Earl of Burgundy; to whom ſhe brought Philip their only Son, ſucceſſour to his Grand-father in the ſaid Eſtates, and to his Mother in this Earldom. But he deceaſing without iſſue, Anno 1361, and Joan not leaving any children by King John of France, whom ſhe married after the death of her firſt Husband, it fell by ſome other of the Heirs General to the De la Tours of Avern (the Anceſtors of the now Dukes of Bovillon) continuing in that Family till the year 1477, when bought by Lewis the eleventh of France of Bertrand de la Tour, the better to aſſure his Kingdom on that ſide againſt the Engliſh then poſſeſſed of the Country of Guiſnes. The purchaſe being made, Lewis the now Proprietor, did Homage for it to the Virgin Mary, in the chief Church thereof called Noſtre Dame, bare-headed, on his knees, without Spurs or Girdle: and offered to her Image a maſſie Heart of gold of 2000 ounces; capitulating that from thenceforth he and his Succeſſors would hold that Earldom of her only, in perpetual Homage; and at the change of every Vaſſal preſent her, with a golden heart of the ſame weight. Since which time never aliened from the Crown of France; nor giving title unto any but to Katharine de Medices Wife of Henry the Second, created Counteſs of Boulogne and Clermont, when firſt married to him, he being then Duke of Orleans only.

The Arms hereof under the ancient Earls of Boulogne, were Or, a Banner Gules, tuffed Purple: thoſe of De la Tour, being a Tower embattelled Sable; but the colour of the Field I do no where find.

3. PONTHIEV, ſo called from the Bridges, built for conveniency of paſſage over the mooriſh Flats thereof, belonged formerly to the Engliſh; to whom it came by the Marriage of Eleanor, Daughter of Ferdinand of Caſtile, by Joan the Daughter and Heir of Simon the laſt Earl hereof, to King Edward the Firſt. Towns of moſt note in it, 1. Abbeville, ſeated on the Some, well fortified and as ſtrongly garriſoned, as a Frontier Town upon Artois: on one ſide unaſſaultable by reaſon of a deep and mooriſh Fen, which comes up cloſe to it; beautified with a fair Abbey, whence it had the name (Abbatais Villa in the Latin) and the See of a Biſhop. 2. Monſtreville, a well fortified Town, in the way betwixt Abbeville and Boulogne, and a ſtrong out-work unto Paris. 3. Creſſie, where King Edward the third defeated the great Army of Philip de Valois, in the firſt onſets for that Kingdom, Anno 1343. And 4. Treport, a ſmall Haven on the Eaſt of S. Valeries. Some place the Earldom of S. Paul in this Country of Ponthieu, others more rightly in Artois, where we mean to meet with it. The Arms hereof were Or, three Bends Azure.

4. And as for the Country of SAINTERRE, which is the fourth part of the Lower Picardie, the chief Towns of it are 1. Peronne, upon the River Some, where Lewis the eleventh, the greateſt Maſter of State-craft for the times he lived in, put himſelf moſt improvidently into the hands of Charles of Burgundy, who as improvidently diſmiſſed him. 2. Roy, and 3. Mont Didier, (Mons Deſiderii in Latin) both of them ſtrong Towns upon the Frontier; but otherwiſe of little fame in former Stories.

In the Higher Picardie being that part of this Country which lieth furtheſt from the Sea, the firſt diviſion which occurreth, is the Vidamate of AMIENS, ſo called of the fair City of Amiens, and the Vidame or chief Governour of it. Which honour as it is peculiar to the French only, ſo Mills in his Edition of Glovers Catalogue of Honour, will have but four at all in France, viz. this of Amiens, Chalons, Gerberoy, and that of Chartres. But certainly in France there are many more of them; as at Rhemes, Mans, &c. and formerly as many as it had Biſhops; the Vice-dominus or Vice-dame, being to the Biſhop in his Temporals, as the Chancellor in his Spirituals; or as the Vice-comites (Viſcounts) were anciently to the Provincial Earls in their Courts of Judicature; or to give you an example nearer home and of more reſemblance, theſe French Vidames were unto their ſeveral and reſpective Biſhops, as the Temporal Chancellor (in this Realm) of the Biſhoprick of Durham, or the High Steward of the Biſhoprick of Ely, to thoſe ſeveral Biſhops.

Places of moſt note herein, 1. Corbie, a Town of great importance, and ſtrongly Garriſoned, ſituate on the Frontier towards the Netherlands; 2. Chaune, on the ſame Frontier alſo, but of leſs conſideration, the Honorary ſeat and Title of the preſent Vidame; 3. Piquigni, ſituate on a pretty aſcent of ground overlooking the Some, on the left hand of the River betwixt Amiens and Abbeville, the ordinary ſeat of the former Vidames; more famous for the enterview of Edward the Fourth of England, & Lewis the 12. than for giving the name of Picardie to all the Province; which Mercator only of all writers doth aſcribe unto it. 4 Crouy an obſcure Village, now but formerly of ſpecial note for a goodly Caſtle, commanding over the adjoining Territory, and giving name to the illuſtrious Family, hence ſurnamed of Crouy, deſcended from the Kings of Hungary, and the Progenitors of the Dukes of Arſchoh, and Princes of Chimay in the Netherlands; before their tranſlating to which Countries by the Dukes of Burgundy, they were entituled Earls of Guiſnes. 5. Amiens it ſelf, ſeated upon the Some above Piquigni, the River being there divided into many Streams for the uſe and ſervice of the Town; well built, with very ſtrong walls and deep ditches: the loſs whereof, when taken by Archduke Albert, much hazarded the affairs and reputation of King Henry the 4. and therefore when he had regained it, he added to the former Works an impregnable Citadel. But the chief glory of this City is in the Cathedral, the faireſt and moſt lovely ſtructure in the Weſt of Europe: ſo beautified within and adorned without, that all the excellencies of Coſt and Architecture, ſeem to be met together in the compoſition. The Fronts of our Cathedrals of Wells and Peterburgh, the rich Glaſs in the Quire at Canterbury, the coſtly Imagery, and arched Butreſſes in the Chappel at Weſtminſter, (before the late defacements of thoſe Cathedrals) might ſerve as helps to ſet forth the full beauties of it. The Towns and Territories anciently under the command of the Biſhops of it, whoſe Officers for the Temporal government hereof called Vice-domini or Vidames, were at firſt eligible by the Biſhops, and accomptable to them, but by degrees engroſſing all power unto themſelves, they became Hereditary, and gave the name of the Vidamate of Amiens to this part of Picardy. The preſent Vidame of it is the Duke of Chaune, who being one of the younger Brothers of Monſieur de Luyne (chief favourite to K. Lewis 13.) obtained in marriage the daughter and heir of the former Vidames, with whom he had the Town and Caſtle of Piquigni, the chief command of theſe parts, and a rent of 9000 l. per annum, honoured thereupon by the power and favours of his Brother with the title of the Duke of Chaune and Peer of France, Anno 1620, or thereabouts.

II. But not to dwell on this place too long, paſs we on next to VEROMANDOIS, the ancient habitation of the Veromandui: the faireſt and largeſt part of both Picardies; and not a whit inferiour to the beſt of France, in the number of neat and populous Cities.

The principal Towns hereof are, 1. Soiſſons, called anciently Auguſta Sueſſionum, the chief City of the Sueſſones or Sueſſions: and the laſt Hold which the Romans had in all Gaul; loſt by Siagrius, Governour for the Weſtern Emperor, to Clouis the fifth King of the French. In the diviſion of his Kingdom, made the ſeat Royal of Clotair the Son of this Clouis; and of Aripert, and Chilperick, the Sons of Clotair, from hence entituled Kings of Soiſſons; their Kingdom containing the whole Province of Belgica ſecunda, or the Provinces of Artois, Picardy, and Champagne as we call them now. But Soiſſons having long ſince loſt the honour of a Regal Seat, hath of late times been made the honourary Title of the Counts of Soiſſons, a branch of the Royal ſtock of Bourbon; a Biſhops See, and ſituate on the River of Aiſne. 2. Laon, a Biſhops See alſo, the Biſhop whereof is one of the Twelve Peers of France, and Earl of Laon; the Town in Latin, Laodunum. 3. Noyon, in Latin, Noviodunum, an Epiſcopal See alſo. 4. Chapelle, a ſtrong piece, one of the beſt out-works of Paris againſt the Netherlands. 5. D'Ourlans, 6. La Fere, and Han, places of great ſtrength alſo, but more near the Frontiers. And 7. S. Quintin, anciently the chief City of the Veromandui, then called Auguſta Veromanduorum: called afterwards S. Quintin, from that Saint here worſhipped, as the Patron Deus tutelaris of it. A place of great importance for the Realm of France; and ſo eſteemed in the opinion of the Earl of Charalois, (after Duke of Burgundy) and King Lewis the 11. the firſt of which never digeſted the reſtoring of it to that King, being pawned unto his Father (together with Corbie, Amiens, and Abbeville) for no leſs than 400000 Crowns; the later never would forgive the Earl of St. Paul for detaining it from him, though under colour of his ſervice. A Town of greater note in ſucceeding times, for the famous battel of S. Quintins Anno 1557. wherein King Philip the ſecond of Spain, with the help of the Engliſh, under command of the Earl of Pembroke; overthrew the whole Forces of the French, made themſelves Maſters of the Town, and thereby grew ſo formidable to the French King, that the Duke of Guiſe was in poſt haſte ſent for out of Italy, (where his affairs began to proſper) to look unto the ſafety of France it ſelf. As for the Fortunes of this part it was once an Earldom of it ſelf, and an Earldom of as great Antiquity as the moſt in France, it being one Heribert or Hebert Earl of Veromandois, who in purſuance of the quarrel of the Houſe of Anjou ſurpriſed Charles the Simple, and carried him Priſoner to Peronne, where he after died; for which deſervedly hanged by Lewis ſurnamed Tranſmarine the Son of Charles, when he became poſſeſſed of his Fathers Kingdom; by the Daughter and Heir of another Hebert, conveyed in marriage unto Hugh ſurnamed the Great, one of the younger Sons of King Henry the firſt of France, ſucceeding in her right into the title and eſtate of Earl of Veromandois, and by that name renowned in the firſt wars for the Holy Land. By Elizabeth the Neece of this Hugh, the Daughter of Rodolphus his eldeſt Son married to Philip of Elſatz Earl of Flanders, it was added unto that eſtate; but ſhortly after given by the ſame Philip (having no children of his own) in Dower with Iſabel his Neece, daughter of Baldwin Earl of Hainalt unto Philip Auguſtus King of France, and ſince united to that Crown, not giving ſince that time the title of Earl or Duke to any, for ought I can find.

III. More towards Hainalt and Lorrein lieth the Country of RETHELOIS, ſo called of Rethel the chief Town: well fortified as the reſt of the Frontier places; but of moſt note among the French, in that the eldeſt Sons of the Dukes of Nevers, have uſually been entituled Earls and Dukes of Rethel; united to that Family by the marriage of Lewis of Flanders, Earl of Nevers, with the daughter and heir of James Earl of Rethel, An. 1312, or thereabouts. 2. S. Monhaud, a Town of conſequence and ſtrength. 3. Sygni, a ſtrong piece belonging to the Marqueſs of Vieu ville. 4. Chaſteau-Portion, of more beauty, but of like importance. The Arms of the Earls and Dukes of Rothel were Gules, three Rakes-heads indented Or.

IV. Finally in the Dutchy of TIERASCHE, the laſt part of the higher Picardy, we have the Town of Guiſe, of ſome note for the Caſtle, but of more for the Lords thereof, of the Ducal Family of Lorrein (on the borders whereof it ſtandeth) from hence entituled Dukes of Guiſe. A Family which within a little compaſs of time produced two Cardinals, the one entituled of Guiſe, the other of Lorrein; ſix Dukes, that is to ſay, the D. of Guiſe, Mayenne, Aumal, Elbeuf, Aguitlon, and Cheureuſe; the Earl of Samarive; and beſides many daughters married into the beſt houſes in France, one married to James the fifth King of the Scots. The firſt, and he that gave the riſe unto all the reſt of this potent Family, was Claud, Son to Rene the ſecond Duke of Lorrein, who paſſing into France to take poſſeſſion of the Patrimony allotted to him, followed King Henry the firſt in the War of Italy, where he behaved himſelf ſo valiantly at the Battel of Marignum, in which he had the chief command of the German Auxiliaries, that the King always after held him in a great eſteem, and married him to Anto Reette of Burbon, daughter of Francis, Earl of Vendoſme; in reſpect of which alliance, and his other merits, he was honoured with the title of Duke of Guiſe; The Father (amongſt other children) of Mary Q. of Scots, Wife of James the fifth, and Grandmother of James the ſixth, the firſt Monarch of Britain. The ſecond was Francis, who endangered the Realm of Naples, reſiſted the ſiege of the Emperor Charles at Mets, drove him out of Provence, took Calice from Q. Mary, and was at laſt treacherouſly ſlain at the ſiege of Orleans, by one of the Hugonots named Poltrot, (on the inſtigation of ſome of the chiefs of that faction) An. 1463. The third was Henry that great enemy of the Proteſtants, who contrived the great Maſſacre at Paris, and almoſt diſpoſſeſſed Henry the third of all France: He began the holy league, and was finally ſlain at Blais, by the command of King Henry the third. But we muſt know that this Town did anciently belong to the Dukes of Lorrein: and had given the title of Earl of Guiſe to Frederick the ſecond Son of John, and Charles the third Son of Rene, both the firſt of thoſe names; before Claud of Lorrein was advanced to the title of Duke; as being part of the Eſtate and Patrimony of the Barons of Join-ville, of whom we ſpake before when we were in Champagne. Of moſt note next to Guiſe it ſelf, is 2. Ripemont on the South of Guiſe. 3. Chaſtelet upon the borders towards Luxembourg, a ſtrong Town, and one of the beſt out-works of France. 4. Mazuers, upon the Maes or Meuſe, a place of great ſtrength and like importance; belonging properly to the Dukes of Nevers (as chief Lords thereof) in right of their deſcent from the houſe of Rethel: fortified with a ſtrong Citadel for defence of the place, and that Citadel well garriſoned by the French King, for defence of this border; laid to the Government of Champagne, though a Town of Picardy, and therefore made by ſome to belong to that Province alſo.

As for the ſtate of this whole Province, I do not find that it was ever paſſed over by the French Kings unto any one hand: as almoſt all the reſt of France had been at ſome time or other, but diſtracted unto divers Seigneuries and ſeveral Lordſhips (all of them abſolute in themſelves, and ſcarce affording to the French King the ſlight tribute of Homage) the particulars whereof we have ſeen before: ſome of which fell to the Crown of France by confiſcations, ſome by lawful marriages, and others by conqueſt; ſome held of England, ſome of the Earls of Artois, and others of Flanders, and laſtly of the Dukes of Burgundy, as Lords of thoſe Provinces: thoſe which depended upon England, being ſeized on by Charles the 7. on the loſs of Normandy by the Engliſh; as thoſe which held of Burgundy, were by Lewis his Son, immediately on the death of Duke Charles, at the Battel of Nancy, Anno 1476.

4. NORMANDIE.

NORMANDIE is bounded on the Eaſt with the River Some, and part of Picardy, on the Weſt with Bretagne, and ſome part of the Ocean, on the North, with the Engliſh Chanel, by which divided from England; and on the South, with France ſpecially ſo called, and the County of Main. It made up the whole Province of Lugdunenſis ſecunda, in the time of the Romans; the Metropolis whereof was Roven: and in the greatneſs of the French Empire had the name of Neuſtria, corruptly ſo called for Weſtria; the name of Weſtria or Weſtenrich, being given by ſome to this part of the Realm of Weſt-France, as that of Auſtria or Oſtenrich to a part of Eaſt-France. Afterwards being beſtowed upon the Normans by Charles the Simple, it was called Normandie.

This flouriſhing and rich Dukedom of Normandy, for laregeneſs of Extent, multitudes of People, number and ſtatelineſs of Cities, fertility of Soil, and the commodiouſneſs of the Seas, may worthily be accompted the chief of France. Well watered with the River Seine which runneth quite through it; as do alſo 2. the Orne, and 3. the Aven: not to ſay any thing of 4. Robee, 5. Ante, and 6. Reinelle, and many others of leſs note. In length it reacheth about 170 miles, and about 60 in breadth, where it is narroweſt: containing in that round the largeſt and faireſt Corn-fields that are to be ſeen in all France. Of all other natural commodities it is extream plentiful, excepting Wines; which the Northern coldneſs of the Climate admits not of, or ſparingly at the beſt, and of no perfection. The people of it formerly renowned for feats of Arms, the Conquerors of England, Naples, Sicil, and the Kingdom of Antioch in the Eaſt; at this time thought to be of a more ſharp and ſubtil wit, than the reſt of the French; Scavans au poſſible ed procecez & plaideries (ſaith Orteleus of them) eſpecially in the quillets of Law.

It is divided into the Higher and the Lower: the Lower containing the Sea-coaſts, and the Higher, the more Inland parts. Principal Cities of the whole, 1. Conſtance, a Biſhops See, the Spire or Steeple of whoſe Cathedral, is eaſily diſcernable afar off, both by Sea and Land; and ſerveth Sailers for a Land-mark. From hence the Country hereabouts hath the name of Conſtantine. 2. Auranches ſituate on a Rock with a fair proſpect over the Engliſh Chanel, but more near to Bretagne, than the other; the chief City of the Abrincantes, called Ingena by Ptolomy; now a Biſhops See. 3. Caen (Cadomum in Latin) an Epiſcopal See, as the other; ſtrong, populous, and well built, ſeated upon the River Orne, ſecond in reputation of the whole Province, but more eſpecially famous for the Sepulchre of William the Conquerour, the Univerſity founded here by King Henry the fifth of England, and for the long reſiſtance which it made againſt him, in his Conqueſt of Normandy. 4. Baieux (the Civitas Baiocaſſium of Antoninus) from whence the Country round about hath the name of Belſin. Memorable of a long time for a See Epiſcopal. One of the Biſhops whereof, called Odo, Brother unto William the Conqueror, by the Mothers ſide, was by him created Earl of Kent; and afterwards on ſome juſt diſpleaſure committed priſoner. For which, when quarrelled by the Pope, (the Clergy being then exempted from the Secular Powers) he returned this anſwer, That he had committed the Earl of Kent, not the Biſhop of Bayeux: By which diſtinction he avoided the Popes diſpleaſure. 5. Roven, of old Rotthomagum, pleaſantly ſeated on the Seine, and watered with the two little Riverets of Robee, and Reinelle, which keep it very ſweet and clean. The City for the moſt part well built, of large circuit, and great trading; the ſecond for bigneſs, wealth, and beauty, in all France: anciently the Metropolis of this Province, and an Archbiſhops See; and honoured of late times with a Court of Parliament, erected here by Lewis the twelfth, Anno 1501. In the Cathedral Church hereof (a reverend, but no beautiful Fabrick) is to be ſeen the Sepulchre of John Duke of Bedford, and Regent of France for King Henry the ſixth: which when an envious Courtier perſwaded Charles the 8. to deface; God forbid (ſaid he) that I ſhould wrong him, being dead, whom living all the power of France was not able to withſtand, adding withal, That he deſerved a better Monument than the Engliſh had beſtowed upon him. And to ſay truth, the Tomb is but mean and poor, ſhort of the merits of the man, and carrying no proportion to ſo great a virtue.

6. Falaiſe, upon the River Ante, once of ſtrength and note; the dwelling-place of Arlette, a Skinners daughter, and the Mother of William the Conquerour; whom Duke Robert, paſſing through the Town, took ſuch notice of, (as he beheld her in a Dance amongſt other Damoſels) that he ſent for her to accompany him that night in bed, and begot on her William the Baſtard, Duke of Normandy, and King of England. Her immodeſty that night ſaid to be ſo great, that either in regard thereof, or in ſpight to her Son, the Engliſh called all Strumpets by the name of Harlots, the word continuing to this day. 7. Verneville, (Vernolium in Latin) in former times accounted one of the Bulwarks of Normandy, againſt the French. Of which it is reported, that when news was brought to Richard the firſt, that Philip ſirnamed Auguſtus, the French King, had laid ſiege unto it, he ſhould ſay theſe words; I will never turn my back, till I have confronted thoſe cowardly Frenchmen. For performance of which Princely word, he cauſed a paſſage to be broken through the Palace of Weſtminſter, and came ſo unexpectedly upon his Enemies, that they raiſed their ſiege, and haſtned homewards. 8. Alanſon, of moſt note for giving the title of Earl, and Duke, to many Princes of the Royal Family of Valois, beginning in Charles de Valois, the Father of Philip de Valois, French King; and continuing for eight ſucceſſions, till the death of Charles the Fourth, Duke of this line: conferred occaſionally after that, on many of the younger Princes of the Royal Family. 9. Lyſieux, on the North eaſt of Alanſon, a Biſhops See, the chief Town of the Lexovii; as 10. Caux, of the Caletes, both placed by Cæſar in theſe parts. 11. Eureux, an Epiſcopal See alſo, by Ptolomy called Mediolanium, the chief City anciently of the Eburones, and ſtill a rich and flouriſhing Town; the third in eſtimation of all this Province, and made an Earldom in the perſon of Lewis a younger Son of Philip the third; whoſe Son, called Philip, by his marriage with Joan Daughter of Lewis Hutin, attained unto the Crown of Navarre. But this Town, with many fair Eſtates in this Country which depend on it, being ſeized on by the French in the time of Charles the Son of this Philip, for ſome practices againſt that Kingdom; there was after given to Charles the third and laſt King of this houſe, in compenſation for the ſame, Anno 1406, the title of Duke of Nemours, with a good ſum of ready money, and a penſion of 1200 l. ſterling, yearly, iſſuing out of the Revenues of Brie and Champagne. 12. Guiſors, a ſtrong Frontier Town towards France, whilſt Normandy was in the hands of the Engliſh, or under its own Dukes and Princes: notable for the many repulſes given unto the French. And 13 Pontoyſe, another Frontier upon France; ſo called of the Bridge on the River of Oyſe, (which divides France from Normandy) on which the Town is ſituate, and by which well fortified on that ſide; but taken at the ſecond coming of Charles the 7. after an ignominious flight hence, upon the noiſe only of the coming of the Duke of York, Commander at that time of the Province, and the Engliſh Forces. 1 . Albemarl, contractedly Aumerl, moſt memorable for giving the Title of Earl to the Noble Family De Fortibus, Lords of Holderneſs in England; and of Duke, to Edward Earl of Rutland, after Duke of York. More towards the Sea, 15. S. Valeries, ſeated on a ſmall, but ſecure Bay, betwixt Dieppe and New Haven. 16. Dieppe, at the mouth of a little River ſo named, opening into a large and capacious Bay: a Town of Trade, eſpecially for the New found-Land: remarkable for its fidelity to Henry the 4. in the midſt of his troubles; when the Confederates of the Guiſian Faction, called the Holy League, had outed him of almoſt all the reſt of his Cities, compelled him to betake himſelf hither, (from whence he might more eaſily hoiſe ſail to England) and called him in deriſion, The King of Dieppe. 17. New-Haven, the Port-Town to Rouen and Paris, ſituate at the mouth of the River Seine, from hence by great Ships navigable as far as Rouen; by leſſer, unto Pont de l' Arch, 70 miles from Paris: the Bridge of Rouen formerly broken down by the Engliſh, to ſecure the Town, lying unrepaired to this day, by means of the Pariſians, for the better trading of their City. By the French it is called Hav're de grace, and Franciſcopolis by the Latins; repaired and fortified (the better to confront the Engliſh) by King Francis the Firſt, and from thence ſo named. Delivered by the Prince of Conde, and his faction, into the hands of Queen Elizabeth of England, as a Town of caution, for the landing of ſuch Forces as ſhe was to ſend to their relief, in the firſt Civil-War of France about Religion: and by the help of the ſame Faction, taken from her again, as ſoon as their differences were compounded. By means whereof, the Hugonots were not only weakned for the preſent, but made uncapable of any ſuccours out of England for the time to come: and the next year were again warred on by their King, with more heat than formerly. 18. Harflew, and 19. Honflew, both ſituate on the banks of the Seine, but of little notice at the preſent, becauſe not capable of any great ſhipping; nor uſeful in the way of Trade, by reaſon of the interpoſition of New Haven, betwixt them and the Sea: the former, famous notwithſtanding in our Engliſh Stories; as the firſt Town which that Victorious Prince King Henry the Fifth, attempted and took in, in France. 20. Churburg, (the Latins call it Cæſaris Burgum) on the Sea-ſide alſo, the laſt Town which the Engliſh held in the Dukedom of Normandie: belonging properly and naturally to the Earls of Eureux, advanced unto the Crown of Navarre; till alienated by Charles the third of Navarre, on the compoſition before mentioned; but being garriſoned by the Engliſh for King Henry the Sixth, it held out a ſiege of ſeven Months againſt the Forces of France.

Here are alſo in this Kingdom, the Towns of 21. Tankerville, and 22. Ewe, which have given the title of Earls, to the noble Family of the Greys, and Bourchiers, in England: as alſo, thoſe of 23. Harcourt, 24. Longuiville, and 25. Aumal, which have given the title of Duke and Earl, to ſome of the beſt Houſes in France.

In this Country alſo is the little Signeury of IVIDOT, heretofore ſaid to be a free and abſolute Kingdom; advanced to that high dignity by Clotaire, the ſeventh King of the French; who having abuſed the Wife of one Gautier de Ividot, (ſo called becauſe of his dwelling here) and afterward (to prevent revenge) killed the man himſelf, to make ſome ſatisfaction to his Family for ſo great an injury, erected the Lordſhip of Ividot, to the eſtate of a Kingdom; and gave unto the Heirs of this Gautier (or Walter) all the Prerogatives of a free and abſolute Monarch, as, to make Laws, coyn Money, and the like. From hence the French call a man that hath but ſmall demains to maintain a great title, a Roy d' Ividot. At laſt, but at what time I know not, it fell again to a Lordſhip, and belongeth now to the houſe of Bellay in Bretagne.

There belonged alſo to this Dukedom, but rather as ſubject to the Dukes of Normandie, than part of Normandie it ſelf; the County of PERCH, ſituate betwixt it and the Province of La Beauſſe, of which now reckned for a part: and was divided into the higher and the lower. The chief Towns of it, 1. Nogent le Rotrou, of which little memorable, but that it is the principal of Perch Govet, or the lower Perch, and that it took that adjunct from Rotrou, the ſecond Earl of this County, the Founder or Repairer of it, to difference it from another of that name, called Nogent le Roy, a Town of Champagne. 2. Mortaigne, or Moriton; of moſt note in the higher Perch, eſpecially for giving the title of an Earl to John, the youngeſt Son of K. Henry the ſecond, after King of England; as in the times ſucceeding, to the Lord Edmund Beaufort, after Duke of Somerſet. The whole, firſt made a diſtinct Eſtate, in the perſon of Arnulph of Heſdin the firſt Earl hereof. Whoſe Son and Succeſſor, named Rotrou, (of great note in the Wars of Spain againſt the Moors, in behalf of Alfonſo King of Navarre and Aragon, An. 1110) by Maud the natural daughter of Henry the firſt of England, unfortunately drowned with her Brother William, as they croſſed the Seas; had one only daughter, named Magdalen, (or as ſome ſay, Margarite) the Wife of Garcia, the ſeventh King of Navarre, and Mother of K. Sancho, ſirnamed the Wiſe, from whom all the Kings of Navarre have ſince deſcended. But this Family being extinct in a ſhort time after, the Eſtate fell unto the Engliſh, as Dukes of Normandie; and ſo continued till the ſeizure of Normandy by the French, in the time of K. John. After which time, the title of Earl of Perch was given to Charles Earl of Valois and Alanſon, Father of Philip de Valois, French King, of Lewis Earl of Anjou, and of Charles de Valois, Earl of Alanſon; in which houſe of Alanſon it continued, and was commonly the title of the eldeſt Sons of the Dukes thereof.

But to return again to the Country of Normandie, the ancient Inhabitants thereof were the Caletes, Eburones, Lexovii, Abrimantes, ſpoken of before: the Bellocaſſi, or Venelocaſſi, about Rouen: the Salares and Baiocenſis, about Sees and Baieux: all conquered firſt by the powerful Romans; the Romans after by the French; and the French by the Normans. Theſe laſt, a people of the North, inhabiting thoſe Countries which now make up the Kingdoms of Denmark, Swethland, and Norway, united in the name of Normans, in regard of their Northernly ſituation; as in our Hiſtory and Deſcription of thoſe Kingdoms, we ſhall ſhew more fully. Out of thoſe parts they made their firſt irruption about the year 700, when they ſo ranſacked and plagued the Maritime Towns of France and Belgium, that it was inſerted in the Litany, From Plague, Peſtilence, and the fury of the Normans, good Lord, &c. To quiet theſe people, and to ſecure himſelf, Charles the Simple gave them a part of Neuſtria, (from them ſince called Normannia) or Normandy, together with the Soveraignty of Bretagne; enjoyed by them and their Poſterity for many Ages. Their firſt Duke was Rollo, An. 912; from whom, in a direct Line, the ſixth was William the Baſtard, Conqueror, and King of England, An. 1067, After this, Normandy continued Engliſh till the days of King John; when Philip Auguſtus ſeized on all Eſtates in France, as forfeitures, An. 1202. The Engliſh then poſſeſſing the Dukedoms of Normandy and Aquitain; the Earldoms of Anjou, Tourein, Maine, Poictou, and Limoſin; being in all a far greater and better portion of the Country, than the Kings of France themſelves poſſeſſed. The Engliſh after this recovered this Dukedom, by the Valour of King Henry the Fifth; and having held it 30 years, loſt it again in the unfortunate Reign of King Henry the ſixth: the Engliſh then diſtracted with domeſtick factions. After which double Conqueſt of it from the Crown of England, the French diſtruſting the affections of the Normans, and finding them withall a ſtubborn and untractable people, have miſerably oppreſſed them with Tolls and Taxes, keeping them always poor and in low condition; inſomuch as it may be ſaid of them, that they are the moſt beggarly people that ever had the luck to live in ſo rich a Country. But it is time to look on The Dukes of Normandie.

An.Chr.
912	1	Rollo of Norway, made firſt Duke of Normandie, by Charles the Simple; by whoſe perſwaſion baptized, and called Robert.
917	2	William, ſirnamed Longeſpee, from the length of his Sword.
942	3	Richard, the Son of Longeſpee.
980	4	Richard the II. Son of the former.
1026	5	Richard the III. Son of Richard the Second.
1028	6	Robert the Brother of Richard the Third.
1035	7	William the baſe Son of Robert, ſubdued the Realm of England; from thence called the Conqueror.
1093	8	Robert the II. eldeſt Son of William the Conqueror, put by the Kingdom of England by his two Brothers, William and Henry, in hope whereof he had refuſed the Crown of Hieruſalem, then newly conquered by the Forces of the Chriſtian Princes of the Weſt. Outed at laſt, impriſoned, and deprived of ſight by his Brother Henry; he lived a miſerable life in the Caſtle of Cardiffe, and lieth buried in the Cathedral Church of Glocester.
1102	9	Henry the firſt, King of England.
1134	10	Stephen, King of England, and D. of Normandy.
	11	Henry Plantagenet, D. of Normandie, and after King of England; of that Name the ſecond.
1161	12	Henry the III. ſirnamed Court-mantle, Son of Henry the ſecond, made D. of Normandie by his Father.
1189	13	Richard I. ſirnamed Coeur de Lyon, King of England, and D. of Normandy, Son of Henry the ſecond.
1199	14	John the Brother of Richard, King of England, and D. of Normandy, outed of his Eſtates in France, by King Philip Auguſtus, An. 1202, before whom he was accuſed of the Murther of his Nephew Arthur, found dead in the Ditches of the Caſtle of Rouen, where he was impriſoned; but ſentenced cauſa inaudita, for his not appearing. After this Normandy ſtill remained united to the Crown of France, (the title only being born by John de Valois, afterwards King, and Charles the fifth, during the life-time of his Father) till the Conqueſt of it by the Valour of K. Henry the 5. An. 1420, which was 218 years after it had been ſeized on by King Philip Auguſtus, and having been holden by the Engliſh but 30 years, was loſt again, An. 1450, in the unfortunate reign of King Henry the ſixth. Never ſince that, diſmembred from the Crown of France; ſaving that Lewis the 11. the better to content the Confederate Princes, conferred it, in Appennage, on his Brother Charles Duke of Berry, An. 1465; but within two Months after, took it from him again, and gave him in exchange for it, the Dukedom of Guyenne, which lay further off from his Aſſociates.

What the Revenues of this Dukedom were in former times, I can hardly ſay. That they were very fair and great, appears by that which is affirmed by Philip de Comines; who ſaith, that he had ſeen raiſed in Normandie, 95000 l. ſterling, money; which was a vaſt ſum of money in thoſe times. As alſo by this teſtimony of the D. of Burgundie, who held King Lewis the 11. to be weakned a whole third part in his Eſtate, by giving Normandie in portion to the D. of Berry. Now they amount unto as much as the Kings Treaſurers and Toll-maſters are pleaſed to draw out of it.

The Arms of Normandie were Gules, two Leopards Or, which with the ſingle Leopard, or Lyon, being added for the Dutchy of Aquitain, make the Arms of England.

5. BRETAGNE.

BRETAGNE is bounded on the Eaſt with Normandy, and the County of Maine; on the South with Anjou, and Poictou; on all other parts with the Engliſh or Gallick Ocean. Watered upon the South-ſide with the Loir, which divides it from Anjou; but ſo, as part of this Dukedom, called the County of Raiz, lyeth on the South-ſide of that River, betwixt it and Poictou.

It was firſt called Armorica, from its ſituation on the Sea, as the word importeth in the old Language of that People. But how it came by this new name, is not well agreed on. The general opinion is, That it took this name from the neighbouring Britans, brought over hither by the Tyrant Maximus, rebelling againſt the Emperour Gratian, Anno 385, by whom this Province was ſubdued; and from them named Britannia Minor, Little Britain. An Argument whereof may be, that the Language of this people hath ſtill no ſmall affinity with the Welch or Britiſh; there being a Tradition alſo, that the Britains who firſt came over hither, and married the Women of this Country, cut out their Tongues, for fear they ſhould corrupt the Language of their Poſterity. And to this Conqueſt by the Britans, theſe old Verſes give this further countenance.

Vicit Aremoricas animoſa Britannia Gentes,
Et dedit impoſito, nomina priſca, jugo.

That is to ſay,

Gaul-Armorack, the Britans overcame,
And to the conquered Province gave their name.

Notwithſtanding, the moſt probable opinion ſeemeth to be, That it took this name from the Britanni, an old Gallick people, mentioned by Pliny in Gaul-Belgick; retiring hither on the Invaſions and Incurſions of the Barbarous Nations; though poſſibly thoſe Britanni of Gallia-Belgica might be as well ſome Colony of the Iſland-Britans; as the Belgæ, a great Nation in the Iſle of Britan, are ſaid to have been a people of Gallia-Belgica. The reaſon is, becauſe there was no Author before Geffery of Monmouth, who takes notice of this tranſporting of the Inſular Britans, by the Tyrant Maximus, no ancient Author, Greek or Latin, making mention of it. And for the Welch or Britiſh words, which are ſtill remaining in the Language, they are conceived to be of no other than a remainder of the old Gallick Tongue, which was originally the ſame with the ancient Britiſh, as is elſewhere proved.

The Province is in compaſs 200 French Leagues: pleaſant and fruitful; beautified with many ſhady Woods, and ſpacious Downs; ſufficiently well ſtored with all manner of Grain; but deſtitute of Wine and the choiſeſt Fruits, by reaſon of the Northernly ſituation of it. Divided commonly into Hault or High Bretagne, and Baſſe or Low Bretagne: the firſt containing the more Eaſtern, and the laſt the Weſtern parts hereof. Neither of the two much furniſhed with navigable or notable Rivers; the defect of which, the Neighbourhood of the Sea ſupplieth, affording more capacious Havens, and convenient Ports, than any one Province in this Kingdom.

To begin therefore with the Havens: thoſe of moſt note in the Higher Bretagne, are 1. S. Malo, built on a Rock within the Sea, wherewith at every high-water it is encompaſſed. A Biſhops-See, and a Port very much frequented by the French and Spaniſh, who uſe here to barter their Commodities; oftentimes ſpoiled by the Engliſh, in the Wars with France, eſpecially ſince the time of K. Henry the 7. 2. Blauet, a ſafe, but little Haven, on the mouth of a little River of the ſame name alſo. Impregnably fortified by the Spaniard, An. 1590; when taking opportunity of the broil in France, and pretending a good title to this Dukedom, on the expiring of the Male-Iſſue of King Henry the ſecond, he thought by this door to have entred on the whole Eſtate; but quitted it again on the general Peace made between the Crowns. 3. S. Brieu, (by the Latins called Fanum Sancti Brioci) a Biſhops-See, and a well-traded Port, ſeated upon the Engliſh Chanel. 4. Vannes, a Biſhops-See alſo, ſituate on a capacious Bay, at the mouth of the Vilain; the chief Town of the Veneti, whom Cæſar placeth in this Tract, and makes them to be the mightieſt people of all the Armoricans; ſtrongeſt in ſhipping, and beſt ſeen in Affairs at Sea. 5. Croiſſie, a little Haven at the mouth of the Loir, and the only Haven of this part on the Gallick Ocean. Then in Low Bretagne, or the more Weſtern parts thereof, there is, 6. Breſt, ſeated upon a ſpacious Bay of the Weſtern Ocean: the Key and Bulwark of this Country, and the goodlieſt Harbour of all France. 7. Morlais, a convenient Port, and well frequented. 8. S. Pol de Leon, and 9. Triguior, both Biſhops-Sees, both ſituate on the Sea-ſhore, and both the chief Towns of the Oſſiſmi, whom Ptolomy and Strabo place upon this Coaſt: the firſt of them neighboured by the Promontory, which they call Le Four, the Govæum of Ptolomy. 10. Kemper Corentin, a Biſhops-See alſo, the chief Town of that part hereof which is called Cournovaille, (and called ſo for the ſame reaſon as Cornwall in England is) ſituate not far from the Foreland, which they call Penmarch, oppoſite to Le Four, ſpoken of before. A Sea-Town this, but not much talked of for the Haven, for ought I can find. 11. Conquet, a well-frequented Road, not far from Breſt.

Chief places in the Midlands, 1. Nantes, the principal City of the Nannetes, (by Ptolomy called Condivincinum) a large, fair, ſtrong, and populous City, ſeated upon the Loir, a Biſhops-See, and the Metropolis of Bretagne. 2. Renes anciently the chief Town of the Rhedones, (called Condate by Ptolomy) now a Biſhops-See, and the Parliament-City for this County, eſtabliſhed here, An. 1553, which maketh it very populous, and of great reſort, though not fully two miles in compaſs. 3. Del, an Epiſcopal-City alſo, but unwholſomly ſeated amongſt Mariſhes. 4. Dinan, a rich and pleaſant Town on the River Nance. 5. L'Ambalk, the chief Town of the Ambiliates, ſpoken of by Cæſar. 6. Rohan, the title and inheritance of the Dukes of Rohan, deſcended from a branch of the Ducal Family of Bretagne, by Mary the ſecond Daughter of Duke Francis the firſt, and Wife of John, then Viſcount of Rohan. 7. Anſenis, the chief Seat of the now Duke of Vendoſme, and the head of his Eſtates in Bretagne. Of which poſſeſſed in the right of his Wife, the Daughter of the Duke of Mencoeur by the Heir of Martignes, another of this Ducal Family. S. Chaſteau-Briant, a ſtrong piece on the borders of Normandie, 9. Cliſſon, the chief Town of the Dutchy of Raiz, being that part of Bretagne which lieth on the South-ſide of the Loir; a ſtrong Town, and fortified with a very good Caſtle.

The Britans, whoſoever they were in their firſt Original, were queſtionleſs one of the firſt Nations that poſſeſſed any part of Gaul, after the Conqueſt of the Romans. Governed at firſt by their own Kings, the moſt conſiderable of which, was that Aldroenus, or Auldran, the Son of Solomon; who at the ſute of the Inſular Britans, then diſtreſſed by the Scots and Picts, as Geoffry of Monmouth telleth the ſtory) ſent over Conſtantine his Brother with a compleat Army to their aid; who having valiantly repulſed the Enemy, was made King of Britain, An. 433. Of whoſe poſterity more there. Thoſe of Armorica being broken by the puiſſance of Charles the Great, abandoned the name of Kings, and ſatisfied themſelves with the title of Earls; aſſumed firſt by Alain le Rebre, An. 874, but as ſome ſay, An. 859, which was ſomewhat ſooner. By Peter of Dreux, the ſixteenth Earl; challenging his Eſtate in right of Alice his Wife, the half-Siſter of Arthur, and Daughter of Conſtance, by Guy of Thouars, her third Husband, the better to ſecure his title, this Earldom was made ſubject to the Vaſſalage of the Crown of France, in the time of Lewis the ninth; by whom John called the Red, the Son of this Peter, was created the firſt Duke of Bretagne; as being of the Blood Royal of France, deſcended lineally from Robert the firſt Earl of Dreux, one of the younger Sons of King Lewis the Groſs. Yet notwithſtanding this ſubjection to the Kings of France, the Dukes hereof reſerved to themſelves the Soveraign Power, as to write themſelves, By the Grace of God, the priviledge of coining Gold, &c. and ſtood ſo high upon their terms, that Francis the laſt Duke, denied to do his homage to Charles the ſeventh, either upon his Knees, or without his Sword, according to the former cuſtom. For which, being quarrelled by Lewis the 11. the Son of Charles, who was at better leiſure to purſue the buſineſs, than his Father was, he joined himſelf with Charles Duke of Berry, and Charles Duke of Burgundy, in a War againſt him; and thereby drew upon himſelf that ruine, which he endeavoured to avoid. For, in concluſion, Charles of Berry, as it was thought, was poiſoned; Charles of Burgundy loſt his life at the Battel of Nancie, 1476, and a great part of his Eſtate was conquered by the French King. And Francis, this Duke, having embarqued himſelf in the ſame troublous Ocean, muſt needs ſuffer ſhipwrack with his Copartners. The French King invadeth Bretagne: the Duke over-charged with melancholy, dies, 1488, leaving Anne his Daughter and Heir, in the Power of Charles the 8. the Son and Succeſſor of this Lewis; who contracts a marriage with the Orphan, and uniteth Bretagne to France. There were many impediments which might have hindred this Marriage, but Charles breaketh through them all. Firſt, Charles himſelf had been formerly contracted to the Arch-Duke Maximilian's Daughter; but this he held void, becauſe the young Lady was not of age at the time of the Contract. 2. Anne the Dutcheſs was alſo contracted to Maximilian; and this he held invalid alſo, becauſe that being his Homager, ſhe could not beſtow her ſelf without his conſent. 3. Maximilian had by proxy married her; which marriage he conſummated by a Ceremony in thoſe days unuſual. For his Ambaſſador, attended with a great Train of Lords and Ladies, bared his Leg unto the Knee, and put the ſame within the Sheets of the Dutcheſs, taking poſſeſſion thereby of her Bed and Body. But Charles conſulting with his Divines, was told, That this pretended Conſummation, was rather an invention of Court, than any way firm by the Laws of the Church; and therefore of no power to hinder his purſuit of this Marriage, ſo advantagious to his Crown. What elſe remains touching the union of this Dukedom to the Realm of France, we ſhall ſee anon; having firſt looked over the Succeſſion of thoſe Princes, who under ſeveral Titles have governed the Eſtate thereof, according to the beſt light we can get from Story.

Kings of the Britans of Gaul-Armorick.

385	1	Conan, placed here by Maximus.
	2	Grallon, Son of Conan.
	3	Solomon, Son of Grallon.
	4	Auldran, or Aldroenus, the Son of Solomon.
	5	Bodis, Son of Auldran.
	6	Hoel, Son of Bodis.
	7	Hoel II. Son of Hoel the firſt.
	8	Alain, Son of Hoel the ſecond.
	9	Hoel III. Son of Alain.
	10	Solomon II. Son of Hoel the third.

Earls and Dukes of Bretagne.

874	1	Alain le Rebre.
	2	Indicael and Colodock, Sons of Alain.
	3	Mathrudon, Son in Law of Alain le Rebre.
	4	Alain II. Son of Mathrudon.
	5	Conan, deſcended from King Solomon the third.
	6	Geofry, Son of Conan.
	7	Alain III. Son of Geofry.
	8	Conan II. Son of Alain.
	9	Hoel, Siſters Son of Conan the ſecond.
	10	Alain IV. called Fergent, Son of Hoel.
	11	Conan III. Son of Alain.
	12	Eudon, Husband of Bertha, Daughter of Conan.
	13	Conan IV. Son of Eudon.
	14	Geofry II. Son of Henry the 3. King of England, Husband of Conſtance, Daughter and Heir of Conan the Fourth.
1186	15	Arthur, Son of Geofry.
1202	16	Peter of Breux, in right of Alice his Wife, the half Siſter of Arthur.
1250	17	John, the firſt Duke of Bretagne.
1287	18	John II. Son of John the firſt.
1305	19	Arthur II. Son of John the Second.
1312	20	John III. Son of Arthur the Second.
1341	21	John Earl of Montfort, Brothers Son of Arthur
1399	22	John V. Son of John of Montfort.
1442	23	Francis the Son of John the fifth.
1450	24	Peter, the Brother of Duke Francis.
1457	25	Arthur III. 2d. Son of John Earl of Montfort.
1457	26	Francis II. Son of Richard Earl of Eſtampes, the Brother of Duke Arthur 3. the laſt Duke of Bretagne, of whom ſufficiently before.
1484	27	Charles the 8. French King, ſucceeded in the Duke-

Dukedom of Bretagne, in right of Anne his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Francis the 2.

1498 28 Lewis the 12. French King, ſucceeded on the death of Charles, in the right of the ſaid Anne, whom he took to Wife: and, to make a way unto her Bed, divorced himſelf from the Lady Joan his former Wife, Daughter of Lewis the 11.

1515 29 Francis the III. of Bretagne, and firſt of France, ſucceeded in the Dukedom in right of Claude his Wife, the eldeſt Daughter of Lewis the 12. and of Anne of Bretagne: by whom being made the Father of ſo many Children, that he had little cauſe to fear that the Crown would be ſeparated from his Houſe; in the year 1532, being the ſeventeenth of his Reign and Government, cauſed an Act to paſs, with the conſent of the States of Bretagne, for the inſeparable uniting of that Dukedom to the Kingdom of France, and by that means diveſted his poſterity of it. For his male-iſſue failing in King Henry the Third, the rights hereof deſcended on the Heirs general; that is to ſay, on Iſabel, Daughter of Philip the ſecond of Spain, and of the Lady Iſabel or Elizabeth his Wife, the eldeſt Daughter of Henry the ſecond, and Neece to the ſaid Francis the firſt; and after her deceaſe (dying without Iſſue) on the Lady Katharine her Siſter, married to Charles Emanuel Duke of Savoy. For whom when Philip of Spain claimed this Eſtate, the French pretended a Law againſt it of their own deviſing, viz. That no Eſtate being incorporated into that Crown, could be aliened from it. A proper Law, and Couſin-German to the Salique; but ſuch as ſerved their turn by the help of the Engliſh, who deſired not to have the Spaniards ſo near Neighbours to them.

Moſt of our former Earls of Richmond were Earls and Dukes of this Houſe. Their Arms were Ermin.

6. The Dukedom and Eſtates of ANJOU.

THE Dukedom and Eſtates of ANJOU, taking them in the full latitude and extent thereof, are bounded on the Eaſt with La Beauſſe; on the Weſt, with Bretagne; and part of Poictou; on the North, with Normandie; and on the South, with part of Berry, and Poictou. In which circumference are comprehended the three ſmall Provinces of Anjou, Tourein, and Main; moſt commonly accounted of as parts and members of La Beauſſe, the ancient Inhabitants whereof, in the times of the Romans, were the Andes, as Cæſar (or the Andegavii as Pliny) calls them, the Turones, and the Cenomani, accounted afterwards a part of the Province of Lugdunenſis tertia.

The Country for the moſt part is very fruitful and pleaſant, eſpecially in Tourein; as is the whole tract upon the Loire. Anjou is ſomewhat the more hilly, but otherwiſe little inferiour to Tourein, affording plenty of white Wines, the beſt in France; and yielding from thoſe Hills above 40 Riverets, falling into the Loire from thence: the chief whereof are Mayenne, 2. Vienne, 3. Dive, and 4. Sartre.

1. ANJOU, called Andegavia by the Latins, is ſituate in the midſt betwixt Main and Tourein, ſo called from the Andegavi, the old Inhabitants of theſe parts. Principal Cities are, 1. Angiers, (by Ptolomy called Juliomagus) of a large circuit, and well built, the See of a Biſhop, reckoning in it 15 Pariſhes beſides the Cathedral. It is ſeated on the River Sartre in a very good air, and therefore choſen for the Seat of an Univerſity, founded here by Lewis the ſecond Duke of Anjou, the Son of King John Anno 1388. 2. Beaufort, a Town belonging formerly to the Dukes of Lancaſter, in which John of Gaunt ſo much delighted, that he cauſed all the Children that he had by Katharine Swinford, his third Wife, to be called Beauforts: which Beauforts were afterwards Dukes of Somerſet, and Exeter, and Earls of Dorſet. This Town came to the houſe of Lancaſter, by the marriage of Blanch of Artoys, unto Edmund ſurnamed Crouch-back, ſecond Son to our Henry the third; created by his Father, the firſt Earl of Lancaſter. Memorable in theſe latter times for giving the Title of a Datcheſs to Madam Katharine, the beloved Miſtreſs of King Henry the fourth, by whom ſhe was Mother of Cæſar now Duke of Vendoſm, and of Alexander, not long ſince the Grand Prior of France. With reference to which, the ſecond Son of the Duke of Vendoſme is honoured at this preſent with the title of Duke of Beaufort: as the eldeſt with relation to his Mother was made Duke of Mercœur. 3. Baugie, near which was fought that memorable Battel betwixt the Engliſh and the French, wherein the Engliſh loſt the day; and Thomas Duke of Clarence, Brother to Henry the fifth, was there unfortunately ſlain, Anno 1422. 4. Saumur, pleaſantly ſituate on the Loire, and for long time one of the Cautionary Towns in the hands of thoſe of the Reformed Religion: of whom it is the only entire Univerſity in this Kingdom, eſpecially famous for the learned Philip du Morney, Lord of Pleſſis, ſometimes the Governour hereof. 5. Loches, ſeated on the River Indre, the Caſtle whereof being mounted on a ſteep high Rock, is thought to be one of the ſtrongeſt pieces of all France. 6. La Fleſche, of ſpecial name at the preſent for a Colledge of Jeſuites, one of the faireſt in this Kingdom. The word in the French tongue ſignifieth an Arrow (whence thoſe who make Bows and Arrows have the name of Fleſchers.) At Nola in the Realm of Naples, there is another Colledge of them, called D'Arque, the Bow: on which one wittily compoſed this enſuing Diſtich;

> Arcum Nola dedit, dedit illis alma Sagittam
> Gallia: quis Funem, quem meruere, dabit?

That is to ſay,

> Nola the Bow, and France the Shaft did bring:
> But who ſhall help them to the Hempen-ſtring?

2. On the South-eaſt of Anjou, lieth the Country of TOUREIN, the ancient Seat of the Turones: which, for the wholſomneſs of the Air, the pleaſantneſs of the Country, and admirable plenty of all Commodities, is by ſome called the Garden of France. Principal Cities in it, 1. Amboiſe, pleaſantly ſeated on the Loire, and beautified with one of the faireſt Caſtles in France, both for the gallantry of the Building, and beautifulneſs of the Proſpect. 2. Tours, by Ptolomy called Cæſarodunum, and the Turonum Civitas of of Antoninus, the Metropolis of Lugdunenſis tertia, and an Archbiſhops See: a fair, rich, and well-traded Town, ſituate on the banks of the Loire, in a moſt ſweet & pleaſing Country. Famous, in that thoſe of the Reformed Religion, from the Gate of S. Hugo, at which they uſed to iſſue out to their Aſſemblies in the fields, had the name of Hugonots. Given to them, as ſome others think, as the Diſciples of the night-walking Spirit (or Robin Goodfellow) which they call S. Hugo, in regard they had their firſt meetings, for the moſt part, in the nights; as had the Primitive Chriſtians in the times of their Perſecutions. Some, more improbably, (and indeed ridiculouſly) derive the name from the firſt words of an Apology which they are fabled to have made to the King; which were, Huc nos venimus:

fancying, that as the Proteſtants did derive that Appellation from the words Proteſtants, and Proteſtamur, ſo often uſed by them in their Apologie to Charles the Fifth; ſo from thoſe words, Huc nos, came the name of Hugonots, or Huc nots. But more aſſuredly famous for the great Battel fought near it by Charles Martel, Mayre of the Palace, and Father of Pepin King of France, againſt an Army of 400000 Moors, led by Alderamen, Lieutenant General in Spain, for Evelid or Iſcam the great Caliph: of which 370000 loſt their lives in the place, Anno 734. 3. Laudun, 4. Richelieu, pleaſantly ſeated in a rich and flouriſhing Soil, as the name importeth. Of no great note, till the time of the late great Cardinal of Richelieu, who took name from hence, by whom it was made one of the neateſt Towns (for the bigneſs of it) in all this Kingdom, and honoured with the Titles of a Dukedom and Pairrie of France.

As for the Fortunes of this Province (for of Anjou we ſhall ſpeak more at large anon) it had a while its own Proprietary Earls of the Houſe of Blais; conferred by Hugh Capet upon Odon Earl of Blais and Champagne: and by him given, together with the Earldom of Blais, to Theobald, or Thibauld his eldeſt Son, (his ſecond Son named Stephen ſucceeding in Champagne); who in the year 1043, was vanquiſhed and ſlain by Charles Martel E. of Anjou, and this Province ſeized on by the Victor, who afterwards made Tours his ordinary Seat and Reſidence. Part of which Earldom it continued, till the ſeizure of Anjou, and all the reſt of the Engliſh Provinces in France, on the ſentence paſſed upon King John. After which time diſmembred from it, it was conferred on John, the fourth Son of King Charles the ſixth, with the ſtile and title of Duke of Tourein; and he deceaſing without Iſſue, it was beſtowed with the ſame title, on Charles the eldeſt Son of Lewis Duke of Orleans (in the life of his Father); the ſame who afterwards ſucceeding in the Dukedom of Orleans, was taken Priſoner by the Engliſh at the Battel of Agincourt, kept Priſoner 25 years in England, and finally was the Father of King Lewis the twelfth.

3. On the North ſide of Anjou, betwixt it and Normandy, lieth the Province of MAINE; Comitatus Cenomannenſis in our Latin Writers. So called of the Cenomanni the old Inhabitants of this Tract in the time of Cæſar; ſome of which, with the Boii, Senones, and other Nations of the Galls had in the former time paſſed over the Alpes, and there poſſeſſed themſelves of thoſe Countries, which now paſs under the name and accompt of Lombardy. The chief Towns whereof are, 1. Mans Cenomannenſium Civitas in Antoninus, by Ptolomy called Vindinum; ſeated on the meeting of Huine and Sartre; the principal of the Province, and a Biſhop's See: moſt memorable in the elder times for giving the title of an Earl to that famous Rowland, the Siſters Son of Charlemagne, one of the Twelve Peers of France; (the ſubject of many notable Poems, under the name of Orlando Inamorato, Orlando Furioſo, beſides many of the old Romances) who was Earl of Mans. 2. Mayenne, on the Banks of a River of the ſame name, (Meduana in Latin) the title of the ſecond branch of the houſe of Guiſe: famous for Charles Duke of Mayenne, who held out for the League againſt Henry the 4. A Prince not to be equalled in the Art of War, only unfortunate in employing it in ſo ill a cauſe. 3. Vitrun, upon the edge of Bretagne, of which little memorable. 4. La Val, not far from the head of the River Mayenne; of note for giving both name and title to the Earls of Laval, an ancient Family, allied unto the houſes of Vendoſme, Bretagne, Anjou, and other the beſt of France. Few elſe of any note in this little County; which once ſubſiſting of it ſelf under its own natural Lords and Princes, was at laſt united to the Earldom of Anjou, by the marriage of the Lady Guiburge, Daughter and Heir of Helie, the laſt Earl hereof, to Foulk Earl of Anjou, Anno 1083, or thereabouts. The Fortunes of which great Eſtate it hath always followed, ſince that time.

But as for Anjou it ſelf, the principal part of this goodly Patrimony, it was by Charles the Bald conferred on Robert a Saxon Prince, for his valour ſhewn againſt the Normans, Anno 870. Which Robert was Father of Eudes King of France, of Richard Duke of Burgundy, and of Robert who ſucceeded in the Earldom of Anjou; Competitor with Charles the Simple for the Crown it ſelf, as the next Heir to his Brother Eudes, who died King thereof. Slain in the purſuit of this great quarrel, he left this Earldom, with the title of Earl of Paris, and his pretenſions to the Crown, unto Hugh his Son, ſurnamed the Great: who to make good his claim to the Crown, againſt Lewis the 4. Son of Charles the Simple, conferred the Earldom of Anjou, and the Country of Gaſtinois, on Geofry ſurnamed Gryſogonelle, a renowned Warriour, and a great ſtickler in his cauſe, in whoſe race it continued near 300 years. How the two Countries of Main and Tourein were joined to it, hath been ſhewn before. Geofry the Son of Foulk the third, married Maud, Daughter to Henry the firſt of England, and Widow of Henry the Fourth Emperor: From whom proceeded Henry the ſecond, King of England, and Earl of Anjou. But John his Son, forfeiting his Eſtates in France (as the French pretended) Anjou returned unto the Crown: and afterwards was conferred by King Lewis the ninth on his Brother Charles; who in right of Beatrix his Wife was Earl of Provence, and by Pope Urban the Fourth, was made King of Naples and Sicily. Afterwards it was made a Dukedom by King Charles the Fifth, (Tourein being firſt diſmembred from it) in the perſon of Lewis of France his ſecond Brother, to whom this fair Eſtate was given, as ſecond Son of King John of France, the Son of Philip de Valois, and conſequently the next heir to Charles de Valois, the laſt Earl hereof (the King his Brother yielding up all his right unto him). Finally it returned again unto the Crown in the time of Lewis the 11. The Earls and Dukes hereof having been veſted with the Diadems of ſeveral Countries, following in this order.

The Earls of Anjou of the Line of Saxony.

870 1 Robert of Saxony, the firſt Earl of Anjou.

875 2 Robert II. Competitor for the Crown of France with Charles the Simple, as Brother of Eudes the laſt King.

922 3 Hugh the Great, Lord of Gaſtinois, Earl of Paris, Conſtable of France, and Father of Hugh Capet.

926 4 Geofry Gryſogonelle, by the Donation of Hugh the Great, whoſe party he had followed in the War of France, with great fidelity and courage.

938 5 Foulk, Earl of Anjou, the Son of Geofry.

987 6 Geofry II. ſurnamed Martel, for his great valour.

1047 7 Geofry III. Nephew of Geofry the ſecond by one of his Siſters.

1075 8 Foulk II. Brother of Geofry the third, gave Gaſtinois, (which was his proper inheritance) to King Philip the firſt; that by his help he might recover the Earldom of Anjou, from his part wherein he was excluded by his Brother Geofry.

9 Geofry

1080	9	Geofry IV. Son of Foulk 2d.
1083	10	Foulk III. Brother of Geofry; King of Hieſalem in the right of Meliſend his Wife.
1143	11	Geofry V. ſurnamed Plantagenet.
1150	12	Henry the II. King of England, Son of Earl Geofry and Maud his Wife, Daughter of King Henry the firſt.
1162	13	Geofry VI. third Son of King Henry the ſecond, made Earl of Anjou on his marriage with Conſtance, the Heir of Bretagne.
1186	14	Arthur, Son of Geofry and Conſtance.
1202	15	John, King of England, ſucceeded on the death of Arthur; diſpoſſeſſed of his Eſtates in France by Philip Auguſtus, immediately on the death of Arthur, Anno 1202.

Earls and Dukes of Anjou, of the Line of France.

1262	1	Charles, Brother of King Lewis the ninth, Earl of Anjou, and Provence, King of Naples, and Sicilia, &c.
1315	2	Charles of Valois, Son of Philip the third, Earl of Anjou in right of his Wife, Neece of the former Charles, by his Son and Heir of the ſame name; the Father of Philip de Valois, French King.
1318	3	Lewis of Valois, the ſecond Son of Charles, died without iſſue, Anno 1325.
1376	4	Lewis of France, the ſecond ſon of King John, the Son of Philip de Valois, created the firſt Duke of Anjou by King Charles his Brother; and adopted by Queen Joan of Naples, King of Naples, Sicil, and Hieruſalem, and Earl of Provence.
1385	5	Lewis III. Duke of Anjou, and Earl of Provence, and Main; titulary King of Sicil, Naples, and Hieruſalem.
1416	6	Lewis IV. ſucceſſor to his Father in Eſtate and Titles.
1430	7	Rene, the Brother of Lewis, by the adoption of Queen Joan the ſecond, was for a while poſſeſſed of Naples; but preſently outed by Alfonſo of Aragon, and died the titulary King of Naples, Sicil, and Hieruſalem; the Father of Queen Margarite, Wife of Henry the ſixth, and Duke of Bar, in right of Viclant his Mother.
1480	8	Charles Earl of Maine, Nephew to Rene by his third Brother Charles, at his deceaſe left Anjou, and all the reſt of his Eſtates to King Lewis the eleventh, An. 1481. Since which never otherwiſe aliened, than as an honourary Title of the third Son of France.

It is to be obſerved here (according to our method in other places) that Rene King of Sicil, &c. and Duke of Anjou, inſtituted an Order of Knighthood, called of the Croiſſant: the Knights whereof carried a Creſcent, or Half-moon, on their right Arms, with this Motto, L' Os en Croiſſant; encouraging them thereby to ſeek the increaſe of valour and reputation.

The Arms of this Dukedom, were France, a Border Gules.

7. LA BEAUSSE.

LA BEAUSSE (not reckoning in the Provinces laſt before deſcribed) is bounded on the Eaſt, with France ſpecially and primarily ſo called; on the Weſt, with Anjou, Maine, Tourein, and ſome part of Berry; on the North, with Normandy; and on the South with Nivernois, and the reſt of Berry. It is called Belſia in Latin Writers; both names derived from the pleaſantneſs and beauties of it; this Country being not only looked on as the Garden of France, but the Nurſe of the great City of Paris, which from the breaſts thereof receiveth the beſt part of its ſuſtenance.

The principal Nations of the whole in the time of the Romans, were the Carnutes, which inhabited the greateſt part, and the Samnitæ near the Loire, part of Gallia Celtica, and caſt into the Province of Lugdunenſis quarta by the Emperor Conſtantine. Divided by the French into the Higher, the Lower, and the Intermediate.

1. The HIGHER BEAUSSE is that part which lyeth next to Normandy, of which the principal Towns are, 1. Dreux, ſeated upon the River Eureux, ſuppoſed to be the ſeat of the ancient Druides, who held here their Parliaments or Seſſions for adminiſtration of Juſtice. The title and inheritance of Robert, one of the younger Sons of King Lewis the Groſſe, and Grandfather of that Peter of Dreux, who ſucceeded Arthur, the Son of Geofry Plantagenet, in the Earldom of Bretagne. 2. Montfort, an Earldom, the title and Eſtate of John Earl of Montfort, ſurnamed the Valiant, who ſucceeded in the Dukedom of Bretagne, by the aid of the Engliſh An. 1341. 3. Chartres, called anciently Carnutum Civitas, (but by Ptolomy, Atricum) from whence the Country hereabouts was called Le Pays Chartrain: ſeated in an uneven place, varied with fertile riſing Hills, ſo that the Eaſt ſide ſtands upon the top of an Hill, and the Weſt ſpreads it ſelf in the bottom of a Plain, through the midſt whereof runs the River Eure, which as ſoon as it comes to the Walls of the City, on the South ſide, divides it ſelf into three branches, two whereof encompaſs the City round about, and the third running through the midſt thereof, ſerveth the Town with many Mills for the uſe of the people: doth afterwards unite it ſelf with the reſt into one main Chanel. A very fair and goodly City, a Biſhops See, and one of the Vidamates of France; anciently giving the title of an Earldom alſo to the houſe of Blois, from the time that Theobald the ſecond Earl of Blois extorted it by ſtrong hand from the Biſhops hereof, about the year 950, continuing in the poſſeſſion of that Family till the year 1300, or thereabouts, when ſold by Maheult, or Maud, the Heir Proprietor hereof, Wife of Hugh de Chaſtillon, in her right called Earl of Blois, to King Philip the Fair, for an Annual penſion of 4000 Livres. 4. Anneau, a Town of the territory of Chartres, memorable for the great ſlaughter made here by Henry Duke of Guiſe, of the German Auxiliaries, invading France with a right formidable Army in behalf of the Hugonots, An. 1587.

2. The LOWER BEAUSSE is that which lieth towards Nivernois and Berry; and is ſubdivided into Sologne, and Orleanois. In SOLOGNE, which lieth cloſe to Berry, the chief places of note, are, 1. Romarantin, ſeated on the Souldre, the chief Town of this Tract. 2. Mallenzay. 3. La Ferte, or La Ferte S. Bernard, of which nothing memorable. In ORLEANOIS, which lieth more Northwards upon the River of Loyre, are, 1. Iargeau, a Town once of very great ſtrength, and one of the out-works of Orleans. 2. Cleri, called alſo Cleri of Noſtre dame, from the Church there built unto our Lady. 3. Tury, and 4. Angerville, both in the ordinary Road betwixt Paris & 5. Orleans, the principal City of all Beauſſe, called Genabum in the time of Cæſar; repaired, or rather new built by the Emperor Aurelius, An. 276, from thence named Aurelia, the Country round about it Aurelianenſis, now Orleans, and Orleanois. The Country generally very fruitful and yielding a moſt excellent and delicious Wine; which for the ſtrength and intoxicating power thereof, is baniſhed the French Kings Cellar by eſpecial Edict. The City very pleaſantly ſeated on the River Loyre, well built, ſituate in a ſweet Air, and planted with a Civil and ingenuous People; who are ſaid to ſpeak the beſt Language of any in France. For a time it was the chief Seat of a diſtinct Kingdom, (according to the unprovident humour of the Merovignians) the lot of Clodomire Son of Clouis the Great, and of Guntram Son of Clotaire, both Kings of Orleans; as alſo was Theodorick, the ſecond Son of Childebert King of Mets, on the death of Guntram. But Sigibert his Son being vanquiſhed by Clotaire the ſecond, this Kingdom extending to the ſhores of the Aquitain Ocean, was added unto that of France. Orleans ſince that time, content with a lower title, hath of late oftentimes with greater prudence, been made the honourary title of the ſecond Sons of France called Dukes hereof, the firſt who had the title being Philip the ſecond, Son of Philip de Valois, from a baſe Son of whoſe, the Earls of Dunois, and Dukes of Longeville do derive themſelves, and Lewis the ſecond Son of Charles the firſt, Grandfather of Lewis the 11. French King. It is a See Epiſcopal, a Bailiwick, or Seige Præſidial, and an Univerſity. The See Epiſcopal founded in the Church of St. Croſſe, miſerably ruined by the Hugonots in the Civil Wars, out of meer hatred to the name. The Seige Præſidial ſetled here by King Henry the ſecond, 1551, for the eaſe of his Subjects of theſe parts, in ſutes not worth the troubling of the Courts of Paris. The Univerſity erected by King Philip le Bel, Anno 1312, though, to ſpeak properly, it be an Hall only for the reading of the Civil Laws, the only learning there profeſſed, and for that conſiderable. A Town now not of ſo great ſtrength as in former times, when for ſome months it held out againſt the whole power of the Engliſh; reſcued from them at laſt by the valour of Joan the Virgin, whoſe Statue (like a man of Arms) is ſtill preſerved on the Bridge-gate of this City; near which great Montacute Earl of Salisbury had his Fatal blow.

The MIDDLE or intermediate BEAUSSE lieth betwixt the former; in which the places of chief note are, 1. Blois, ſeated alſo on the Loir, in a ſound Air, and fruitful Country; the Nurſery for the moſt part of the Kings Children, for that cauſe much reſorted to by the Nobility, and honoured ſometimes with the reſidence of the Kings themſelves: it being in the Council-Chamber of the Kings houſe here, that Henry of Lorrein, Duke of Guiſe, the chief contriver of the terrible Maſſacre at Paris, and Author of the Holy League, was ſlain by the command of King Henry the third, An. 1589, 2. Chaſteau-Dun, the chief Town of the Earldom of Dunois, (the honour and Eſtate of John Earl of Dunois, commonly called the Baſtard of Orleans, one of the beſt Soldiers of his time, and ſo approved by his exploits againſt the Engliſh) mounted upon the top of an high Hill, at the confluence of the Loir, and Aigre. 3. Lavardin, moſt remarkable for giving name and honour to a noble Family, which depending on the houſe of Vendoſme (to the Signeury whereof it doth belong) brought forth that valiant Commander, Monſieur de Yardin, a faithful and couragious follower of King Henry the fourth, in his long War againſt the Leaguers. 4. Vendoſme (Vindocinum in Latin) the chief Town of the Dukedom of Vendoſme, not otherwiſe of note than for the Earls and Dukes which have born this Title: of which as being the Progenitors of the Kings now regnant, I have thought fit to add the enſuing Catalogue; premiſing firſt, that this Earldom came to the houſe of France by the marriage of Katharine daughter and heir of John, the laſt Earl of the former Race, to John the firſt, the Earl of the other Family.

Earls and Dukes of Vendoſme.

1386	1	John of Bourbon, Grandchild of Lewis the firſt Duke of Bourbon, the firſt Earl of Vendoſme of this Family.
1432	2	Lewis of Bourbon, a confederate with Joan the Virgin in her actions againſt the Engliſh.
1446	3	John of Bourbon II. from whom deſcended the Princes of Roch-Suryon, and the Dukes of Montpenſier.
1472	4	Francis of Bourbon.
1495	5	Charles of Bourbon, the firſt Duke of Vendoſme from whoſe youngeſt ſon called Lodowick, or Lewis, deſcend the now Princes of Conde, and Earls of Soiſſons.
1532	6	Antony of Bourbon, Duke of Vendoſme, and King of Navarre.
1562	7	Henry of Bourbon, Duke of Vendoſme, and King of Navarre; afterwards King of France alſo, by the name of Henry the fourth.

8 Cæſar de Vendoſme, of the Sons of Henry the 4. by the Dutcheſs of Beaufort, created by his Father Duke of Vendoſme, and once deſigned his Succeſſor in the Crown of France. Afterwards by the procuremennt of the King his Father, married to the Daughter and Heir of Philibert Emanuel, D. of Mercoeur, (a younger branch of the houſe of Lorrein) poſſeſſed of a fair and goodly Eſtate in the Dukedom of Bretagne, in the right of his Wife, a Daughter and Heir of the houſe of Martignes (a branch of the Family of thoſe Dukes). By means whereof the Duke of Vendoſme hath not only a large inheritance, but great authority in that Country.

The Arms of the Earls and Dukes of Vendoſme, were and are, Azure, ſix Flower de Lyces, Or, 3, 2, 1. Thoſe of the former Family affirmed by Bara to have been France, on a Bend Gules, three Lions, Or.

But the great Lords of this Country, were the Earls of Blois, poſſeſſed not only of the Earldom of Chartreſs (a fair and goodly Signeury) in the higher Beauſſe, but alſo of the whole Country of Tourein, a better Patrimony and Eſtate than that; which how they were alienated from this Houſe, we have ſeen before. And as for the Earldom of Blois it ſelf, it contained a large and gallant Patrimony in the middle-Beauſſe, thereunto belonging; which being after ſold to the Dukes of Orleans, gave the firſt greatneſs to that Houſe. As for the Earls of Blois themſelves, they fetch their Pedigree from one Gerlon a noble Dane (Companion in Arms unto Rollo the firſt Duke of Normandy) in his acquiring of that Dukedom, by Charles the Simple created the firſt Earl hereof, An. 920, or thereabouts, branching it ſelf into the houſes of Blois and Champagne; ſometimes united in one perſon, but for the moſt part, and at laſt, divided into two great Families; Stephen King of England, commonly called Stephen of Blois, derived both his name and Parentage from the Earls of this houſe, as being Son of Theobald, the fifth Earl of Blois, by Maud one of the daughters of William Duke of Normandy, and King of England, ſurnamed the Conqueror. From this Theobald the Earls of Blois continued in the Maſculine Line, till the year 1219, under nine Princes in the total, of the houſe of Gerlon: And then it fell by the Heirs General, to the noble Family of Chaſtillon, continuing theirs till the year 1391, when ſold by Guy de Chaſtillon the laſt Earl of that Houſe, to Lewis Duke of Orleans, he being then Childleſs, and wholly governed by his Wife (a Daughter of the houſe of Namurre) who could not otherwiſe maintain her great prodigality, but by ready money. United finally to the Crown, by Lewis the Grand-ſon of this Lewis, on his ſucceſſion to the Kingdom, after Charles the 8.

The Arms of theſe great Earls were, Gules, three Palls, Vaire, a Chief, Or.

8. NIVERNOIS.

NIVERNOIS is bounded on the North with La Beauſſe, on the South with Burbonois, on the Eaſt with Champagne, and on the Weſt with Berry: ſo called from Nivernium, or Nevers the chief Town thereof.

This is the ſmalleſt Province in all this Continent, but to be handled here apart, becauſe not eaſily reducible unto any other, as all the reſt of the leſſer Provinces may be. The Soil not very fruitful of Corn or Wine, but plentifully ſtored with rich Paſtures, and well ſhaded with Woods, in which are found ſome Mines of Iron, interſperſed with Silver, and many Quarries of good Stone, of much uſe for building. The Territory being but ſmall, we cannot look for many Towns of note and conſequence. Of thoſe that be, the principal are, 1. Pontigni, remarkable for an ancient Abby, the burial-place of ſome of the old Earls of Nevers. 2. Nevers it ſelf, upon the Loire, beautified with a Bridge of twenty Arches, but otherwiſe not great or fair, though the chief of this ſmall Country, and the ſeat of the Dukes. The reputation which it hath, proceeding ſpecially from the Antiquity thereof, and the Earls and Dukes from thence denominated.

Once part of the Burgundian Conqueſts, and from them won by the French; it came to have Princes of its own, almoſt as early as any other Country in the Realm of France. Who was the firſt that had the title of Earl of Nevers, and therewithal the Lordſhip of this Eſtate, I can no where find; but ſure I am, that in the year 1001, both the Eſtate and Title were enjoyed by Laudin a Noble man of the Burgundian race, who on the death of Henry the 4. Duke of Burgundy, was like to have ſeized on that Eſtate, in deſpight of Robert King of France, who pretended to it. Paſſing through many Families, it came at laſt to the houſe of Burgogne, in the perſon of Odo, the Son of Hugh the fourth of that name, Duke of Burgundy, by the Heir-General of Nevers; and from that to the houſe of Flanders, by the marriage of Yoland, or Burgogne, to Robert of Bethure, Earl of Flanders, 1 12; whoſe Son, named Lewis, married the Heir of Rethell, uniting, by that marriage, theſe Eſtates under his command. Together with the reſt of the Rights of Flanders, it came again, by marriage, to Philip the Hardy, Duke of Burgundy; who with the liking and conſent of his elder Sons, (otherwiſe well provided for) conferred both it and Rethel, on his third Son Philip, whoſe Neece Elizabeth, daughter and heir of John of Burgogne, brought it in marriage to Adolph of Cleve, her Husband, An. 1484. In the perſon of Francis, the fourth Earl of this Houſe, it was made a Dukedom; and by his Daughter Henrietta, Siſter and Heir of Francis the laſt Prince of this Family, was brought in Dower to Lewis de Gonzaga, ſecond Son of Frederick Duke of Mantua, An. 1563, whoſe Son Charles ſucceeded his Father and Mother in the Dukedom of Nevers, and Vincent of Gonzaga, his Couſin-German, in the Dukedom of Mantua. And here it is to be obſerved, that though this Eſtate hath paſſed through ſo many Families; yet the Rights and Regalities thereof, have been ſtill continued; not being hitherto reduced (for ought that I can find) under any of the Parliaments of France, as all the reſt of that Kingdom is, but ſuch parts thereof as are either under other Princes, or elſe enjoy the Priviledges of a free Eſtate.

The Arms hereof are, Azure, within a Border Compone, Gules, and Argent, three Flower de Lyces, Or.

9. The Dukedom of BOURBON.

THE Dukedom of BOURBON, in the full power and extent thereof, comprehended Bourbonois, Forreſt, Beau-jolois, and Auvergne; all now reverted to the Crown.

1. BOURBONOIS hath on the Eaſt the Dukedom of Burgundy, on the Weſt, Berry; on the North, Nivernois, and a corner of Gaſtinois; on the South, Auvergne: ſo called from Bourbon, (for diſtinction ſake, called Bourbon Archenbauld) the chief Town thereof. The Country very well wooded, and of excellent paſturage; which makes the people more intent to grazing and feeding Cattel, than they are to Tillage; and is watered with the Rivers of Loir, Yonne, and Allier, which are counted navigable; beſides Aron, Acolin, Lixentes, Lanbois, and ſome leſſer ſtreams.

It is divided into the Higher and Lower: in the Higher which is more mountainous and hilly, there is no other Town of note, than that of Montaigne, ſituate in the Country of Combraille; the Signeury, as I take it, of Michael de Montagne, the Author of the Book of Eſſays. But in the Lower Bourbonois, are, 1. Molins, eſteemed the Center of all France; ſituate on the Allier, a Baillage, and the chief Town of this Country; the River yielding great plenty of Fiſh, but of Salmons ſpecially; the Town adorned with a fair Caſtle, and that beautified with one of the fineſt Gardens in France; in which are many Trees of Lemmons and Oranges. 2. Bourbon Archenbauld, and 3. Bourbon Ancie: the former of the two, ſeated upon the Loir, and giving name to the whole Province; of great reſort by reaſon of its Medicinal waters. 4. S. Porcin. and 5. Varennes Ganat, upon the Frontiers of Auvergne, 6. Chancelle, 7. Charroux, 8. Paliſſe, 9. Souvigni, 10. Amand.

The ancient Inhabitants were part of the Hedui, who being waſted in their wars againſt the Romans, a great part of their Country was, by Julius Cæſar, conferred on the Boii, a German Nation, who coming with the Helvetians into Gaul, and unwilling upon their defeat to go home again, were by him planted in this Tract, at the requeſt of the Hedui, who deſired it of him: and poſſibly the Hedui might be willing to have theſe Boii dwell amongſt them, not only to fill up their numbers, and manure the waſte Grounds of their Country; but in regard of ſome nearer tye that was between them: it being conceived by many Learned men, that theſe Boii, which together with theſe Cenomanni, Senones, and other Gallick Nations, croſſed over the Alpes, had been originally of theſe parts: and being driven out of Italy by the conquering Romans, fell into Germany, and from thence ſent thoſe Auxiliaries to attend the Helvetians in their journey, ſpoken of before. Made ſubject to the Romans, with the reſt of Gallia; and by them reckoned as a part of Aquitannica: it continued under their command, till the coming of the Burgundians, by whom it was ſubdued, and made a part of their Kingdom; in the ſubverting of which Kingdom, it was (together with Beau jolois) ſubdued by the more powerful French; and how diſpoſed of afterwards, we ſhall ſee anon, having firſt taken a view of the other Provinces.

2. FORREST, is bounded on the Eaſt with Beau-jolois, on the Weſt with Avergne, on the North with Bourbonois, and on the South with a part of Languedoc. The Country populous and large, but not very fruitful; hilly and mountainous, much of the nature of the Wood-lands. The Air a little of the coldeſt to afford good Wines; but that ſufficiently recompenſed by abundance of Pit-coal; by which they have very good fires at a cheap rate. The people are conceived to be none of the wiſeſt, but withall, very greedy and covetous of gain.

The chief Towns in it, are, 1. Mont briſon, ſeated on the Loir. 2. Feurs, ſeated on the ſame River, called anciently, Forum Seguſianorum, the chief Town of the Seguſiani, or Secuſiani, whom Cæſar and others mention in this part of Gaul. 3. St. Stephen, (or Eſtienne) in Feurian, near the head of that River. 4. St. Germans, 5. St. Rimberg, 6. St. Bennet le Chaſteau, 7. St. Guermier, &c. of which little memorable.

This Country of Forreſt was anciently a part of the Earldom of Lyons; diſmembred from it at or about the ſame time with Beau-jolois; and was held by a long ſucceſſion of Earls Proprietaries of it, as a State diſtinct, till Regnaud Lord of Forreſt, the Son of Earl Guy, by the marriage of Iſabel Daughter and Heir of Humbert Earl of Beau-jeu, joined them both together; which was about the year 1265; parted again after his deceaſe, An. 1280; Guy being his eldeſt Son, ſucceeding in Forreſt, and Lewis his ſecond Son, in Beau jeu. How they became united in the Houſe of Bourbon, we ſhall ſee anon.

3. BEAU JOLOIS, ſo called from Beau-jeu, the chief Town hereof, taketh up the tract of ground betwixt the Loir and the Soaſne; and betwixt Lionnois and Forreſt. A Country of no great extent, but very remarkable for the Lords and Princes of it; who have been men of great eminence in their ſeveral times. The chief Town of it, is Beau jeu, beautified with a goodly Caſtle, pleaſantly ſeated on the brow of a riſing-mountain, from whence perhaps it took the name; as the great Keep in Farnham Caſtle, was in the ſame ſenſe, and for the ſame pleaſant ſituation, called Joyeux Guard, in the time of Lancelot du Lake, whoſe that Caſtle was. Which appears further by a Tower built at Conſtantinople, by Guiſchard the third of that name, Lord hereof, (being then Ambaſſador to the Emperour, from King Philip Auguſtus) with this inſcription, Turris Belli-jocenſis; which there continued to be ſeen a long time after. 2. Belle-ville, where is an Abby founded by Humbert the ſecond, Anno 1158. 3. Ville Franche, environed with Walls by Humbert the fourth; whoſe Son Guiſchard the third, above mentioned, founded here a Convent of Franciſcans, called to this day, Minorette. 4. Noironde, 5. St. Maurice, 6. Vlſie, 7. Obches, concerning which, there have been long and many Wars betwixt the Earls of Forreſt, and theſe Lords of Beau jeu.

This Country, as that other of Forreſt, was once part of the Earldom of Lyons; in the partage of which Eſtate, it fell to Omphroy, one of the Brothers of Earl Artand, Anno 989, whoſe Succeſſors had no other title than Lords of Beau-jeu. They were moſt of them men of great piety, Founders of many Collegiate and Conventual Churches; ſome of them men of action alſo: Humbert the ſecond, and the fifth, Adventurers in the Wars of the Holy Land; Richard the ſecond, in thoſe againſt the Engliſh; Guiſchard the fourth; made Conſtable of France, by King Lewis the Ninth. But the houſe failing in this Guiſchard, it was united unto that of the Earls of Forreſt, as before is ſaid, in the perſon of Regnaud, Earl thereof, whoſe Son and Succeſſor, called Lewis was alſo Conſtable of France; as Edward, the Grand-child of this Lewis, a Marſhal of it. But at the laſt it fell into the hands of a lewd and wicked Prince, Edward the ſecond; who being impriſoned at Paris for his great offences, and overlaid with Wars by the Dukes of Savoy; made a Donation, or Free-gift, of all his Signeuries, to Lewis Duke of Bourbon, ſirnamed the Good; the direct Heir of Guy Earl of Forreſt, the eldeſt Son of Regnaud Earl of Forreſt, and Lord of Beau-jeu above mentioned, and conſequently of next kin to him, An. 1400.

4. AUVERGNE hath on the Eaſt, Forreſt, and Lyonois; on the Weſt, Limoſin, Perigort, and Quercu; on the South, part of Languedoc; and on the North, Berry, and Bourbonois. It is divided into the Higher and Lower. The Lower being called Limaigne, is fruitful in a very eminent degree. The Higher, mountainous and barren. In this laſt, the Towns of chief note are, 1. St. Flour, a Biſhops-See of an impregnable ſituation. 2. Arilla, on the River Jourdain, defended with a ſtrong Caſtle on the top of a Rock. 3. Beauregard, on the River Gardon. 4. Carlat, 5. Murat, 6. Billon, of which little obſervable in ancient ſtories. In the Lower, called Lemaigne, from a River of that name which falls into the Allier: there is, 1. Clermont, a Biſhops-See, fair and pleaſing for the ſituation, and Fountains deſcending from the Hills of the higher Auvergne, the chief City of the whole Province. Moſt memorable in theſe later ages, for the Council here called by Pope Urban the ſecond, An. 1067; in which, by the artifice of the Pope, the Chriſtian Princes of the Weſt engaged themſelves in the Wars of the Holy Land; giving thereby the better opportunity to the Popes to enlarge both their Territories and their Power. It was firſt raiſed out of the ruines of Gergovia, the head City of the Auverni, in the time of Cæſar; and the Seat-royal of Vercingetorix, King of that Nation, who ſo long put him to his trumps with an Army of 138000 men: now a ſmall Village called Gergeau. 2. Rion, in which reſides the Seneſchal, or chief Governour of the Lower Auvergne. 3. Montpenſier, of great note for the Princes of the houſe of Bourbon, once Dukes hereof; beginning in Lewis the firſt Earl, Son of John Duke of Bourbon, An. 1415; and ending in Henry the laſt Duke; whoſe Daughter and Heir was married to the Duke of Orleans, Brother of Lewis the thirteenth. 4. Montferant, 5. Yſſoire, 6. Brionde, 7. Aigueperſe, 8. Turenne, the ancient Seat and Patrimony of the De la Tours, heretofore Earls of Boulogne, now Soveraigns of Sedan, and Dukes of Bouillon; to whom it hath for ſome ages ſince, given the title of Viſcount. A Family deſcended from the Heirs-general of Euſtace, Earl of Boulogne in Picardy; Father to Godfry of Bouillon, Duke of Lorrein, and King of Hieruſalem.

The Country firſt inhabited in the times of the Romans, by the potent Nation of the Auverni; whoſe King Bitnitus, was taken Priſoner, and led in triumph unto Rome, in the War againſt the Salii, the Allobroges, and others of their Confederates. Not fully conquered, till Cæſar had ſubdued their King Vercingetorix. They were afterwards part of the Province of Aquitania prima; retaining, in the often changes of the Empire, its old name of Auvergn. Heretofore part of the great Dutchy of Aquitain; remaining ſubject to thoſe Dukes, till William the eighth Duke, and the fourth of that name, gave it in portion with one of his Daughters, whoſe name I find not, nor the name of her Husband neither; of whom there is nothing on record, but that he took up Arms againſt Lewis the ſixth, who began his Reign, An. 1110. By the Heir-general of this Houſe, it was conveyed in marriage to John the ſecond Son of Guigne the 4. and Beatrix, Daulphin of Viennois; in whoſe Line it continued under the title of the Daulphins of Auvergn, till Berault, the laſt Earl or Daulphin of it. Who having married the Heir of Guy Earl of Forreſt, the Son of Regnaud above-mentioned, had by her a daughter named Anne, Heir of both Eſtates, married to Lewis the Good, the third Duke of Bourbon; to whom Edward the laſt Lord of Beau-jeu, made a Donation or ſurrendry of that Signeury alſo, uniting in his perſon, the diſtinct Eſtates of Bourbon, Beau-jeu, Forreſt, and Auvergne.

And as for Bourbonois it ſelf, in the diſtractions of the French Empire by the poſterity of Charles the Great, who moſt improvidently cantoned it into many great Eſtates, and petit Signeuries, it fell unto the ſhare of the potent Family of the Dampierre, deſcended from the ancient Houſe of Burgogne; who held it till the year 1308. At what time Lewis the ninth, for the advancement of Robert Earl of Clermont, (in Beauvoiſin) his fifth Son, married him to Beatrix, Daughter and Heir of Arckenbald Dampierre, the laſt of that Houſe. Lewis the Son of this Robert, was the firſt Duke of this Line; whoſe Succeſſors and their Atchievements, follow in this Catalogue of The Lords and Dukes of Bourbon.

1308	1	Robert, Son of King Lewis the 9. Earl of Clermont; the firſt Lord of Bourbon of the Houſe of France.
1317	2	Lewis, the firſt Duke of Bourbon; Peer, and Chamberlain of France: from whoſe ſecond Son Jaques, comes the Houſe of Vendoſme.
1341	3	Peter, Peer, and Chamberlain; ſlain in the Battel of Poictiers, An. 1356.
1356	4	Lewis II. called the Good; in whoſe perſon all theſe Eſtates were firſt united: Peer, and Chamberlain of France, and Governour of King Charles the ſixth.
1410	5	John, Peer, and Chamberlain; taken Priſoner at the Battel of Agincourt, and dyed in England: the Root of the Family of Montpenſier.
1434	6	Charles, Peer, and Chamberlain; General of the Army againſt the Engliſh, in the Iſle of France.
1456	7	John II. Peer, Chamberlain, and Conſtable of France.
1487	8	Peter II. Brother of John; Peer, Chamberlain, and Regent of France, in the abſence of Charles the 8.
1503	9	Charles Earl of Montpenſier, Duke of Bourbon in the right of Suſan his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Peter the ſecond, Duke of Bourbon.

After whoſe death, being ſlain at the ſack of Rome, An. 1527, without Iſſue, his Eſtate fell unto the Crown; and ſo continued, till by the Sentence of Arreſt of the Court of Parliament in Paris, Auvergne, Forreſt, and Beau-jeu, were adjudged to Madam Louiſe, Mother of Lewis the firſt Duke of Montpenſier, and Daughter and Heir of Gilbert de Bourbon, Earl of Montpenſier, the Nephew of John Duke of Bourbon, (the firſt of that name) of which Houſe ſhe was the only ſurviving Heir; from whence deſcended Henry, the laſt Duke of that Family, ſpoken of before. And for the title of Auvergne, it was uſed cuſtomarily, by the eldeſt Sons of the Earls and Dukes of Montpenſier; till given to Charles, natural Son of King Charles the ninth; called from hence, the Count or Earl of Auvergne; who being a Confederate of Charles Duke of Biron, was in the year 1604, made Priſoner by King Henry the 4. releaſed by King Lewis the 13. An. 1616. and within two years after made Duke of Angoleſme: in whoſe Poſterity it remaineth.

The Arms of theſe Dukes were, 1. France, a Baſton, Gules, for the Dukedom of Bourbon. 2. Or, a Daulphin Palme, Azure, for the County of Auvergne: 3. Or, a Lion Sable, armed Gules, under a Label of five pieces of the ſame, for the Signeury of Beau-jeu. The Arms of the Earldom of Forreſt, I am yet to ſeek. But anciently, the Arms of Bourbon, when under the Dampierres, were Or, a Lion Rampant Gules, environed with Cockle-ſhells of Azure.

10. BERRIE.

HAving thus taken a view of thoſe ſeveral Provinces which (except Bretagne) were the firſt purchaſes of the French in the modern France; and ſo much of the Burgundian Conqueſts, as were either laid to the Kingdom of Weſt-France, or elſe were neceſſarily to be paſſed over in the courſe of our Journey: let us next look on thoſe which were poſſeſſed by the Gothes. And firſt we will begin with BERRIE, (as next in ſituation with thoſe before deſcribed) bounded on the Eaſt with Bourbonois and Nivernois; on the Weſt with Poictou, and part of Tourein, on the North with La Beauſſe; on the South with Limoſin; in Latin called Biturgium regio, from the Bituriges, the old Inhabitants of this Tract; by Pliny, Strabo, and ſome others, called the Bituriges Cubi, to difference them from the Bituriges Vbiſci, dwelling about Bourdeaux.

The Country watered in the Eaſt with the River Laure, in the South, with the Fage; in the North, with the Cher; and in the Inland parts, with Indre, Arnon, Theo, Eure, and others which we ſhall meet withal anon: of no great note, but ſuch as much conduce to the fruitfulneſs of it; affording it the benefit of fat Paſtures and flouriſhing Meadows; which breed great multitudes of Cattel, and ſuch flocks of Sheep, that when they tax a man for lying in exceſs of numbers, they uſe to ſay, Fye, Sir, there are not ſo many ſheep in Berrie.

It containeth in it 33 Walled Towns; the chief whereof are, 1. Bourges, a Town of great ſtrength by Nature, and as well fortified by Art, ſituate in a low Flat, amongſt deep impaſſable Bogs and Mariſhes, cauſed by the overflowing of the Auron, Yeure, Malon, and Aurette; ſmall Riverets, but of great waters when they meet together: by means whereof, it may be eaſily drowned at the approach of an Enemy: for that cauſe made the Faſtneſs and Retreat of Charles the ſeventh, in his long Wars againſt the Engliſh, poſſeſſed at that time of Paris, and the greateſt part of the Kingdom. The poor Prince in the mean time fain to feaſt it here with a Rump of Mutton, and a Chick, and that but upon high days neither. From his conſtant abode here, and [illegible] withal he had been Duke of this Country, in the life of his three elder Brethren, by the Engliſh in deriſion called King of Berrie. A large, fair, and rich Town it is, the Seat of an Arch-biſhop: a Siege-preſidial, and one of the beſt Univerſities in France, eſpecially for the ſtudy of the Civil Laws; firſt founded by King Lewis the ninth, and afterwards reſtored and perfected by Charles Duke of Berrie, the Brother of King Lewis the eleventh. Some Fabulous Founders, and Ridiculous Originations, have been thought of for it; as, that it was built by Ogyges, a Grand-child of Noah; by whom called Bytoguges; which in the corruption of the following ing times, came (forſooth) unto Bituriges; which Etymologie, were it as dear bought, as it is far fetch'd, might be good for Ladies; and then it would be good for ſomewhat. Others, no leſs abſurdly, will have it called Biturris, quaſi Bi turris, from two fair Towers which formerly (as they pretend) were erected here: one of the two, in part, ſtill ſtanding: and unto this, they ſay, alludeth an old Grammarian, thus:

Turribus à binis, inde vocor Bituris.

From two Towers which were builded here,
The name of Bituris I bear.

But the truth is, it was thus called from the Bituriges, (the Biturigum Civitas of Antoninus) and by that name, in the diviſion of old Gaul by the Emperour Conſtantine, made the Metropolis of the Province of Aquitania prima; of which this Country was a part. 2. Wiarron, or Vierzon, pleaſantly ſeated amongſt Woods, Vines, and Rivers; the Rivers Arnon, Theo, Cher, and Yeure, meeting hereabouts: built in or near the place of the old Avaricum, a Town of great note and ſtrength in the time of Cæſar: the revolt whereof gave ſuch a check to his proceedings, that he was fain to ſtretch his wits and valour on the very tenter-hooks, before it was again recovered. 3. Concreſſant, on the River Souldre, beautified with a ſtrong and magnificent Caſtle. 4. Chaſteau-Roux, on the River Indre: of which little memorable. 5. Iſſaudun, on the River Theo, the Balliage for that part of the Country. 6. Montfulcon, an ancient Barony. 7. Argenton on the River Creuſe, the Title and Eſtate of Philip de Comines, hence called Signeur de Argenton, who writ the Hiſtory of France under Lewis the 11th; in which he dived ſo far into, and writ ſo largely of, the greateſt affairs of State, that Queen Katharine de Medicis uſed to ſay, That he had made as many Herticks in State policy, as Luther had done in Religion. 8. Sancerre, ſeated on a high Hill near the River Leire; by ſome Latin Writers called Xintodorum; but moſt generally ſaid to be ſo called, quaſi ſacrum Cereris, from the Goddeſs Ceres, herein worſhipped in the times of Gentiliſm. A Town of great conſequence and ſtrength; and as ſuch, aſſigned over to the Hugonots, An. 1569, as a Town of Caution for their ſecurity, and the better keeping of the Articles of Peace then agreed upon. Famous not long after, for enduring a moſt deſperate and tedious ſiege under Charles the 9. by whom theſe Articles were almoſt no ſooner made than broken. Before which time, it was not under the command of the French Kings, but under the direct dominion of its own Princes, called the Earls of Sancerre, who had the Soveraignty thereof: but being taken by the Kings Forces upon this occaſion, An. 1573, and the Walls thrown down, a Garriſon was put into the Caſtle, to keep it for the time to come at the Kings devotion, the Rents and Profits of it ſtill remaining to the true Proprietors.

Here is alſo in this Province, the Town and Seigneury of Aubignie, adorned with many Priviledges, an ample Territory, and a beautiful Caſtle. Beſtowed by Charles the ſixth, on Robert, the ſecond Son of Alan Stewart, Earl of Lennox in Scotland, for his many ſignal ſervices againſt the Engliſh; and is ſtill the honourary Title and Poſſeſſion of the ſecond branch of that Noble and illuſtrious Family, hence called by the name of Lords of Aubignie.

But as for Berry it ſelf, and the Fortunes of it, we may pleaſe to know, that the old Inhabitants of it, were the Bituriges Cubi, (or the Biteriges Liberi, as ſome Writers call them) ſubdued, but not without great difficulty, by the matchleſs Cæſar: in the firſt diviſion of Galia, made part of Aquitain; and in the new-modelling of that Province, by the Emperour Conſtantine, a part of Aquitania prima, won from the Romans by the Gothes, and from them by the French, it was for long time under the command of Provincial-Governours, one of which, called by the name of Godfrey, obtained that dignity from Hugh Capet; and his Poſterity enjoyed that Office under the Kings of France, till the days of King Henry the firſt; of whom the Inheritance and Eſtate was bought by Harpin, one of the deſcendants of that Godfrey. But long he had not held it as Proprietary, in his own right; when deſirous to make one in the Holy Wars, he ſold it back again to King Philip the firſt, (the better to furniſh himſelf for that expedition) An. 1096, to be united to the Crown after his deceaſe. Since which time, the Soveraignty of it hath been always in the Crown of France; but the Poſſeſſion and Revenue ſometimes given, with the title of Duke, for a portion to ſome of the Kings younger Sons, to be holden of them in Apennage, under the Soveraignty and Command of the Donor, and his Succeſſors. The firſt of thoſe that held this title, was John, a younger Son of John King of France, and Unkle unto Charles the 6th; during whoſe Reign, betwixt this Duke and thoſe of Burgundy and Orleans, the Realm of France was miſerably diſtracted into Broils and Factions. The ſecond was another John, Son of Charles the Sixth, who dying in his minority, was ſucceeded in this title by his Brother Charles, Succeſſor to his Father in the Crown it ſelf. The fourth and laſt, (for it had no more than four Dukes in all) was Charles, the youngeſt Son of King Charles the 7th, who ſiding with the Earl of Charolois, did ſo much trouble the affairs of France under Lewis the 11th, by whom he was made Duke of Normandy, and of Guienny afterwards; but held neither long. After whoſe death, it was united to the Crown; never ſince ſeparated from it: but though it never had Duke ſince, it hath had three Dutcheſſes; firſt giving the title of Dutcheſs to the Lady Joan, Daughter of Lewis the 11th, and Wife to Lewis the 12th, then Duke of Orleans, eſtated herein by her ſaid Husband; when coming to the Crown he divorced her from him, to make room for the Lady Anne, Dutcheſs of Bretagne, the Widow of Charles the 8th, his Predeceſſor. Conferred after her deceaſe, but on more honourable grounds, by King Francis the firſt, on the Lady Margaret his Siſter, firſt married to Charles Duke of Alanſon; and after his deceaſe, to Henry of Albert King of Navarre; the laſt that had this title, being another Margaret, Daughter of the ſaid King Francis, married to Philibert Emmanuel, Duke of Savoy.

11. POICTOU.

POICTOU is bounded on the Eaſt with Tourein, Berrie, and Limoſin; on the North with Bretagne, and Anjou, on the South with Xaintoigne, a member of the Dukedom of Aquitain; and on the Weſt with the Aquitain Seas.

It is called in Latin, Pictavia, from the Pictones, as Ptolomy, Cæſar, and ſome others; or the Pictavi, as Antoninus calleth them, the old Inhabitants hereof: and is a Country ſo great and plentiful, that there are numbred in it 1200 Pariſhes, and three Biſhopricks. A ſtrong argument of the populouſneſs and largeneſs of it. Beſides the goodneſs of the Soil, it hath many other great helps to enrich it; that is to ſay, a large Sea-coaſt, ſome capacious Harbours, not a few Navigable Rivers emptying themſelves into the Sea: beſides the benefit which redounds to it from the Clin or Clavius, the Creviſe, and Vienne, three Rivers falling into the Loire; which alſo glides along on the North hereof.

The principal Towns and Cities of it are, 1 Poictiers, in Latin Pictavis, ſeated upon the Clin, or Clavius; by Ptolemy called Auguſtoritum: the largeſt City for compaſs of ground within the Walls, next to Paris it ſelf; but containing in that circuit, Meadows, Corn-fields, and other waſt grounds. It is an Univerſity, eſpecially for the ſtudy of the Civil-Law; and a See Epiſcopal: one of the Biſhops hereof being St. Hilarie, ſirnamed Pictavenſis, that renowned Father of the Church, and a ſtout Champion of the Catholick Faith againſt the Arians, though countenanced in their Hereſie by the Emperor Conſtantius. 2 Souri, upon the River Charente, near the edge of Xaintoigne. 3 Talmont, upon the ſhores of the Ocean. 4 Beaumoir, a Sea-Town alſo, and a reaſonable good Port, near the confines of the Bretagne. 5 Roch-ſur-yon, ſo called for its ſituation on the Yon, or Jon; which gave the title of Prince to one of the Branches of the Royal race of Bourbon. 6 Luſignan, on the River Ion; alſo denominating the noble Family of Luſignan, ſometimes Kings of Hieruſalem, and afterwards of Cyprus; which laſt they had in exchange for the firſt, by the donation of King Richard the firſt of England. 7 Lucon, or Luſſon, ſeated upon a Navigable arm of the Sea: ſufficiently famous in being the Epiſcopal See of the renowned Cardinal of Richilieu, who ſo long managed the affairs of France for King Lewis the thirteenth. 8 Maileſais, a Biſhops See alſo. 9 Thouars, which gives the title of Duke to the ancient Family of Tremovile, from which the Dukes of Bretagne did derive themſelves; from the time that Conſtance the daughter and heir of Conan, after the death of Geofrey Plantagenet, her firſt Husband, had Guy of Thouars for her ſecond. 10 Chaſtel Herauld, (or Caſtrum Heraldi) on the River Vienne; of which James Hamilton, Earl of Arran in Scotland, by the gift of King Henry the ſecond of France, the better to aſſure him to the French Faction there, againſt the Engliſh, had the title of Duke.

In the Vine-fields of this Country, within two leagues of Poictiers, was fought that memorable Battel between John of France, and Edward the ſon of King Edward the third, ſirnamed the Black Prince. Who being diſtreſſed by the number of the French, would willingly have departed on honourable terms: which the French not accepting, inſtead of Conqueſt, found a fatal overthrow. The greatneſs and particulars whereof, we ſhall hereafter ſee in the life of King John. For they preſuming on their own ſtrength, to their own diſadvantage, bereft the Enemy of all opportunity of retiring; whereas ordinary Policy would inſtruct the Leader of an Army, to make his Enemy, if he would flye, a Bridg of Gold, as Count Petillan uſed to ſay. Hereupon Themiſtocles would not permit the Grecians to break the Bridg made over the Helleſpont by Xerxes, leſt the Perſians ſhould be compelled to fight, and ſo happen to recover their former loſſes: and Charles the ſixth, loſt his Army, by intercepting of our Henry the fifth, in his march to Calice. For, where all way of flight or retreat is ſtopt, the baſeſt Soldier will rather dye with glory in the front of his Battel, than flye and be killed with ignominy. So true a Miſtreſs of hardy reſolutions, is Deſpair; and no leſs true this Proverb of ours, Make a Coward fight, and he will kill the Devil. On the Contrary, it hath been the uſe of divers Politick Captains, to make their own Soldiers fight more reſolutely, by taking from them all hope of ſafety, but by battel. So did William the Conqueror, who at his arrival into England, burnt the Ships which tranſported his Army: thereby giving the Soldiers to underſtand, that their lives lay in the ſtrength of their Arms, and courage of their Hearts; not in the nimbleneſs of their heels. Tariff, the Leader of the Moors into Spain, burnt likewiſe all his Navy, one only Pinnace excepted; which he reſerved to carry tidings of his ſucceſs. So when Charles Martel encountred that infinite Hoſt of the Saracens, (of which you have already heard) he commanded the people of Tours to open the Gates only to the Victors. Then he led his Army over the Loire, placing on the Banks thereof, certain Troops of Horſe-men, to kill all ſuch as fled out of the Field. Hereby informing his men, that there was to them no more France, than what they fought on, unleſs they were Conquerors. In like manner, the ſame Themiſtocles cunningly working the Perſians to encloſe the Greek Navy on every ſide, enflamed the Grecians with ſuch courage, by a neceſſity of fight, that they gave their enemies the moſt memorable defeat that ever hapned on thoſe Seas.

But to proceed, the people of this Province have more in them of the old Gaul, than any in France; as lying ſo betwixt the borders of the Goths and French, that it was never throughly planted or poſſeſſed by either. An argument whereof may be, that they are naturally more rude, ſubtil, crafty, and contentious, than the reſt of their Country-men; and have a Dialect by themſelves, much differing from the common French, having many words mixt with it, queſtionleſs ſome remainders of the ancient Gallick which the natural Frenchman underſtands not. In the diviſion of Gaul by the Emperor Conſtantine, they were reckoned for a part of Aquitania Secunda; and, as a part thereof, won from the Romans, with Limoſin, Perigort, and Quercu, by Furicus King of the Goths in Spain. Of whoſe Kingdom it continued part, till thoſe Goths were diſpoſſeſſed of their hold in France, by Clouis the fifth King of the French, ſirnamed the Great. After which, it belonged to the Kings of that people; by the poſterity of Charles the Great, aſſigned to ſome Provincial Governours, with the title of Earls. One of which being named Ebles, (of the old Gothiſh race, if I gueſs a-right) by the laſt Will and Teſtament of William the Debonaire, Duke of Aquitain, and Earl of Auvergne, ſucceeded in that fair Eſtate. Poictou, by this means, made a part of the Dukedom of Aquitain, came with it at the laſt to the Kings of England, as ſhall there be ſhewn; and being theirs, was given with the title of Earl, by King Henry the ſecond, to Richard, ſirnamed Coeur de Lyon, who was after King. Seized upon by the French, in the unfortunate Reign of King John, with the reſt of the Engliſh Provinces, Anno 1202. Alphonſo, Brother to Lewis the ninth, is made Earl of Poictou: and being again recovered by King Henry the third, it was by him conferred on his Brother Richard Earl of Cornwall. But Henry being entangled in the Barons Warrs, and Richard wholly taken up with the affairs of Germany, of which by ſome of the Electors he was choſen Emperor; it was fully conquered by the French, and never ſince diſmembred from that Crown, for ought I can find. For, though in the more active times of King Edward the third, ſome of the beſt Towns and pieces of it, were poſſeſſed by the Engliſh; yet were they loſt again ſoon after, according to the various ſucceſſes and events of War.

12 LIMOSIN, 13 PERIGROT, 14 QUERCU.

THeſe Provinces I have joined together, becauſe for the moſt part they have followed the ſame fortune; being ſometimes French, and ſometimes Engliſh, according to the ſucceſſes of either Nation.

1 LIMOSIN, the largeſt of the three, hath on the Eaſt, Bourbonnois; on the Weſt, Perigort; on the North, and North-weſt, Poictou, and Berry; on the South, Auvergne. It is divided into the Higher, properly called Limoſin; and the Lower, commonly called La Marche: both parts, but ſpecially La Marche, which lieth towards Auvergne, being mountainous, and not very fruitful; but of a free and open Air: inhabited by a people of a more ſtaid and ſober nature than the reſt of the French, frugal in expence, and moderate in diet; only ſo great devourers of Bread, that they are grown into a By-word.

The chief Towns in La Marche, or the Lower Limoſin, are 1 Tulles, ſeated in a rough and hilly Country; a Biſhops-See 2 Uzarche, ſeated amongſt the Mountains, on the River Vezere, a very fierce and violent current; with which ſo fortified on all ſides, that it is thought to be a very ſtrong and ſecure dwelling. 3 Treinac, 4 Douſenac, 5 Belmont, 6 Meiſſac, 7 Brive le Gaillard, &c. In the Higher Limoſin, the chief Towns are, 1 Limoges, a Biſhops-See, the principal of the Lemovices, from whom denominated; by Ptolemy called Ratiaſtum. A neat, but no large City; rich, populous, and inhabited by a people of ſo great an Induſtry, that they compel every one to work; and is therefore by the French called the Priſon of Beggers: ſeated on the Vienne. At the taking of it when revolted, Edward the Black-Prince could by no means be allured to pity the diſtreſſed Citizens, till purſuing his Enemies, he ſaw three French Gentlemen make head againſt his Army; the conſideration of whoſe magnanimity, drew him to pity, where before he avowed revenge. 2 Chaluz, at the beſieging of which, our Richard the Firſt was ſlain by a ſhot from an Arbaliſt; the uſe of which War-like Engine, he firſt ſhewed to the French. Whereupon a French Poet made theſe Verſes on the perſon of Atropos:

Hoc volo, non alia Richardum morte perire,
Ut, qui Francigenis Baliſtæ primitùs uſum
Tradidit, ipſe ſui rem primitùs experiatur:
Quamq; aliis docuit, in ſe vim ſentiat artis.

It is decreed, thus muſt great Richard die,
As he that firſt did teach the French to dart
An Arbaliſt; 'tis juſt he firſt ſhould trie
The ſtrength, and taſte the fruits of his own Art.

The man that ſhot him, was called Bertram de Gurdon; who being brought before the King, (for the King neglecting his wounds, never gave over the Aſſault, till he gained the place) boldly juſtifyed his action, as done in the ſervice of his Country; and for revenge of the death of his Father and Brother, whom the King had cauſed to be ſlain. Which heard, the King not only cauſed him to be ſet at liberty, but gave him an hundred ſhillings ſterling, in reward of his Gallantry, 3 Soubſterrein, on the confines of Berry. 4 Confoulat, 5 Dorat, on the River Vienne. 6 Boiſſon, 7 Birat, of which nothing memorable.

2 PERIGORT, hath on the Eaſt, Auvergne and Quercu, on the Weſt, Xaintoigne; on the North, Limoſin; and on the South, ſome part of Gaſcoigne. The Country and people, are much of the ſame condition with that of Limoſin; ſaving that Perigort is the more woody; and thoſe Woods plentiful of Cheſnuts. The chief Towns of it are, 1 Perigeux, the principal City of the Petrogorii, by Ptolemy called Veſſena; now a Biſhops-See: ſome foot-ſteps of which name, remain in a part of Perigeux, (for the Town, it is divided into two parts) which to this day is called Veſune; in which ſtandeth the Cathedral Church, and the Biſhop's Palace. The whole City ſeated in a very pleaſant Valley environed with Downs, affording a moſt excellent Wine; and having in it, as a mark of the Roman greatneſs, the ruins of a large and ſpacious Amphitheater. 2 Bergerac, ſeated on the great River Dordonne. 3 Sarlat, a Biſhops-See. 4 Nontron, defended with a very ſtrong Caſtle. 5 Miramont, 6 La Roche, 7 Marſac, where is a Well which ebbeth and floweth according to the pulſe of the River of Bourdeaux. And 8 Angoleſme, in the North-weſt towards Xaintoigne, the ſeat of the Engoliſmenſes, in the time of the Romans; now a Biſhops See: ſeated upon the River of Charente, with which it is almoſt encompaſſed: the other ſide being defended by a ſteep and rocky Mountain. A Town of great importance when poſſeſſed by the Engliſh; being one of their beſt out-works for defence of Bourdeaux; one of the Gates hereof being to this day called Chande, ſeems to have been the work of Sir John Chandois, Banneret, one of the firſt Founders of the moſt Noble Order of the Garter; then Governour hereof for King Edward the Third. Being recovered from the Engliſh by Charles the Fifth, it was beſtowed on John, the third Son of Lewis Duke of Orleans, Grand-father of King Francis the Firſt, with the title of an Earldom only, An. 1408. Afterwards made a Dukedom in the perſon of the ſaid King Francis, before his coming to the Crown. And for the greater honor of it, as much of the adjoining Country was laid unto it, as maketh up a Territory of about 24 French Leagues in length; and 15 in breadth: within which circuit are the Towns of Chaſteau-neif, and Coignat, on the River of Charente. 3 Roche Faulcon, 4 Chabannes, 5 Meriville, 6 Villebois, &c. Since that united to the Crown, it hath of late times given the title of Duke to Charles Earl of Auvergne, An. 1618. the baſe ſon of Charles the ninth, conſequently extracted from the Houſe of Angoleſme.

3 QUERCU is encompaſſed about with Limoſin, Perigort, Languedoc, and Auvergne. A populous Country, for the bigneſs, (being one of the leaſt in all France) and very fruitful withal, though ſomewhat mountainous. The principal places in it, 1 Cahors, the chief City of the Cadurci, in the times of the Romans; ſtill a great, ſtrong, and well-traded Town, and the See of a Biſhop, who is alſo the Temporal Lord of it: ſeated upon the River Loch. From hence deſcended and took name the noble Family of Chaworoth de Cadurcis, in Latin: out of which, by a Daughter of Patrick de Cadurcis, Lord of Ogmore and Kidwelly, in the Marches of Wales, married to Henry the third Earl of Lancaſter, come the Kings of England, and moſt of the Royal houſes in Europe. 2 Montalban, a Biſhops-See alſo; built on the top of an high Mountain, and ſo well fortified by all advantages of art, that it is thought to be the moſt defenſible of any in France: of which it gave ſufficient proof in that notable reſiſtance which it made to King Lewis the thirteenth, in his Wars againſt thoſe of the Religion, Anno 1622. 3 Soulac, upon the River Dordonne. 4 Nigrepelliſſe, another of the Towns poſſeſſed by the Proteſtant Party, reduced to the obedience of King Lewis the thirteenth, Anno 1621: but in November following, they murdered the King's Garriſon, and the next year denied admiſſion to the King. Taken at laſt, An. 2622, by the King in Perſon: the Puniſhment did exceed the Crime. For, the men were not only killed and hanged, as they had deſerved; but many of the women alſo; ſome of them having their ſecret parts rammed with Gun-powder, and ſo torn in pieces, by the unpattern'd Barbariſm of the mercileſs and revengeful Soldiers. 5 Chaſteau-Saraſin, a ſtrong Town on the Garond. 6 Nazaret. 7 Burette, &c.

The ancient Inhabitants of theſe three Provinces, were the Lemovices, the Petrocorii, and the Cadurci, beforementioned; of which the Lemovices, and Cadurci, were caſt into the Province of Aquitania Prima; the Petrocorii, and Engoliſmenſes, into Aquitania Secunda. In the declining of that Empire, ſeized on by the Goths; but from them ſpeedily extorted by the conquering-French. Afterwards, when King Henry the third of England, releaſed his right in the Provinces of Normandy, Poictou, Anjou, Tourein, and Main; Lewis the 9th, to whom his Releaſe was made, gave him in ſatisfaction of all former Intereſſes, 300000 l. of Anjorian money, the Dukedom of Guienne, the County of Xaintogne, as far as to the River of Charent, with the Province of Limoſin. And on the Capitulation made betwixt Edward the third of England, and John of France, then Priſoner to him; Perigort and Quercu, (among other conditions) were conſigned over to the Engliſh, diſcharged of all Reſort and Homage to the Crown of France. After which times reſpectively, they remained all three in the poſſeſſion of the Engliſh, until their final expulſion by King Charles the 7th; never ſince that diſmembred from the Crown of France.

15 AQUITAIN.

THE Dukedom of AQUITAIN, the greateſt and goodlieſt of all France, contained the Provinces of 1 Xaintogne, 2 Guienne, 3 Gaſcoigne; with the Iſles of Oleron and Rees, and other Iſlands in the Aquitanick or Weſtern Ocean.

XAINTOGNE is bounded on the Eaſt with Limoſin and Perigort; on the Weſt with the Aquitanick Ocean; on the North with Poictou; and on the South with Guienne. So called from Sainctes, one of the principal Cities of it; as that from the Santones, a Nation here inhabiting in the time of the Romans, whoſe chief City it was. The River of Charente running through the middle; and ſo on the North border of it, emptieth it ſelf into the Ocean, juſt oppoſite to the Iſle of Oleron; having firſt taken in the Seugne, and the Boutonne, two leſſer Rivers.

The chief Towns of it are, 1 Sainctes; by Ptolemy called Mediolanium; by Antoninus, Civitas Santonum, ſeated upon the Charente; a Biſhops See, and the Seneſchalſie for the County. 2 S. John de Angelie, ſituate on the Boutonne, a Town once impregnably fortified: whereof it hath given ſufficient teſtimony in the Civil Wars of France about Religion, until the fatal time was come, in which the great power of that party was to be diſſolved; at what time (viz. An. 1621.) after a ſiege of forty days, it was taken by King Lewis the thirteenth, the Fortifications demoliſhed, the Town left open, and commanded from that time forwards, to be called by the name of Lewis Bourg. Bourg ſur la Mer, upon the Dordonne; which for the wideneſs of it, is here called a Sea. 4 Retraicte, ſeated near the confluence of the two great Rivers, the Garond, and the Dordonne. 5 Blaye, the moſt Southern Town of all this Country, defended with a ſtrong Caſtle, and a goodly Garriſon for ſecuring the paſſage unto Bourdeaux; this Town being ſeated on the very mouth of the River which goeth up to it. 6 Rochelle, Rupella in the preſent Latin; but anciently called Santonum Porcus, as the chief Haven of the Santones; a well-noted Port in the moſt Northern part of Xaintogne; from whence the Country hereabouts is called ROCHELOIS. The Town ſeated in the inner part of a fair and capacious Bay; the entrance of which is well aſſured by two very ſtrong Forts, betwixt which there is no more ſpace, than for the paſſage of a good Ship: every night cloſed up with a maſſy chain, and the whole Town either environed with deep Mariſhes, or fortified with ſuch Bulwarks, Trenches, and other Works of Modern Fortification, that it was held to be, as indeed it was, the ſafeſt retreat for thoſe of the Reformed Religion, in the time of their troubles; as may be ſeen by the ſtory of it, which in brief is thus. At the end of the ſecond Civil-War, An. 1568, many Towns conſidering how ill the former Peace had been obſerved, refuſed to take in any of the King's Garriſons, or permit any of the Papiſts to bear Arms amongſt them; of which Rochel was one; which alſo, contrary to the King's command, maintained a Navy for their ſafety by Sea, and continued their Fortifications for their defence by Land. So that hither the Queen of Navarre, and her Son, retired, as to a place of ſafety, An. 1570. Rochel alone, of all the French Towns, held good for the Proteſtants, and is by Monſieur Joinville on all ſides blocked up: but the ſiege ſoon raiſed, and Rochel, Montalban, Santerre, with others, made cautionary for the Peace enſuing. An. 1575, beſieged by Biron the elder, with an Army of 50000 men, and 60 pieces of Artillery: Charles the ninth, Henry Duke of Anjou, the Duke of Aumal, &c. being alſo preſent at the ſervice: it held out from the beginning of March, till the 7th of June, and was then freed; the City having in one month endured 13000 ſhot, and the King loſt 20000 men amongſt them, the Duke of Aumal for one, An. 75, and 78, it was attempted by Landereau, the Iſle of Ree taken, but ſoon recovered: the King of Navarre, and Prince of Conde, after that defeat, being received in triumph. Anno 1577, beſieged to Sea-ward by Lanſac; who being alſo beaten back, a Peace was made, and eight cautionary Towns more, added to their former ſtrength. In the troubles of 85, and 88, the Princes above-named made it their retreat; and from thence iſſued to divert the purpoſes of the Duke of Mercoeur. The next year, Henry the third being ſlain, and the King of Navarre ſeated in the Throne, the Proteſtant encreaſed exceedingly in power, and number; and taking advantage of the minority of Lewis the thirteenth, governed themſelves apart as a Feee Eſtate, Rochel being made the Head of their Commonwealth; fortified to that end with 12 Royal Baſtions of Free-ſtone, with double Ditches, deep, and broad, in the bottom, abundantly furniſhed with Powder and Ammunition, 150 pieces of Cannon, beſides Culverins and ſmaller Pieces, with Victuals, and all other neceſſaries, to endure a ſiege; and grown unto ſo great wealth, that there were thought to be an hundred or ſix-ſcore Merchants, worth 100000 Crowns a-piece. This drew upon them the great Wars in the year 1621, and 1622. Which ended in the loſs of all their Garriſons except Rochel and Montalban; thoſe to remain in pledge with the Proteſtant Party, but for three years only. Which time expired, the Rochellers were again beſieged both by Sea and Land, the Iſle of Ree took from them, their Fleet broke at Sea, and the mouth of their Haven ſo barred up with Ships chained together, and ſunk into it, and other Works of ſtupendious greatneſs, in the very Ocean, that no Foreign ſuccours out of England, (howſoever really intended, and bravely followed) had been able to come to their relief. In the end, having endured all the extremities of a tedious ſiege, they yielded themſelves to the King's mercy, An. 1628. Montalban, Niſmes, and other places newly fortified, ſubmitted at the ſame time alſo. 7 Marans, a great Town, and of great importance, ſeated by the Ocean-Sea in a low fenny-place, as it were in a Peninſula, and ſo encompaſſed on every ſide with Mariſh watry grounds, that there is no acceſs to the Works thereof, but by very few, and thoſe narrow paſſages. 8 Chaſtillon, and 9 Saubize, places of good ſtrength alſo, but of greater note: the firſt, for giving a ſirname to a Noble Family, out of which iſſued formerly the Earls of Blois, and of late times, Gaſper de Colligni, and Monſieur D'Andalot, his Brother; much mentioned in the Wars of France about Religion: the latter giving the title of a Duke to a younger Son of the Houſe of Rohan; as great a ſtickler in that Cauſe, as thoſe Brethren were.

II. GVIENNE, the ſecond Province of the Dukedom of Aquitain, is bounded on the North with Xaintoigne, from which parted by the River of Dordonne; on the South with Gaſcoigne, on the Eaſt with Perigort, and on the Weſt with the Aquitanick Ocean, from the Pyrenean Hills, to the River of Bourdeaux. The reaſon of the name I could never learn. Some think it a corruption of the old name Aquitain; but not very probably. The Country generally plentiful of Corn and Wine; the one being vented into Spain, and the other into England. The people, as thoſe of Xaintoigne alſo, tall of ſtature, of able bodies, haters of ſervitude and baſeneſs, and well practiſed in arms; which qualities of the mind, and conſtitution of body, (being therein ſo different from the reſt of France) it is poſſible enough they might have from the Engliſh, who for 300 years were poſſeſſed of the Country, and have left many tracks of their Language in it.

The principal Rivers of this Province, are the Garond, and the Dordonne, meeting together at Retraicte, a Town of Xaintogne; and thence in one Chanel falling into the Ocean: the Country betwixt theſe two Rivers, being called Le Pais entre les deux mers; or, The Country betwixt the two Seas: the Rivers hereabouts reſembling a ſmall Sea in wideneſs. Of leſſer note are, 1 Jearne, 2 Baize, 3 Lot, and 4 Liſle, falling into the Garond in their ſeveral places.

Chief Towns whereof are, 1 Bourdeaux, ſeated on the South-bank of the Garond, not far from the Sea, amongſt the Mariſhes. The chief City of the Bituriges, who poſſeſſed this tract; and for diſtinction's ſake, were called Bituriges Vbiſci; thoſe of Bourges being called Bituriges Cubi. It was after called Burdegala, and Civitas Burdegalenſium; the Metropolis at that time of Aquitania ſecunda; conſequently, an Archbiſhops See, as it ſtill continueth. A fair, rich, and populous City, beautified with many good buildings, an Univerſity founded here by King Lewis the 11th., and a large Cathedral. It was made Parliamentary for Aquitain, and the parts adjoining, by King Charles the 7th, An. 1453, not long after the expulſion of the Engliſh thence; and is one of the moſt noted Empories in all the Kingdom; frequented very much by the Dutch and Engliſh, for Gaſcoigne Wines: over which laſt the French are ſo jealous, that they permit them not to come up the River, till they have unladen all their Ordnance at the Port of Blaye. The Country hereabouts is, from this Town, called Bourdelois. 2 Fronſac, lying in the Country betwixt the two Seas, (as they call it) which gives the title of a Duke to the Noble Family of the Earls of St. Paul, now Dukes of Fronſac; and to the Country round about, the name of Fronſadaze. 3 Libourn, at the confluence of the two great Rivers, oppoſite to Retraicte in Xaintogne. 4 Soulac, at the influx of the Garond, in the Peninſula, or demi-Iſland, called the Country of Medock. 5 Baionne, a Sea-Town, and Epiſcopal See, frontiering on the Coaſt of Spain. 6 S. John de Luz, at the foot of the Pyrenean Mountains; all about which, the people ſpeak the Baſquiſh, or old Gaſcoigne Language, being the ſame with that of Biſcay. 7 D'Acqs, an Epiſcopal See, by Ptolemy called Aquæ Auguſtæ, (Civitas Aquenſium, by Antoninus) from whence this part of Gaul, had the name of Aquitain. Theſe three laſt, being all of them Frontier Towns, are ſtrongly fortified. 8 Bazas, (called Coſſium by Ptolemy) the chief City of the Vaſates, whom Antoninus placeth in this tract: now a Biſhops-See, ſituate on the borders of Gaſcoigne: in the Country from hence called Bazadas. Towns of leſs note, 1 Eſparrez, 2 St. Baſil, 3 Reule, 4 Chaſteau-Moron, 5 Monſeguer, 6 Saincterre, &c. Here is alſo in this Province, the Country of Buche, lying along the Sea-Coaſt from Baionne to Medock; a barren, poor, and wretched Country, the worſt piece of France; only remarkable for the Lords or Owners of it, formerly of the Houſe of Foix: of which the moſt remarkable were Gaſton de Foix, for his many ſignal ſervices againſt the French, created Earl of Kendal, and Knight of the Garter, by the ſaid King Henry; but better known in Engliſh ſtories, by the name of Capital, or Capau de Buche; the Lords hereof having no higher title than that of Captain.

III. GASCOIGNE, the third and largeſt part of the Dukedom of Aquitain, hath on the Eaſt, Languedoc; from which parted by the River Garond; on the Weſt, the Pyrenean Mountains, which divide it from Spain; on the North, Perigort, Quercu, and ſome part of Guienne; and on the South, a main tract of the Pyrenees, running on to Languedoc. The Country generally fruitful, but of Wines eſpecially; brought hence to Bourdeaux, as the ſtaple for that Commodity, and thence tranſported into England in great abundance.

The ancient inhabitants hereof, were the Auſcii, Lactoraces, Convenares, Conſerani, &c. making up a great part of the Province of Novempopulonia; united in this name of Gaſcoigne, on the conqueſt of it by the Vaſcones, a Spaniſh Nation, who fell in here during the reign of Dagobert the 11th King of the French. And though ſubdued by Clovis the ſecond, ſon of Dagobert; yet they left their name unto the Country, divided afterwards according to the chief Seigneuries and Eſtates thereof, into 1 the Principality of Bearn, 2 the Earldom of Foix, 3 Comminges, 4 Begorre, 5 Armaignac, 6 Albret, and 7 the Country of Agenois.

1 The Principality of BEARN, is ſituate at the foot of the Pyrenees, where they join to Languedoc; ſo called from Benearnum, a principal City of this tract, mentioned by Antoninus, and others of the ancient Writers. The Country of good paſturage, though amongſt the Mountains; affording plenty of Cattel, Butter, and in ſome places Wines alſo, little inferior in taſte and colour, to the beſt of France; and many Medicinal Springs iſſuing from the Hills adjoining.

The Religion here, as generally in all Gaſcoigne, is that of the Reformed Churches, introduced about the year 1560; or rather, then confirmed by publick Authority of the King and Queen of Navarre: at what time the Maſs, Tythes, Church-lands, and the Prelates Votes in Parliament, (according to the Genevian way of Reformation) were condemned together. And ſo it ſtood till the year 1620, when by the Power and Authority of Lewis the 13. King of France and Navarre, the Prelates were reſtored to their Votes and Lands; the Clergy to their Tithes, and Maſs cauſed alſo to be ſaid in ſome of their Churches:

yet ſo, that thoſe of the Reformed were left unto the free exerciſe of their own Religion, as in former times.

The principal Towns hereof are, 1 Orthes, the ſame which anciently was called Benarnum. 2 Leſcar, a Biſhop's See, the ancient ſeat and habitation of the Princes of Bearn. 3 Oleron, a Biſhop's See alſo, mounted upon a high hill, in the more mountainous parts of the Country. 4 Saincterra, well garriſoned ſince the reduction of this Country to the King's obedience. 5 Pau, the principal of all the Province, honoured with a Parliament or Court of Judicature for all the Country; and a fair Palace of the Prince, built by Henry of Alber, King of Navarre, and Lord of Bearn; the Seat of him and his Succeſſors, till the coming of Henry the fourth to the Crown of France. 6 Grenade, upon the Frontier towards Begorre.

This Country for a long time followed the fortune of Aquitain; and in the general diſmembring of the French Empire, had its own Proprietaries, who were the abſolute Lords of it, acknowledging no Superior for ought I can find. The principal of which was that Gaſton (a name very frequent in this Family) who in the year 1118 accompanied with many noble perſons of France, aſſiſted Alphonſo King of Navarre & Aragon at the ſiege of Sarageſſa; in the courſe of which action he did ſo good ſervice, that he was not only much honoured, but liberally rewarded for it; both he and his poſterity enjoying many priviledges in the conquered City. By the Heir general of this Gaſton, married to William de Moncada Seneſchal of Catalogne, and of great poſſeſſions in that Country, the Lordſhip and Soveraignty of Bearn fell unto that Family about the year 1220, but long it did not tarry in it. For William being ſlain in the conqueſt of the Iſle of Majorca, An. 1228, left his Eſtates to Gaſton de Moncada his eldeſt ſon: who much increaſed them by the addition of the Earldom of Begorre, and many other goodly pieces, accrewing to him in the right of his Wife Martha, heir hereof; whereof more anon. Grown by this means to ſuch authority and eſteem in the Court of Aragon, that (being without iſſue male) Conſtance his eldeſt daughter was thought a match of great advantge to Alphonſo eldeſt ſon of King James the firſt. But dying without iſſue by her, Anno 1260, the Soveraignty of Bearn with all the Appendixes thereof both in France and Spain, became united to the Earldom of Foix, (an Eſtate equal to it both in power & patrimony) by the marriage of Reger Bernard the ninth Earl of Foix, who ſucceeded in that Earldom, An. 1262, with Margaret de Moncata another daughter of this Gaſton, and Heir of Bearn. Afterwards being much increaſed both in power and honour (by the addition of the Earldom of Comminges, the Viſconty of Narbon, and the Signeury of Buche in Guyenne, to this houſe of Foix) it was added to the Crown of Navarre, by the marriage of Gaſton Earl of Foix, and Soveraign of Bearn, with Eleanor the Heir of that Kingdom, An. 1481, deſcending with that Crown upon Henry of Bourbon, King of Navarre, and afterwards of France, by the name of Henry the fourth; but governed by him always as a State diſtinct, without relation or reſort to the Crown of France. But Lewis the thirteenth his ſon, finding ſome inconvenience in that diſtinction, incorporated it for ever to the reſt of his Dominions, Anno 1620, though not without ſome oppoſition from the ſubjects of Bearn: which he was fain to over-bear by his perſonal preſence, and the advantage of ſuch Forces as he carried with him. Since reckoned as a part of that Kingdom, awed, as the reſt of France, by Forts and Garriſons, and governed in Civil matters by the Parliament eſtabliſhed at Pau: the Judges and Councellors thereof at the King's appointing.

2 The Earldom of FOIX, is ſituate on the Weſt of Languedoc; Commingeois interpoſing betwixt it and Bearn. Chief Towns hereof are, 1 Maſcros, on the Garond, a Biſhops See. 2 Parnieres, a Biſhops See alſo, ſeated on the River Lagiere. 3 Foix, on the ſame River, called in Latin Fuxium, and the Earls hereof Comites Fuxienſes; the chief ſeat of the Fluſſates in the times of the Romans, now giving name to all the Country. 4 Mirande, in the County of Eſterac, and the chief thereof, but otherwiſe of no great account. 5 Savardun, and 6 Monbault, two ſtrong pieces. 7 Mirepoix (oppidum Miropenſe) a Biſhops See alſo, but of no note otherwiſe. The old Inhabitants of this tract, beſides the Fluſſates above mentioned, were called Vaccæi, perhaps of the abundance of Kine, bred in the paſtures hereof: upon which ground, the Earls of Foix have for their Arms, 3 Cows paſſant Gules; horned and hoofed Azure, in a Field Or.

The firſt of theſe Earls was Bernard of Carcaſſone, advanced to this honour by Raimond Earl of Tholouſe, who had then the ſoveraignty hereof, Anno 1062. The Patrimony hereof much increaſed by marriage (no one Family more) many fair Lands in the Mariſhes of Provence being added to it by Eſtmiette, Wife of Roger the ſecond; not a few Signeuries in Catalonia, by Cecil Daughter of Earl Raimond, Wife of Roger the third; the Earldom of Caſtelbon, by Brunicen Wife of Roger Bernard the firſt; the Earldom of Comminges by Eleanor the Wife of Gaſton the ſecond. Beſides all which, in or about the year 1262, Roger Bernard, the ninth Earl, united Bearn to his Eſtate as before is ſaid; whoſe Grand-child Iſabel (the male iſſue failing) conveyed the whole Eſtate to Archembald, Lord or Captain of Buche, in the Province of Guienne. Gaſton, the Nephew of this Archembald by his eldeſt ſon John, was for his many good ſervices to Charles the ſeventh, made a Peer of France: and did not only purchaſe the Viſconty of Narbon, from the Lords whereof he was deſcended by Mainguard, Wife of Roger Bernard the ſecond; but by his marriage with Eleanor or Beanora Daughter and Heir of John King of Navarre, united that Kingdom to his houſe, though he enjoyed it not in his own perſon. By means of which Alliances, and other improvements of Eſtate, his Family grew to ſo great power and reputation, that there were four Queens at one time deſcended from it: viz. Katharine Queen of Navarre, German Queen of Aragon, Anne Queen of France, Anne Queen of Hungary and Bohemia. Before which time (I mean the Addition of Navarre to their other Eſtates) the Earls of Foix were in ſo high eſteem in the Court of France, that in all publick Ceremonies they took place of the Earls of Vendoſme, though extracted from the Royal Blood, and lived in a condition equal to moſt Kings in Chriſtendom. In which regard, as alſo that the later Kings of Navarre and preſent Kings of France, are deſcended of them, it will not be amiſs to ſubjoin here the Catalogue of

The Earls of Foix.

A.C.
1062	1	Bernard the younger ſon of Roger Earl of Carcaſſon, the firſt Earl of Foix.
1096	2	Roger, the ſon of Bernard, an adventurer in the firſt War for the Holy Land.
1111	3	Roger II. ſon of Roger the firſt.
1144	4	Roger III. ſon of Roger the ſecond.
1188	5	Raymond-Roger ſon of Roger the third, a great ſtickler for the Earls of Tholouſe, in favour of the Albigenſes, and their opinions.
1223	6	Roger Bernard, the inheritor of his Fathers opinions, as well as of his Eſtates and Fortunes.

1241 7 Roger IV. ſirnamed Rotſer, a companion of the King S. Lewis in the Holy Land.

1255 8 Roger-Bernard II. ſon of Rotſer.

1262 9 Roger-Bernard III. who added Bearn and its Appendixes unto his Eſtates.

1306 10 Gaſton the ſon of Roger-Bernard the third, and of Margaret de Moncade the Heir of Bearn.

1315 11 Gaſton II. ſon of Gaſton the firſt, a great Enemy to the Engliſh in behalf of Philip de Valois; and as great a friend to the King of Aragon againſt the Moors, in which War he was ſlain.

1344 12 Gaſton III. for his beauty ſirnamed Phœbus, inferior for Revenue and the Port he lived in, to few Kings in Chriſtendom.

1390 13 Matthew Earl of Caſtelbon, Son of Roger-Bernard Earl of Caſtelbon, the ſecond Son of Gaſton the firſt: deſigned ſucceſſor to John King of Aragon, whoſe eldeſt Daughter he had married but diſpoſſeſſed thereof by the Duke of Momlanc.

1399 14 Archembald Captain of Buche, and Iſabel Siſter and Heir of Matthew Earls of Foix.

1413 15 John Son of Archembald, a great Enemy to the Engliſh in behalf of Charles the ſeventh of France: his younger Brother Gaſton, as great a friend unto the Engliſh, ſucceeding in the Eſtate of Buche. From Peter the ſecond Son of this John, deſcended Odet de Foix, Lord of Lautrech, ſo renowned in the Wars of Italy.

1436 16 Gaſton IV. Son of John a principal Agent in the Conqueſt of Guienne from the Engliſh, by his marriage with Eleanor Daughter and Heir of John King of Navarre, advanced his houſe unto that Kingdom; Grandfather by John Viſcount of Narbone his ſecond Son to Gaſton de Foix Duke of Nemours, ſlain at the taking of Ravenna, Anno 1512.

1472 17 Francis Phœbus Nephew of Gaſton the fourth, and of Eleanor of Navarre by their Son Gaſton Prince of Viane, ſucceeded his ſaid Grandfather in the Earldom of Foix, and his Grandmother in the Realm of Navarre about ſeven years after.

1483 18 Katharine the Siſter and Heir of Francis, by her marriage with John Earl of Albert, added that Earldom alſo to the houſe of Foix.

1517 19 Henry of Albert Son of John and Katharine, King of Navarre, Soveraign of Bearn and Earl of Foix, by his marriage with the Lady Margaret, Siſter to King Francis the firſt, added the greateſt part of the Lands of Armaignac unto his Eſtate.

1556 20 Antony of Bourbon Duke of Vendoſme, and Joan his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Henry of Albert, Kings of Navarre, Soveraigns of Bearn, and Earls of Foix.

1572 21 Henry II. Son of Joan and Antony King of Navarre, Soveraign Lord of Bearn, and Earl of Foix; on the murder of Henry the third of France, ſucceeded alſo in that Kingdom by the name of Henry the fourth, Anno 1589, the Father of Lewis the thirteenth, and Grand-father of King Lewis the fourteenth, now reigning, An. 1648. And ſo having brought the Earls of Foix to the Crown of France, it is time to leave them. The Arms of theſe great Earls we have ſeen before.

3 The Earldom of BEGORRE is ſituate North of Bearn, at the foot of the Pyrenæan Mountains: ſo called from the Bigerrones, the old Inhabitants hereof in the time of Cæſar. Scattered in which, and the adjoining Principality of Bearn, live a leprous and infectious people of noiſom breaths, deformed bodies, and ghaſtly viſages: in which regard, not ſuffered to have any commerce with other people, nor to inherit any Lands; but only to apply themſelves to drudgery, and the baſeſt of mechanick trades. From their great miſhapen heads called Capets or Gabets.

Chief Towns hereof are, 1 Figneres, famous for Medicinal Baths. 2 Lourde, of which nothing memorable. 3 Tarbe, (by Antonine called Turſaubica) ſeated upon the River Adour, honoured with a ſtrong Caſtle, an Epiſcopal See, and the Seneſchalſie for all the Country of Begorre. Which Country having for long time its own Proprietary Earls, under the Soveraignty and Homage of the Crown of Navarre, from the Kings whereof they were extracted, or thoſe Kings from them; was at the laſt, by the marriage of Petronilla, Daughter and Heir of Eſquibat the laſt Earl, to Baſon Viſcount of Marſan and Gabardan, added to that houſe. Whoſe Daughter Matthee, marrying to Gaſton Prince of Bearn, increaſed that Principality with thoſe goodly pieces of Marſan, Gabardan and Begorre; all brought unto the houſe of Foix, by Margaret, Daughter of this Gaſton, married to Roger Bernard, as before is ſaid.

The Arms hereof were Azure, a Croſs Argent; By Inigo Ariſta the ſon of Simon, Earl of this Country called to the Crown of Navarre, made the Arms of that Kingdom; whereas before that time, the Arms thereof had been Argent, on a Tree Vert, a Croſs in chief, Gules. Which Arms are ſaid to be took by Garcia Ximines the firſt King of Navarre, from ſuch a Sign appearing to him in the Sky, before his firſt battel with the Moors.

4 The Earldom of COMMINGES lieth betwixt Bearn and Foix, running betwixt both as far Northward, as to boarder Eaſtward on Begorre. Divided into the Higher, and and more mountainous part, ſituate at the foot of the Pyrenees, and the Lower, which hath ſomewhat more of the valley in it. The old Inhabitants of both, the Convenæ, and Conſerani. The principal places at preſent in the Lower Comminges are, 1 Lombes, a Biſhops See, but of late erection, 2 Moret, upon the River Garronne. 3 Samathan. 4 Lieſle en Dordon. And in the Higher, there is 1 Conſerans, once the chief Town of the Conſerani, now a Biſhops See, ſituate at the foot of the Pyrenean hills. 2 S. Bernard, of old called Civitas Convenarum, a Biſhops See alſo, and the chief City of this Earldom. 3 S. Beat, 4 S. Brogou, 5 Monregeau, or Mons Regius, 6 Silliers, &c.

Of the Eſtate of this Earldom I have little to ſay, but that it was united to the houſe of Foix, by the marriage of Eleanor, the Daughter of an Earl hereof, to Gaſton the ſecond of that name, and the eleventh Earl of this Houſe. Given afterwards notwithſtanding to a Spaniard called Rodrigo de Villandrada, by Charles the ſeventh. But in the end reſtored again to the houſe of Foix, by the proweſs and great ſervices of Gaſton the fourth, who cauſed his Uncle Matthew, the youngeſt Son of Archembald and Iſabel Earls of Foix, to be ſettled in it, according to the will and purpoſe of his Father Archembald, who had given it to him. But falling to the Crown again, it was conferred on John of Leſcon, a Baſtard of the Earl of Armaignac, who was Earl of Comminges, and one of the Marſhals of France in the time of King Lewis the eleventh. The Arms of theſe Earls were Gules, four Orelles in Saltier, Argent.

5 The Earldom of ARMAIGNAC, the greateſt of all theſe Eſtates conſidered ſeverally and apart, lieth on the North of Comminges, and ſo extendeth it ſelf to the banks of the River Garond. Principal Towns are, 1 Aux, upon the River Gez, anciently called Auguſta Auſciorum; the Metropolis or head City of the Province of Novempopulonia; by conſequence an Archbiſhops See: The Revenues whereof are ſaid to be the greateſt of any Prelates in France, computed at no leſs than 40000 l. per annum. 2 Lectoure, a Biſhop's See, called of old Leſtoracium, in our modern Latin Lectodurum. A Town ſo well fortified, when in the power of the Earls of Armaignac, that it held out a ſiege of three months againſt the Forces of France; but ſince it came into the hands of the French Kings, ſo ſtrengthned and embattelled according to the modern Art of Fortifications, that it is held the ſtrongeſt Bulwark of the Kingdom on this ſide, and their ſureſt Fortreſs againſt Spain. 3 Liſle de Jourdain, which hath the title of an Earldom, bought at the price of 38000 Crowns, of John Duke of Bourbon, by John the fourth Earl of Armaignac, An. 1421. 4 Auvillar, 5 Auzan. 6 Chaſtelneau. 7 Malbourquer. 8 Neſtes, of which little memorable.

The Earls of Armaignac fetch their Original from the Kings of Navarre: Sancho the great, having ſubdued ſome Lands in Gaſcoigne, which he conferred on Garſias a younger ſon of his, with the title of Earl of Armaignac, Anno 1014. On which foundation it increaſed ſo faſt, both in power and honour, that Bernard the fourth Earl hereof, came to be Conſtable of France. And ſo did John the fourth of that name, by the favour of King Charles the ſeventh: who alſo writ himſelf, by the grace of God Earl of Armaignac; according to the ſtile of Soveraign Princes. A man of ſo conſiderable power in theſe parts of France; that the marriage of a Daughter of his to our Henry the ſixth, was thought the beſt means for eſtabliſhing his Eſtate in Guienne. And I remember it was charged on the Duke of Suffolk, that by breaking off this alliance for that of Anjou, he had been the cauſe of the loſs of the King's pieces in France. This greatneſs made him ſubject to the jealouſie of King Lewis the eleventh, who worried him out of his Eſtate and his life together. Charles, Brother of this John, ſucceeded by the favour of King Charles the eighth. After whoſe death this fair Eſtate was ſeized on to the uſe of the Crown; till given again by Francis the firſt to Charles Duke of Alanſon, (whoſe Grand-father had married with a Siſter of the ſaid Earl John) and to the Lady Margaret his Wife, the ſaid Kings Siſter: who, after the deceaſe of the Duke of Alanſon, brought it to Henry of Albert, and King of Navarre, her ſecond Husband; returning ſo to the Original from whence firſt it came.

The Arms of theſe great Princes, were quarterly 1 Argent, a Lyon Azure; 2 Gules, a Leopard-Lyon Or, the 3, &c.

6 The Earldom of ALBERT is ſituate on the North-weſt of Armaignac, bordering upon Guienne. The chief Town whereof is 1 Nerac, ſeated on the River of Baize; the only place of ſtrength and moment in all this Eſtate. 2 Chaſtell-Jalone, well ſeated to diſturb the Trade betwixt Bourdeaux and Gaſcoigne, but not able to endure a ſiege; 3 Mont de Marſan, and 4 Tartas, both ſeated on the River Ladour: and all four formerly Towns of Caution for thoſe of the Reformed Religion; of which this Country is ſo full, that the Popiſh Religion had hardly any footing in all this Territory. Which, though the ſmalleſt of the ſix, and of leaſt Antiquity, had yet the fortune to incorporate all the reſt into it. For John, the ſon of Alan Earl of Albert, by his marriage with Katharine, Daughter and ſole Heir of Gaſton, ſon of Gaſton of Foix, and of Leonora Princes of Navarre, added to his Eſtate the Signeuries of Bearn, Foix, and Begorre. And Henry of Albert his ſon, by marrying the Lady Margaret, Siſter of King Francis the firſt, united to it thoſe of Armaignac and Comminges. By Jean the Daughter of this Henry, the whole Eſtate was brought to Antony of Bourbon, Duke of Vendoſme, and Father to King Henry the fourth, becoming ſo united to the Crown of France, from which it was at firſt diſmembred.

The Arms of theſe Earls, were Quarterly 1 France; 2 Gules, a Border ingrailed Arg. The third, &c.

7 As for the Country of AGENOIS, the laſt part of Gaſcoigne, it never had other hearts (after it left off to be French) than the Dukes of Aquitain. The principal Cities of it, 1 Agen, a rich, populous, and well-traded Town, ſeated on the Garonne, in a fruitful Country; A Biſhops See, a Seneſchalſie, and held to be the faireſt in Gaſcoigne. 2 Condon, a Biſhops See alſo, from which the parts adjoining are called Condonnois. 3 Villeneufne, 4 Claerac, 5 Marmand, 6 Foy, &c.

Thus having took a brief view of thoſe ſeveral members which make up the great body of the Dukedom of Aquitain; let us next look on the Eſtate of the whole thus brought together: which in the declination of the Roman Empire, was given unto the Goths, before poſſeſſed of all Gallia Narbonenſis, by Valentinian the third, as a reward for their ſervice in driving the Alani out of Spain. Long the Goths had not held it, when they were outed of it by Clouis the fifth King of the French, continuing under his Succeſſors, till Ludovicus Pius made it a Kingdom, and gave it unto Pepin his youngeſt Sons. But Charles and Pepin, the Son of this Pepin, being diſpoſſeſſed by Charles the Bald; it was by him conferred on Ranulph, of the houſe of Burgundy, for his many good ſervices againſt the Normans, Anno 844. Whoſe Succeſſors take here in this order following.

The Dukes of Aquitain.

844	1	Ranulph of Burgundy, firſt Duke of Aquitain.
875	2	William, Earl of Auvergne, Nephew of Ranulph.
902	3	Ebles, Earl of Poictou, ſucceeded in Aquitain and Auvergne, by the Will and Teſtament of Duke William.
911	4	Ebles II. Son of Ebles the firſt.
935	5	William II. the Son of Ebles the ſecond.
970	6	William III. Son of William the ſecond.
1019	7	Guy, the Son of William the third.
1021	8	William IV. Son of Guy.
1086	9	William V. Son of William the fourth.
1156	10	Lewis the ſeventh of France, in right of Eleanor his Wife, ſole Heir of William the fifth.
1152	11	Henry, Duke of Normandy, and Earl of Anjou, &c. in right of Eleanor his Wife, divorced from Lewis on pretence of ſome conſanguinity after King of England.
1169	12	Richard, King of England, the Son of Henry.
1199	13	John King of England, the Brother of Richard, who forfeiting his Eſtates in France, on a judicial ſentence pronounced againſt him for the (ſuppoſed) murder of his Nephew Arthur Duke of Bretagne; Aquitain and the reſt of the Engliſh Provinces were ſeized on by the French, Anno 1202.

But notwithſtanding this Arreſt, the Engliſh ſtill continued their pretenſions to it, till at the laſt it was agreed betwixt King Lewis the ninth of France, and Henry the third of England, An. 1259. that the Engliſh ſhould reſt ſatisfied with Guienne, the bounds whereof were to be the Pyrenees on the South, and the River of Charente on the North, comprehending therein alſo the Country of Limoſin; and that on his inveſtiture into this Eſtate, he ſhould relinquiſh all his rights in Normandy, Anjou, Tourein, Main, &c. In conſideration whereof, he ſhould have 150000 Crowns in ready mony. On this accord, the Kings of England become Homagers, to the Crown of France, which ſometimes they omitted, ſometimes did it by Proxie, but never in perſon, till Philip de Valois required it of King Edward the third: and becauſe ſuch duties are not often perſonally done by Sovereign Princes, Du Serres ſhall deſcribe the formality of it. The place deſigned for this exploit was the Church of Amiens, "to which Edward came (ſaith he) with " ſuch a Train, as was intended rather to the honour of " himſelf than the French King. Royally attired he was, " with a long Robe of Crimſon Velvet, powdred with " Leopards of Gold; his Crown upon his head, his Sword " by his ſide, and golden Spurs upon his heels. Philip, attended by the chief Officers of the Realm, ſat upon his " Throne, apparelled in a long Robe of Purple Velvet, " powdered with Flower de Lyces of Gold; his Crown " upon his head, and the Scepter in his hand. Viſcount " Melun, the great Chamberlain of France, commanded " Edward to take off his Crown, Sword, and Spurs, and " to kneel down: which he did accordingly. Then taking both his hands, and joining them together, he ſaid " unto him; You become a Liege-man to the King my Maſter, who is here preſent, as Duke of Guienne, and Peer " of France, and promiſe to be faithful and loyal to him; " ſay, Yea: and Edward ſaid yea, and aroſe. But the Hiſtorian notes withal, that Philip paid yearly for this Pageant; the young King never forgetting the indignity which was put upon him, till he had made France a field of blood. And here it is to be obſerved, that though the Kings of England by this new inveſtiture, were entituled Dukes of Guienne only, yet they had all the power and priviledges of Dukes of Aquitain, excepting the homage of the great Lords and Earls of Gaſcoigne, which formerly belonged unto them. Inſomuch as Richard the ſecond, though Duke of Guienne only in ſtyle and title, inveſted his Uncle John of Gaunt in that brave eſtate, under the ſtyle and title of Duke of Aquitain; ſummoned to Parliament by that name by the ſaid King Richard. From this Accord betwixt the Kings, the Engliſh had poſſeſſion of the Dukedom of Guienne, according to the order of their Succeſſions, from the fortieth of King Henry the third, Anno 1259, to the twenty-ninth of King Henry the ſixth, An. 1452 (the intercalation of John of Gaunt excepted only): when outed of all their old rights in France, rather by the good fortune, than by the valour of Charles the ſeventh, the Engliſh then, divided in Domeſtick Factions, and not at leiſure to look after the affairs of France. Nor do I find, that Guienne being thus recovered, was ever diſmembred from that Crown, but when King Lewis the eleventh aſſigned it over to his Brother the Duke of Berry, to take him off from joining with the Dukes of Bretagne and Burgundy in a new confederacy; who held it but two years, and died the laſt Duke of Guienne, Anno 1472.

The Arms of this Dukedom were Gules, a Leopard or Lyon Or, which joined to the two Lyons of Normandy, make the Arms of England.

16 LANGUEDOC.

LANGUEDOC is bounded with the Pyrenæan hills, the Land of Rouſillon, and the Mediterranean, on the South; on the North, with Foreſt, Quercu, and Auvergne; on the Eaſt, with Provence and Daulphine; on the Weſt, with Gaſcoigne. Whereas the other Frenchmen in an affirmation ſay Ouy, theſe of this Country ſay Oc; and therefore Ortelius conjectures it was call'd Langue d'oc. But others think that it took denomination from the Goths, who reigning long in this Country, left behind them a ſmack of their Language; and therefore it was called Languegotia, and now Euphoniæ gratia, termed Langedocia, or Langedoc, that is to ſay, the Country which retaineth the Gothick Language. In reference to one or both of which Etymologies this Province is by Paulus Æmilius promiſcuouſly called Gothicana and Ottilana; and in relation to the reſt, the people hereof in one of Calvin's Epiſtles, are given unto us by the name of Populus Linguæ Ottilanæ.

The Country on thoſe parts which lie next to Auvergne, is like the higher parts thereof, mountainous and not very fruitful; in all the reſt, as rich and pleaſant as the beſt Provinces in France; and having the advantages of Olives, Raiſins, Figs, Orenges, and other fruits not ordinary but here, and in the neigbouring Province; In that participating the Commodities both of France and Spain. The people have ſomewhat in them of the ancient Goths, and draw nearer to the temper of the Spaniards, than any other of the French; as being accounted very devout, great vaunters of themſelves, affecting bravery above their condition and eſtates; not caring how they pinch it on the working days, or at home in private; ſo they may flaunt it in the ſtreet, and be fine on holy-days; The humour alſo of the Women, and in them more pardonable.

Principal Rivers of this Province, are 1 Aurance, 2 Lieran, and 3 Orbe, emptying themſelves into the Rhoſne; and Alby, which diſburdeneth it ſelf into the Ocean. Chief Towns hereof are, 1 Niſmes (in Latin Lemauſus) anciently a Colony of the Romans, now a Biſhops See; where there remain ſome marks of the Roman greatneſs, eſpecially the ruins of a ſpacious Palace built by the Emperor Adrian. 2 Mont-pelier (in Latin Mons Peſſulanus) ſituate on a high Mountain, as the name imports, ſome twelve miles diſtant from the Sea; an Univerſity for the ſtudy of Phyſick, and for that very happily ſeated, the Country round about affording great variety of medicinal Herbs. An Earldom of it ſelf in the former times, conveyed by Mary Daughter of William the laſt Lord hereof, to King Peter of Aragon her Husband; next, made a member of the Kingdom of Majorca; and finally by James, the laſt King of Majorca, ſold to King Philip of Valois. Of late one of the ſtrongeſt holds which thoſe of the Reformed Religion had in this Country: and memorable for the notable reſiſtance which it made againſt the whole forces of Lewis the 13. in the laſt Civil Wars about Religion. 3 Aleth, and 4 Carcaſſonne, both Biſhops Sees, both ſeated on the River Aude; the people of both ſpeaking a corrupt French, with an intermixture of ſome Spaniſh. Which intermixture of Spaniſh with that broken French they either have originally from the Goths of Spain, of whoſe Kingdom this was once a part: or from their long ſubjection to the Earls of Barcelone, to whom they were conveyed, with other fair Eſtates in this part of France, by the marriage of Raymond Borenger the ſeventh Earl thereof, with Almodia the Daughter of ſome of the great Lords who then ruled in Languedoc, about the year 1040. And to theſe Towns as alſo unto thoſe of Niſmes and Alby, the Earls of Barcelone, and the Kings of Aragon (in their right) did pretend a Soveraignty (though they had loſt the poſſeſſion of them) as theſe of France did to the Earldom of Barcelone: till mutual releaſes made on both ſides of each others claims, by James the firſt of Aragon, and the King S. Lewis Anno 1260, or thereabouts. 5 Alby, commodiouſly ſeated on the River ſo called, the Civitas Albigenſium of Antoninus, the chief of this part of Languedoc, called from hence La Paix Albigeois; remarkable in Church-hiſtory for thoſe great oppoſitions to the corruptions and errours of the Church of Rome, called the Albigenſes. 6. Beziers, upon the River Orbe, the Betiræ of Ptolemy, and Civitas Beterraſium of Antoninus; a Roman Colony of old, now a Biſhops See. 7. Agde, called Agatha by ancient Writers, remarkable for a Council held there in the year 450. and for a well-frequented Port, at the mouth of the River Egbaud. 8. Narbon, ſeated on the mouth of the River Aude, the ſeat of the Phocenſes, and the firſt Roman Colony (next after Carthage) out of Italy. In Italy it ſelf (to obſerve ſo much by the way) were no leſs than 150 Colonies; 57 in Africk, 29 in Spain, 26 in France, 4 in England only, in Syria 20, and in other Countries ſome, but very few in reſpect of the largeneſs of the Territories. Theſe Colonies were inſtituted partly to repreſs Rebellions in the Conquered Countries; partly to reſiſt a foreign Enemy, partly to reward the ancient Souldiers, partly to relieve the poorer ſort, and partly to purge and empty the City of the ſuperfluity and redundance of her people. Now if the queſtion be asked, whether a Colony or a Fortreſs be more behoveful, I anſwer with Boterus in his Raggio de ſtato, that a Fortreſs is more fit for ſudden uſe, and a Colony for continuance; the former are quickly erect, and perhaps as ſoon loſt; the other require ſome time of ſetling, and are after of a good ſufficiency to defend themſelves. As we ſee in our times, the Spaniſh Colonies of Ceuta and Tangier in Africk; and our own of Calais which was the laſt Town we loſt on the firm Land. This Narbon was in the infancy of the Roman Empire, the moſt populous and greateſt Town of all France: inſomuch, as from it all this part of France was called Gallia Narbonenſis. A Province, of which Pliny delivered us this cenſure: Narbonenſis Gallia agrorum cultu, morum virorumq; dignatione, opum amplitudine, nulli Provinciarum poſtponenda; diciturq; Italia potius quàm Provincia; that is to ſay, that for fruitfulneſs of the ſoil, and the civility of the people, it was inferior to no Province in the Roman Empire. But to return unto the Town, being anciently the Metropolis of this Province, it had withal the honour of being an Archbiſhops See, which it ſtill continueth: well fortified at the preſent as a Town of War, frontiering Catalonia and the Land of Rouſillon. 9. La Puy, the See of a Biſhop, who in Latine is called Podienſis, the chief of that part of Languedoc, which is named Velay, the ancient Seat of the Velauni. 10. Viviers, on the River Rhoſne, (by Pliny named Alba Helviorum) from whence the Country adjoyning hath the name of Vivarets. 11. Rhodes, or Rutena, the principal City of the Ruteni, now a Biſhops See; from whence the Country round about hath the name of Rouvergn; though ſome account this Rouvergn a diſtinct Province, and no part of Languedoc. 12. Tholouſe, ſeated on the Garonne, anciently the principal City of the Tectoſages and the Toloſates, placed by old Writers in this tract; now the chief of Languedoc, and one of the greateſt in all France. The Seat of an Archbiſhop and an Univerſity; ſo ancient, that ſome report it to be built when Deborah judged Iſrael. Here was a Parliamentary Court erected, for the adminiſtration of Juſtice in theſe parts, 1302. As for the Story of Tholouſe, it was obſerved, that certain Souldiers having ſtole ſacrilegiouſly ſome Gold out of the Temples of Tholouſe, (when it was ſackt by Cepio a Roman Conſul) came all to miſerable and unfortunate ends: hence grew that Adage, Aurum habet Tholoſanum, applied unto unhappy men.

But that which deſerves moſt note in the Hiſtory of it, are large and ſpacious fields about it, called by the Writers of theſe times by the name of Campi Catalaunici, extending in length 100, in breadth 70 French Leagues. In which fields, An. 435. was fought that terrible Battel between Attila King of the Hunnes, and Ætius the Roman Lieutenant in France; Ætius was ſtrengthned by the Goths, Francks, Burgundians, and Germans. Attila's Army conſiſted of Hunnes, Eruli, Scythes, Sarmatians, Suevians, to the number of 500000, of which 180000 that day loſt their lives: Attila himſelf being driven to that deſperate plunge, that making a Funeral pile of Horſe Saddles, he would have burned himſelf. But his Enemies weary of well-doing, or Ætius politickly fearing, that if Attila were quite deſtroyed, the Goths, Francks, and others of the Barbarians then confederate with him, would become too inſolent; gave him leave to retire home through Italy: which he haraſſed with Fire and Sword, murdering the People, and ruining the Towns, ſo that he was then, and long after, called Flagellum Dei. Ætius, notwithſtanding this good ſervice, was by Valentinian the Emperour of the Weſt, rewarded with the loſs of his head: By which act, the Emperor (as one truly told him) had cut off his right hand with his left. And indeed, ſo it happened. For not long after, he himſelf was by Maximus murdered, and the Empire of Rome irrecoverably deſtroyed. Now that theſe Fields lay hereabouts, and not about Chalons in the Province of Champaigne (as ſome learned and induſtrious men have been of opinion) I am aſſured by theſe three reaſons. Firſt, the improbability that Ætius having got the Victory, ſhould ſuffer ſuch a vaſt and numerous Army to paſs through the whole length of France from one end to the other, and having waſted all the Country, to break into Italy. And ſecondly, the teſtimony of Jornandes an ancient Writer, who telleth us, firſt, that before this fight, Attila had beſieged and diſtreſſed the City of Orleans; and therefore was not vanquiſhed in the fields of Chalons: and then, that immediately upon the Victory, Toriſmund the King of the Goths, (his Father Theodorick being ſlain) in Campis Catalaunicis ubi & pugnaverat, Regia Majeſtate ſubvectus Tholoſam ingreditur; being proclaimed King in thoſe very fields, entred with great ſtate and triumph into Tholouſe, the Regal City at that time of the Gothiſh Kingdom. Which plainly proves the places of Battel to be near this City: though poſſibly by the name Campi Catalaunici (the great length and breadth thereof conſidered) we are to underſtand the whole Country of Languedoc.

The old Inhabitants of this Country beſides the Helvii, the Vellauni, the Tectoſages, and Albigenſes, formerly remembred, were the Agatenſes, Beterenſes, Gabales, Volcæ, and the Arecomici; all which, together with ſome others of leſſer note, made the Province of Narbonenſis Prima, whereof the Metropolis was Narbon. In the falling of the Roman Empire aſſigned with the reſt of Narbonenſis, and ſome part of Spain, to Atholfus King of the Goths, whom Honorius by this gift and by beſtowing on him his Siſter Placidia, bought out of Italy. The Goths having got ſo good footing in Gaul, enlarged their bounds by taking in the moſt part of Aquitain, Quercu, and Auvergne: but forced to quit them to the French, who conquered that from them which they got from the Romans; and ſhut them up within the limits of their firſt Donation. After this they declined as faſt in France, as they thrived in Spain; loſing Provence to Theodorick, King of the Oſtro-Goths, or Goths of Italy; whoſe Succeſſor Amalaſunta, fearing a War from Greece, reſigned her intereſt in Provence to Theodobert the French King of Mets. Nothing now left unto the Goths of their Gallick purchaſes, but this Languedoc only; and this they held as long as they had any thing to do in Europe, but loſt it finally to the Moors, with all Spain it ſelf. Recovered from the Moors by Charles Martel, and added to the reſt of the French Empire, it was by Charles the Great given to one Thurſin, of the race of the ancient Kings, with the title of the Earl of Tholouſe, on condition that he would be Chriſtened. But long it continued not in his Race, nor in any other, not being ſetled in a way of Lineal Deſcent, till the time of Raymond the eighth Earl, Brother to another Raymond Earl of St. Giles (a Town of Guyenne) whoſe Grand-child Hugh, being an adventurer in the Wars of the Holy Land, and wanting Money to provide himſelf for that Expedition, ſold his Eſtate herein to his Uncle Raymond, the Earl of St. Giles before mentioned. From this time forward we find theſe Earls to be as often called the Earls of St. Giles, as the Earls of Tholouſe; and by that name frequently remembred in the Eaſtern Stories; as for his great valour in the courſe of the Holy Wars, eſpecially at the taking of the City of Tripoli, given to him (after it became Chriſtian) with the title of Earl. This Raymond, worthily named the Great, Earl of Tholouſe, St. Giles, and Tripoli, had three Sons, all of them ſucceeding; of which the eldeſt was Bertrand, had a Baſe Son called Ponce, who ſucceeded him in the Earldom of Tripoli, the Father of Raymond, and Grand-father of another Raymond, both Earls of Tripoli, and both ſuſpected to be falſe to the Chriſtian Princes in the continuance of thoſe Wars. Alphonſo the third Son was alſo the Father of a Raymond, the Father of another Raymond, who proved a great Maintainer of the Albigenſes: and in purſuance of that cauſe murdered a Legate of the Pope ſent to Excommunicate him, and ſtrangled his own Brother Baldwin, becauſe he found him not inclinable to his opinions. For this cauſe Warred upon, and Vanquiſhed by Simon de Monfort, Father of Simon de Monfort, the great Earl of Leiceſter; and after many troubles and continual Wars, left his Eſtate and Quarrel to his Son named alſo Raymond, the laſt Earl of this Houſe; who proving alſo a ſtrong Patron of theſe Albigenſes, was condemned for a Heretick, curſed by the Pope, and perſecuted by the French Kings, Philip the Second, Lewis the Eighth, and St. Lewis. This laſt willing to make a peaceable compoſition, married his Brother Alphonſo, to Jane Daughter and Heir to Count Raymond, with this condition, That if it ſhould happen theſe two to die without iſſue, then Languedoc ſhould be incorporated to the Crown. Raymond agreed, the Marriage was ſolemnized, An. 1249. They both died without iſſue, 1270. and Languedoc returned to the Crown in the days of Philip the Third.

The Names and Succeſſion of theſe Earls, in regard they were Peers of France, great Princes, and for the moſt men part of action, take in order thus.

The Earls of Tholouſe.

An. Chr.
779	1	Thurſin the firſt Earl of Tholouſe.
803	2	William made Earl by Charlemagne, Peer of France at the firſt foundation of that Order.
828	3	Iſauret Thurſin, Son of Thurſin the firſt Earl.
841	4	Bertrand, Son of Iſauret Thurſin.
894	5	William II. of ſome other Houſe.
919	6	Ponce, a great Juſticiar, but of unknown Race.
963	7	Almaric, of as obſcure Parentage as Ponce.
1003	8	Raymond, the Brother of Raymond Earl of St. Giles, advanced by Robert King of France.
1052	9	William III. Duke of Aquitain, ſucceeded in right of his Wife, the Daughter of Raymond.
1086	10	Hugh Aymon, Son of William the Third, ſold his Eſtate and Earldom to his Uncle Raymond.
1096	11	Raymond II. Earl of St. Giles, Tholouſe, and Tripoli; of great note in the War of the Holy Land.
	12	Bertrand, Son of Raymond the Great.
	13	William IV. Brother of Bertrand.
1101	14	Alphonſo, Brother of William the Fourth.
1146	15	Raymond III. Son of Alphonſo.
1185	16	Raymond IV. Son of Raymond the Third, the great Patron of the Albigenſes.
1222	17	Raymond V. Son of Raymond the Fourth, vanquiſhed and compounded with, by King Lewis the Saint.
1249	18	Alphonſo II. Brother of St. Lewis, and Huſband of Joan, Daughter and Heir of the laſt Raymond: after whoſe death, and the deceaſe of Joan the Counteſs, An. 1270. this Earldom was united to the Crown of France; according to the Capitulations before mentioned.

The Arms of this Earldom were Gules, a Croſs Pommelé, of 12 points, Or.

17. PROVENCE.

PROVENCE is environed with Languedoc on the Weſt; Daulphine on the North; the Mediterranean on the South, and on the Eaſt with the Alpes, and the River Varus; which divide it from Piemont, the neareſt of the Alpine Province.

It took this name from the Romans, who being called in by the Maſſilians, to revenge a private wrong done them by the Salii, the next neighbouring People, wholly poſſeſſed themſelves of this Country, calling it κατ' ἐξοχὴν, The Provence. The Country being now divided between ſeveral Princes, we muſt neceſſarily premiſe ſo much of the ſtory of it, as ſerves to ſhew the time and grounds of that diviſion. In order whereunto we are firſt to know, that it long continued part of the Roman Empire, making up the whole Province of Narbonenſis Secunda, and part of Alpes Maritimæ. How it was given unto the Viſigoths, or Goths of Spain, and from them taken by the Oſtrogoths, or Goths of Italy; hath been ſhewn in Languedoc. Being reſigned unto the French, it became a part of the new Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy. Made a diſtinct Eſtate in the perſon of Hugh de Arles, (who afterwards ſucceeded in the Kingdom alſo) by Boſon the firſt. And by this Hugh de Arles upon his reſignation of that Kingdom to Rodolph Duke of Burgundy beyond the Jour; given unto William his Son, with the ſtile and title of Earl of Provence: confirmed therein by the Emperour Conrade the Second, on whom the Rights of that Kingdom had been transferred, to be held of him, and his Succeſſors in the Empire. In his poſterity it continued, till conveyed to the Earls of Barcelone, by the Marriage of the Lady Doulce with Earl Raymond Arnold, Anno 1082. Carried, together with that Earldom, to the Crown of Aragon, and finally by Beatrix one of the Daughters of Raymond the Third, the laſt Earl of this Family, conveyed in Marriage to Charles Earl of Anjou, Brother of Lewis the Ninth of France, An. 1262. whom Urban the Fourth, not long after crowned King of Naples. By Joan the firſt, the fourth from Charles, driven out of Naples by Lewis of Hungaria, and reſtored again by the power of Pope Clement the fifth; the City and Territory of Avignon (where the Pope reſided at that time) is diſmembred from the Earldom of Provence, and given in Fee for ever to the Church of Rome: partly to recompenſe that favour, and partly for diſcharge of ſome old Arrears of Rent or Tribute, pretended to be due to the See of Rome, for the Realm of Naples. A City which had formerly been under the Protection, and by that title in the actual poſſeſſion of many of the Popes of Rome; ever ſince the conviction of Raymond Earl of Tholouſe, to whom it formerly belonged, but held by them in Fee of the Earls of Provence. Not long after this Donation, the ſaid Joan adopted for her Heir and Succeſſor, Lewis Duke of Anjou, Brother to Charles the Fifth of France, deſcended lineally from Charles Earl of Anjou, and King of Naples: poſſeſſed by this Adoption of the Earldom of Provence, and a title to the Realm of Naples. Rene, the Grandchild of this Lewis, having no iſſue-male ſurviving, made Lewis of Chalons, the Prince of Orange, (another Signeury in this Country:) and gave him therewithal full power to make Laws, coyn Money, and pardon all Crimes; to write himſelf Prince of Orange by the grace of God, with all the other Prerogatives of an abſolute Prince. This was in the year 1415. So that now the Country ſtands divided betwixt the French King, the Pope, and the Prince of Orange; each of them abſolute and independent in his own Eſtate: as long at leaſt as the French King is pleaſed to give way unto it.

The whole is much of the ſame nature with Languedoc, before deſcribed, but in one part thereof, that namely between Marſeilles and Arles, different from all the reſt of France. By the French commonly called La Croix: by the elder Writers Campi lapidei, becauſe all in a manner overſpread with ſcattered ſtones; Suppoſed by Mela to be the place in which Hercules encountred Albion and Bergeon the Sons of Neptune: whom when he could not otherwiſe vanquiſh, he was by Jupiter his Father aided with a ſhower of ſtones; of which theſe were feigned to be the Remainders. A Country which takes up a good ſpace of ground, and hath a few poor Towns in it, but not much inhabited.

In that part of it which belongs to the King, the Towns of ſpecial note are, 1 Aix, ſeated on the Rhoſne, the Metropolis of Narbonenſis ſecunda, and at that time called Aquæ Sextiæ, from Sextius the Founder of it (by whom the Salii were ſubdued in the ſecond year of that War) and the hot Baths here. Now, and of long time, an Archbiſhops See, and the chief City of this Province: and for that reaſon made the Seat of a Court of Parliament for this Country, An. 1501. Moſt memorable in old ſtory for the great diſcomfiture of the Cimbri by C. Marius; Who not willing to venture on the Enemy united (for they were no fewer than 300000 fighting men, and lately fleſhed in the overthrow of Manlius and Sepio, (two Romans Conſuls;) permitted them quietly to paſs by his Camp: The Barbarians who imputed it to fear or cowardiſe, ſcornfully asking his Soldiers, What ſervice they would command them to Rome. But when, for their eaſier paſſage over the Alpes, they had divided themſelves into three Companies; Marius ſeverally ſetting on them all, put them all to the ſword. Ex victoria viſus meruiſſe, ne ejus nati Rempub. pœniteret, By this Victory, and this only, giving cauſe to the Romans (as Velleius hath it) not to be ſorry for his birth. 2 Arles, in Latin, Arelatum, by Auſonius called the Rome of France, and in thoſe times ſo highly prized, that Conſtantinus Flavius being choſen Emperour by the Britiſh Legions, in the declining times of the Weſtern Empire, intended to have made it the Imperial Seat. And not leſs memorable in Church-ſtory for a Council here held in the time of Conſtantine the Great, Anno 313. in which was preſent Reſtitutus the Biſhop of London, and certain other Biſhops of the Britiſh Church. It was anciently a Roman Colony, and now the See of an Archbiſhop; ſituate on the River Rhoſne, in a low and marſhy ſituation: which natural ſtrength, ſeconded by the new works of King Henry the Fourth, have made it one of the beſt Bulwarks of France, on that ſide of the Kingdom. Selected for the Seat Royal of the French Kings of Burgundy, who from hence were called Kings of Arles; as the Kings of Auſtraſia (or Eaſt-France) were called Kings of Mets, becauſe they had made choice of that City for the Regal Seat. Between this City and the Sea, but on the other ſide of the River, runneth a deep Chanel, cut with infinite charge and induſtry by C. Marius, for conveyance of Victuals into his Camp, in his War againſt the Cimbri before named; by Ptolemy called Foſſæ Marianæ, by the French, Camargue, a corrupt word made of Caius Marius: the Country about which, called alſo by the ſame name for the ſpace of 24 miles, is of excellent paſturage, and breedeth great abundance of Horſes; the chief Town of which is called 3 St. Gillis. 4 Marſeilles, a known Port on the Mediterranean, firſt built by the Phocenſes, a Greek Nation of Aſia Minor, who being baniſhed their Country, came and planted here, about the reign of Tarquinius Superbus, the laſt King of Rome. It was firſt only a Confederate City of the Romans, for whoſe ſake, being moleſted by the Salii, and others of the neighbouring Nations, the Roman Legions firſt entred Gaul: afterwards, ſiding with Pompey in the Civil Wars, or at leaſt deſirous to ſtand neutral, it was forced by Cæſar, and made a Colony. In the proſperity hereof it drove a great Trade on the Mediterranean, and was the Mother of many fair and flouriſhing Colonies, Emproria, Forum Julium, Nicæa, Olbia, diſperſed in the adjoyning ſhores of France, Spain, and Italy. 5 Glandeves, anciently called Glanum, a Biſhops See, ſeated upon the Maritime Alpes. 6 Taulon, by Ptolemy called Tauroentium, and by ſome Tholone, beautified with a fair and capacious Haven, well ſtored with Oyl, great quantity of Salt brought hither from the Iſle of Eres, about three Leagues off; and a kind of Almonds called Provence Almonds; made by this means one of the moſt frequented Ports of the Mediterranean. 7 Antibi (in Latine Antipolis) a Sea-coaſt Town near the River Varo, one of the fartheſt of this Country towards Italy. 8 Feriols (the Forum Julium of the Ancients) on the Mediterranean, founded by the Maſſilians, as before was ſaid, after a Colony of the Romans. 9 La Grace, a Biſhops See, more within the Continent. 10 Ciſteron, on the Borders of Daulphine. 11 Brignols. 12 Merindol, and Chabriers, two little Towns amongſt the Mountains, towards Daulphine; not otherwiſe of note but for the horrid Maſſacre of the Proteſtants, before deſcribed.

II. The Principality of Orange lieth on the North-Weſt of this Province, watered with the Rivers of 1 Durance, 2 Seile, 3 Meine, and 4 Ecque; all helping to augment the Rhoſne. The chief places of it are, 1 Orange, ſeated on the Meine, an Epiſcopal See; famous for many rare and wonderful Antiquities, demonſtrating the Roman Greatneſs, of whom once a Colony; but of moſt note in Church-Hiſtory for a Council held there againſt the Semi-Pelagians, in the year 444. called Arauſicanum; the Latine name of this City became anciently Arauſia, in ſome Writers Auriacus, and of late Au- rangia, 2. Eſtrang, 3. Bois de St. Pol; more properly, St. Paul de Vences, being the Civitas Vencienſium of Antoninus; but not otherwiſe memorable.

As for the Princes hereof, they were anciently of the Noble Family of the Bauſſii, but Homagers and Tributaries to the Earls of Provence. By Mary Daughter and Heir of Reynold the laſt of this Family, it was conveyed in marriage to John de Chalons, one of the moſt Noble Houſes of Burgundy, from the Earls whereof they were extracted. Lewis, the Son of this John, obtained of Rene Duke of Anjou, and Earl of Provence, the Soveraignty hereof, as before was ſaid. By Claude, the Heir-general of this Houſe, beſtowed in marriage by King Francis the firſt, on Count Henry of Naſſaw, Ambaſſador from Maximilian the Emperour of Germany, Anno 1514. it was tranſlated to that Family, where it ſtill remaineth.

The Princes of Orange.

1475	1	Lewis of Chalons, firſt abſolute Prince of Orange.
	2	William de Chalons, who ſubmitted his Eſtate to the Parliament of Daulphine, to ſatisfie King Lewis the 11. by whom reſtored again to his former Soveraignty.
	3	John de Chalons, a bitter Enemy to King Lewis, in defence of the Rights of Mary, Ducheſs of Burgundy.
1500	4	Philibert de Chalons, ſlain at the Siege of Florence, where he commanded the Forces of Charles the 5th: Claude his only Siſter, and next Heir of that Houſe, being married to Henry Earl of Naſſaw, Anno 1515.
1536	5	Rene of Naſſaw, Son of Henry and Claude, adopted by Philibert his Uncle, whom he ſucceeded in this Eſtate: ſlain at the Siege of Landrecie in the Netherlands.
1544	6	William of Naſſaw, Couſin-german of Rene, by whoſe laſt Teſtament left Heir unto his Eſtates: the great Patron and Aſſertor of the Belgick Liberties, againſt the Spaniard: ſlain by a Partiſan of Spain, called Balthazar, at Delfe in Holland, An. 1584.
1584	7	Philip of Naſſaw, kept as an Hoſtage all his life by the King of Spain.
	8	Maurice of Naſſaw, Brother of Philip, Commander of the Forces of the United Provinces.
1625	9	Henry of Naſſaw, II. Succeſſor to his Brother Maurice, in his Offices, Eſtates, and Honours.
1648	10	William of Naſſaw II. the Son and Succeſſor of Henry, married the Princeſs Mary, eldeſt Daughter of Charles King of Great Britain, &c. on May-day, 1641.

The Revenues of this Principality are about 30000 Crowns. The Arms are Quarterly Gules, a Bend Or, 2. Or, a Hunters Horn Azure, ſtringed Gules; the third as, &c. Over all, an Eſcotcheon of Pretence Chequie, Or and Azure. More briefly thus; Quarterly Chalons and Aurange, under an Eſcotcheon of Geneva.

Southward of Aurange, lieth the Country of VENASCINE, as the French call it; Comitatus Venieſſinus, in the Latin: ſo called from Avenio, (now Avignon) the chief City of it. Anciently it had Lords of its own, called Earls of Venice, (Veniſſa Comites in the Latin) united to the Houſe of Savoy, by the marriage of Laurencia, a Daughter hereof, with Earl Humbert the Second, Anno 1080, or thereabouts. But this Family of the firſt Lords coming to an end, it fell (but by what Right, I find not) to the Earls of Tholouſe, but held by them as Homagers, (for this Eſtate) of the Earls of Provence: on the conviction of Earl Raymond, condemned for Hereſie, brought under the protection and patronage of the Popes of Rome; the more abſolute Soveraignty hereof, and of the City Avignon, being ſetled on them by Queen Joan, as before is ſaid. The principal Cities of this tract, are, 1. Avignon, the Avenio of Strabo, Pliny, and Mela; a very fair and flouriſhing City, pleaſantly ſeated on both ſides of the River of Rhoſne: famous for being the reſidence of the Popes for ſeventy years; which times the Romans remember till this day, by the name of the Babylonian Captivity: adminiſtring, ever ſince, an Oath unto the Pope at his Coronation, not to remove his Seat to Avignon. The firſt Pope that removed hither, was Clement the 5. An. 1300; when as yet the Popes had no more right in it, than that of Patronage and Protection; and returned again to Rome, by Gregory the 11. An. 1377. In this City are ſaid to be 7 Palaces, 7 Pariſh Churches, 7 Monaſteries, 7 Nunneries, 7 Inns, and 7 Gates. So that if there be any myſtery in the number of ſeven, or any credit to be given to ſuch Pythagorean divinity; the Arch-biſhop of this City may as well be entituled Antichriſt, as the Pope of Rome; if there be nothing but the myſtery of this number to affix it to him. It was made an Univerſity, at the time of the Popes firſt ſetling here; and ſo ſtill continueth: Alciat the great Emblematiſt, being here Profeſſor. 2. Carpentras, by Ptolomy called Carpentoracte, a Biſhops See: as is alſo, 3. Cavillon, (of old Caballio) once a Roman Colony on the River Durance: and 4. Taraſcon, on the Rhoſne, oppoſite to Beaucaire in Languedoc: for the Popes dwelling here ſo long, could not be otherwiſe attended than by mitred Prelates. 5. Vaſon, Civitas Vaſionenſium, of Antoninus.

The Revenues of the Pope here, are not very great, and thoſe expended all in keeping of Ports and Garriſons, by reaſon of the ill neighbourhood of the Proteſtants of Orange. So that it is ſuppoſed, that it is rather a charge, than a profit to him: which maketh the people like very well to live under his Government, as bringing more money to them, than he gathereth from them.

The Arms hereof, when under the old Earls of Venice, were Gules, two Keys in Saltire Or, ſtringed Azure. Which ſeems to have in it ſome preſage, (the Popes pretending to the Keys, as we know they do) that it ſhould one day become ſubject to the See of Rome.

The old Inhabitants of the whole Country were, as appeareth, the Salii, Maſſilienſes, Vaſionenſes, and Venciences, before mentioned; beſides the Deceates about Antibe, the Senitii, and Sigeſtorii, about Ciſteron; all conquered by the Romans in their firſt War in Gaul, called in to aid thoſe of Marſeilles againſt the Salii. The Fortune of it ſince, hath been ſhewn before. Nothing remains now but the Catalogue of The Earls of Provence.

1 Hugh de Arles, ſuppoſed to be the Son of Lotharius, King of Auſtraſia, and Waldrada his Concubine; made the firſt Earl of Provence, by Boſon the firſt, King of Burgundy. He was after King of Burgundy and Italy alſo.

2 William de Arles, the Son of Hugh.

3 William II. ſirnamed the younger, Son of William.

4 Gilbert Earl of Provence, the Father of the Lady Doulce.

1082 5 Raymond Arnold, Earl of Barcelone, the Husband of the Lady Doulce, of Provence.

7 Raymond II. Son of Berengar Raymond.

1173 8 Alfonſo King of Aragon, and Earl of Barcelone; the Son and Heir of Raymond Earl of Barcelone, eldeſt Son unto Raymond Arnold, and the Lady Doulce.

1196 9 Alfonſo II. ſecond Son of Alfonſo the firſt, ſucceeded in the Earldom of Provence, his eldeſt Brother Pedro inheriting the Realm of Aragon, and the Earldom of Barcelone.

10 Raymond III. Son of Alfonſo, the laſt Earl of Provence of this Line.

1282 12 Charles II. King of Naples, and Earl of Provence.

1310 13 Robert King of Naples, and Earl of Provence.

1342 14 Joan, Queen of Naples, and Counteſs of Provence.

1371 15 Lewis Duke of Anjou, the adopted Son of Queen Joan; Earl of Provence, and titulary King of Naples, &c. (Of whoſe deſcent from Charles de Valois, Earl of Anjou and Provence, we have ſpoke elſewhere.)

1385 16 Lewis II. Duke of Anjou, Earl of Provence, &c.

1416 17 Lewis III. Duke of Anjou, Earl of Province, &c.

1430 18 Renè, Brother of Lewis Duke of Anjou, &c.

1480 19 Charles Earl of Main, Son of Charles Earl of Main, the Brother of Renè, ſucceeded in all the Eſtates and Titles of his Uncle; and at his death gave Provence to King Lewis the 11th, his Couſin-german, as being the Son of Charles the 7th, and Mary Daughter of Lewis the ſecond, Duke of Anjou, Siſter of Lewis the third, and Renè, the preceding Dukes, and of Charles Father of this Charles, the laſt Earl of Provence. Immediately on whoſe death, Decemb. 19. An. 1481. the King ſent a Commiſſion to Palamede de Forban, Lord of Sollier, Chamberlain of Earl Charles, to take poſſeſſion of the Country in his name, and command therein as Lieutenant-General. Since which time, Provence never was diſmembred from the Crown of France, ſo much as in the way of Apennage, or any Honorary Title amongſt the Kings Children.

What the Revenues of it were to the former Earls, I am not able to ſay, having no good Authority to proceed upon. Only I find, that beſides the Lands belonging to the Earls hereof, and other cuſtomary and caſual Taxes; there was a Tax called, The Royal Impoſt, being fifteen Florens levied upon every fire: which reckoning 3500 fires, (for ſuch the eſtimate of them was) amounted yearly unto 56000 Florens. Now it is ſubject to the rigor and uncertainty of the Kings Taxations, as well as all the reſt of France. And ſo much of thoſe Provinces which properly made up the Kingdoms of the French and Goths, let us next look on thoſe which at the ſame time were ſubdued by the Burgundians; whoſe Hiſtory, Kingdom, and Eſtate are to be conſidered, before we come to the deſcription of their ſeveral Provinces.

The Kingdom of BURGUNDY.

THE Kingdom of the BURGUNDIANS at their firſt ſetlement in Gaul, contained all thoſe Provinces of the Roman Empire, then called the Alpes Graiæ, and Pæninæ, Maxima Sequanorum, Lugdunenſis Prima, and Viennenſis, now paſſing under the names of the Dukedom and County of Burgundy, Switzerland, the Griſons, Walliſland, Savoy, La Breſſe, Dauphine, Lionois, Nivernois, and ſome part of the Dukedom of Bourbon. A fair and large quantity of ground, able at once to tempt and ſatisfie an ambitious Nation. But the Burgundians came not into Gaul of their own accord, though of their own accord they drew ſomewhat near it. In their Original, they were a people bordering near the Vandals, if not a Tribe or Sept of them: and dwelling in thoſe parts in which are now the Dukedoms of Meclenburg, and Pomerania. At the time that Druſus and Tiberius warred in Germany, they were utterly barbarous, living in Tents only here and there clapped up. Which being in their own Language called Burgs, gave them the name of Burgundians amongſt the Romans: in the ſame ſenſe as the wild Arabs had the name of Scenitæ, amongſt the Greeks, from the like kind of living. In the year 416, at the inſtigation of the Vandals, they left their own ſeats, and planted themſelves in the Towns and Villages belonging now to the Marqueſſes of Baden, and Electors of Rhene. About which time they received the Chriſtian Faith, being then miſerably oppreſſed by the Hunnes, breaking upon them out of Pannonia. Not finding any other way to free themſelves of that Enemy, they betook themſelves to the God of the Chriſtians, and were univerſally baptized. After which, falling on the Hunnes, they ſlew no leſs than 30000 of them in one Battel, from that time forwards, never troubled with that barbarous Nation. Chriſtians then they were, and Orthodox in their profeſſion, before their coming into Gaul: and for that reaſon called in by Stilico to oppoſe the French, then threatning an invaſion of the Roman Provinces. Upon this invitation they paſſed over the River with an Army of 80000 fighting men, poſſeſſing themſelves of all which lay from the fartheſt ſhore of the Loyre, to the Alpes of Italy; and from the Mountain Vauge, to the Mediterranean; Provence only excepted, about that ſame time planted by the Goths. Their Government was under Kings: Many according to their Tribes, when they lived in Germany: Monarchical, when ſetled in the Realm of France, where they had theſe five Kings of the Burgundians.

A.Ch.

408 1 Tabica, who firſt brought the Burgundians into Gaul.

2 Gundioch.

3 Gundebault, who harraſſed Italy, then in poſſeſſion of the Goths, with fire and ſword; the Uncle of Clotilda, Wife to Clouis the fifth King of the French, by her perſwaſion made inclinable to the Chriſtian Faith.

4 Sigiſmund.

5 Gundomar, the Son of Sigiſmund, firſt ſet upon by Clodomire, the Son of Clouis King of Orleans, whom he ſlew in Battel near Auſtun; but afterward outed of his Kingdom by Childebert and Clotaire, Kings of Paris and Soiſſons, in revenge of the death of their Brother Clo-

Clodomire. And ſo the Kingdom of the Burgundians fell unto the French, after it had continued about 120 years: Guntram the Son of Clotaire, and Clouis, one of the Sons of Dagobert the firſt; being, in their times, honoured with the Titles of Kings of Burgundy.

But the firſt time that the Kingdom of Burgundy ſetled amongſt the French, in the way of ſucceſſion, was in the partage of that vaſt Empire of Charlemagne, amongſt the children and poſterity of Ludovicus Pius: in conſtituting of which Kingdom, Provence was added to the reckoning, to make this anſwerable to the other parts of that broken Monarchy. The firſt of theſe French Kings, was Charles, the youngeſt Son of Lotharius Emperor, and King of Italy, eldeſt Son of the ſaid Lewis the Godly. The Succeſſion in this order following.

The French Kings of Burgundy.

A.Ch.

855 1 Charles, youngeſt Son of the Emperor Lotharius, died without iſſue.

858 2 Lotharius, the ſecond King of Mets, and Lewis the ſecond Emperor, Brethren of Charles, ſucceeded in Burgundy; the Mountain Jour dividing and bounding their Eſtates.

876 3 Charles the Bald, King of France, and Emperor, Uncle to the three former Kings, all dying without iſſue, ſucceeded in the whole Eſtate; which he again divided into three Governments or Members: that is to ſay, Burgundy on this ſide of the Soaſne, containing the now Dukedom of Burgundy, with the Earldoms of Lions and Maſcon. 2. Burgundy, beyond the Jour, comprehending the Provinces of Savoy, Switzerland, Walliſland, and the Eſtates of the Griſons: and 3ly, Burgundy, on the other ſide of the Soaſne, lying betwixt the other two, containing the now Counties of Burgundy, Provence, La Breſſe, and Daulphine. This laſt conferred with the Title of Earl, on Boſou Earl of Ardenne, by Charles the Bald, who had married his Siſter Judith; and not long after, in the perſon of the ſaid Earl Boſon, raiſed unto a Kingdom by Charles the Groſs, by the name of the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy. The Kings theſe that follow.

4 Boſon, Earl of Ardenne, Huſband of Hermingrade, the Daughter of Lewis the ſecond, Emperor and King of Burgundy, was firſt by Charles the Bald, made Earl of Burgundy, beyond the Soaſne; and afterwards by Charles the Groſs, created the firſt King of Arles and Burgundy, to be held by him and his Succeſſors, of the German Emperours.

5. Lewis II. Son of Boſon and Hermingrade, choſen King of Italy, but outed by the Faction of Berengarius.

917 6 Hugh de Arles, ſuppoſed to be the Son of Lotharius the ſecond, by Waldrada his Concubine; ſucceeded by the gift of Lewis, and was choſen by his Faction there, King of Italy alſo. For the quiet enjoying of which Kingdom, he reſigned this to Rodolph, Duke of Burgundy beyond the Jour, elected by another Faction, to that broken Title.

926 7 Rodolph Duke of Burgundy beyond the Jour, ſucceeded on the reſignation of Hugh de Arles; his Brother Boſon being ſetled beyond the Jour.

937 8 Rodolph II. Son of Rodolph, a Prince of ſo ſhort a reign, or of ſo little note, that he is by ſome left out of the Catalogue of theſe Kings.

9 Boſon II. the Brother of Rodolph the firſt; by whom the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Jour, was united to the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy.

965 10 Conrade Son to Boſon the ſecond.

990 11 Rodolph III. Son to Conrade; who having no iſſue of his body, gave his Eſtate to Conrade the ſecond, Emperor of Germany, and his Son Henry, ſirnamed the Black, whom he had by Gileſa, the Siſter of this Rodolph: by whom it was united to the German Empire, An. 1032. In the diſtractions whereof, following not long after his deceaſe, the Provincial Earls or Governours for the German Emperors, made themſelves Maſters and Proprietaries of their ſeveral Provinces, (the Dukedom of Burgundy excepted, ſetled long before) out of which roſe the great Eſtates of the Duke of Savoy, the Earls of Burgundy and Provence, the Daulphins of Viennois, and Lords of Breſſe, together with the Commonwealths of the Switzers and Griſons: every poor Bird ſnatching alſo ſome Feather or other of this dying Eagle. Yet notwithſtanding the diſmembring and cantoning of this fair Eſtate, the ſucceeding Emperors of Germany claimed not only a ſuper-intendence over, but a diſpoſal of all the Countries that ever were under the command of the King of Burgundy: inſomuch that the Emperour, Henry the ſixth, receiving no ſmall part of the money which our Richard the firſt paid to the Duke of Auſtria, for his ranſom, gave unto the ſaid Richard the Kingdom of Burgundy, the Soveraignty of Provence, Viennois, Marſeilles, Narbon, Arles, and Lions, together with the Homages of the King of Aragon, and of the Earl of Digon and St. Giles. A Royal gift, if either the Emperor had any dominion over thoſe Countries, or if they would have received any Prince or Officer of his appointing.

The Arms of this Kingdom under the old Burgundian Kings, are ſaid to have been Azure, a Cat Arg. armed Gules. Which being ſaid, we will proceed to the deſcription of thoſe Provinces of this broken Kingdom, which lye within the bounds of France; the reſt, which lye beyond the Jour, having been ſpoken of already in the Alpine Countries, which made up the whole Continennt of the Tranſjouran Burgundy.

18. DAVLPHINE.

North of the Country of Provence, where we left before, lyeth that of DAVLPHINE; having on the Eaſt, Savoy, and the Maritime Alpes; on the Weſt, Lionois, and ſome part of Languedoc, from which divided by the Rhoſne; and on the North La Breſſe, and thoſe parts of Savoy which lye towards Piemont, ſo called, as ſome report, from Dauphine, Wife of Guigne the ſecond; in like manner as Flanders is affirmed moſt probably to have took that name from Flandrina, Wife of Liderick the ſecond, then one of the laſt of thoſe Princes who governed in that Country by the name of Forreſters.

It is divided into the Higher and the Lower; the one mountainous, ſtony, and unfruitful, of the ſame nature with the Alpes, with whoſe branches it is over-run: the other tolerably fruitful, but not to be compared with the reſt of France. The people of the Higher, and more mountainous parts, are generally groſs and rude; not capable of Learning, but well enough enclined to Arms and Traffick; and have a cuſtom, that on the coming on of Winter, they ſend abroad all thoſe which are fit for travel, whom they call Bics, or Biſonards) who ſeldom return back till Eaſter: none ſtaying at home but old men, children, and impotent perſons, which cannot go abroad to get their livings. Thoſe in the Lower are more civil, but not more given to labour, than the Mountainers are; nor very covetous of gain, ſo they may live at eaſe, without want or penury. In both parts generally good Souldiers, and well affected to their Prince.

The Lower Daulphine, together with that part of Provence which lies next to the Rhoſne, and the adjoining parts of Savoy, made up the Province called Viennenſis, from Vienna the Metropolis of it, ſituate on the Rhoſne, honoured with the Seat of the Præfectus Prætorio Galliarum; ſtill the chief City of this Country, an Arch-biſhops See, and a Siege Præſidial. From hence the tract about it is called Viennois, and was the Title of the firſt Proprietaries of this Country, entituled, Daulphins of Viennois. To this Town, Archelaus, the Son of Herod, was baniſhed by Auguſtus Cæſar. 2. Valence, the chief City heretofore of the Valentini, then a Roman Colony; now a Biſhops See, and an Univerſity for the Civil Laws: a rich, ſtrong, and well traded Town, ſeated on the Rhoſne. The Country hereabouts from hence called Valentinois; and hath given Honorary Title to two perſons of more Fame, than Honour: the firſt of which was Cæſar Borgia, the Son of Pope Alexander the ſixth, who caſting off his Cardinals Cap, was made Duke of Valentinois, by Charles the eighth: the other, Madam Diana, the great Minion and Paramour of Henry the ſecond, under whom ſhe much ſwayed the affairs of France, and honoured with the Title of Dutcheſs of it. 3. Grenoble, (in Latin, Gratianopolis) the chief Seat heretofore of the Accuſiani; the moſt populous and beſt built of all this Province; and much reſorted to by the Lords and Nobles, by reaſon of the Court of Parliament here erected, An. 1453. About this, lieth the Country called 3. Griſinaudan. 4. Ternay. 5. Roſſillon. 6. La Roche. 7. Montelimar, all along the Rhoſne. 8. Romons, upon the confluence of the Rhoſne, and the Iſere. 9. Cremien. 10. St. Marceline. 11. S. Andre. 12 Beaurepaire, more within the Country.

The Higher Dauphine, together with thoſe parts of Provence which lye next to Italy, made up the Province of the Alpes Maritimæ; the Metropolis whereof was, 1. Ebrodunum, now called Ambrun, an Arch-biſhops See, and Siege Præſidial, ſeated on an high Rock, in the midſt of a pleaſant Valley, ſurrounded with Mountains, under which runs the River Durance. The Hilly Country hereabouts is the higheſt of France. 2. Brianſon, near the head of the River Durance, called Brigantio by Antoninus. 3. Gappe, now a Biſhops See, formerly the chief City of the Apencenſes; the track of whom is ſtill found in the name of the adjoining Territory, called Le Pais Gapencois: memorable for a Synod or Aſſembly of the French Proteſtants here holden, An. 1603, in which it was determined, and as for an Article of Faith, That the Pope was Antichriſt, and where the Miniſters then aſſembled, gave audience to the Ambaſſadors of Foreign States, as to a Commonwealth diſtinct from the Realm of France: audaciouſly importuning their King by their ſeveral Agents, for liberty of going (whenſoever they liſted) or ſending whenſoever they pleaſed, unto the Councils and Aſſemblies of all Forreign Nations, which profeſſed the ſame Religion with them: the Preamble to thoſe Encroachments on the Royal Authority, which after proved the ruine of their Power and Party. 4. Tricaſſin, ſo called of the Tricaſſini, the old inhabitants of theſe parts. 5. Die, the Dia Vocontiorum of Antoninus; a Biſhops See, ſituate on the River Droſne: from whence comes thoſe ſmall, but good Stomack-Wines, which we call Vin Die. Others affirm, (and perhaps more knowingly) that this Wine is of the growth of Champagne, moſt plentifully growing in the Fields of a Town called Hey; from whence it hath the name of Vin de Hey; and ſo contractedly, Vin Dey. 6. Chorges, 7. Mombrum, 8. Eſſiles; of which, little memorable.

The chief Inhabitants hereof, in the time of the Romans, beſides the Tricaſſini, Apencenſes, Vocontii and Accuſiani, before mentioned; and the Allobroges, ſpoken of in the Alpine Provinces, were the Segalauni, about Valence; the Decenſes about Die, and the Cavari about Grenoble. Firſt conquered by the Romans, then by the Burgundians, and at laſt by the French: under whom made a part of the new Kingdom of Burgundy, till the ſurrender of the ſame to the German Emperors. Under them it continued till the year 1100; when Guigne, ſirnamed the Fat, Earl of Griſinaudan, ſeeing the Emperor Henry the Fourth, over-born by the Popes, and not able to aſſert his own rights, ſeized upon this Province under the title of Earl of Viennois, to which Guigne the ſecond, his Son and Succeſſor, gave the name of Daulphine, either from his Wife ſo called, as ſome; or from the Dolphin which he took for his Arms, as others ſay. In this Family it continued till the year 1349, under the Power and Government of theſe following Princes, entituled,

The Daulphins of Viennois.

A.Ch.

1100 1 Guigne, ſirnamed the Fat, Earl of Albon and Griſinaudan, at the time of the diſſolution of the Kingdom of Burgundy.

1135 2 Guigne II. the firſt and abſolute Proprietary Prince hereof, by the name of the Daulphin of Viennois.

1146 3 Guigne III. Son of Guigne the ſecond.

1152 4 Beatrix, Daughter of Guigne the third, firſt married to Reymond the third, Earl of Tholouſe, next to Hugh the third, Duke of Burgundy; and finally, to Guigne of Albon, of the houſe of the former Earls; all in her right entituled, Daulphins of Viennois.

1208 5 Andrew, the Son of Beatrix and of Guigne the Fourth.

1242 6 Guigne V. Son of Andrew.

1283 7 Humbert the firſt, in the right of Anne his wife, daughter and heir of Guigne the fifth.

1335 8 John the Son of Humbert, exerciſed in continual Wars, as his Father was, was with the Earls of Savoy.

1322 9 Guigne VI. Son of John, taken Priſoner by Edward Earl of Savoy, An. 1329, and at laſt ſlain, An. 13 2.

1342 10 Humbert II. the younger Son of John, and the Brother of Guigne the ſixth, the laſt Daulphin of Viennois, who being ſurcharged with Wars by Ame (or Amede) Earl of Savoy, entred into the Order of Dominican Friers, at Lions; ſelling his Country at a ſmall rate, to Philip de Valois, French King, upon condition, that the eldeſt Son of France ſhould be entituled always, Daulphin of Viennois; and quarter the Arms of Daulphin, with thoſe of France. The conditions willingly accepted; and Charles, the Son of King John, the Son of Philip de Valois, admitted by his Grandfather both to the Title and Eſtate, in the very year of the ſurrendry. Since this time, the eldeſt Son of France is called generally, the Daulphin of France; ſometimes, the Daulphin only, by way of eminency; and many times, the Prince-Daulphin, to difference him from the Daulphin (or Count-Daulphin) of Auvergne, and perhaps ſome others. A Title ſo annexed unto them, that it is not uſually laid by on the acceſſion of a greater or ſuperiour Dignity: inſomuch as Francis the eldeſt Son of Henry the ſecond, (whom he ſucceeded in the Crown) being King of Scots in the right of Mary his Wife, was by the French commonly called Le Roy Daulphin, or the King of Daulphin. Nor have they the bare Title of this Country only, but the commands, profits, and poſſeſſion of it, ſending their own Governours thereunto; who by an ancient Indulgence, have the greateſt Priviledges (conferring all Offices within the Province) of any Governors of France.

19. LA BRESSE.

LA BRESSE is bounded on the Eaſt with Savoy: on the Weſt with Lionois; on the North with Charolois in the Dutchy of Burgundy, and ſome part of the Franche County, and on the South, with Daulphine. The reaſon of the name I find not. The Country is very fruitful and pleaſant, embraced betwixt the Rivers of Soaſne and Rhoſne, with which very well watered. Chief Towns herein are, 1. Bellay, a Biſhops See. 2. Bourg, (for diſtinctions ſake called Bourgen Breſſe) a Town ſo well fenced, and fortified with ſo ſtrong a Citadel for command of the Country, that it was thought little inferiour to the two impregnable Fortreſſes of St. Katherines and Montmelian, in Savoy. The Government of which Town and Citadel, was earneſtly laboured for by the Duke of Biron, then Governour of Burgundy, after a repulſe on the like ſuit, for that of St. Katherine: but being ſuſpected to hold intelligence with the Duke of Savoy, at that time in ill terms with King Henry the 4th, it was alſo denied him: which drew him into diſcontent, and thereby to his fatal ruine. Afterwards, during the minority of Lewis the 13th, demoliſhed by ſpecial Order of the Council of France, for fear of being ſurpriſed by the Duke of Savoy, during thoſe confuſions. It was of old time called the Forum Secuſianorum, from the Secuſiani, the ancient Inhabitants of this Tract. 3. Caſtillon, 4. Mont-Real, 5. Bugey, 6. Veronen, of which nothing obſervable.

This little Province, being anciently a part of the Kingdom of Arles and Burgundy, had its own Earls, Proprietary Lords hereof; who held it till the year 1285: at what time Sikyll, the Daughter and Heir of Vlric Earl of Breſſe and Baugie, (or Baſgee, as ſome Writers call it) conveyed the Eſtate in marriage to Ame, or Amedee, the 4th of that name Earl of Savoy. In which Houſe it continued till the year 1600, and then ſurrendred by Duke Charles Emanuel, to King Henry the 4th, to ſilence the pretences which that King made unto the Marquiſate of Saluzzes, and put an end unto the War then begun about it: the politick Duke chuſing rather to part with an Eſtate on this ſide of the Mountains, than to give that active King occaſion to look into Italy; to which Savoy muſt have been a thorow-fare, Piemont an ordinary Paſs; and where no end could be expected, but the loſs of all. Surrendred then it was on good reaſon of State, and upon that Surrendry united and incorporated with the Crown of France, and put under the Government of the Parliament of Digon, as it ſtill continueth.

Arms hereof, are Azure, a Lyon Ermins, armed and langued, Or.

20. LIONOIS.

THE Country of LIONOIS is bounded on the Eaſt with Breſſe, on the Weſt with Beau-jolois, Forreſt, and Auvergne; on the North, with Burgundy Dutchy; and on the South with Daulphin, and a part of Languedoc. So called from Lions the chief City; and under that Title made an Earldom by Charles the Groſs, in the cantoning and diſmembring of the Kingdom of Burgundy. The Earldom containing at that time not only Lionois it ſelf, but alſo Forreſt and Beau-jolois, before deſcribed. The Earls hereof were at firſt only Provincial Governours; but under the diſtractions of the German Empire, they ſhifted for themſelves, and became hereditary: but long it held not in one hand. For firſt, the Earldom of Forreſt, and the Lordſhip or Signeury of Beau-jeu being taken out of it about the year 990, the reſt of the Eſtate fell in ſome tract of time to the Biſhops and Church of Lions; but under the Soveraignty of the French Kings, as Lords Paramount of it.

The places in it of moſt note are, 1. Maſcon. (Matiſconum) a Biſhops See, ſituate on the Soaſne, anciently a diſtinct Earldom from that of Lions, one of the five (as that of Lions was another) which made up the Dukedom of Burgundy on this ſide of the Soaſne: one of the Earls hereof, called William, flouriſhing in the year 1000, or thereabouts; whoſe Son and Succeſſor, named Otho, married Elizabeth daughter of Humbert, the firſt Earl of Maurienne, (a Title afterwards exchanged for that of Savoy). Continuing for ſome Ages after in this Poſterity, it was purchaſed of William the laſt Earl hereof, and of Elizabeth his Wife, by King Lewis the 9th; and afterwards ſubjected to the Juriſdiction and Court of Lions, as it ſtill continueth. 2. Eſchalas, on the Rhoſne, on the South of Lions, oppoſite to Vienne, the chief City of the Lower Daulphin. 3. Dandilli, 4. Francheville, 5. Chaumont, and 6. Lebrelle, all ſomewhat Weſtward of that River, but not much obſervable, 7. Lions it ſelf, pleaſantly ſeated on the confluence of the Soaſne and the Rhoſne, anciently a Roman Colony, (teſtified by many old Inſcriptions) and honoured with a magnificent Temple, dedicated by the Cities of France, to Auguſtus Cæſar: now the moſt famous Mart of France, and an Univerſity; by our Latin Writers called Lugdunum. Theſe Marts in former times were holden at Geneva, from thence removed hither by King Lewis the 11th, for the enriching of his own Kingdom. When Julio the ſecond had excommunicated Lewis the 12th, he commanded by his Apoſtolical Authority, that they ſhould be returned to Geneva again: but therein his pleaſure was never obeyed; the Marts continuing ſtill at LIONS, as a place more convenient and capacious for that great reſort of French, Dutch, and Italian Merchants, which frequent the ſame. As for the Univerſity, queſtionleſs it is very ancient, being a ſeat of Learning in the time of Caius Caligula. For in thoſe times, before an Altar conſecrated to Auguſtus Cæſar in the Temple ſpoken of before; this Caligula did inſtitute ſome exerciſes of the Greek and Roman Eloquence: the Victor to be honoured according to his merit; the Vanquiſhed either to be ferulated, or with their own tongues to blot and expunge their Writings, or to be drowned in the River adjoining. Hence that of Juvenal, Vt Lugdunenſem Rhetor dicturus ad aram, applyed to dangerous Undertakings. In the time of the Romans firſt coming into Gaul, it was the chief City of the Hedui, and Secuſiani, afterwards the Metropolis of Lugdunenſis Prima. The Archbiſhop hereof, is the Metropolitan of all France; and was ſo in the time of S. Irenæus, one of the renowned Fathers in the Primitive Church, who was Biſhop here.

In this Town lived Peter Waldo, a wealthy Citizen, about the time of Frederick Barbaroſſa, Emperor of Germany; who being a devout and conſcientious man, ſenſible of the many errors and corruptions in the Church of Rome, diſtributed the greateſt part of his Riches amongſt the poor, and betook himſelf to meditation, and ſtudying of the holy Scriptures. In the carnal eating of CHRIST's Body, the ſubtraction of the Cup in the bleſſed Sacrament, in matter of Purgatory, the Supremacy, adoration of Images, invocation of the Saints departed, and many other points of moment, he held opinions contrary to thoſe of Rome, and little different from thoſe of the preſent Reformed Churches. And yet it may not be denyed, but that amongſt ſome good Wheat, there were many Tares; which gave the juſter colour to their Adverſaries to exclaim againſt them. Being much followed in regard of his Piety and Charity, he got unto himſelf and them the name of Pauperes de Lugduno, or the Poor men of Lions, given in deriſion and contempt. Afterwards they were called Waldenſes, by the name of Waldo, the beginner of this Reformation; and by that name oppoſed and writ againſt by Fryer Thomas of Walden. The French, according to their manner of pronunciation, drowning the L, and changing the W into V, call them commonly Vaudois; by which name they occur in the ſtories of that State and Language. But Lions proving no ſafe place for them, they retired into the more deſart parts of Languedoc; and ſpreading on the banks of the River Alby, obtained the name of Albigenſes, as before was ſaid. Supported by the two laſt Earls of Tholouſe, they became very maſterful and inſolent: inſomuch, that they murdered Trincanel their Viſcount in Beziers, and daſhed out the teeth of their Biſhop, having taken Sanctuary in S. Magdalens Church, one of the Churches of that City. Forty years after which high out-rage, the Divine Providence gave them over to the hand of the Croiſadas, under the conduct of the French Kings, and many other noble Adventurers, who ſacrificed them in the ſelf ſame Church, wherein they had ſpilled the blood of others. About the year 1250, after a long and bloody War, they were almoſt rooted out of that Country alſo. The remnants of them, being bettered by this affliction, betook themſelves unto the Mountains lying betwixt Daulphine, Provence, Piemont, and Savoy, where they lived a godly and laborious life; painfully tilling the ground, rebuilding Villages, which formerly had been deſtroyed by War; teaching the very Rocks to yield good paſturage to their Cattel: inſomuch as places which before their coming thither, ſcarce yielded four Crowns yearly, were made worth 350 Crowns a year, by their care and induſtry. Laſciviouſneſs in ſpeech they uſed not: Blaſphemy they abhorr'd; nor was the name of Devil (in the way of execration) ever heard amongſt them; as their very Enemies could not but confeſs, when they were afterward in troubles. The Crimes alledged againſt them, were, That when they came into any of the neighbouring Churches, they made no addreſs unto the Saints, nor bowed before ſuch Croſſes as were erected in the High-ways, and Streets of Towns. Great crimes aſſuredly, when greater could not be produced! And ſo they lived, neither embracing the Pope's Doctrines, nor ſubmitting unto his Supremacy, for the ſpace of 300 years, untouched, unqueſtioned; even till the latter end of the reign of King Francis the firſt. But then the Perſecution raging againſt the Lutherans, they were accuſed, condemned, and barbarouſly murdered, in the Maſſacres of Merindol, and Cabriers, before-mentioned. After which time, joining themſelves with the reſt of the Proteſtant party, they loſt the name of Vaudois, by which called before; and paſs in the account of the Reformed Churches of France; enjoying the ſame priviledges and freedom of Conſcience, as others of the Reformed do. And though I look not on theſe men, and their Congregations, as Founders of the Proteſtant Church, or of the ſame Church with them, as I ſee ſome do: yet I behold them as Aſſertors of ſome Doctrinal Truths, and profeſſed Enemies of the Errors and Corruptions of the Church of Rome, and therein as the Predeceſſors of the preſent Proteſtants.

The old Inhabitants of this Tract, were a part of the Hedui, that Nation overſpreading not this Country only, but Bourbonnois, with the whole Dukedom of Burgundy. And of theſe Hedui, the Inſubres are thought by ſome learned men to have been a Tribe, who paſſing over the Alpes, together with the Senones, and others of the Gallick Nations, poſſeſſed themſelves of thoſe parts of Italy which now make up the Dukedoms of Millain, Parma, Mantua, with the parts adjoining. The reſidue of the ſtory which concerns this Country we have had before.

21. The Dukedom of Burgundy.

THE Dukedom of BURGUNDY hath on the Eaſt, the French County, and ſome part of Savoy; on the Weſt, Bourbonnois; on the North, Champagne; on the South, La Breſſe, Lionois, and ſome part of Beau-joulois. A Provence ſo well watered with pleaſant and profitable Rivers, that as Queen Katharine de Medices uſed to ſay of France, That it had more fair Rivers than all Europe; ſo we may ſay of this Country, That it hath more fine Riverets than all France: here being the Rivers of 1. Armacan, 2. Serum, 3. Curi, 4. Torney, 5. Valence, 6. Dove, 7. Brune, 8. Sein, 9. Louche, and 10. Soaſne, (the Araris of the ancient Writers) this laſt dividing the two Burgundies from one another. Yet notwithſtanding this great plenty of Waters, the Country generally is leſs fruitful than the reſt of France: hardly yielding ſufficient for its own Inhabitants, except Wines only.

Chief Cities in it are, 1. Dijon, the birth-place of S. Bernard; ſeated upon the Soaſne and L'ouche, in a Champian Country: the Town large, populous, and of much reſort, as being the Seat of the Governour, and Parliamentary for the Province, a Parliament being here erected, An. 1476. Well fortified on all parts, but ſpecially defended by a ſtrong Caſtle, called Talente, ſituate on a hill adjoining. It is called Divio in the Latin; the Biſhop hereof Divionenſis. 2. Chalons, (in Latin, Caballinum) called for diſtinctions ſake, Chalons upon Soaſne, to difference it from Chalons upon Marn, in Champagne: a Biſhops-See alſo, as the other is: and gives name to that Noble Family of Chalons, (out of which the Princes of Orange are extracted) being one of the four ancient Families of Burgundy, the other three, Vienne, Neufchatel, and Virgie. 3. Autun, by Ptolomy called Auguſtodunum, the chief City of the Hedui, now a Biſhops-See, heretofore the chief of all the Country, ſome marks of the old ſplendor being ſtill to be ſeen: now very ordinary and mean, beautified only with ſome fair Churches, which the ruines of Time have not yet demoliſhed. 4. Beauine, ſeated on the Burſoize, in the beſt and richeſt ſoil of all Burgundy; and yielding the beſt Wines in all France:

remarkable for an Hoſpital of ſo fair a building, that it is thought equal to any Princes Palace in Europe; and an impregnable Caſtle built by King Lewis XII. 5. Alize, now a ſmall Village, but of great name and power in the time of Cæſar, then called Alexia, the chief Fortreſs of Vercingetorix. beſieged herein by the ſaid Cæſar; but ſo beſieged, that he had 70000 men in the Town for defence of the place, and an Army of 300000 Gauls at the back of Cæſar, to relieve their Fellows. So that he was fain to fortifie his Camp with two Walls, the one againſt them within the City, and the other againſt them without: which done, he kept ſuch diligent watch and ward on both ſides, that the beſieged heard ſooner of the diſcomfiture of their friends, than they did of their coming. Which fatal news being brought unto them, the Town was yielded. And Vercingetorix bravely mounted, rode round about Cæſar; then ſitting in his Chair of State, diſarmed himſelf, took off his Horſes capariſons; and laying all upon the ground, ſate down at Cæſar's feet, and became his Priſoner. 6. Tournus, encompaſſed with the Soaſne. 7. Semur, conſiſting of three parts, each of them ſeverally walled, and ſtrongly fortified. 8. Verdun. 9. Nayx, 10. St. Ligier, famous for Medicinal Baths. 11. Noyors, on the borders towards Champagne. 12. Auxerre, by Antonine called Antiſiodorum, of moſt note for the Council held here, An. 627. the Country about which, is called Auxerrois; and was an Earldom of it ſelf. The Title and Poſſeſſion of that Peter Earl of Auxerre, who was the third Emperour of the Latines reigning in Conſtantinople; to whom it came in Marriage with his firſt Wife Agnes, the Daughter of the laſt Earl of the former Race. On the failure of which houſe, it fell unto that of Chalons, by the Marriage of Iſabel, Niece of the ſaid Peter, by his Brother Robert, to John of Chalons, Earl of Burgundy: to whom ſucceeded John de Chalons, his eldeſt Son by that Venter, (his ſecond Wife) and finally, was ſold by John de Chalons, great Grandchild of the ſaid John Earl of Burgundy, to Charles the Fifth of France, An. 1370. by whom united to the Crown; ſubjected to the Parliament of Paris, and made part of Champagne. Here is alſo within this Country, the great and famous Monaſtery of Ciſteaux; the Mother of ſo many Religious Houſes diſperſed up and down in Europe; from hence denominated, and ſubject to the Diſcipline and Rules hereof.

Within the limits of this Dukedom, (on the South parts of it) ſtands the Earldom of CHAROLLOIS, heretofore the Title of the eldeſt Son of the Dukes of Burgundy: ſo called from Charolles, the chief Town hereof, ſituate in the borders of it, towards La Breſſe: ſeized upon with the reſt of this Dukedom, by Lewis XI. immediately on the death of Duke Charles the Warlike: reſtored again to Philip the Second, King of Spain, by Henry the Second, of France, on the Peace made at Cambray, and ſubjected to the Parliament of Dole in the County of Burgundy, as a part or member of that Eſtate. So that neither the Governour of the Dukedom for the French King, nor the Parliament of Digion, have any thing to do in it. The Arms hereof are Gules, a Lion paſſant regardant Or, armed Azure.

The ancient Inhabitants of the whole Dukedom, according to the limits before laid down, were the Hedui, one of the moſt potent Nations of all Gaul: who calling in the Romans to aid them in their quarrels againſt the Sequani and Arverni, made them all ſubject unto Rome. In the proſperity whereof, they made up the Province of Lugdunenſis Prima, of which Lions was the Metropolis or principal City. Afterwards, in the diviſion of the French Kingdom of Burgundy, by Charles the Bald; this part thereof, being called the Dukedom of Burgundy, on this ſide of the Soaſne, was cantoned into the five Earldoms of Dijon, Chalons, Autun, Lions, and Maſcon: whereof the three firſt laid together by Odo or Eudes King of France, during the Minority of Charles the Simple, were given unto his Brother Richard (both Sons of Robert Earl of Anjou) under the ſtile and title of Duke of Burgundy. The Iſſue of this Robert failing, it fell unto another Robert, Son of Hugh Capet, King of France: and the Male-iſſue failing of that Line alſo, it was devolved (partly by eſcheat for want of Heirs male; and partly in the Right and Title of the Heir-general) to King John of France, the Son of Philip de Valois, and of Joan his Wife, one of the Daughters of Robert the Third; who with the conſent of Charles his eldeſt Son, ſirnamed the Wiſe, gave it unto his ſecond Son Philip, (more worthily ſirnamed the Hardy) together with the Marriage of the Heir of Flanders, Artois, and the County of Burgundy. An Argument of no great Wiſdom, as was judiciouſly obſerved by King Lewis the Eleventh. For by this means, thoſe great Eſtates being united in one perſon, and afterwards theſe Eſtates improved by as proſperous Marriages; this Houſe of Burgundy grew formidable to the Kings themſelves, who never left practiſing againſt it, till they had brought it to ruine; and once again united this Dukedom to their own Eſtates, from which at firſt it was diſmembred.

The Dukes of Burgundy.

890	1	Richard of Saxony, the ſecond Son of Robert Earl of Anjou, Brother of Eudes, and Father of Rodolph, Kings of France.
938	2	Gilbert, the ſecond Son of Richard.
964	3	Otho, Son of Hugh Earl of Paris, ſirnamed the Great, and Brother of Hugh Capet, King of France; was Duke of Burgundy, in right of his Wife the Daughter of Gilbert.
976	4	Henry, the Brother of Otho.
1001	5	Robert, King of France, Son of Hugh Capet, ſucceeded in the Dukedom, on the death of his Uncle Henry.
1004	6	Robert II. Son of this Robert, and Brother of Henry King of France.
1075	7	Hugh, the Nephew of Robert, by his Son Henry, became afterwards a Monk of Clugny.
1097	8	Odo, or Otho II. Brother of Hugh.
1102	9	Hugh II. Son of Otho the Second.
1124	10	Odes, or Otho III. Son of Hugh the Second.
1165	11	Hugh III. the Companion, but great Enemy of our Richard the Firſt, in the Wars of the Holy Land.
1192	12	Odes, or Otho IV. Son of Hugh the Third.
1218	13	Hugh IV. an Adventurer with King Lewis the Ninth in the Holy Land.
1273	14	Robert III. Son of Hugh IV. which Robert was the Father of Margaret, the Wife of Lewis Hutin, King of France and Navarre; and of Joan, the Wife of Philip de Valois, French King, and Grandmother of Philip the Hardy, after Duke of Burgundy.
1308	15	Hugh V. Son of Robert the Third.
1315	16	Eudes, the Brother of Hugh, was Earl of Burgundy alſo, in right of his Wife.
1349	17	Philip, the Grandchild of Eudes by his only Son Philip, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, by deſcent, (who if he had lived, had been alſo Earl of Flanders and Artois, in right of Margaret his Wife.) But dying young and without Iſſue, he was ſucceeded in all his Titles and Eſtates, by 1363 18 Philip II. ſirnamed the Hardy, Son of John King of France, Son of Philip de Valois, and of Joan Daughter of Robert the 3d, by King John his Father, with the conſent of Charles the 5th his Brother, (in whom the right of this Dukedom was then pretended to remain) made Duke of Burgundy, and married Margaret Daughter of Lewis de Malain (and conſequently Heir of Flanders, and the County of Burgundy) the Widow of his Predeceſſor.

1404 19 John, ſirnamed the Proud, Son of Philip the 2d, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, and Earl of Flanders and Artois.

1419 20 Philip III. ſirnamed the Good, who added moſt of the Netherlands to his Eſtate.

1467 21 Charles the Warlike, Earl of Charolois, Son of Philip the Good. After whoſe death, ſlain by the Switzers at the battel of Nancie, Lewis the 11th ſeized upon this Dukedom, An. 1476, pretending an Eſcheat thereof, for want of Heirs males; and ſo uniting it for ever to the Crown of France: as by like colour of Eſcheat, King John had formerly entred on it, and given it unto Philip his younger Son, to the prejudice of the Earls of Eureux, deſcended from the daughter and heir of Lewis Hutin, and of Margaret his Wife, the elder Siſter of the Mother of the ſaid King John.

Of the great Wealth and Potency of theſe laſt Dukes of Burgundy, we ſhall ſpeak further when we come to the deſcription of Belgium: the acceſſion whereof to their Eſtates, made them equal to moſt Kings in Christendom. But for their Arms, which properly belonged to them as Dukes of Burgundy, they were Bendwiſe of Or and Azure, a Border Gules. Which Coat is uſually marſhalled in the Scutcheons of the Kings of Spain; that of the Earldom being omitted, though in their poſſeſſion. The reaſons of which are probably (for I go but by gueſs) partly becauſe this being the older and Paternal Coat, comprehends the other; and partly to keep on foot the memory of this Title to the Dukedom it ſelf, in right of which he holdeth ſuch a great Eſtate.

22. The County of BURGUNDY.

THE County of BURGUNDIE hath on the Eaſt the Mountain Jour, which parts it from Switzerland, on the Weſt the Dutchy of Burgundy, from which divided by the Soaſne; on the North a branch of the Mountain Vauge, which runneth betwixt it and Lorrein; on the South La Breſſe. It is reckoned to be 90 miles in length, about 60 in breadth: and with the Provinces of Daulphine, La Breſſe, and Provence, made up the Dukedom of Burgundy beyond the Soaſne; on the Eaſtern ſide of which it is wholly ſituate. This part thereof, now generally called the Frenche Comtè, or the Free County, becauſe not under the command of the French Kings; but living in a more free Eſtate than any Subjects of that Kingdom.

The County in ſome parts very Mountainous, but thoſe Mountains yielding excellent Vineyards, and having, in recompence of a little barrenneſs, an intermixture of moſt pleaſing and fruitful Valleys, ſwelling with plenty of all natural commodities uſeful unto the life of man; and for the variety of freſh Streams, and delightful Riverets, inferior only to the Dutchy.

The principal Towns and Cities of it, are, 1. Beſanſon, called by Cæſar, Veſontio, then the chief City of the Sequani, as afterwards the Metropolis of the Province entituled, Maxima Sequanorum; by conſequence an Archbiſhops See. Seated betwixt two Mountains on the banks of the River Doux, by which it is almoſt encompaſſed; ſuch artificial Fortifications being added to it, as make it very ſtrong both by Art and Nature. But this is an Imperial City, not ſubject to the Government and Command of the Earls of Burgundy; honoured with a ſmall Univerſity founded here, An. 1540, by Pope Julio the ſecond, and Charles the fifth. 2. Dole, ſeated on the ſame River Doux, for riches, ſtrength, and beauty, to be preferred before any in all the County; of which, it is the Parliament-City, and conſequently of moſt reſort for diſpatch of buſineſs. Anciently it was an Univerſity for the ſtudy of the Civil Laws; but now the Univerſity is devoured by a Colledge of Jeſuits: who fearing leſt the Doctrine of the Reformed Churches might creep in amongſt the people, not only have debarr'd them the uſe of the Proteſtants Books; but have expreſly forbid them to talk of GOD, either in a good ſort or in a bad. 3. Salins, ſo called from its ſalt Fountains; out of which came the greateſt part of the Earls Revenue: in which reſpect, or that it was the title of Otho the Son of Frederick Barbaroſſa, before he did attain the Earldom; the Earls of Burgundy ſince that time, and the Emperors of Germany, in their right, retain the name of Lords of Salines, in their uſual ſtile. A City honoured for a while with the Seat of the Parliament, removed hither from Dole by King Lewis the 11th, at ſuch time as he held this Country, beholding to him (being a wiſe and politick Prince) for many wholſom Ordinances, ſtill obſerved amongſt them. 4. Poligni, the Bailliage of the Lower; as 5. Veſcal is of the Higher Burgundy. 6. Arboiſe, noted for the beſt Wines, and 7. Laxoal, for medicinal Baths. 8. Nazareth, on the borders of Switzerland, fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle, the ordinary ſeat and retreat from buſineſs, of the firſt Prince of Orange, of the Houſe of Chalons, who had great poſſeſſions in this Country. 9. Gray, and 10. Chaſtel-Chalon, 11. Quingey, 12. Orgelet. Here is alſo the great and famous Abbey of Clugny, near the Town of Beaum; out of which ſo many Monaſteries in the Weſtern Church, had their firſt Original.

The old Inhabitants of this County, were the Sequani, a potent Nation, contending with the Hedui and Averni, for the Soveraignty of Gaul, till the ſtrife was ended by the Romans, under whom it made, together with Switzerland, the Province of Maxima Sequanorum. In the declining of which Empire, it fell to the Burgundians; and by Rodolph the laſt, King of the French, the Kingdom of Burgundy was given to Conrade the ſecond Emperor of Germany. After that, reckoned as a part of the German Empire, and governed by ſuch Earls or Provincial Officers, as thoſe Emperors ſent hither. Otho of Flanders, Son to a Siſter of the Emperor Conrade, was the firſt that held it as Proprietary, the other three whom Paradine ſets before him in his Catalogue of the Earls of Burgundy, being meerly Official. It was firſt united to the Dutchy, by the marriage of D. Eudes, with Joan the Counteſs. But no iſſue coming out of this bed, it fell into the Houſe of Flanders; and with the Heir of Flanders, unto Philip the Hardy, the firſt Duke hereof, of the Royal Race of Valois, An. 1369. Philip the Grandchild of this Philip, united moſt of the Belgick Provinces unto his Eſtate: after whoſe death, and the death of Charles his Son, at the Battel of Nancie, the Dutchy was ſurpriſed by King Lewis the eleventh, as holden of the Crown of France, eſcheated to him for want of Heirs-males. But the County, holden of the Empire, though ſubdued alſo by this Lewis, was reſtored again to Mary the Daughter and Heir of Charles, continuing hitherto in her Iſſue; as appears evidently by this Catalogue of

The Earls of Burgundy.

1101	1	Otho Guilliaume, the firſt Earl of Burgundy, by the power and aid of Robert King of France.
1118	2	Reinald, Couſin and Heir of Otho.
1157	3	Frederick Barbaroſſa, Emperor, in right of Beatrix his Wife, Daughter of Earl Reinald, was Earl of Burgundy.
1183	4	Otho, the youngeſt Son of Frederick.
1200	5	Otho II. Duke of Meranie, part of the Province of Tirol in Germany, was Earl of Burgundy in right of Beatrix his Wife, the Daughter of Otho the firſt.
1208	6	Stephen, Earl of Chalone, next Heir of Gerard of Vienne, and Joan his Wife, the ſecond Daughter of Otho the firſt, and Siſter of Beatrix; acknowledged by his Faction there, for Earl of Burgundy, in the life of Otho the ſecond, whom he diſpoſſeſſed, and left the ſame unto his Son, to the prejudice of Alice the Daughter of Otho.
1234	7	John, Son of Stephen de Chalons.
1269	8	Hugh, the Son of John, married to Alice Daughter of Otho of Meranie; ſo getting in that pretenſion alſo.
1279	9	Othelin, the Son of Hugh, Earl of Artois in right of Maud his Wife, Daughter of Robert Earl of Artois.
1315	10	Philip the Long, King of France; Earl of Burgundy and Artois, in right of Joan his Wife, Daughter and Heir of Othelin.
1331	11	Eudes, Duke of Burgundy, Huſband of Joan of France, the eldeſt Daughter of King Philip the Long, and of Joan the Counteſs.
1349	12	Philip, Duke and Earl of Burgundy, Grandchild of Eudes, and of Joan his Wife, by their Son Philip.
	14	Lewis de Malain, Earl of Flanders by his Father, and of Burgundy and Artois, by his Mother.
1383	15	Philip II. called the Hardy, Duke of Burgundy, by the gift of King John his Father, with the conſent and approbation of his Brother Charles the fifth, was Earl of Burgundy, Flanders, and Artois; as alſo, Duke of Nevers and Rethel, in right of Margarite his Wife, ſole Daughter of Lewis de Malain.
1404	16	Antony the Proud, Duke and Earl of Burgundy; his younger Brother Philip, ſucceeding in the Earldoms of Nevers and Rethel.
1419	17	Philip III. called the Good, Duke and Earl of Burgundy.
1467	18	Charles the Warlike, Duke and Earl of Burgundy.
1476	19	Mary, the Daughter of Charles, married to Maximilian of Auſtria, Son of Frederick the third, Emperour of Germany; in which honour he ſucceeded his Father.
1482	20	Philip IV. Son of Mary and Maximilian, King of Caſtile, in right of his Wife Joan, daughter to Ferdinand and Iſabel, King of Caſtile, &c.
1506	21	Charles, the Son of Philip, King of Spain, and Emperour of Germany, by the name of Charles the fifth.
1558	22	Philip V. of Burgundy, and the IId. of Spain.
	23	Philip VI. of Burgundy, and the IIId. of Spain.
	24	Philip VII. of Burgundy, and the IV. of Spain; in whom reſteth the poſſeſſion of the Country of Burgundy, and the Earldom of Charollois; herein not troubled by the French, upon the death of Charles the Warlike; partly, becauſe it was accounted as a Feif of the Empire; but principally, for fear of giving offence to the Cantons of Switzerland, upon whom it bordereth: jealous enough already of the greatneſs and power of France, and ſo not willing to admit ſuch a potent Neighbour.

The Arms of this Earldom are Azure, a Lion rampant Or, Seme of Billets Argent.

23. The Iſlands in the Aquitain and Gallick Ocean.

HAving thus took a view of the ſeveral Provinces within the Continent of France; let us next look upon the ISLANDS which belong unto it, diſperſed in the Mediterranean Sea, and the Weſtern Ocean. Thoſe in the Mediterranean Sea, are of little note; as 1. the Iſles of Eres, and 2. Pomegues, lying againſt Provence: 3. Maguelone, lying againſt Languedoc: and 4. L'Anguellade, betwixt both, at the mouth of the Rhoſne: of which there is nothing to be ſaid, but that thoſe of Eres are thought to be the Stoechades of Ptolomy; and his Blaſcon, to be Anguellade. And if the Iſles of Eres be the ſame with the Stoechades, then one of them muſt be the Lerina which we find in Pliny: of moſt note afterwards for a Monaſtery founded in it, which gave name to Vincentius Lerinenſis, or rather Lirinenſis, as moſt Writers call him: the Iſland now called Inſula Sancti Honorati, or Saint Honorates, as Maſſonus telleth us. And of as little note in the Weſtern Ocean, are Belle Iſle, againſt Vannes in Bretagne; the Iſle de Dieu, having in it two or three good Villages: and Marmoſtier, plentiful in Salt, and beautified with a Monaſtery called the White Abby. Of which three laſt, that of Belle Iſle hath been of late ſo fortified by Art, as of old by Nature, that it is thought to be impregnable: the Abbey of the laſt endowed with ſo plentiful a Revenue, that it was thought a competent preferment for Anthonine of Bourbon, baſe Brother to King Henry the Fourth, to be made Lord Abbot of the ſame. Thoſe of moſt note are, 1. Oleron, and 2. Ree, on the Coaſt of Aquitain; and thoſe of 3. Jarſey, 4. Gernſey, 5. Sarke, and 6. Alderney, on the ſhores of Normandie: Of which, the four laſt are under the Kings of England;

England; the reſt poſſeſſed by the French.

1. OLERON is an Iſland ſituate over againſt the Province of Xaintoigne, and South unto the Iſle of Ree, from which little diſtant. It is the biggeſt of the two, and makes yearly a very great quantity of Salt, wherewith moſt of the Provinces on the Weſtern Ocean uſe to be furniſhed. But it is eaſie of acceſs, and not very defenſible; which makes it of leſs note both in ancient and modern ſtories. The principal Town of it is called Oleron, by the name of the Iſland. One thing there is for which indeed this Iſland is of ſpecial fame, & that is, that the Maritine Laws, which for near 500 years have generally been received by all the States of the Chriſtian World which frequent the Ocean, (the Rhodian Laws being antiquated and worn out of uſe) for regulating of Sea-affairs, and deciding of Maritine Controverſies, were declared and eſtabliſhed here, and from thence called the Laws of Oleron. And here they were declared and eſtabliſhed by King Richard the Firſt of England, as Lord Paramont of the Seas, immediately on his return from the Holy Land: this Iſland being then in his poſſeſſion, as a Member of his Dukedom of Aquitain: Quæ quidem Leges & Statuta per Dominum Richardum quondam Regem Angliæ, in reditu à Terra Sancta, correcta fuerunt, interpretata, declarata, & in Inſula de Oleron publicata & nominata in Gallica Lingua La Loy d'Oleron &c. ſaith an old Record which I find cited in a M.S. Diſcourſe of my late learned Friend Sir John Burroughs, (once Keeper of the Records in the Tower of London, but afterwards Principal King of Arms, by the name of Garter) entituled, The Soveraignty of the British Seas. So powerful were the Kings of England in the former times, as to give Laws to all that traded on the Ocean.

2. The Iſle of REE is ſituate over-againſt Rochel: to which it ſerved for an Out-work on that ſide thereof. It is in length ten Engliſh miles, and about half as much in breadth, well fortified with deep Mariſhes at the entries of it; to which the many Salt pits every where intermingled, add a very great ſtrength. Chief places in it are, 1. La Butte de Mont, 2. St. John de Mont, 3. St. Hillary, 4. St. Martins, the largeſt and ſtrongeſt of them all; from whence the whole Iſland hath ſometimes been called St. Martins. After the taking of this Town by Lewis XIII. An. 1622. (the Duke of Soubize then commanding in it for thoſe of Rochel) it was very well fortified; and ſince made unfortunately famous for the defeat of the Engliſh Forces under the Command of George Duke of Buckingham, ſent thither to recover the Town and Iſland, on the inſtigation of Soubize, who before had loſt it, An. 1628.

5. JARSEY, by Antonine called Cæſarea; ſituate about ten miles from the Coaſt of Normandy, within the view and proſpect of the Church of Conſtance, part of which Dioceſs it was: in length containing 11 miles, 6 in breadth, and in circuit about 33. It is generally very fruitful of Corn, whereof they have not only enough for themſelves, but ſome over-plus to barter at St. Malos, with the Spaniſh Merchants: and of an Air not very much diſpoſed to Diſeaſes, unleſs it be an Ague in the end of Harveſt, which they call Les Settembres. The Country ſtands much upon Incloſures, the hedges of the ground well ſtored with Apples, and thoſe Apples making ſtore of Sider, which is their ordinary drink: watered with many pleaſant Rivulets, and good ſtore of Fiſh-ponds, yielding a Carp for taſte and largeneſs inferiour unto none in Europe, excepting thoſe of Gernſey, which generally are ſomewhat bigger, but not better reliſhed. The people, for the moſt part, more inclinable to Husbandry, than to Trades or Merchandize; and therein differing very little from thoſe of Gernſey, who are more for Merchandize than Tillage. It containeth in it 12 Pariſhes or Villages, having Churches in them, beſides the Manſions of the Seigneurs, and the chief men of the Country. The principal is St. Hillaries, where is the Cohu, or Court of Juſtice for all the Iſland. It is about the bigneſs of an ordinary Market-Town in England: ſituate on the edge of a little Bay, fortified on the one ſide with a ſmall Block-houſe called Mont St. Aubin; but on that ſide which is next the Town, with a very ſtrong Caſtle, called Fort Elizabeth, ſituate upon craggy Rocks, and encompaſſed with two arms of the Sea: ſo named from Queen Elizabeth, who built it to aſſure the Iſland againſt the French, and furniſhed it with thirty pieces of Ordnance, and all other neceſſaries. There is alſo on the Eaſt-ſide, oppoſite to the City of Conſtance, high mounted on ſteep and craggy Rocks, the ſtrong Caſtle of Mount Orgueile; of great antiquity, repaired by King Henry the Fifth; now furniſhed with forty pieces of Cannon, and made the ordinary reſidence of the Governours for the Kings of England.

4. On the North-Weſt of Jarſey, lyeth the Iſland of GERNSEY, called Sarnia by Antoninus; in form Triangular, each ſide of nine miles in length. The Country is of as rich a ſoil as the other of Jarſey, but not ſo well cultivated and manured; the poorer people here, being more given to Manufactures, (eſpecially to the knitting of Stockings and Waſtcoats) and the rich to Merchandize; many of which, are Maſters of good ſtout Barques, with which they traffick into England, and other places. The whole Iſland contains ten Villages with Churches; the principal of which, Saint Peter's Port; a very neat and well built Town, with a ſafe Peer for the benefit of Merchants, and the ſecuring of the Haven, capable of handſom Barques: a Market-Town, beautified with a very fair Church, and honoured with the Plaiderie, or Court of Juſtice. Oppoſite whereto, in a little Iſlet, ſtandeth the Caſtle of Cornet, taking up the whole circuit and dimenſions of it; environed on all ſides with the Sea, having one entrance only, and that very narrow: well fortified with Works of Art, and furniſhed with no leſs than 80 pieces of Ordnance for the defence of the Iſland; but chiefly, to command the adjoyning Harbour, capable of 500 as good Ships as any ſail on the Ocean. A piece of great importance to the Realm of England, and might prove utterly deſtructive of the Trade hereof, if in the hands of any Nation that were ſtrong in ſhipping. For that cauſe made the Ordinary Seat of the Engliſh Governours, though of late times not ſo much honoured with the preſence of thoſe Governours, as a place of that conſequence ought to be. Pertaining unto Gernſey, are two little Iſlets, the one called Jet-how, the Governours Park, wherein are ſome few fallow-Deer, and good plenty of Conies: the other named Arme, ſome three miles in compaſs; a dwelling heretofore of Franciſcan Friers; now not inhabited, but by Pheſants; of which, amongſt the ſhrubs and buſhes, there is very good ſtore.

5. ALDERNEY, by Antonine called Arica, by the French, Aurigni, and Aurney; is ſituate over-againſt the Cape of the Lexobii, in the Dukedom of Normandy which the Mariners at this day call the Hagge: diſtant from which, but ſix miles only. Beſides many dwelling-houſes ſcattered up and down, there is one pretty Town or Village of the ſame name with the Iſland, conſiſting of about an hundred Families; and having, not far off, an Harbour made in the faſhion of a Semi circle, which they call La Crabbie. The whole about 8 miles in compaſs; of very difficult acceſs, by reaſon of the high Rocks and Precipices which encompaſs it on every ſide, and with a ſmall force eaſily defenſible, if thought worth attempting.

6. And ſo is alſo SARK, the adjoyning Iſland, being in compaſs ſix miles; not known by any ſpecial name unto the Ancients, and, to ſay truth, not peopled till the fifth year of Q. Elizabeth: who then granted it in Fee-farm to Helier de Carteret, the Seigneur of St. Oen, in the Iſle of Jarſey, who from thence planted it, and made Eſtates out of it to ſeveral Occupants, ſo that it may contain now about 50 Houſholds. Before which time it ſerved only for a Common, or Beaſts Paſture, to thoſe of Gernſey: ſave that there was an Hermitage, and a little Chappel, for the uſe of ſuch as the ſolitarineſs of the place invited to thoſe retirements.

Theſe two laſt Iſlands are ſubject to the Governour of Gernſey; all four, to the Crown of England: holden in right of the Dukedom of Normandy; to which they anciently belonged; and of which now the ſole remainder is in the power of the Engliſh. Attempted often by the French, (the two firſt I mean) ſince they ſeized on Normandy, but always with repulſe and loſs: the people being very affectionate to the Engliſh Government, under which they enjoy very ample Priviledges, which from the French they could not hope for. Their Language is the Norman French, (though the better ſort of them ſpeak the Engliſh alſo) their Law, the Grand Cuſtomaire of Normandy, attempted and applied to the uſe of this people in their ſuits and buſineſs, by the Bailiffs and Juſticiars of the two chief Iſlands. Their Religion, for the main, is that of the Reformed Churches: the Government in Jarſey, by the Dean thereof, Suffragan heretofore to the Biſhop of Conſtance, now to the Biſhop of Wincheſter; in Gernſey, by a mixt Conſiſtory of Clergie and Lay-Elders, according to the New-Model of Geneva: a Government firſt introduced in both Iſlands, An. 1565. being the eighth year of Queen Elizabeth, and aboliſhed again in Jarſey, An. 1619. being the ſeventeenth of King James.

But to return again to the ſtory of France, thorow which we have now made our progreſs both by Sea and Land: It took this name from the Franks or French, a German people, who in the wane of the Roman Empire poſſeſſed themſelves of it: not mentioned by that name by Cæſar, Strabo, Ptolemy, or any of the more ancient Writers. Nor was it taken up by them, for ought appeareth, till an hundred years after the death of Ptolemy: the firſt expreſs mention of them, occurring in the Reign of Gallienus; then ranſacking the Coaſts of Gaul, and joyning with Poſthumus the Rebel, againſt that Emperour. Afterwards often ſpoken of in the courſe of the Roman ſtories, under the Empire of Claudius, Probus, Diocleſian, and the Sons of Conſtantine: though only in the way of pillage and depredation. Their habitation in thoſe times, was from the meeting of the Rhene with the River Moenus, not far from Frankford, where they confined upon the Almans, to the German Ocean: containing the particular Nations of the Bructeri, Sicambri, Salii, Cheruſci, Friſii, and Tencteri, beſides ſome others of leſs note: and taking up the Countries of Weſtphalen, Bergen, Marck, and ſo much of Cleve as lieth on the Dutch ſide of the Rhene, the Lantgravedom of Heſſia, the Dutchy of Gueldres, the Provinces of Zutphen, Utrecht, Over-yſſel, both Frieſlands, and ſo much of Holland as lieth on the ſame ſide of the Rhene. United in the name of Franks, to ſhew that liberty or freedom from the yoke of ſervitude which the Romans had endeavoured to impoſe upon them; and wherewith all the Nations on the other ſide of the River were ſuppoſed to ſuffer: Governed by Dukes, till the year 420. when Pharamond firſt took upon himſelf the name of King. Meroveus their third King, having diſpoſſeſſed the Sons of Clodion, the Son and Succeſſor of Pharamond, was the firſt that fixed his ſeat in Gaul: when ſeeing the Romans on the one ſide put to the worſt by Theoderick and the Goths; and on the other ſide by the Burgundians, they paſſed over the Rhene, and poſſeſſed themſelves of the Province of Germania Secunda, containing all the Belgick Provinces on the French ſide of that River, together with the Diſtrict of Colen, Gulick, and the reſt of Cleve, then paſſing in the account of Gaul. His Victories and Fortunes were inherited by Chilperic, his Son and Succeſſor, who added Picardy, Champaine, and the Iſle of France, to the former Conqueſt; took Paris, and made it the ſeat of his Kingdom. Afterwards, when they had fully ſeated themſelves here, and thereby opened a free paſſage to the reſt of the Country, they quickly made themſelves Maſters of all that which formerly had been poſſeſſed by the Romans; whom they outed of their laſt hold in Soiſſons, under Clouis their fifth King who alſo took Aquitain, and the parts adjoyning from the Viſi-Goths, or Goths of Spain: for theſe and many ſignal Victories againſt the Almans, deſervedly ſirnamed the Great: but greater in ſubmitting to the Faith of CHRIST, and receiving Baptiſm, than by all his Victories. Childebert and Clotaire, the Sons of this Clouis, vanquiſhed the Burgundians, adding that Kingdom to their own: as Theodebert his Grandchild, King of Mets, or Auſtraſia, did the Country of Provence, reſigned unto him by Amaloſunta, Queen of the Oſtro-Goths, or Goths of Italy, by whom it had been wreſted from the Goths of Spain. In the perſon of Clotaire the Second, the Realm of France improvidently diſmembred into many Kingdoms, amongſt the Children of Clouis the Firſt; that is to ſay, the Kingdoms of France, Soiſſons, Orleans, and Auſtraſia, (of which, Orleans and Auſtraſia were of long continuance) were again united: whoſe Succeſſor, Dagobert the Firſt, was the laſt conſiderable Prince of the Merovignians. After this time, the reputation of the French Kings of this Line, began to diminiſh, ſcarce doing any thing that might ennoble and commend them to ſucceeding Ages; or leaving any Monument behind them, but their empty Names: which I ſhall repreſent in the following Catalogue, according to their ſeveral times: firſt taking notice, that though the Kings of this firſt Race did many times divide the Kingdom, as before was ſaid; yet none of them were called Kings of France, but thoſe that had their Royal Seat in the City of Paris, the reſt being called only Kings of Soiſſons, Mets, or Orleans, according to the name of their principal Cities. And therefore, leaving thoſe to their proper places, we will here only take a ſurvey of thoſe who paſſed in the common eſtimate for the Kings of France.

The Kings of France, of the French or Meravignian Line.

An. Chr.
449	1	Meroveus, Maſter of the Horſe to Clodion the Son of Pharamond; from whom this Line of Kings were called Merovignians. 10.
459	2	Chilperic, the Son of Merove. 26.
485	3	Clouis, the firſt Chriſtian King of the French. 30.
515	4	Childebert, eldeſt Son of Clouis, his other Brethren reigning in their ſeveral places. 45.
360	5	Clotaire, Brother of Childebert, firſt King of the Soiſſons, afterwards ſole King of the French.

565	6	Cherebert, Son of Clotaire.
574	7	Chilperic II. King of Soiſſons, and Brother of Cherebert, whom he ſucceeded in the Kingdom. 14.
588	8	Clotaire II. Son of Chilperic the ſecond. 44.
632	9	Dagobert, Son of Clotaire the ſecond. 14.
645	10	Clouis II. Son of Dagobert. 17.
663	11	Clotaire III. Son of Clotaire the ſecond. 4.
667	12	Chilperic III. Brother of Clotaire the third, and Son of Clouis the ſecond.
680	13	Theodorick, Brother of Chilperick. 1 .
694	14	Clouis III. Son to Theodorick. 5.
698	15	Childebert II. Brother to Clouis the third. 15.
716	16	Dagobert II. Son of Childebert the ſecond. 5.
722	17	Chilperic IV. Son of Childebert the ſecond, and Brother of Dagobert the ſecond, oppoſed by Charles Martel, in behalf of Clotaire the fourth Son of Theodorick, and Brother of Childebert the ſecond. 5.
727	18	Theodorick II. Son of Dagobert the ſecond. 15.
742	19	Chilperic V. Son of Theodorick the ſecond, the laſt of the Merovignian Family; depoſed by Pepin, Son to Charles Martel; the Pope giving approbation to his proceedings.

This Pepin and his Father Martel, were Mayres of the Palace to the former Kings; which Mayres were originally Controllers of the Kings Houſe, and had nothing to do with the affairs of State. But Clotaire the third, to eaſe himſelf and his Succeſſors of a burden ſo weighty, made the Mayres Vicars-general of his Empire. From henceforward the Kings followed their pleaſures, ſhewing themſelves only on May-day; and then ſeated in a Chariot, adorned with Flowers, and drawn by four Oxen. As for the Mayre, he openeth Pacquets, heareth and diſpatcheth Foreign Ambaſſadors, giveth remedy to the Complaints of the Subjects, maketh Laws, and repealeth them. An Authority ſomewhat like that of the Præfecti Prætorio, in the declining times of the Roman Empire; or that of the Sultans under the Mahometan Caliphs, and the Vice-Roys of the old Egyptian Pharoahs. An Office which had been long born by the Anceſtors of this Martel, ever ſince the reign of Clotaire the ſecond: in whoſe time the Palatine or Mayre was one Arnulphus, deſcended lineally from Utilo, the ſecond Son of Theodon the firſt Duke, and Nephew of Aldagerius the laſt King of the Boiarians, or Bavarians. Which Utilo being a Military Prince, and having done good ſervice to Theodorick the firſt King of Auſtraſia, or Metz, againſt the Danes, then grievouſly infeſting the Coaſts of the Lower Germany; was by him made Warden of thoſe Marches, honoured with the Marriage of his Daughter Plithilda, and liberally endowed with fair poſſeſſions in that Tract. The fourth from Utilo was this Arnulph, the firſt Mayre of this Houſe; which Office having long enjoyed, he reſigned it to Anſegiſus his eldeſt Son, (the firſt who drew unto himſelf the managery of the whole Eſtate) and bidding farewel to the affairs of the world, became a Prieſt, and dyed Biſhop of Metz, Anno 641. Afterwards Canonized a Saint. Anſegiſus dying in the year 679, left his Authority and Office to his Nephew Martin, Son of Ferdulphus his younger Brother. But he being ſlain by Ebroinus, one of the Competitors, who a while enjoyed it: Pepin ſirnamed the Fat, Son of Anſegiſus, revenging his Couſins death upon Ebroinus, and cruſhing all the oppoſite Factions which were raiſed againſt him, obtained that honour for himſelf. And having much advanced the affairs of France, by the conqueſt of the Sueves and Friſons, dyed in the year 714. Succeeded to in this great Office, after his deceaſe, (for Grimold his only lawful Son, and Theobaldus the Son of Grimold, whom he had ſucceſſively ſubſtituted in the ſame, dyed not long before him) by Charles his natural Son, begotten on Albeida his Concubine: from his Martial Prowеſs called Martil. Who in his time did to the Kings of France great ſervice, eſpecially in routing that vaſt Army of the Moors and Saracens, in the Battel of Tours before mentioned: thereby not only freeing France from the preſent danger, but adding Languedoc to the Crown, formerly in poſſeſſion of the Goths and Moors: for which he was created Duke or Prince of the French: yet would he not uſurp the Kingdom, or the Title of King, though both at his diſpoſal wholly; it being his ordinary ſaying, that he had rather rule a King, than be one.

To him ſucceeded Caroloman his eldeſt Son, An. 741, who held the Office but a year, and then left it to his Brother Pepin, Who being of leſs moderation than his Father was, made ſuch uſe of his Power, that partly by that means, and partly under colour of an election, confirmed by Pope Zachary the firſt, he took the Kingdom to himſelf; and the unfortunate King Chilperick had his Poll ſhaven, and was thruſt into a Monaſtery. For this inveſtiture, both Pepin and Charles his Son, did many good ſervices for the Popes; deſtroying, on their quarrel, the Kingdom of the Lombards, and giving them moſt of the Lands which formerly belonged unto the Exarchs of Ravenna. And on the other ſide, the Popes to requite theſe courteſies, confirmed the former in this Kingdom, by their Papal Power (which then began to bear ſome ſway in the Chriſtian World:) and gave the laſt (beſides the opportunity of attaining the Weſtern Empire) the Title of Moſt Chriſtian King, continued ever ſince unto his Succeſſors. And, to ſay truth, he well deſerved thoſe honours, had they been far greater, by many Victories obtained againſt the Enemies of the Goſpel; the ſeveral Heathens by his means converted to the Faith of CHRIST, the great abilities he had of Eſtate and Judgment, enabling him to ſupport the Majeſty of the Roman Empire. For he not only was ſole Monarch of the Kingdom of France, not parcelled out as formerly, and in times ſucceeding, into ſeveral petit Kingdoms and Principalities, but had added thereunto, by his own proper virtue, the greateſt part of Italy, the beſt part of Germany, all Belgium, the two Pannonia's, and a great part of Spain.

But this vaſt Empire falling into weak hands, which were not able enough to manage it, decayed in as little time as it was in raiſing: partly by the unnatural ambition of the Sons of King Lewis the Godly, the next Succeſſor of this Charles; who to make themſelves all Kings, firſt depoſed their Father, and then divided his Eſtate amongſt them, into the Kingdoms of Italy, Burgundy, France, Lorrein, and Germany: four of which falling at laſt into the hands of ſtrangers, ceaſed to be French, and paſſed into ſuch Families as proved the greateſt Enemies of the Crown of France: partly by alienating the beſt and goodlieſt Provinces of France it ſelf, never again united till theſe latter days; which made the French Kings leſs conſiderable both at home and abroad; which we have touched upon before: and partly by the weakneſs and unworthineſs of the Kings of his Race, there being no queſtion to be made, but Lewis the Stammering, Charles the Bald, the Groſs, and the Simple, would have found better Attributes, if they had deſerved them. For by this means, the iſſue of this brave Prince grew ſo deſpicable in the eyes of their ſubjects, that firſt Eudes, the Son of Robert Duke of Anjou; and after, Rodolph Duke of Burgundy, the Uncle of Eudes (both of the Race of Witikundus, the laſt Prince of the Saxons, (and conſequently, both aliens to the Houſe of Charles) poſſeſſed themſelves ſeverally of the Kingdom. And though they did not hold it long, being depreſſed and over-born by their oppoſite Factions: yet did they lay a fair ground for Hugh Capet to build his hopes on: Who being Son of Hugh the Great Conſtable of France, and Earl of Paris, the Son of Robert Duke of Anjou, younger Brother of Eudes, and near Kinſman of Rodolph; never left practiſing his party in the Realm of France, till he had got poſſeſſion of the Regal Diadem, wherewith two Princes of this Houſe had been inveſted formerly by the like Elections. But for the Kings of this ſecond Race, founded by two brave Princes, but on the unjuſt grounds of an Uſurpation; they are theſe that follow.

The ſecond Race of the Kings of France, of the Carolovinian or Boiarian Line.

A. Ch.
751	1	Pepin, the Son of Charles Martel, ſucceeded in the Office of Mayre, An. 742; and having got the Regal Crown, vanquiſhed the Lombards, made the Boiarians tributary, and cruſhed the Saxons. 18.
769	2	Charles, ſirnamed the Great, the Son of Pepin ſubdued the Kingdom of the Lombards and Saxons; conquered the Boiarians & Avares, and vanquiſhed the Saracens of Spain: Crowned Emperor of the Weſt, upon Chriſtmaſs day, by Pope Leo the 3. An. 800. 46.
815	3	Lewis the Godly, ſon of Charles King of France, and Emperor, the laſt ſole Monarch of the French, depoſed by his ambitious and unnatural Sons: the Empire of the French, after his deceaſe, being divided into the Kingdoms of Italy Burgundy, Germany, France, & Lorrein; and France it ſelf diſtracted into many Soveraign Eſtates and Principalities. 26.
841	4	Charles II. ſirnamed Calvus, or the Bald, youngeſt Son of Lewis, King of France, and Emperor; vanquiſhed by Charles the Groſs, in the War of Italy. 38.
879	5	Lewis II. ſirnamed Balbus, or the Stammering, Son of Charles the Bald, King of France and Emperor.
881	6	Lewis III. with Caroloman his Brother, the baſe Sons of Lewis the Stammering; Uſurpers of the Throne, in the infancy of Charles the Simple.
886	7	Charles III. ſirnamed Craſſus, or the Groſs, King of Germany, and Emperor; called into France, and elected King, during the Minority of Charles the Simple. 5.
891	8	Odo, or Eudes, Son of Robert Earl of Anjou, of the Race of Witikindus, the laſt King of the Saxons; elected by an oppoſite Faction, outed Charles the Groſs. 9.
900	9	Charles IV. ſirnamed Simplex, or the Simple, the Poſthumus Son of Lewis the Stammerer, reſtored unto the Throne of his Fathers; which after many troubles raiſed againſt him by Robert the ſecond, Earl of Anjou, (whom he ſlew in Battel) he was forced to reſign. 27.
927	10	Rodolph of Burgundy, Son of Richard Duke of Burgundy, the Brother of Eudes, ſucceeded on the reſignation of Charles the Simple. 2.
929	11	Lewis IV. Son of Charles the Simple, ſirnamed Tranſmarine, in regard that during his Fathers troubles he had lived in England, reſtored unto the Regal Throne on the death of Rodolph: oppoſed therein by Hugh Earl of Paris and Anjou, the Nephew of King Eudes by his Brother Robert before mentioned.
958	12	Lotharius, Son of Lewis the 4. diſturbed in his poſſeſſion by Hugh Capet, the eldeſt Son of the ſaid Hugh, on the pretenſion of that Houſe, by which at laſt he got the Kingdom.
977	13	Lewis V. Son of Lotharius, the laſt King of the Houſe of Charles the Great. After whoſe death, (being King only for a year) the Crown was ſeized on by Hugh Capet; Charles Duke of Lorrein, Brother of Lotharius, and Uncle unto Lewis the fifth, being pretermitted.

And now we are come to the preſent Race of the Kings of France, founded in Hugh Capet; ſo called from the greatneſs of his head; Son of Hugh the Great, Earl of Paris and Anjou, and Grandchild of Robert the ſecond, Earl of Anjou: which Robert was the Brother of Eudes, and Couſin-german of Rodolph, Kings of France. Who partly by his own wits, but chiefly by the weakneſs of the Mungrel Iſſue of Charles the Great, having got the Diadem, tranſmitted it unto his poſterity; the Crown deſcending in a direct Line from Father to Son, till the death of Lewis the tenth, ſirnamed Hutin. But here we are to underſtand, that the Realm of France was at that time ſhut up within narrower bounds than it is at the preſent: the large and rich Countries of Champagne, Normandy, Bretagne, Anjou, Poictou, Languedoc, and the great Dukedom of Aquitain; beſides thoſe Provinces which conſtituted and made up the Kingdom of Burgundy, being aliened and diſmembred from it. How they became reduced to the Crown again, will be diſcerned in the enſuing Hiſtory, and Succeſſion of

The third Race of the Kings of France, of the Capetine or Saxon Line.

A. Ch.
988	1	Hugh Capet, of whom ſufficiently before. 9.
997	2	Robert, the Son of Hugh Capet, Duke of Burgundy alſo. 34.
1031	3	Henry, the eldeſt Son of Robert, his younger Brother Robert being ſetled in the Dukedom of Burgundy. 39.
1061	4	Philip, the Son of Henry, who added Berry to the Crown. 49.
1110	5	Lewis VI. Son of Philip, ſirnamed the Groſs. 28.
1138	6	Lewis VII. Son of Lewis the Sixth, an Adventurer in the War of the Holy Land; as alſo was his Son and Succeſſor.
1181	7	Philip II. ſirnamed Auguſtus, by whom Normandy, Aquitain, and Anjou, with their ſeveral Appendixes, were taken from King John of England. 43.
1224	8	Lewis VIII. Son of Philip Auguſtus. 3.
1227	9	Lewis IX. ſirnamed the Saint, renowned for his Wars in Egypt, and the Holy Land. He reſtored Guienne to the Engliſh, and added the Earldoms of Thoulouſe and Maſcon, to the Crown of France. 44.
1271	10	Philip III. Son of Lewis the ninth. 15.

1314 12 Lewis X. ſirnamed Hutin, King of Navarre in right of his Mother, whom he ſucceeded in that Kingdom, An. 1305. after whoſe death the Kingdom of France was to have deſcended to Joan his Daughter. 2.

1315 13 Philip V. called the Long, Brother of Lewis Hutin, partly by threats, promiſes, and other practices, cauſed a Law to paſs to which he gave the name of the Salique Law, for diſabling Women from the ſucceſſion to the Crown; and thereby quite excluded his Brother's Daughter: ſerved in the ſame kind himſelf, by his Brother Charles; who following his example, excluded, on the ſame pretence, his Neeces, Joan, and Margaret, the Daughters of Philip. 5.

1320 14 Charles IV. but in true accompt the fifth of that name, moſt commonly called Charles the Fair, Brother of Philip and Lewis, the two laſt Kings. After whoſe death began the Wars of the Engliſh for the Crown of France; challenged by King Edward the third, as Son and Heir of Iſabel, the Daughter of King Philip the Fair, and Siſter to the three laſt Kings. 7.

1328 15 Philip VI. ſirnamed de Valois, Son of Charles Earl of Valois, the ſecond Son of King Philip the third, and Uncle to the three laſt Kings; ſucceeded under colour of the Salique Law: of which Charles it is ſaid, that he was Son to a King, Brother to a King, Uncle to a King, and Father to a King; yet himſelf was no King. In this King's days was fought the famous Battel of Creſſie, An. 1343, in which the French Army conſiſted of about 70000 Soldiers; the Engliſh of 11800 only: yet the victory fell unto the Engliſh: by whoſe valour fell that day John K. of Bohemia, 11 Princes, 80 Barons, 120 Knights, and 30000 of the common Souldiers. He added unto his Eſtate, the County Palatine of Champagne, the County of Daulphine, and the City and Earldom of Montpelier. 22.

1350 16 John, the Son of Philip de Valois; in whoſe reign was fought the Battel of Poictiers, wherein Edward the Black Prince, (ſo called for his black acts upon the French) with an handful of wearied Soldiers, (but 8000 in all) overcame the French army, conſiſting of 40000; of which they ſlew beſides the Nobles, 10000 of the common Soldiers, and took Priſoners K. John himſelf, and Philip his Son, 70 Earls, 50 Barons & 12000 Gentlemen. 14.

1364 17 Charles V. the Son of John, recovered all thoſe pieces (except only Calice) which the Engliſh had before gotten from his Father and Grandfather. He is called commonly Charles the Wiſe; but Lewis the 11. would by no means allow him that attribute: affirming, that it was but a fooliſh part to give his younger Brother Philip the Dukedom of Burgundy, and withall, the Heir of Flanders to Wife. And ſo it proved in the event.

18 Charles VI. a weak and diſtracted Prince; in whoſe reign, Henry the fifth of England, called in by the Faction of Burgundy, againſt that of Orleans; married the Lady Katherine, daughter of this King; and was thereupon made Regent of France during the Kings life, and Heir apparent of the Kingdom. But he had firſt won the great Battel of Agincourt, Anno 1415, in which the Engliſh having an Army but of 15000 vanquiſhed an Army of the French conſiſting of 52000 men; of which were ſlain 5 Dukes, 8 Earls, 25 Lords, 8000 Knights and Gentlemen of note, and 25000 of the Commons; the Engliſh loſing but one Duke, one Earl, and 600 Souldiers. This unfortunate Prince loſt what his Predeceſſor, Philip the ſecond, had taken from King John of England, and had not been reſtored by King Lewis the ninth.

1423 19 Charles VII. Son of Charles the Sixth, after a long and bloody War, recovered from the Engliſh (then divided by domeſtick diſſention) all their Lands and Signiories in France, except Calice only.

1461 20 Lewis XI. Son of Charles the Seventh, added unto his Crown the Dukedom of Burgundy, the Earldom of Provence, (and therewithall a Title unto Naples and Sicil) and a great part of Picardy. A Prince of ſo great wants, or ſuch ſordid parſimony, that there is found a reckoning in the Chamber of Accompts in Paris, of two ſhillings for new ſleeves to his old Doublet; and three half pence for liquor to greaſe his Boots.

1484 21 Charles VIII. Son of Lewis the 11th, who quickly won, and as ſoon loſt the Kingdom of Naples; which he laid claim to in the right of the Houſe of Anjou. By the marriage of Anne the Heir of Bretagne, he added that Dukedom to his Crown.

1515 23 Francis, Duke of Angoleſm, Grand-ſon of John of Angoleſm, one of the younger Sons of the ſaid Lewis Duke of Orleans, ſucceeded on the death of Lewis the 12th, without Iſſue male. Took Priſoner at the Battel of Pavie, by Charles the fifth, with whom he held perpetual Wars; he being as unwilling to endure a Superiour, as the Emperour was to admit an Equal. 32.

1547 24 Henry II. Son of Francis, recovered Calice from the Engliſh, and drove Charles out of Germany, and took from him Metz, Toul, and Verdun, three Imperial Cities; ever ſince members of this Kingdom.

1559 25 Francis II. Son of Henry the 2d, King of the Scots alſo, in the right of Mary his Wife.

1560 26 Charles IX. Brother of Francis the ſecond, the Author of the Maſſacre at Paris. 14.

1574 27 Henry III. elected King of Poland, in the life of his Brother, whom he ſucceeded at his death. The laſt King of the Houſe of Valois; ſtripped of his life and Kingdom by the Guiſian Faction, called the Holy League. 15.

1589 28 Henry IV. King of Navarre, and Duke of Vendoſme, ſucceeded as the next heir-male to Henry the 3d, in the right of the Houſe of Bourbon, deſcended from Robert Earl of Clermont, a younger Son of Lewis the ninth. He ruined the Holy League, cleared France of the Spaniards, into which they had been called by that potent and rebellious Faction; and laid La Breſs unto the Crown, together with the Eſtates of Bearn, and Baſe Navarre: and after a ten years time of Peace, was villanouſly murdered by Ravillac, in the Streets of Paris. 21.

1610 29 Lewis XIII. Son of Henry the Fourth; the moſt abſolute King of France, ſince the death of Charles the Great. For to the reduction of the ſcattered and diſmembred Provinces, (the work of his many Predeceſſors) he added the reduction of all the Forts and Garriſons held by the Hugonots in that Kingdom, (three hundred at the leaſt in number) ſeized on the Dukedom of Bar, and ſurpriſed that of Lorrein; both which he held until his death. 32.

1642 30 Lewis XIV. Son of Lewis the 13th, and of the Lady Anne, eldeſt daughter of Philip the third of Spain; ſucceeded at the age of four years, under the Government of his Mother: the 30th King of the Line of Capet, the 43d from Charles the Great, and the 64th King of France, (or rather of the French) now living.

As for the Government of theſe Kings, it is meerly Regal; or, to give it the true name, Deſpotical; ſuch as that of a Maſter over his Servants: the King's Will going for a Law; and his Edicts as valid as a Sentence of the Court of Parliament. Quod principi placuerit, Legis habet vigorem, was a Prerogative belonging to the Roman Emperours, as Juſtinian tells us in his Inſtitutes: and the French Kings deſcending from Charles the Great, claim it as their own. The Kings Edicts always ending with theſe binding words, Car tel eſt noſtre plaiſir, For ſuch is Our pleaſure. And though he ſometimes ſends his Edicts to be verified, or approved, in the Parliament of Paris; and his Grants and Patents to be ratified in the Chamber of Accompts, there holden: yet this is nothing but a meer formality, and point of circumſtance, thoſe Courts not daring to refuſe what the King propoſeth. It is Car tel eſt noſtre Plaiſir, which there goeth for Law. And by this intimation of his Royal Pleaſure, doth he require ſuch Taxes, as the neceſſity of his affairs, the greedineſs of his Officers, or the importunity of Suiters, do ſuggeſt unto him: the Patrimony of the Crown being ſo exhauſted by the riot and improvidence of former Princes, that the King hath no other way to maintain his State, defray his Garriſons, reward ſuch as deſerve well of him, and ſupport thoſe that depend upon him, but only by laying what he pleaſeth on the backs of his Subjects; againſt which there is no diſpute by the Common People, though many times the Great Princes have demurred upon it. And therefore to make them alſo inſtrumental to the publick Slavery, the Kings are willing to admit them to ſome part of their ſpoil, to give them ſome exemption from thoſe common burdens; and to connive at the oppreſſing of their Tenants, againſt all good conſcience: that being ſo priviledged themſelves, they may not interrupt the King in his Regal Courſes.

As for the French Parliaments, or Aſſembly of the three Eſtates, which heretofore were of great credit and renown, and looked on as the principal Bulwark of the Publick Liberty, being firſt diſcontinued by reaſon of the ſharp & continual Wars which the Engliſh made in this Kingdom for the ſpace of 100 years and upwards, they afterward became much weakned by the Policy of K. Lewis the 11. and the Kings ſucceeding; and finally, by K. Lewis the 13. were laid by for ever. For, finding them to retain ſomething ſtill of their ancient ſtomach, and apt enough to claſh with that abſolute Soveraignty which his Predeceſſors had attained to, he reſolved to make no more uſe of them for the times to come; inſtead whereof, he ordained another kind of meeting, which he called La Aſſemble des Nattables; that is to ſay, the Aſſembly of ſome principal men, compoſed of ſome ſelected perſons out of every Order or Eſtate, (of his own nomination) whereunto ſhould be added ſome Counſellor out of every one of the eight Courts of Parliament; which, being fewer in number, would not breed ſuch a confuſion as the others did, and he withal more pliant and conformable to the Kings deſires. Now the eight Courts of Parliament before mentioned, being but as ſo many Courts of Judicature, (like to ours in Weſtminſter) are theſe that follow; that is to ſay, The Parliament 1. of Paris, comprehending the Countries of France ſpecial, Champagne, Picardy, the Provinces and Eſtates of Anjou, La Beauſſe, Berry, Poictou, the Provinces which make up the Dukedom of Bourbon, with the County of Lionois. 2. Of Rouen, for the Dukedom of Normandy. 3. Of Renes for the Dukedom of Bretagne. 4. Of Bourdeaux, for the whole Dukedom of Aquitain, (except only Bearn) with the Countries of Limouſin, and Perigort. 5. Of Tholouſe, for the Earldom of Languedoc, and Quercu. 6. Of Aix, for the Earldom of Provence. 7. Of Gremble, for the Country of Daulphin. And 8. of Biajou, for the Dukedom of Burgundy, and the ſmall Country of La Breſs; to which is added of late times by King Lewis the 13th, the little Parliament of Pau, for the Country of Bearn. Beſides which Parliaments, there are certain other Courts in ſome principal Cities, called Courts Preſidial, reſembling thoſe with us at York, and the Marches of Wales, whilſt they continued in that Power and Juriſdiction which at firſt they had. And for the better ordering of the whole Eſtate, (with reference eſpecially to matters military) it is divided into 12 ſeveral and diſtinct Governments; that is to ſay, 1. Of the Iſle of France, 2. Burgundy, 3. Normandy, 4. Guien, 5. Bretagne, 6. Champagne, 7. Picardy, 8. Languedoc, 9. Provence, 10. Daulphine, 11. Lionois, and 12. Orleanois for in this order they were ranked by the laſt King: over every one of which is placed a Governour, with ſuch authority as the Lords Lieutenants had in England in their ſeveral Counties; all of them carrying matters with a very high hand on the common people, and ſometimes ſtanding on terms alſo with the Kings themſelves, but inſtrumental notwithſtanding to the common ſervitude, which hath been laid upon this Nation generally, as before is ſaid.

The Power of the French King over his Subjects, being ſo tranſcendent, it cannot be, but that his Forces muſt be very great, and would be greater than they are, but that they dare not truſt the common people with the uſe of Arms, for fear they ſhould refuſe to pay the accuſtomed Taxes, or forſake their Trades, or turn their Farms back upon their Landlords. But for an Eſſay of what a French King is able to do in this kind, it is ſaid, that Charles the 9th, in Garriſons and ſeveral Armies in the field, had 15000 Horſe, and 100000 Foot, of his own Nation; beſides 50000 Horſe, and Foot of Swiſſes, Germans, and others. Nor was this more than what was done by Lewis the 13, within few years paſt, who had at once five Royal Armies in the field, in Italy, Spain, Germany, and the Belgick Provinces, and kept no fewer than 120000 fighting men in pay and action, for ſome years together. Nor did this laſt King keep up the Military Power of France for Land-ſervice only, at ſo high a pitch, but he alſo brought the Naval Power thereof into eſtimation. For whereas the French Kings before his time, were very weak and inconſiderable on the Seas, and had ſcarce any men of War, but what they either hired or borrowed from more Seafaring Nations: this King became ſo ſtrong in ſhipping in a little ſpace, (I doubt ſome neighbouring Princes in the mean time looked not well about them) that he was able to rigg and arm 10000 ſail of good Ships, and upwards, fit for any ſervice. But to return again to the power at Land, in which the force of theſe Kings doth conſiſt eſpecially; it is conceived by ſome, and affirmed by others, that he is able to bring into the field for a ſudden ſervice, no leſs than 60 Companies of Men of Arms, 20 Cornets of Light-Horſe, and 5 Companies of Harquebuſiers on Horſeback, which amount to 10000 in the total; together with 20 Enſigns of French Foot, and 40 of Swiſſes, and yet leave his Garriſons well manned, and his Forts and Frontiers well and ſufficiently defended.

What the Revenues are in a State ſo ſubject to the will and pleaſure of the King, is hard to ſay; being alſo more or leſs, as the times and their occaſions vary: according unto which, the Revenues of this Crown have much altered. Lewis the 11. gathered one million and a half of Crowns; Francis the firſt brought them to 3 millions; his ſucceſſor, Henry the ſecond, to ſix; Charles the ninth, to ſeven; Henry the third, to ten; afterwards they were inhanced to fifteen. And in the time of Henry the fourth, the Treaſurer of the Duke of Mayenne did not ſhame to ſay, That his Maſter had more improved the Revenue of France, than any King had done before him, advancing it from two to five millions ſterling. A fair Intrado, but far ſhort of thoſe infinite ſums which are extorted from the people; whereof a tenth part comes not clearly to the Kings Exchequer. But what need more be ſaid, than that of Lewis the 11. who uſed to ſay, That France was a Meadow which he mowed every year, and as often as he liſted: and indeed their Impoſitions cannot but be great, ſince there are no leſs than 30000 Under Officers employed to gather them. Hence I believe ſprung that wiſh of Maximilian the Emperor, which was that he (if it were poſſible) might be a God; and, that having two Sons, the eldeſt might be a God after him; and the ſecond, King of France. And this was alſo the cauſe, that in the Wars between Charles the fifth, and Francis the firſt, when the Emperors Herald had bid defiance to the King, from Charles Emperor of Germany King of Caſtile, Leon, Aragon, and Naples, Arch-Duke of Auſtria, &c. with the reſt of his Titles; the King commanded the Herald to return the Challenge from Francis King of France; commanding him to repeat France as many times as the other had petty Earldoms in his title. And on the other ſide of no leſs bravery and fanſie was the ſaying of the Duke of Alva, who being diſſwaded by one of his Commanders, from the War with the Netherlands, in regard of the great ſupport they were like to have from the Queen of England, the King of Denmark, the Dukes of Saxony and Brunſwick, the Earls of Naſſaw, &c. Tuſh man! (ſaid he) there will be more Kings and Princes on our ſide, than theirs; that is to ſay, the Emperor of Mexico and Peru; the Kings of Naples, Sicily, and Sardinia, the Dukes of Burgundy and Milain, the Earls of Habſpurg, Charolois, &c. But letting paſs theſe flaſhes and conceits of wit; certain it is, (to ſay the truth) conſidering the compactedneſs thereof within it ſelf, the admirable fertility of the ſoil, the incredible multitudes of people, and the conveniency of ſituation betwixt Spain, Italy, and Germany; the name of France might ballance all the other's Titles.

The chief Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom, were firſt of the Gennet, founded by Charles Martel, Mayre of the French Palace: and ſo called either from Jane his Wife, as Haillan would have it, or from the Gennets of Spain, over whom he triumphed at the Battel of Tours, as Bellay writeth: It ended in the days of S. Lewis. The Knights of the Order wore a Ring, wherein was engraven the form of a Gennet.

2. Of the Pairrie, or twelve Peers, ſo called, quaſi pares inter ſe; ſaid to be inſtituted by Charles the Great, in his Wars againſt the Saracens. Six of theſe were of the Clergie. 1. The Arch-biſhop and Duke of Rhemes, 2. the Biſhop and Duke of Laon, 3. the Biſhop and Duke of Langres, 4. the Biſhop and Earl of Beuvois, 5. the Biſhop and Earl of Noyon, and 6. the Biſhop and Earl of Chalons. And ſix others of the Temporality: 1. the Duke of Burgundy, 2. Duke of Normandy, 3. Duke of Guienne, 4. Earl of Tholouſe, 5. Earl of Champagne, 6. Earl of Flanders. Theſe are they ſo much memorized in the Legends of the old French Writers, but falſly, and on no ground: it being impoſſible that thoſe ſhould be of the foundation of Charles the Great, in whoſe time there were none of thoſe Dukes and Earls, except the Earl of Tholouſe only. Therefore with better reaſon it may be thus concluded on, that the Twelve Peers were inſtituted by Charles the Great, though that honour not by him appropriated unto any particular Eſtates and Titles; but left at large to be diſpoſed of according to the perſonal merit of the beſt deſervers: it being moſt ſure, that neither Rowland, nor Oliver, nor Duke Naimes, nor Ogier the Dane, had any of the Titles above-mentioned. But for the fixing of this Dignity in the Dukedoms and Earldoms before named, it is ſaid, by ſome, to have been done by Hugh Capet; others refer it to Lewis the 7th. in whoſe times all thoſe Dukes and Earls were in Rerum Natura. But by whomſoever firſt ordained, the Temporal Pairries are extinct; and others, of no definite number, created by the Kings, as they ſee occaſion, to gratifie a well deſerver. Only at Coronations, and ſuch publick Triumphs, the cuſtom is, to chuſe ſome principal perſons out of the Nobility, to repreſent thoſe Temporal Peers; as at the Coronation of Lewis the 13th, the places of the Temporal Peers were ſupplied by the Princes of Conde and Conty, the Earl of Soiſſons, the Dukes of Nevers, Elbeuf, and Eſpernon: the Eccleſiaſtical Peers remaining as at firſt they were. So that though Charles the Great might deviſe this Order, and inſtitute the firſt Twelve Peers, as is commonly ſaid; yet was not that high honour fixed in any of thoſe Temporal Princes, till the times ſucceeding; but given to men of ſeveral Houſes, according to the Kings pleaſure, and their well deſervings.

3. Of the Star, begun by John King of France, Anno 1352. They wore about their necks a Collar of Gold, at the which hanged a Star: the word, Monſtrant Regibus aſtra viam. This Order was diſgraced by his Son Charles, in communicating it to his Guard: and ſo it ended.

4. Of St. Michael, inſtituted by King Lewis the eleventh, An. 1409. It conſiſted firſt of 36 Knights; which afterwards were augmented to 300. The Habit of the Order was a long Cloak of white Damask, down to the ground, with a border interwoven with Cockle-ſhells of Gold, interlaced and furred with Ermines, with an Hood of crimſon Velvet, and a long Tippet. About their necks they wore a Collar woven with Cockle-ſhells: the word, Immenſi tremor Oceani. It took the name from the Picture of St. Michael conquering the Devil, which was annexed to the Collar. Some think, that the invocation of St. Michael, was in alluſion to the tenth of Daniel. Others ſay, he took St. Michael, in regard of an apparition of that Saint, to his Father Charles the Seventh, on Orleans Bridge, in his Wars againſt the Engliſh. The Seat thereof was firſt at St. Michael's Mount, in Normandy, a place which had held longeſt for the French Kings, againſt the Engliſh: but it was afterwards removed to Bois de Vincennes, not far from Paris. St. Michael's day, the time of the Solemnity; and Mount St. Michael, the name of the Herald which did attend upon the Order; which in moſt things was precedented by that of the Garter.

5. Of the Holy Ghoſt; ordained by Henry the third, An. 1579, to rectifie the abuſes which had crept into that of St. Michael, having been of late times given to unworthy perſons: to reduce which to its firſt eſteem, he ordered that the Collar of St. Michael ſhould be given to none who had not firſt been dignified with this of the Holy Ghoſt; into which none to be admitted, but ſuch as can prove their Nobility by three deſcents. Their Oath is, to maintain the Romiſh Catholick Religion, and perſecute all Opponents to it. Their Robe, a black Velvet Mantle, powdered with Lillies and Flames of Gold: the Collar of Flower de Lyces, and Flames of Gold, with a Croſs and a Dove appendant to it. And hereunto he gave the name of the Holy Ghoſt, becauſe he was on Whitſunday, choſen King of Poland.

I omit the other petit Orders, as thoſe of the Cock and Dog, by them of Montmorency; of the Porcupine, by them of Orleans, and of the Thiſtle, by them of Bourbon.

The Arms of the French Kings in the days of Pharamond, and his three firſt Succeſſors, were Gules, three Crowns, Or. Clouis the Great, altered them to Azure, Seme of Flower de Lyces, Or; and Charles the ſixth to Azure, three Flower de Lyces, Or. In which laſt changes, they were followed by the Kings of England, varying the Coat of France, which they enquartered with their own, as the French Kings did; and by the Princes of the blood, who bare the Arms of France, with ſome difference only, for the diſtinction of their Houſes.

And ſo much for FRANCE.

The Pyrenean Hills.

BEtwixt France and Spain, are the Mountains called Pyrenæi, the reaſon of which name is very differently reported. Some fetch the original thereof from Pyrene, a Nymph, the Daughter of one Bebrix; ſaid by old Fablers to have been here raviſhed by Hercules: others conceive they were ſo called, becauſe much ſtriken with Lightnings, thoſe Cæleſtial Flames. But being the name doth moſt undoubtedly proceed from a Greek word which ſignifieth Fire. The more probable opinion is, that they took this name from being fired once by Shepherds, (theſe Hills being then extreamly overgrown with Woods:) the Flame whereof raged ſo extreamly, that the Mines of Gold and Silver being melted by the heat thereof, ran ſtreaming down the Mountains many days together, the fame of which invited many Foreign Nations to invade the Country. Which accident they place 880 years before the birth of our Saviour. Hereunto Diodorus Siculus, an old Greek Writer, adds no ſmall authority; who ſpeaking of this Conflagration, (as Ariſtotle and Strabo alſo do) addeth withall, τὰ μὲν ὄρη διὰ τὸ συμβεβηκὸς κληθῆναι Πυρηναῖα, ἀπὸ τοῦ πυρὸς συχνὰς ἡμέρας συνεχῶς ἐπιπλέγοντος: that is to ſay, theſe Mountains had the name of Pyrenees, from the fire, which many days together ſo extreamly raged. And this Tradition backed by ſo good authority, I ſhould rather credit, than fetch the derivation (as Bochartus doth) from Purani, a Phœnician word, ſignifying dark or ſhady: though true it is, that theſe Mountains anciently were very much over-grown with woods, as before was noted.

But whatſoever was the reaſon why they had this name, certain it is, that they have been of long time the natural bound betwixt the great and puiſſant Monarchs of France and Spain; terminating (as it were) their deſires and purpoſes againſt each other, as well as their Dominions: if any thing could put a bound to the deſigns of ambitious Princes. Yet not more ſeparated by theſe Mountains, than by thoſe jealouſies and fears which they have long ſince harboured of one another; each of them manifeſtly affecting the Supreme Command. So that we may affirm of them, as the Hiſtorian doth of others on the like occaſion, Aut montibus, aut mutuò metu ſeparantur. The Mountains alſo make that Iſthmus, or neck of Land, which conjoins Spain to the reſt of Europe: the Cantabrian Ocean fiercely beating on the North-weſt, the Mediterranean Sea more gently waſhing the South-eaſt thereof. Their beginning at the Promontory now called Oiarcho, (the Ocaſo of Ptolomy) not far from the City of Baionne in France, bordering on the Sea Cantabrick: from thence continued South-eaſtwards, betwixt both Kingdoms, to Cabo de Creux, (by the Ancients called Templum Veneris) on the Mediterranean, not far from the City of Rhoda, now Roſas, one of the Port-Towns of Catalonia.

The whole length, not reckoning in the windings and turnings, affirmed to be 80 Spaniſh Leagues, at 3 miles to a League. The higheſt part thereof, by the Spaniards called Canigo, and by the Latins named Canus: from which (as it is ſaid by ſome) there is a proſpect in a clear day, into both the Seas. But whether this be true or not, (for I dare not build any belief upon it) it is no doubt the higheſt part of all theſe Mountains; and took this name from the whiteneſs and hoarineſs thereof, as having on its top or ſummit, a Cap of Snow for moſt part of the year. In which reſpect, as the Alpes took their name, ab Albo; that, in the Sabine Dialect, being termed Alpum, which by the Latins was called Album, which before we noted: ſo did Mount Lebanon, in Syria, take its name from Leban, which in the Phœnician Language ſignifieth White; and Lebanah, Whiteneſs. Such people as inhabit in this Mountainous tract, have been, and ſhall be mentioned in their proper places. I only add, and ſo go forwards towards Spain, that the barbarous people of theſe Mountains compelled Sertorius, in his haſty paſſage into Spain, when he fled from the power of Sylla's Faction, to pay them Tribute for his paſs: at which when ſome of his Souldiers murmured, as thinking it diſhonourable to a Proconſul of Rome, to pay tribute to the barbarous Nations: the prudent General replyed, that he bought only Time; a Commodity which they that deal in haughty Enterpriſes, muſt needs take up at any rate.

OF

OF SPAIN.

HAving thus croſſed the Pyrenees, we are come to Spain, the moſt Weſtern part of all the Continent of Europe; environed on all ſides with the Sea, except towards France; from which ſeparated by the ſaid Mountains: but more particularly, bounded upon the North with the Cantabrian, on the Weſt with the Atlantick Ocean, on the South with the Straits of Gibralter, on the Eaſt with the Mediterranean, and on the North-eaſt with thoſe of Pyrenees. The Figure of it compared, by Strabo, to an Ox's Hide ſpread upon the ground; the neck whereof being that Iſthmus which unites it to France.

This Country hath in divers Ages been as diverſly named. 1. Heſperia, either from Heſperus, a ſuppoſed King hereof; or from Heſperus the Evening-Star, under which it was ſuppoſed to be ſituate, as being the furtheſt Country Weſtward: to difference it from Italy, which many of the Greek Authors termed Heſperia alſo, named Heſperia minor. 2. It was called Iberia, either from the famous River Iberus; or from the Iberi, inhabiting that Country of Aſia which we now call Georgia: as Celtiberia, from the mixture of thoſe Aſian Iberi, and the Celts of Gaul; by which name it occurreth often in Appian of Alexandria, and ſometimes in Strabo. 3. Hiſpania, as the ſoundeſt judgments agree, from Panus the Iberian Captain. For the Græcians call it Σπανία, Spania, as may be proved in many places, that eſpecially of the 15 to the Romans, verſ. 28. Ἀπελεύσομαι δὶ ὑμῶν εἰς τὴν Σπανίαν, I will come by you into Spain. No doubt but from the Græcians, the old Romans borrowed the name of Spania, which they often uſed: to which the Spaniards, according to their cuſtom adding E, (as in Eſcola, Eſcuda, &c.) made it Eſpania, and now Hiſpania. In like manner as the famous City of Sevil, called at firſt, Spalis, (according hereunto, the Biſhop hereof, in the Council of Eliberis, ſubſcribed himſelf by the name of Sabinus Spalenſis) in tract of time was called Hiſpalis. And yet I muſt not pretermit the Fancy of Bochartus, who fetching the names of moſt places from the Punick Language, will have it to be called Spanija, or Sphanija, by the Carthaginians, or Phœnicians, at their firſt diſcovery, from Saphan, which in the Punick Tongue ſignifies a Conie, with which that Country much abounded in the former times, the Romans being hence furniſhed with them. Let the Reader like it as he liſt.

The greateſt length hereof, is reckoned at 800 miles; the breadth, where it is broadeſt at 500; the whole circumference, 2480 Italian miles. But Mariana meaſuring the compaſs of it by the bendings of the Pyrenees, and the creeks and windings of the Sea, makes the full circuit of it to be 2816 miles of Italian meaſure. And though, according to the ſmalleſt computation, it be above 460 miles in compaſs, more than France; yet is it far ſhort thereof in numbers of people: France being thought to contain in it 15 millions of living ſouls; whereas Spain is reckoned to contain but 8 millions only, which is little more than half the number of the French. The reaſons of which diſproportions, are, 1. The continual Wars which they had for 900 years together againſt the Moors, in their own Country, by which they were conſumed in the very growth. 2. The Expulſion of ſo many thouſand Families of Jews and Moors, 124000 Families of the one, in the time of Ferdinand the Catholick; and 110000 of the other, by King Philip the third: which was as the lopping off of a main Limb from the Body Politick, though without any loſs to the Eccleſiaſtical. 3. The unneceſſary Wars maintained againſt all the reſt of Chriſtendom, ever ſince the time of Charles the fifth, out of meer ambition, before they were well cured of their former wounds. 4. The infinite Plantations made by them in the Eaſt and Weſtern Indies, and all along the Sea-coaſts of Africa; and thoſe great Garriſons maintained in Milain, Naples, Sicil, the Low-Countries, and their Towns in Africk, conſiſting, for the moſt part, of natural Spaniards. 5. The barrenneſs of the Country in many places, unable to ſuſtain great multitudes; but made more barren than it would be, for want of men to labour and manure the Land. And 6. and laſt of all; the Impotency of both Sexes for Generation; the men being generally more hot upon their luſts, than able for Generation; and the Women, for the moſt part, beginning to be Mothers ſo extreamly young, that Nature is decayed and ſpent in them, before they have run half their courſe. And 'tis a moſt true and undoubted Maxime, That the greatneſs of Cities, and populouſneſs of Kingdoms and Commonwealths, do much depend on the generative virtue of the men, and the nutritive virtue of the Soil in which they live.

It is ſituate in the more Southernly part of the Northern temperate Zone, and almoſt in the midſt of the fourth and ſixth Climates: the longeſt day being fifteen hours and a quarter in length, in the moſt Northern parts hereof; but in the extream South, near to Gibraltar, not above fourteen. Which ſituation of this Country, rendreth the Air here very clear and calm, ſeldom obſcured with Miſts and Vapours; and not ſo much ſubject to diſeaſes, as more Northern Regions.

They are a mixt People, deſcending from the Goths, Moors, Jews, and the ancient Spaniards. From the Jews they borrow Superſtition; from the Moors, Melancholy; Pride from the Goths; and from the old Spaniards, the deſire of Liberty. The Jews firſt planted here by the Emperour Adrian; who having totally baniſhed them their native Country, ſent them hither to dwell: the total number of which plantation is ſaid to amount to 500000 men, women, and children; and yet their numbers much increaſed in the time of Ulidor Ulet, the great Caliph of the Sarazens; who having made a Conqueſt of Spain ſent hither 50000 Families of Moors and Jews, the better to aſſure it to him. And ſo we have the coming in of the Moors and Jews; the Conqueſt of it by the Goths, and their ſetling here, ſhall be ſhewn hereafter: which ſeveral Nations, by long time, and intermarriages together, were at laſt incorporated into one. For their condition, it is ſaid that they are highly conceited of themſelves, great Braggards, and extreamly proud, even in the loweſt ebb of Fortune. Which laſt appeareth by the tale of a poor Cobler on his death-bed; who (as Barklaie in his Icon Animorum, reporteth the ſtory) commanded his eldeſt Son, coming to him for his laſt bleſſing, to endeavour to retain the majeſty worthy ſo great a Family; Memineris (ſaid he) in majeſtatem aſſurgere familia tua dignam. The ſame Author relateth another ſtory to the like purpoſe. A Woman of this Country attended on by three of her Brats, went a begging from door to door. Some French Merchants travelling that way, and pitying her caſe, offered her to take into their ſervice the bigger of her Boys: but ſhe proud, though poor, ſcorning, as ſhe ſaid, that any of her lineage ſhould endure a Prentiſhip, returned this anſwer: Qui aut tu, aut ego, ſciamus, in quæ fata ſit genitus? For ought ſhe or any knew, her Son (ſimply as he ſtood there) might live to be King of Spain. Not much unlike to theſe, is that tale of a Spaniſh Cavaliero; who being for ſome faults by him committed, whipped through the principal ſtreets of Paris, and keeping a ſober pace, was adviſed by a Friend, to make more haſte, that he might the ſooner be out of his pain. But he, half in choler, replyed, That he would not loſe the leaſt ſtep of his pace, for all the whipping in Paris. For indeed, their gate is Gennet-wiſe, very ſtately and majeſtical.

Of temperature they are hot and dry, which makes them very much given to women, and yet not very able for Generation. And this ſtrong inclination unto women which they find in themſelves, makes them ſo jealous of their Wives, that they permit them not to walk abroad, but when they go to Church; and then too veiled and ſo hooded, one can hardly ſee them, and not that neither only, but attended with their Damoſels, and ſome truſty ſhe-friend, that is to give an account of them at their coming back. Mendoza, an Ambaſſador from Spain in Queen Elizabeths time, uſed to find fault with the promiſcuous ſitting of men and women in the Church, uſed here in England, accounting it to be a very great incentive unto laſciviouſneſs. To whom Doctor Dale, one of the Maſters of the Requeſts, is ſaid to have replied, That indeed in Spain, where the people even in the time of Divine Service, could not abſtain from impure thoughts, and unclean geſtures, that mingled kind of ſitting was not ſo allowable: but the Engliſh were of another temper, and did not find any inconvenience in it. And it is poſſible, this humour of jealouſie might be derived on them from the Moors, who in the ſtrict guarding of their women, were the Spaniards Tutors; it being death in Barbary, to this very day, for any man to ſee one of the Xeriffes Concubines; and for them too, if when they ſee a man, though but through a Caſement, they do not preſently cry out. A frenzie which much rageth in moſt Southern people, but not predominant in the Northern; who do not only ſuffer their Wives to ſit with other men in the Church, but even in the open and common Bathes alſo, two things which a true Spaniard would rather dye an hundred deaths, than give conſent to. But though the Women are not permitted to ſtir abroad, the men take liberty enough, and are as good ſmell-Feaſts as in any Country: it being obſerved of them by a very good Writer, that howſoever in their own houſes they are temperate and content with little, yet when they go unto a Feaſt, they are as gluttonous, dainty, and deſirous to eat good chear, as any people whatſoever.

But not to conceal their virtues, and make our ſelves merry at their follies, (wherein all other Nations have a ſhare with them) they are queſtionleſs a people very grave in their carriages, in offices of piety very devout, and to their King very obedient, whoſe Greatneſs they affect more cordially, than any Subjects in the World: exact in doing Juſtice upon all Offenders, which commonly they adminiſter without partiality: indulgent unto one another, and of their duties to their betters not unmindful. But that which deſerveth the greateſt commendation in them is an unwearied patience in ſuffering adverſities, accompanied with a reſolution to overcome them. A noble quality, of the which in their Indian Diſcoveries they ſhewed excellent proofs, and received as glorious rewards: withall, of very daring ſpirits, great undertakers for the moſt part, and to ſay truth, the greateſt enlargers of their Dominions, (according to the advantage of their ſituation) of any Nation under Heaven. For having firſt either exterminated or ſubdued the Moors, which for many hundreds of years were poſſeſſed of this Continent, the Aragonians lying on the Mediterranean, added to their Eſtate the Iſlands of Majorca, and Minorca; the Kingdoms of Sicilie, and Sardinia, and the Realm of Naples, the Caſtilians lying on both ſides of the Straights, firſt took in ſome of the oppoſite Towns on the Coaſt of Africk; next, conquered the Canaries, or Fortunate Iſlands; and finally diſcovered and ſubdued the moſt part of America: the Portugals lying with a long Sea-coaſt on the Weſtern Ocean, poſſeſſed themſelves of the Azores, moſt of the Sea-Towns of Morocco, and the Land of Guinnia; and doubling the Cape of good Hope, made themſelves Maſters of many Ports and Iſlands of great conſequence in the Eaſt Indies; adding thereto, in fine, the large Country of Brazill, in that part of America which lay fitteſt for them; and the Navarrois (to conclude, though locked up by their greater neighbours from all Trade at Sea, and conſequently enlarging their Dominions that way) adding to their Eſtates the moſt part of Gaſcoigne, the Palatinate of Champagne, the Earldom of Eureux, with many fair and large poſſeſſions in the Realm of France thereupon depending.

In reference to the French, it is ſaid, that the French are wiſer than they ſeem; and the Spaniards ſeem wiſer than they are: wherein they agree with many particular men of other Nations, who according to the Philoſopher, Sapientes potius cupiunt videri & non eſſe, quam eſſe & non videri.

In matters of War, the Spaniards are obſerved to be generally too heavy, ſlow, and dull; the French too heady and precipitate; the one loſing as many fair occaſions by delays, as the other overthroweth by too much haſte: but between them both, they make one good Souldier; who according to the preſent opportunities, is to make uſe of the ſpur of Courage, or the bit of Reſpite. But of the ſtrange and many differences in temper, humour, and affections, between the Spaniards and the French, we have ſpoke more at large already when we were in France.

The Women are ſober, loving their Husbands or Friends; wonderful delicate, curious in painting or perfuming: and though they have Wine in abundance, yet are they not permitted to drink it; verifying therein the old Engliſh Proverb, that none are worſe ſhod than the Shoo-makers Wife. Herein in worſe condition than the Women of France; who though they are reſtrained from Wine before their marriage; yet, after that, they take what liberty they liſt, and are no more reſtrained from it, than the other Sex. But this is the leaſt liberty which the French Women have above the Spaniſh: theſe being ſo watched and over-looked, that it is hardly poſſible for them to hold ſpeech with any man, in buſineſs of moſt importance, and much leſs in matters of civilities only, thoſe having liberty to be courted at all times and places, even in the preſence of their Husbands, without any diſtruſt or interruption. Heretofore they were wondrous ſtrong; and, beyond belief, patient of the throws of Child bed: Strabo relating how one of theſe women being hired for Harveſt-work, and finding her travel come upon her, becauſe ſhe would not loſe her days wages, withdrew her ſelf into a Buſh; where, being eaſed of her burden, ſhe returned from one Labour to another. And many of them at this day uſe not to keep their Chambers above three days after their delivery, and then apply themſelves to their Houſhold-buſineſs, without either danger or delay.

The language is not the ſame in all places, though all called the Spaniſh. In Portugal, Catalogne, and ſome parts of Valentia, it hath a great mixture of the French; who in theſe parts have had much trade and negotiation. In Granada, and ſome parts of Andaluzia, it partakes much of the Moor; and in the Mountains of Alpuxarras, the Arabick, or Mooriſh language ſtill remains in uſe. The Countries bordering on the Pyrenees, and Cantabrian Ocean, (but Biſcay ſpecially) have much in them of the Language of the ancient Spaniards, before made ſubject to the Romans. That which is common to them all, is the vulgar Spaniſh or Caſtilian, and hath much affinity with the Latin; Breerwood in his Enquiries reporting, that he hath ſeen a Letter, every word whereof was both good Latin and good Spaniſh. Merula ſhews a Copy of the like, pag. 300. By reaſon of which conſonancy with the Latin, the Spaniards call their Language, Romance. The other ingredients of this Tongue, are generally the Gothiſh, Arabick, and old Spaniſh, and in ſome places the French alſo, as before is ſaid; thoſe people having made great conqueſts, and having had great negotiations in this Country. It is ſaid to be a very lofty ſwelling ſpeech, as if it were faſhioned to command.

And as their Language, ſo their Laws do owe a great part of themſelves to the Laws of Rome: the Civil or Imperial Laws being generally uſed amongſt them, but intermixt with many cuſtoms of the Goths, and the Edicts or Conſtitutions of their ſeveral Kings. Thoſe of the Goths being firſt committed unto writing, and reduced to order by Euricus the firſt King of the Goths in Spain: thoſe of Caſtile digeſted by the command of Ferdinand the third, Anno 1296, into ſeven Books, called the Partidas; not finiſhed till the time of his Son Alfonſo. Leges Hiſpaniarum quas partitas vocant, in volumen redegit, as Tarapha hath told us of him in his Spaniſh Hiſtory. The like done by King James the firſt, for the Realm of Aragon, An. 1248. reſpectively confirmed and ratified by the Kings ſucceeding. Authoriſed to be read and diſputed on in the publick Schools, as well as the Decretals the Code, the Pandect, or any other part of the Civil or Canon Laws.

The Soil hereof, where it is fertile and productive of the Fruits of Nature, yields not to any part of Europe, for delight, pleaſures, and Commodities; which here appear in greater ripeneſs and perfection, than in other places. But, for the moſt part, it is either overgrown with Woods, cumbred with wild and rocky Mountains, or of ſo hot a nature, and ſo ſandy withal, that it is not very fit for tillage; and ſo deficient in Water, as not good for Paſturage. So that we may affirm thereof, as of the Figs in the Prophet Jeremy; where it is good, no Country better; where bad and barren, few ſo inconvenient, and not any worſe. But this defect of outward Beauty and Commodities, is recompenſed by thoſe within; affording great plenty of Mines, both of Steel and Iron, and ſome Mines of Silver; of which laſt ſo abundant in preceding times, that it was never free from the Rovers of all Nations: and it is ſaid of Annibal, that out of one Mine only in the Country of the Turdetani, (now part of Andaluzia) he received 3000 pound weight daily, for a long time together. The principal Commodities which they vend into other Countries, are Wines, Oyl, Sugars, Metals, Rice, Silk, Licoras, a fine ſort of Wool, Cork, Roſin, Limmons, Raiſins, Oranges, and Fruits of the like nature. In Corn, which is the ſtaff of life, they are ſo defective, that they receive the greateſt part of what they ſpend, from Italy, Sicily, and France. Their Cattel neither fair, nor many; the Country being not able to breed them; ſo that their Diet is on Salads, and fruits of the Earth; every Gentleman being limited what fleſh he ſhall buy for himſelf and his Family, which if he ſend for to the Butcher, or Poulterer, by the ſmalleſt Child, able to do the Errand for him, he is ſure not to be defrauded in price, or quality. And yet they talk as highly of their gallant fare, as if they ſurfeited with the plenty of all proviſions: handſomly checked in that fond humour, by that worthy Souldier, Sir Roger Williams; of whom it is ſaid, that hearing once a Spaniard thus fooliſhly bragging of his Country Salads, he gave him this anſwer, You have indeed good ſawce in Spain; but we have dainty Beefs, Veals, and Muttons, to eat with that ſawce, and as God made beaſts to live upon the graſs of the earth; ſo he made men to live upon them. And it is obſerved, that if a Spaniard have a Capon, or the like good Diſh to his Supper, you ſhall find all the Feathers ſcattered before his door, by the next morning.

And as it is in private Houſes, ſo for travelling alſo, the Inns and Vents of this Country are very ill provided: inſomuch, that moſt men that would not go ſupperleſs to ſleep, carry their proviſion at their Saddle-bows, and men of worth their bedding alſo. So poor and mean is the entertainment in theſe places.

Here lived in ancient times, the Giants Geryon, and Cacus, which were quelled by Hercules: and in the flouriſhing of the Roman Empire, 1. Seneca the Tragœdian, and 2. the Philoſopher of the ſame name; a man of that happy memory, that he could repeat 2000 names in the ſame order that they were rehearſed: as alſo 3. Quintilian the Orator, 4. Lucan, and 5. Martial, excellent in their kinds: 6. Pomponius Mela the Geographer, 7. Trogus Pompeius, with his Epitomator: 8. Juſtin, and 9. Paulus Oroſius the Hiſtorian, this laſt a Chriſtian. In the middle times, 10. Iſidore Biſhop of Sevil, 11. Julian, and 12. Hildephonſus, Biſhops of Toledo, and after them, Eulogius the Saint and Martyr; men learned for the times they lived in. Then for the later Ages, 1. The renowned Cardinal Francis Ximines, and 2. Arius Montanus, famous for the Editions ditions of the holy Bible. 3. Maſius, a learned Commentator. 4. Oſorius, well ſeen in the Latin Elegancies; and before all, as well in induſtry as time, 5. Toſtatus Biſhop of Avila; a man ſo copious and induſtrious in his writings, that it is thought he writ more ſheets than he lived days. But of late times we find but few of their Works which have paſſed the Mountains; the Latin which they write, being very coarſe, and ſavouring too much of the School-man, (wherein their excellency conſiſts) and therefore they ſet out their Works moſt commonly in their own Tongue only. The chief for Souldiery amongſt them, were formerly Viriathus, who held out ſo long againſt the Romans. Trajan and Theodoſius, both Roman Emperors. Theodorick the ſecond, King of the Goths, the victorious Conqueror of the Swevians. Bernardo del Carpio, and Cid Ruis Diaz, famous for their atchievements againſt the Moors: and in late times, Gonſalvo the Great Captain, who ſubdued Naples. Ferdinand Duke of Alva, who conquered Portugal, &c.

The Chriſtian Faith, if we may believe the old Spaniſh Tradition, was firſt here planted by St. James the Apoſtle, within four years after the death of our Redeemer. To which Tradition, though they held very conſtant a long time together; yet of late days, Baronius, and other learned men of the Church of Rome, do moſt deſervedly reject it. That St. Paul had a purpoſe of coming hither, is evident in his 15. Chapter to the Romans: and that he did come hither accordingly, is poſitively affirmed by St. Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, and divers others of the Fathers; which was in Anno 61. as Baronius thinketh. Nor did St. Peter want his part in this great ſervice, but joyned with St. Paul; though not in the journey, yet in the ſending of Biſhops, and other Presbyters, to ſecond the beginnings made by that Apoſtle. For it is ſaid expreſly in the Martyrologies, that Cteſiphon, Torquatus, Secundus, Cecilius, Judaletius, Heſychius, and Euphraſius, being at Rome, ordained Biſhops by the two Apoſtles, ad prædicandum verbum Dei in Hiſpanias directi, were diſpatched into Spain to preach the Goſpel. Biſhops, moſt likely, of thoſe Cities where they ſuffered death; the names of which occurr in the Martyrology. Under the Empire of the Goths, the Faith of CHRIST, which at their coming hither they found right and Orthodox, was defiled with Arianiſm: not ejurated till the year 588, when that whole Nation did ſubmit to more Catholick tendries. But Spain being conquered by the Moors under the conduct of Muſa, Lieutenant-General to Ulidor Ulit, the Arabian Caliph; and Mahometaniſm over-ſpreading the whole face of the Country; ſuch Chriſtians as remained under their obedience, but few and inconſiderable both for power and quality, had the name of Muſarabes. Encreaſing in eſtate and numbers, by the fortunate ſucceſſes of the King of Leon and Navarre, and other Chriſtian Principalities growing up apace, they ſtill retained their old name, and their ancient ſervice, diſtinct from that obſerved in the Church of Rome; this being called the Muſarabique, the other the Gregorian Miſſal: the one pretending S. Iſidore Archbiſhop of Sevil, the other S. Gregory Pope of Rome, for the Author of it. And [illegible] continued in this ſtate, till the taking of the City a[illegible]ingdom of Toledo, by Alfonſo King of Caſtile and Leon, Anno 1083. At what time Bernard a French-man, being made Arch-biſhop of that City, and Primate of Spain, endeavoured the introduction of the Roman or Gregorian Service, but therein was oppoſed by the other Prelates, and generally by all the people, ſufficiently tenacious of their ancient Forms. At laſt it was concluded (as the ſtory telleth us) to commit the deciſion of the Controverſie to a fiery tryal: both Books being caſt into the fire, the Gregorian leaping preſently out, and the Muſarabique remaining unhurt in the midſt of the flames. Convinced by this experiment, that both Forms were pleaſing to Almighty God, they yielded ſo far to the deſires of the King, (who was zealous in it) that the Muſarabique being retained in ſix of the Churches of Toledo, (where it is ſung to this day in a Chappel of the Great Church, called Corpus Domini) the Gregorian or Roman Service, ſhould be entertained in the reſt of Spain. According unto which Decree, the Muſarabique (but not until ſome tract of time) came to be diſuſed; and the Gregorian Service firſt admitted in the Cathedral of Toledo, May 29. An. 1091. And after, by degrees, in the reſt of the Country.

Since that, they have been conſtant to the Rites of the Roman Church, and of the Faith and Doctrine therein profeſſed, notwithſtanding the great intermixture of Jews and Moors, eſpecially ſince the ſetting up of the Inquiſition: deviſed at firſt about the year 1478, by Pedro Gonſales de Mendoza, Arch-biſhop of Toledo, againſt ſuch converted Jews and Moors, as did return again to their ſuperſtition. But he, and thoſe that had the firſt execution of it, being found ſo cruel, that, in the compaſs of nine years, no fewer than 3000 Families had been deſtroyed in that Dioceſe only. In the year 1481, it was thought fit to moderate the rigour of it, and to commit the managing thereof to ſome Jacobins or Dominical Fryers; who in the firſt place were to have an eye unto ſuch Apoſtates, and to Hereticks, Magicians, Sodomites, Blaſphemers of the name of God, &c. confirmed in this Authority, by Pope Sixtus the 4. This Inſtitution in it ſelf was not only neceſſary, (as the condition of Affairs then was) but exceeding laudable, had it been kept within the bounds at firſt intended. But of late, inſtead of being uſed on the Jews and Moors it hath been turned upon the Proteſtants, and that with ſuch violence and extremity, of torture, that it is counted the greateſt tyranny, and ſevereſt kind of perſecution, under Heaven: inſomuch that many Papiſts, who would willingly dye for their Religion, abhor the very name and mention of it, and to the death withſtand the bringing in of this ſlavery among them. This is it that made the people of Aragon and Naples rebel, Countries where the people are all of the Papal ſide: and this was it which cauſed the irremediable revolt of the Low Countries; the greateſt part of that Nation, at the time of their taking Arms, being Romiſh Catholicks: yet it is planted and eſtabliſhed in Spain and all Italy, (Naples and Venice excepted) the managing thereof committed to the moſt zealous and rigorous Friers in the whole Pack: the leaſt ſuſpition of Hereſie, affinity, or commerce with Hereticks, reproving the lives of the Clergy, keeping any Books, or Editions of Books, prohibited, or diſcourſing in matters of Religion, are offences ſufficient. Nay, they will charge mens Conſciences under the pain of damnation, to detect their neareſt and deareſt Friends, if they do but ſuſpect them to be herein culpable. Their proceedings are with great ſecreſie and ſeverity: for firſt, the parties accuſed ſhall never know their accuſer, but ſhall be conſtrained to reveal their own thoughts and affections. 2. If they be but convinced of any error in any of their opinions, or be gain-ſayed by two Witneſſes, they are immediately condemned. 3. If nothing can be proved againſt them, yet ſhall they with infinite tortures and miſeries, be kept in the houſe divers years, for a terror unto others. And fourthly, if they eſcape the firſt brunt with many torments, and much anguiſh; yet the ſecond queſtioning, or ſuſpition, brings death remedileſs. And as for torments, and kinds of death, Phalaris and his fellow-Tyrants, come far ſhort of theſe Blood-hounds.

The adminiſtration of this Office, for the more orderly reglement and diſpatch thereof, diſtributed into twelve Courts, or ſupreme Tribunals, for the ſeveral Provinces of Spain; no one depending on another, but in ſome ſort ſubordinate to the general Inquiſition, remaining in the Court near the King's Perſon, which hath a kind of ſuperintendency over thoſe Tribunals: in all of which, thoſe of the Secular Clergy ſit as Judges, the Friers being only uſed as Promoters to inform the Court, and bring more Griſt unto the Mill. Of theſe Inquiſitors, every one hath the title of Lord, and are a great terror to the neighbouring Peaſants. There goeth a Tale, how one of their Lordſhips deſirous to eat of the Pears which grew in a poor man's Orchard not far off, ſent for the man to come unto him; which put the poor ſoul into ſuch a fright, that he fell ſick upon it, and kept his bed: being afterwards informed, that all his Lodſhip's buſineſs with him, was to requeſt a diſh of Pears; he pulled up the Tree by the Rooots, and carried it unto him with the fruit upon it. And when he was demanded the reaſon of that raſh and improvident action, he returned this anſwer, That he would never keep that thing in his houſe, which ſhould give any of their Lordſhips cauſe to ſend further after him. Certain it is that by this means the people of this Kingdom are ſo kept under, that they dare not hearken after any other Religion: than what their Prieſts and Friers ſhall be pleaſed to teach them; or entertain the truth if it come amongſt them; or call in queſtion any of thoſe palpable and groſs impoſtures, which every day are put upon them.

For by this means, the people of this Kingdom have been, and ſtill are punctual followers of the Church of Rome, and that too in the very errors and corruptions of it; taking up their Religion on the Pope's Authority: and therein ſo tenacious or pertinacious, that the King doth ſuffer none to live in his Dominions, which profeſs not the Roman Catholick Religion. Of which they have been, ſince the times of Luther, ſuch avowed Patrons, that one of the late Popes being ſick, and hearing divers men to moan his approaching end, uttered ſome words to this effect: My life (ſaid he) can nothing benefit the Church; but pray for the proſperity of the King of Spain, as its chief Supporter. And though he ſpoke theſe words of King Philip the 2d, yet they hold good in his Succeſſors ever ſince; being eſteemed the greateſt Patrons and Protectors of the Catholick Cauſe; which is indeed the proper intereſs of this King. For ſeeing that they have framed to themſelves an hope of the Weſtern Monarchy; and finding no fitter means of enlarging their own Temporal, than by concurring with the Pope in upholding his Spiritual Empire, they have linked themſelves moſt faſt to that See. To which end, they have taken upon them to be the Executioners of the Pope's Excommunications; by which Office, Ferdinand the Catholick ſurpriſed Navarre, not without hope of working the like effect, in ſome courſe of time, on the reſt of the interdicted Eſtates of Europe, as may be ſeen by the eager following of the French War againſt Henry the 4. till he had reconciled himſelf to the Church of Rome; and the like War managed for many years together againſt Q. Elizabeth of England. And the purſuit of this Spaniſh Monarchy is ſo hotly followed by the Jeſuits, who in all their perſwaſions ſpeak not more of one God, or of one Pope, than they do of one King; that they hold it forth for the only means to unite the differences of the Church, and ſubdue that great enemy of Religion, the Turk. Nor is this only a Conjecture, or a project of the Jeſuits only, but a deſign avowed and declared in Print, that all the world may take notice of it: and that too in a Book not only licenſed by the Provincial of the Dominicans, and the Supreme Council of the Inquiſition; but by order from the Lords of the Council, with the King's Priviledg and commendation prefixt before it. The Book entituled, La Convenientia de los dos Monarquias Catolicas, &c. The agreement of the two Catholick Monarchies of Rome and Spain, ſet out in the year 1612, by one John de Puente. In the Frontiſpiece whereof are ſet two Scutcheons, the one bearing the Croſs-Keys of Rome, the other the Arms of Caſtile and Leon; Invinculo pacis, for the Motto. On the one ſide of this, there is a Portraicture repreſenting Rome, with the Sun ſhining over it, and darting his Beams upon the Keys, with this Inſcription, Luminare majus ut præſit Orbi & Urbi, the greater Light to govern the City and the World. On the other ſide, another Image deſigning Spain, with the Moon ſhining over that, and darting her Rays on the Spaniſh Scutcheon, with this Impreſs; Luminare minus ut ſubdatur Urbi & dominetur Orbi, i.e. The leſſer Light made to be ſubject to the City, (underſtand of Rome) but to govern all the World beſides. Over all in the top of the Front or Title-page, in Capital Letters, Fecit Deus duo Luminaria magna, God made two great Lights. The whole Book being an indifferent large Folio, is but a Comment on this Text, which for ſubſtance is contained wholly in the Frontiſpiece, but more at large diſcourſed of in the Volume it ſelf; and plainly ſhews what is intended, and by whom. And yet perhaps the Pope and the Jeſuits both, may fail in that which is the main of their expectation; and if the project take effect, the Spaniard will then write himſelf Luminare majus, and make the Pope content with Luminare minus, for his part of the ſpoil; and glad to borrow all his light from the Sun of Spain. For, though the Kingdom of Spain, and Popedom of Rome, be thus ſtraitly combined, yet herein the Popes have over-ſhot themſelves; in that leaning ſo much to the Spaniard, and ſo immoderately encreaſing his dominion, they do in a manner ſtand at his devotion, and may peradventure, in the end, be forced to caſt themſelves into his arms, as their good Lord and Maſter. For certain it is, that the Spaniſh Agents have openly braved the Cardinals, and told them, That they hoped to ſee the day, wherein the King ſhould offer the Pope half a dozen to be made Cardinals, and he not dare to refuſe any; and that they themſelves ſhould choſe no Pope, but one of their Maſter's naming. So great an inconvenience it is, more than poſſible it may be to the Popes, in making this Prince the one and only ſtring to their bow; and faſtning the dependancies of his Roman Catholicks upon him alone, excluding France and all the other Kings in Chriſtendom, of the Romiſh Party, from the honour of it. And yet ſo firm they are to their Spaniſh Principles, that no favours either granted to their perſons, or Religion, are of value with them, or thought worthy of their acceptation, if it come from any other Fountain of Grace, than the Court of Spain. Inſomuch as I have heard from a great Miniſter of State, that when ſome favours were obtained for the Engliſh Papiſts, on the treaty of the Match with Spain, they were ready with great greedineſs to embrace the ſame. But when the ſame fa[illegible]s were obtained for them on the Treaty with France[illegible]t a man of them would accept them. For which ſome of their Chiefs being asked the reaſon, returned this anſwer, That by applying themſelves to the French, they might loſe the Spaniard; and it were great improvidence in them, to change an old and conſtant Friend, who had never failed them, for one of whoſe affections they had no aſſurance; and ſuch a one as by tolerating Hereticks in his own Dominions, ſhewed that he was no fit Patron for the Catholicks to rely upon.

The chief Rivers are, 1. Tagus, celebrated for his Golden Sands; of which the Scepter of the old Kings of Portugal is affirmed (by ſome Writers) to be made: but I have not Faith enough to believe the ſame. The head of it is in the Mountain Seira Molina, near to Cuenca; from the which it runneth by the City Toledo; and then ſmoothly gliding by the Walls of Liſbon, doth pay his tribute to the Weſtern Ocean. 2. Ana, (now Guadiana) which ariſing about the ſame place, runneth afterward under the ground the ſpace of 15 miles: and hence the Spaniards uſe to brag, that they have a Bridg whereon 10000 Cattel dayly feed. An accident common to many other Rivers; as to Mole a ſmall River in Surrey; Eraſinus in Greece; and Lycus in Anatolia, of which laſt, thus Ovid:

Sic ubi terreno Lycus eſt epotus hiatu,
Exiſtit procul hinc, alioque renaſcitur ore.

So Lycus, ſwallowed by the gaping ground,
At a new mouth, far off, is riſing found.

But having gotten up again, it loſeth it ſelf without recovery in the Weſtern Ocean, on the South of Portugal, which is ſeparated from Extremadura. 3. Bætis, now called Guadalquior, (which in the Arabick Language ſignifieth a great River) ariſeth out of the Mountains of Sierra Morena; and paſſing by Corduba and Sevil, diſburdeneth it ſelf into the Southern Ocean, at the Haven of S. Lucars de Barameda. 4. Iberus, which having its head amongſt the Mountins of Biſcay, paſſeth on Eaſtwards by Saragoſſa and Tortoſa, into the Mediterranean; the whole courſe thereof being 460 miles, of which it is navigable 200. A River of ſuch note in the time of the Romans that it divided this whole Country into Citeriorem, and Ulteriorem; of which more anon. 5. Duerus, which riſing in the ſame Mountains, paſſeth through Portugal, and ſo unto the Weſtern or Atlantick Ocean. 6. Minius, of which more in Portugal.

Chief Mountains next unto the Pyrenees ſpoken of before. 1. The Cantabrian Mountains, called by Pliny, Juga Aſturum; which riſing out of a ſpur or branch of the Pyrenees, overſpread the Provinces of Biſcay, Aſturia, and Gallicia, (coaſting along the ſhores of the Cantabrian Ocean) where at laſt they end. 2. Idubeda, Jubalda, or Aurantius Saltus, ſo called by Ptolemy, and others of the ancient Writers: which beginning not far from the head of the River Iberus followeth the courſe of that River, by the City of Burgos, and endeth not far from the influx of it into the Mediterranean. 3. Sierra Morena, by Cæſar called Saltus Caſtulonenſis, and Mons Marianus by Ptolemy; which beginning about the Town Alcoraz, coaſteth along the right-hand ſhores of the River Bætis, to the South Seas. 4. Sierra Nevada, by Ptolemy called Mons Illipulus, and Oroſpeda by Strabo; but by the Moors, the Mountains of Alpuxaras. A chain of hills which thwart the Kingdom of Granada, from Eaſt to Weſt; and amongſt which the people to this day ſpeak the Arabick Tongue.

The Country is ſaid to have been inhabited by Tubal, the Son of Japhet. Of whom it is affirmed in the Beroſus of Frier Annius, and by ſuch Chronologers as he hath impoſed on by the name of that Author; that in the twelfth year of Nimrod, which was 140 years after the Flood, he ſeated himſelf in the Aſturia's, a part of Spain, and there built the Town of S. Uval.. A device ſo fooliſh and abſurd, that it is not to be honoured with a confutation: for either Tubal muſt come hither by Sea or by Land: if by Land, then muſt he in the compaſs of a year or two, travel not leſs than 4000 miles (for ſo far it is, at leaſt, from Biſcay, to the valley of Shinar) with women and children, through moſt unpaſſable Woods and Mountains, which no underſtanding man can give belief to. If by Sea, beſides the ſhort time he had to provide ſhipping for ſo great a company, and ſo long a voyage, nothing is more unprobable to a ſober man than that he ſhould leave Italy and Africk upon either hand; or pretermit the opportunity of poſſeſſing Valentia, Andaluzia, Portugal, being fruitful Countries; to fix himſelf in the moſt mountainous, woody, and barren Province of all this Continent. Yet moſt of our Beroſians are ſo confident in it, that they make him the firſt King of Spain; from whom to Gargarus Melicola, they numbered 25 Kings more, who laſted 988 years: the chief of which are ſaid to be, 1. Heſperus, who ſubduing alſo Italy, named both Countries Heſperia; but ſo that Italy was called Heſperia the greater; and Spain Heſperia the leſs. 2. Hiſpanus, whence they conceit the name of Hiſpania to be derived. 3. Tagus, 4. Bætus, and 5. Anus, whence the three Rivers in Spain, ſo called muſt by all means derive their names. 6. Idubeda, Godfather, no doubt, to the great Mountain ſo named. 7. Sicileus, from whom the Iſle of Sicily is ſaid to take denomination. 8. Heſpalis, who is reported to have built the City Sevel, or Hiſpalis. 9. Brigus, the Founder of Flavio Briga, and other Towns ending in Briga. 10. Luſus, who gave name to Luſitania, now Portugal. The Catalogue of which Kings, I deſire no man to believe farther, than that of our own State from Brutus to Caſſibeline. A Catalogue ſo ill contrived, that whereas Juſtin ſpeaks of Habis, and Herodotus of Arganthonius, Macrobius of Heron, and Plutarch of Indibilis, all Kings of Spain; none of all theſe are mentioned in it. So that the coming of Tubal (in perſon) hither, is a ſilly vanity; though we deny not but the Spaniards, or ſome Nations of them, may derive their Pedigree from Tubal, as being the deſcendants of the Iberi, whom Joſephus ſaith to have been anciently called Thobelos: a name in which are all the Radical Letters of Tubal, and which differeth not much from it in ſound. For ſomewhat before the ſuppoſed time of Gargarus Melicola, the Iberians are ſaid to come in under Panus: divided after his deceaſe, amongſt many petit Kings and Princes, for the ſpace of 900 and odd years, even till the firſt attempt which the Carthaginians made upon it; who found here no ſuch Univerſal or Supream Monarch, as the Beroſian Fablers dream of. During which time, we find nothing more obſervable and certain in the ſtory of it, than the planting of Colonies on the Sea-coaſts, by divers Nations, according to the Cuſtom of thoſe elder times. Of which ſort were the Towns of Emporia and Dianium, founded by the Maſſilians; Saguntum, by the Zacynthi, or people of Zant, Rhode, by the Rhodians, as ſome think; the City and Iſle of Gades, planted by the Tyrians, who after ſpread themſelves over all the Coaſts of Andaluzia. The firſt that came in bodies hither, in the way of Conqueſt, were the Celtæ, a great and potent Nation of Gaul; who mixing themſelves with the Iberi, cauſed the whole Country to be called Celtiberia: but the time when they came into it, is very uncertain. Of the invaſion of it by the Carthaginians, there is greater certainty. Who being beaten out of Sicil by the conquering Romans, An. V. C. 512, and not daring to look any more that way, bended their Forces to the Weſt; and paſſing through the Straights of Gibralter, by the Iſle of Gades, (their own long before) landed in Spain, under the conduct of Amilcar, the Father of Annibal, four years after the loſs of Sicily. In leſs than twenty years following, Amilcar, (Aſdrubal his Son in law) and Annibal the Son of Amilcar, had made almoſt all Spain ſubject to the Carthaginians, even from the Weſtern Ocean to the Pyrenees; deſtroyed Saguntum, built new Carthage, and ſtruck ſo great a terror into all the Country, that had not Annibal's deſign carried him to Italy, the State of Carthage had been abſolute Maſters of it, without further oppoſition or reſiſtance. But Annibal having taken all his Souldiers with him; and thoſe that came from Carthage to command in chief, not being men of parts ſufficient to go through with it; they loſt it piece-meal to the Romans, but in leſs time than they had been getting it from the Spaniards; the valour and good fortune of Corn. Scipio, over-ruling the declining-power of that mighty State. The laſt that here commanded for the State of Carthage was Aſdrubal the Son of Giſgo; who being beaten by Scipio into the Iſland of Gades, left that alſo to the keeping of Mago, one of his Commanders; by whom being pillaged and deſerted, it forthwith yielded to the Romans; the Carthaginians, after this never poſſeſſing foot of ground in all this Continent.

The Romans thus becoming Maſters of a great part of it, divided it into Vlteriorem, lying from the River Iberus, Weſtward, becauſe furtheſt off from them; and Citeriorem, between the ſaid River, and the Pyrenees. But having totally ſubdued it, they divided it into three main parts; 1. Tarraconenſem, ſo called of Tarragon, the chief City of it, containing Aragon, Navarre, Biſcay, Gallicia, &c. 2. Bæticam, ſo named of the River Bætis, which runneth through it; comprehendeth the now Countries of Granada, Andaluzia, and part of Extremadura. 3. Luſitanicam, denominated from the Luſitani, the moſt potent people of that part, differing in extent from the preſent Portugal, (though this called Luſitania, by our modern Latiniſts.) For the old Luſitania comprehended part of Extremadura, and ſome part of the two Caſtiles; and no more of the preſent Portugal, than what lieth betwixt the two Rivers, Ana and Duero: that on the South of Ana, being laid to Bætica; and that on the North of Duero, unto Tarraconenſis. Of theſe three parts, Bætica was in moſt eſteem under the Romans; inſomuch that it contained 8 Roman Colonies, 8 Municipal Cities, and 29 other Towns, endued with the rights and priviledges of the Latins. The reaſon thereof was, that the people of this Country having been formerly broken by the Carthaginians, with more quiet endured the yoke of the Romans; whereas the reſt, for a long time reſiſted the entry and Empire of that prevailing City. But to proceed to the affairs of Rome in Spain, Scipio Africanus laid the firſt foundation of the Roman Government in this Country: which building, though undertaken by many excellent workmen, was not throughly finiſhed till the days of Auguſtus, being almoſt 200 years ſince the firſt attempt. He roofed it, ſtrengthened it, and made it a principal building in his Monarchical City. For the old Incolæ were exceeding valiant and reſolute, ſometimes diſgracing, ſometimes endangering the Roman reputation; inſomuch that there were more Commanders loſt in thoſe Wars, than any other. At firſt the Romans fought not with the Spaniards, but with the Carthaginians in Spain: then periſhed both the Scipio's, viz. the Father and the Uncle of Africanus. Viriathus held War for 20 years, Numantia held out almoſt 15, the Aſtures remained unconquered till the time of Auguſtus; and alſo reſolutely maintained their particular liberties, Vt dijudicari non potuerit (ſaith Paterculus) Hiſpanis an Romanis plus eſſet in armis roboris, & uter populus alteri pariturus foret. Such manner of men were the ancient Spaniards under Rome and Carthage; the firſt people of the Continent of Europe, (excepting Italy) on which the Romans did begin to enlarge their Empire, and the laſt that wholly were ſubdued and conquered by them. But being conquered at the laſt, and brought under the form of a Province by Auguſtus Cæſar; it was governed by their Proconſuls, Prætors, and other Magiſtrates, according to the diviſion before-mentioned. But Conſtantine the Great in his new modelling of the Empire, laying ſome part of Africk to it, made it a Dioceſe of the Empire; and ſubject to the Præfectus Prætorio for Gaul, by whoſe Vicarius it was governed: the whole being then divided into theſe ſeven Provinces, viz. 1. Bætica, 2. Luſitania, bounded as before; 3. Gallicia, containing the modern Gallicia, Leon, and Oviedo, the greateſt part of the Old Caſtile, and ſo much of Portugal as lieth betwixt the two Rivers of Minio and Duero, 4. Carthaginenſis, ſo called from the City of New Carthage, comprehending New Caſtile, Murcia, and Valentia with part of the Old Caſtile, Aragon, and Andaluſia. 5. Tarraconenſis, embracing all Biſcay, Navarre, and Catalogne, with the greateſt part of the Kingdom of Aragon. 6. Tingitana, ſo called from Tingis, (now Tangier) a Town in Africk, on the oppoſite Coaſt, in which are now the great Kingdoms of Feſſe and Morocco. And 7. the Province of the Iſlands, containing Majorca, Minorca, Ebuſa, and Frumentaria. Of which ſeven Provinces, the three firſt were Conſulares, governed by Proconſuls; the other four, from their being under Preſidents, were called Preſidiarie. Being thus ſetled, it continued a Roman Dioceſe till about the year 400, when it was ſubdued by Gundericus, King of the Vandals; of which people, their beginning, atchievements, and final period, we will ſpeak more when we come to Africk, where they fixed themſelves: invited thereunto, partly to eſchew the ill neighbourhood of the Goths, who began to grow too potent for them, and partly to ſatisfie the deſire of Boniface, Governour of that Province for the Emperor Valentinian the third, againſt whom he had then rebelled, and wanted ſuch ſupport to make good his action. Thoſe being gone, the Suevi and Alani, who entred with them, could not long ſubſiſt; but were finally broken by the Goths, and afterwards diſpoſſeſſed of their Kingdoms alſo, (though ſuffered to remain in the Country ſtill) as ſhall be ſhewn hereafter in its proper place. As for the Goths, (of whom we ſhall ſpeak more in Sweden, and have already made ſome mention when we were in Gaul) having ſacked Rome, and waſted Italy, under the conduct of Alaric; they were bought out of that Country by the gift of Narbonenſis in Gaul, and ſo much of Tarroconenſis in Spain, as now makes up the Province of Catalogne: the compoſition being ratified by the marriage of Athaulfus, the Succeſſor of Alarick, with Placidia, Siſter to Honorius the Weſtern Emperor. Vallia, or Wallia, the next of name and note, (for Sigerec who interpoſed, reigned but one year only, and did nothing in it) Succeſſor of Athaulfus, having beaten the Alani out of Luſitania and Carthaginenſis, added thoſe Provinces alſo unto his Eſtates, and confining the Vandals within Bætica, was the firſt of the Goths which entituled himſelf King of the Goths in Spain. By their agreement with the Romans, they were to keep thoſe Provinces for the uſe of the Empire, which they did conquer and recover from the barbarous Nations; but contrary to all Faith, and the Articles of their Agreement having once beaten the Alani out of Luſitania, by the Proweſs of Vallia, and the Swevi out of Bætica, under the conduct of Theodorick, the Brother of Toriſmund, they fell upon the Romans themſelves; whom Euricus, and his Succeſſors, by little and little, diſpoſſeſſed of all Spain on this ſide of the Streights. Tingitana held out longeſt, as furtheſt off, unfortunately attempted tempted by Theudes the ninth King of Goths, whoſe Souldiers being ſet upon by the Romans on the Lord's day, or Sunday, refuſed to fight in their own defence, and were ſo miſerably defeated, that there was never a man of them left to carry news of the overthrow. So early did the Superſtition of a Lord's-day Sabbath prevail upon this melancholick and devout people. But what this Theudes could not do, was performed by Suintilla; who in the ſhort time of this reign, An. 642, made the Conqueſt abſolute.

Let us next look upon the Goths as Lords of Spain, and we ſhall find them to have been Chriſtians in Religion, and ſomewhat civilized by their long neighbourhood and converſations with the Græcians, before they turned their Forces into the Weſt. Their company more deſired in this reſpect, than that of the Vandals; who were not only Pagans, but far more barbarous. But theſe Goths, being for long time of the Arian Faction, did grievouſly afflict and perſecute the Orthodox Prelates: continuing in this error till the death of Leonigild (or Leutigildis as ſome call him) the laſt Patron and Aſſertor of it. Their Government Monarchical, but the Kings Elective, (though for the moſt part they kept themſelves to the Regal Family:) an Excommunication being laid on ſuch, by the fifth Council of Toledo, as went about to alter that eſtabliſhed courſe. Their Rule or Government was Cuſtom, and that not left in writing, but committed to Memory and Tradition: written, Laws being firſt made by Euricus; which the enſuing Princes confirmed and perfected. What elſe concerneth them, we ſhall find in the cloſe of this Catalogue of The Kings of the Goths in Spain.

716	31	Roderick, the laſt King of the Goths in Spain, elected to the prejudice of the Sons of Vitiza, which after proved the ruin and overthrow of the Kingdom.

For though the Kingdom went, for the moſt part, by Election, and that they had reſpect to the next of blood, (as at this time in Poland and Bohemia) very few interlopers being here admitted: yet ſome there were, who either by their merit, or ſome opportunity, got the poſſeſſion of the Kingdom, though not at all relating to the Royal Family. Of which kind were Theudes, an Oſtro-Goth, ſometimes the Governour hereof for Theodorick King of the Goths in Italy, Protector of this Kingdom in the minority of Amalaric; and Theudeſelus, or Theudegiſdus, Nephew to Totilas, one of the Succeſſors to Theodorick. The reſt of principal note were, 1. Theodorick the firſt, ſlain in the battel near Tholouze, againſt Attila the Hunn; in defence of his own Country, and the Roman Empire. 2. Theodorick the ſecond, who beat the Nation of the Suevi out of Bætica; and 3. Leonigild, or Leutigilde, who deprived them of Gallicia alſo. 4. Reccaredus the firſt, who firſt imbraced the Catholick Doctrine of the Church, and rejected Arianiſm; and for that cauſe firſt honoured with the title of the Catholick King; afterwards reſumed by Alfonſus the firſt King of Leon, and made hereditary by Ferdinand the King of Caſtile, Aragon, &c. Grandfather unto Charles the fifth. 5. Euricus, or Henricus as ſome call him, as remarkable for Civil Polity, as Reccaredus for Piety: as being the Lycurgus or Ligiſlator of this people; not governed till his time by a written Law, but either by uncertain cuſtoms, or at the pleaſure of ſuch Officers as the Kings ſet over them. 6. Suintilla, Son of Reccaredus the ſecond, who having in the ſhort time of his reign expelled the Roman Forces out of Tingitana, An. 642, was the firſt Monarch of all Spain, whereof Tingitana (though on the other ſide of the Sea) had been made a Province by the Emperor Conſtantine, as before was ſaid. And of this Province was Julianus Governour in the time of Roderick, who being of the Faction of the ſons of Vitiza, ſtomacked his advancement to the Kingdom; and thereby got the greater portion of the King's diſpleaſure; who ſending him upon an Embaſſie to the Moors of Africa, in the mean time defloured his daughter, named Cava: which the Father took in ſuch indignation, that he procured the Moors (amongſt whom he had gotten much credit) to come over into Spain. This requeſt they performed under the conduct of Muſa and Tariff, and having made a full Conqueſt, ſubjected it to the great Caliphs, or Mahometan Emperors. It is recorded in a MS. Hiſtory of the Saracens, that at the firſt coming of Tariff into Spain, a poor woman of the Country being willingly taken Priſoner, fell down at his feet, kiſſed them, and told him, that ſhe had heard her Father (who was Letter'd) ſay, that Spain ſhould be conquered by a people whoſe General ſhould have a Mole on his right ſhoulder, and in whom one of his hands ſhould be longer than the other. He, to animate his Souldiers againſt the next encounter, uncloathed himſelf, and ſhewed the mark, which ſo encouraged them, that they now doubted not the Victory. Roderick had in his Army 130000 Foot, and 35000 Horſe. Tariff had 30000 Horſe and 180000 Foot. The Battel continued ſeven days together, from morning to night; at laſt the Moors were victorious. What became of King Roderick, was never known. His Souldiers took one arrayed in their King's Apparel, whom upon examination they found to be a Shepherd; with whom the King, after the diſcomfiture, had changed clothes. It is written alſo in Rodericus Toletanus, that before the coming of thoſe Saracens, King Roderick, upon hope of ſome treaſure, did open a part of the Palace, of long time forbidden to be touched; but found nothing but Pictures which reſembled the Moors, with a Propheſie, that whenſoever the Palace was there opened, the people there reſembled, ſhould overcome Spain; and ſo it happened, An. 724.

The Moors, now Lords of Spain by the treaſon of Julian, (who having ſeen the miſerable death of his wife and children, was ſtarved in Priſon by the Africans) permitted the free uſe of Religion to the old Inhabitants; leſt they ſeeking new dwellings fot the Liberty of Conſcience, ſhould leave their native Soyl deſolate. The Moors finiſhed their Conqueſt in five years ſay ſome; others, in two; and ſome again in eight Months. To keep the new-conquered Country in ſubjection, no way was ſo convenient, as to plant Colonies: but the Moriſco women would not abandon their old ſeats. Hereupon Muſa and Tariff, by gifts, pardons, and perſwaſions, drew many Chriſtian women to forſake their Religion, whom they married to the Souldiers. Not long after Vlidor Vlit, the great Caliph, ſent over about 50000 Families of Moors and Jews, aſſigning them a convenient portion of Lands, to be held with great Immunities, and upon ſmall Rents. Theſe politick courſes notwithſtanding, the Moors long enjoyed not the ſole Soveraignty herein: for the Chriſtians having now recovered breath, choſe themſelves Kings; and the Authority of the Caliphs declining, gave the Moors liberty to erect divers petit Royalties; many of which, by little and little, were brought under the command of greater and more powerful Princes. So that at laſt, Spain fell into a fifteenfold diviſion, viz. into the Kingdoms and proprietary Eſtates of 1. Navarre, 2. Biſcay, and 3. Guipuſcoa, 4. Leon and Oviedo, 5. Gallicia, 6. Corduba, 7. Granada, 8. Murcia, 9. Toledo, 10. Caſtile, 11. Portugal, and the Members of it; 12. Valentia, 13. Catalonia, 14. the Kingdom of Majorca, and 15. that of Aragon: not to ſay any thing of the petit Kingdoms of Jaen, Algozire, and Sevil, beſides others of like nature to them, erected by the factious and divided Moors; but of ſhort continuance all of them, and of little note. All now reduced at this day, under the three Governments of Caſtile, Portugal, and Aragon; the Kingdoms and Eſtates of Leon, Navarre Corduba, Granada, Gallicia, Biſcay, Murcia, and Toledo, being under Caſtile; Portugal with Algarve, and the Iſles of Azores, an entire Government of it ſelf; Valentia, Catalonia, and Marjorca, under that of Aragon.

1. NAVARRE.

NAVARRE, the ſecond Kingdom for antiquity in Spain, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Principality of Bearn, in the Kingdom of France; on the Weſt, firſt with the River Ebro, or Iberus; and after, with a little River falling into it, near Calaborra, by which divided from Caſtile; on the North, with the Cantabrian Mountains, by which parted from Guipuſcoa, and on the South, with the River Aragon, by which divided from that Kingdom. Of larger extent anciently, than it is at the preſent; the little Province of Alava, lying toward Guipuſcoa, and the whole Country of Rioye, (on the Weſt-ſide of the River Ebro) being taken from it, and reckoned members of Caſtile, by Alfonſo the 4th. Howſoever, we ſhall look upon it in its ancient bounds, and ſhall accordingly take notice of the chief Cities and Towns therof.

It was called at firſt, the Kingdom of Sobrarbe, from a Town of that name, ſituate in the moſt inacceſſible part of the Pyrenees; and therefore choſe by Garcia Ximines, the firſt King hereof, for the ſeat of his Kingdom, as moſt defenſible againſt the fury of the Moors. Afterwards it took the name of Navarre, either from Navois, ſignifying a plain and Champagn Country, (firſt uſed by Inigo Ariſta, the ſixth King, who having taken Pampelune, abandoned the Hill-Countries, and betook himſef unto the Plains) or from Navarriere, the chief of the three parts into which that City was divided, not only at the taking thereof, but a long time after.

The Country, though environed on all ſides with mighty Mountains, yet of it ſelf is ſaid to be reaſonably fruitful, well watered, and for the moſt part plain and level, as before is ſaid. It taketh up alſo ſome parts of both ſides of the Pyrenees: the Spaniſh ſide being fertile, and adorned with Trees; the French ſide generally very bare and naked. That on the Spaniſh ſide, and on the ſummits of the Mountains, now poſſeſſed by the Spaniard, is called High Navarre: that on the the French ſide, now called Baſe or Low Navarre, eſtimated at a ſixth part of the whole Kingdom, is enjoyed by the French; incorporated by King Lewis the 13, to the Realm of France, An. 1620.

Places of moſt importance in Baſe Navarre, 1. S. Palai, formerly the place of Judicature for this part of the Kingdom; but in the year 1620, removed to Pau in the Principality of Bearn: both Bearn and Baſe Navarre, which hath before been governed as diſtinct Eſtates from the Realm of France, being then incorporate to that Crown. 2. Navareux, a Town of great importance, ſeven Leagues from Pau, well fortified, and as well munitioned: King Lewis the 13, finding in it at his coming thither, An. 1620, no fewer than 45 Cannons all mounted; beſides 40 Culverins and ſmaller Pieces; with Powder, Bullet, and Victuals, anſwerable thereunto. 3. Piede Port, or St. John de Pied de Port, bordering on the edg of France, againſt which formerly a piece of eſpecial ſtrength. 4. Roncevallis, or Roncevaux, ſituate in the moſt pleaſant Country of all Navarre, in the entrance of a ſmall but delightful Valley: famous for the great Battel fought near unto it, in the Straights or entrances of the Mountains leading to this Valley; betwixt the French under Charlemagne, and a great Army of Moors and natural Spaniards, confederate together in defence of their common Liberty. In which Battel, by the treachery of Ganelon, 40000 of the French were ſlain; and amongſt them, Rowland Earl of Mans, the Nephew of Charles, and others of the Peers of France; of whom ſo many Fables are reported in the old Romances; the firſt Author of which Fables, paſſeth under the name of Arch-biſhop Turpin, ſaid to be one of thoſe twelve Peers, who taking on him to record the Acts of Charles the Great, hath interlaced his Story with a number of ridiculous vanities: by means whereof, the noble acts of that puiſſant Emperor, and his gallant Followers, are much obſcured and blemiſhed by thoſe very Pens, which in the times ſucceeding did employ themſelves to advance the ſame.

Of ſpecial note in High Navarre, 1. Victoria, firſt built, or rather re edified by Sancho the 4. King of Navarre, An. 1181, by whom thus named in memory of ſome victory obtained thereabouts againſt thet Caſtilians; whereas before his time it was called Gaſteiz: as in like caſe there had been many Towns built by Greeks and Romans, by the name of Nicopolis, or the City of Victory, which we ſhall meet withal hereafter. Situate in the place of the ancient Vellica, but graced with the priviledges and name of a City, by John the ſecond of Caſtile, after it came under the Command of that Crown, An. 1432. A Town belonging properly to the little

Province of Olava, and the chief thereof. Which Province being wholly in and amongſt the Cantabrian Mountains, was of old a member of Navarre: but being extorted from it, An. 1200, by Alphonſo the 4. of Caſtile, it was in the year 1332, incorporated into that Crown as a part thereof; as were ſome other Towns and Members of this Kingdom alſo, won by the Caſtilians. 2. Viane, on the Eaſt of the River Ebro, well fortified, after the taking of Logrogno on the other ſide of the water, (from which diſtant not above a League) as the Frontier Town againſt Caſtile. Of greateſt note for being the title of the eldeſt Son of Navarre, who was called Prince of Viane; advanced unto this honour by King Charles the third, An. 1421, in imitation of the like cuſtom in Caſtile, where the eldeſt Son was called Prince of the Aſturia's: but not leſs memorable for the death of Cæſar Borgia, ſlain near unto it in an ambuſh, after all his wanderings, and interchangeableneſs of fortunes. For being Son of Pope Alexander the ſixth, by birth a Spaniard, he was by his Father made a Cardinal; but relinquiſhing that Title, by Charles the eighth of France, created Duke of Valentinois, in the Province of Daulphine: during his Father's life, he had reduced under his obedience, diverſe of the Eſtates which anciently had belonged to the Church of Rome, but after his deceaſe, impriſoned by Pope Julio the ſecond, who was jealous (not without good cauſe) of his plots and practices. From Rome he ſtole unto Gonſalvo, then Vice-Roy of Naples for Ferdinando the Catholick; who notwithſtanding his ſafe conduct, ſent him priſoner to Spain: but breaking Priſon (deſperately ſliding down a Window) he came at laſt into this Kingdom, and was here ſlain in an Ambuſcado, as before was ſaid. So many times was Machiavel's great Politician over-reached by Bookmen and Souldiers! 3. Sobrarbe, in the moſt inacceſſible parts of the Pyrenees, for that cauſe made the firſt Seat of the Kings of Navarre, entituled from thence the Kings of Sobrarbe. Made afterwards a diſtinct Kingdom from Navarre, by Sancho the great, who gave it to Gonſales his youngeſt Son: after whoſe death (not having iſſue) it was ſeized on by Don Raymir, the firſt King of Aragon, and made a member of that Crown. 4. Sangueſſa, a Town of a large Territory and Juriſdiction, priviledged with a Suffrage in the Convention of Eſtates, and a ſtrong Fortreſs on the borders towards Aragon: for which cauſe formerly aimed at by the Kings thereof, who have had it ſometimes in their hands. 5. Pampelun, in the Champagn Country, on the banks of the River Arga, the Metropolis of this Kingdom; and the Seat-Royal of its Kings, ſince the Conqueſt of it from the Moors by Inigo Ariſta, the 6. King of Navarre. Of old divided into three parts; that is to ſay, Bourg, Peuplement, and Navarriere; each having ſeveral Officers and Juriſdictions, (the cauſe of many quarrels and much blood amongſt them) till all united into one body, and reduced under the command of one chief Magiſtrate, by King Charles the third. An ancient Town firſt built by Pompey at the end of his Wars againſt Sertorius; in memory of whom called Pompeiopolis by our modern Latiniſts; but Pampelun, more near unto the preſent name, by Ptolomy and Antoninus: now an Epiſcopal See, the ſeat of the Vice-Roy, and one of the beſt fortified Towns of all Spain. 6. Moia, not far from the borders of France, were it joyneth on Guipuſcoa; a place of principal importance: the Caſtle whereof was one of the laſt pieces on this ſide of the Mountains, which held out for King John of Albert, againſt Ferdinand the Catholick, in his ſurpriſal of this Kingdom. 7. Montreal, 8. Olite, and 9. Taſalla; all yielded with the reſt of this Kingdom, to Frederick of Toledo, Duke of Alva: who had the happineſs to ſubdue this Realm to the Crown of Caſtile, as his Son Ferdinand had to conquer the Realm of Portugal. 10. Tudele, on the Eaſtern bank of the River Ebro, took from the Moors, by a ſurpriſe by Rotrou Earl of Perch, (a French-man) coming with many other noble perſons to the aid of Alfonſo, King of Navarre, and Aragon, at the ſiege of Saragoſſo, An. 1110. Given by that King unto him, for the reward of his ſervice; and afterwards united to the Crown of Navarre, by the marriage of Magdalen daughter of Earl Rotrou, with Garcia the ſeventh King of Navarre, Succeſſor in that Kingdom to the ſaid Alfonſo. Of late times honoured with a little Univerſity there founded by Ferdinand the Catholick, on his ſurpriſal of that Kingdom. 11. Calahorra, ſituate on the Weſtern banks of the Iberus, or Ibro, by Ptolemy called Calagorina; by Strabo, Calaguris; now a Biſhops-See: taken from Sancho the 8. of Navarre, by Alfonſo the fourth of Caſtile, and made a Member of that Kingdom. As alſo was 12. Logrogno, in the Country of Rioye, on the ſame banks of the River alſo. 13. Eſtellia, bordering on Caſtile, to which adjudged (though on the Eaſtern ſide of the River) by Lewis the 11. of France, made Umpire for the atonement of ſome differences betwixt Henry King of Caſtile, and John King of Navarre and Aragon; to ſatisfie that King for his charges in the former Quarrel.

The old Inhabitants thereof, were the Vaſcones, poſſeſſed not only of this tract, but of Biſcay and Guipuſcoa alſo, from them denominated: who paſſing over the Pyrenees, made themſelves Maſters of that Province which is now called Gaſcoigne by the French, and Vaſconia in Latin. Won from the Romans by the Goths, and from them by the Moors; it began to be a Kingdom under Garcia Ximines, a noble man of the Gothiſh blood; who with 600 men only began to make head againſt the Saraceens, An. 716. firſt under the title of the Kingdom of Sobrarbe; and after that, of Navarre, for the reaſon, formerly delivered. The ſixth from Garcia Ximines, was Inigo, ſirnamed Ariſta, (ſo named from his vehemency and heat in War) the Son of Simon Earl of Bigorre in Gaſcoigne; elected to this Kingdom on the death of Ximines the fifth King, An. 840. or thereabouts, as the next Heir (but in the collateral Line) of Don Garcia Ximines; the firſt King of Sobrabe. To him the taking of Pampelune is aſcribed moſt generally, though Turquet in his Hiſtory refer the ſame to Garcia the ſecond King. But certainly the Town was in the hands of the Moors, till forced from them by the proweſs of Charlemaigne; by them again recovered after the defeat of Roncevals, and held till the time of this King, who poſſeſſed himſelf of it. To this King alſo is aſcribed the firſt beginning of the ceremony of Crowning and Anointing, after the manner uſed by the Kings of France. But the old Roman Provincial cited in the Titles of Honour, acknowledgeth no ſuch honour to theſe petit Kings, communicated only, in that time, to the Emperors of the Eaſt and Weſt, the Kings of Hieruſalem, England, France, and Sicil. And therefore probable it is, that the cuſtom came into Navarre with the Houſe of Champagne. Other Kings of moſt note in the courſe of Story, were 3. Fortun, the ſecond Nephew of Inigo Ariſta, by his Son Garcia the third; who added unto his Eſtate, the Earldom of Aragon, deſcended to him by his Mother, the Daughter and Heir of Aſnarius, or Aznario, the laſt Earl thereof. 4. Sancho the fourth, ſirnamed the Great, who firſt aſſumed unto himſelf the title of King of Spain: his Predeceſſors uſing no other title than Kings of Sobrarbe and Navarre; his Co-temporaries calling themſelves Kings of Leon, Toledo, Sevil, Coduba, according to the names of their ſeveral Kingdoms; the Goths, Kings of the Goths in Spain; and ſo the Vandals, and the Suevi. Onely the Earls of Barcellone, at their firſt erection by the French, entituled themſelves the Dukes and Marqueſſes of Spain, as if all were theirs, with brag and vanity enough. But this Prince had ſome good ground for it, as being by inheritance poſſeſſed of Navarre and Aragon; of Caſtile, in the right of his Wife Donna Nugna, or Elvira, Siſter and Heir of Sancho the laſt Earl thereof; and by conqueſt of a great part of the Realm of Leon: ſo that almoſt all Spain, not poſſeſſed by the Moors, was become his own. Had theſe Eſtates remained entire to his Succeſſors, the Moors, no doubt, had ſooner loſt their hold in Spain; and the whole Continent been brought under the obedience of one ſole Monarch. But this King either loving all his Sons alike, or elſe offended with the eldeſt, who moſt unnaturally had accuſed his own innocent Mother of the crime of Adultery, divided his Eſtates amongſt them; giving to Garcia his edeſt Son, the Realm of Navarre, with that part of Leon which he held by Conqueſt; to Ferdinand his ſecond Son, Caſtile, and Aragon to his baſe Son Raymer; both which he erected into Kingdoms: and finally, to Gonſales his third Son, the Realm of Sobrarbe, then firſt diſmembred from Navarre. By means of which impolitick courſe, his Sons being all of equal Title and Eſtates, inſtead of oppoſing the common Foe, quarrelled with each other, and left the Quarrel as a Legacy to their ſeveral Succeſſors: which miſchief might have been avoided, if he had not dignified them all with the title of Kings, or left the reſt as Homagers unto one Supreme. 5. Sancho the fifth, Nephew of Sancho the Great, by his Son Garcia de Nagera; unnaturaly and traiterouſly ſlain by his Brother Raymer. After whoſe death, and the ſhort interpoſition of his Murtherer, this Kingdom was ſeized on by the Kings of Aragon; three of which, viz Sancho Ramires, Pedro, and Alfonſo, did ſeverally and ſucceſſively enjoy the ſame. 6. Alfonſo, the laſt of the three Kings of Aragon reigning in Navarre, ſirnamed the Warrier; who for a time was King of Caſtile alſo in right of Vrraca his Wife; in which reſpect he took unto himſelf the title of Emperor of Spain, though not acknowledged ſo by others. But finally, dying without iſſue, and his Brother Raymir, or Raymond, called the Monk, ſucceding in Aragon, the Kingdom of Navarre reverted to Garcia Raymir, Lord of Monſon, the direct Heir of Garcia de Nagera, by Raymir Lord of Calaborra, his younger Son. 7. Sancho the 8. the Nephew of this Garcias Raymir, by his Son Sancho the 7. ſirnamed the Wiſe, the laſt King of the Maſculine and direct Line of the Kings of Navarre; the Kingdom, after his deceaſe paſſing by the Females, or Heirs general, to the Earls of Champagne, and ſo unto the Kings of France, the Houſes of Eureux, Foix, Albert, and Vendoſme; but never holding above three deſcents in any one Family. By means whereof, theſe Kings being barred from gainning any thing on the Moors, by the interpoſition of the Kings of Caſtile and Aragon; and having no way to enlarge their Revenue or Dominions, by any undertakings or adventures at Sea, as the Portugals did: incorporated to their Crown as fair and large poſſeſſion in the Realm of France; as any of the others did in the Spaniſh Continent. The Principality of Bearn, the Earldoms of Foix and Begorre, united in the perſon of Gaſton of Foix, as thoſe of Armaignac and Albert, in the perſon of John Earl of Albert; all lying together on the other ſide of the Pyrenees; all added to this Crown by marriage with the Heirs hereof: made up a fairer and wealthier Eſtate than Navarre it ſelf; inferior to few Provinces in the Realms of Spain. Not to ſay any thing of the acceſſion of the County-Palantine of Champagne, exchanged afterwards for ſome Lands in the Country of La March in Limoſin; or of the Earldoms of Eureux, and the Dutchy of Vendoſme, as lying further off, and of leſs importance: Nor of the great Kingdom of France, now herewith incorporate, as to the Perſon of the King, though not in the poſſeſſion of this Kingdom alſo. With ſo much judgment and ſucceſs did the enſuing Kings (not otherwiſe able to enlarge their Territories) beſtow their Daughters, that the Diſtaff proved as happy to this little Kingdom, as the Sword to others. 8. Charles, the ſecond of that name, and the 30 King of Navarre; whom I mention not for any glorious Actions atchieved in his life, (for that was full enough of ignominy) but for the ſtrangeneſs and hideouſneſs of his death. He was a Prince much given to voluptuouſneſs, and ſenſual pleaſures, which ſo waſted his ſpirits, that in his old age he fell into a kind of Lethargy. To comfort his benummed joynts, he was bound and ſewed up naked in a ſheet, ſteeped in boyling Aqua-vitæ. The Chirurgion having made an end of ſewing the ſheet, and wanting a knife to cut off the thread, took a Wax-Candle that ſtood lighted by him; but the flame running down by the thread, caught hold on the ſheet; which (according to the nature of Aqua-vitæ) burned with that vehemency, that the miſerable King ended his days in the fire. 9. John of Aragon, the ſecond Son of Ferdinand the firſt, in the life of his Brother Alfonſo, was made King of Navarre, in right of Blanche his Wife, Daughter of Charles the third; and on the death of his Brother, King of Aragon alſo. And though his Queen dyed long before him, in whoſe right he reigned; yet he kept poſſeſſion of the Kingdom till his death, (reigning fifty four years in all) notwithſtanding the oppoſition made againſt him by Charles Prince of Viana, his only ſon by that marriage, and Heir apparent of that Crown; whom he vanquiſhed, impriſoned, and at laſt poyſoned. 10. John, Earl of Albert in Gaſcoigne, King of Navarre in right of Katharine his Wife: in whoſe reign the Kingdom of Navarre was ſeized on by Ferdinand the Catholick, Son of the ſaid John King of Aragon and Navarre, by a ſecond Wife. The manner of it we ſhall relate with more particulars, when we have ſummed the whole Succeſſion of

The Kings of Navarre.

1556	38	Joan III. Daughter of Henry of Albret. Antony of Burbon, Duke of Vendoſme in France.
1572	39	Henry III. the Son of Antony and Joan, after the death of Henry the third of France, ſucceeded alſo in that Realm, by the name of Henry the fourth.
1610	40	Lewis II. of Navarre, and XIII. of France.
	41	Lewis III. of Navarre, and XIV. of France, now living;

with whom remain the rights, but not the poſſeſſion of this Kingdom. For in the reign of Katharine and John of Albret, Ferdinand gathered an Army under the pretence of rooting out the Moors, and ſurpriſed this Kingdom, altogether unprovided, and deſtitute of means to make the ſmalleſt reſiſtance, Anno 1512. The pretended reaſon of this ſurpriſal, was an Excommunication laid on theſe Princes by the Pope, of which this King took upon him to be Executioner; but the true cauſe was an ancient deſire which this King had to poſſeſs this frontier Kingdom, it being a ſtrong Bulwark againſt France. It hapned then, that Lewis the 12th, having incurred the diſpleaſure of Pope Julio the ſecond, was (together with all his adherents) excommunicated, and his and their Eſtates given to ſuch as could or would ſubdue them. The King and Queen of Navarre were, at this time, both French Subjects: he, in reſpect of Albret, his Paternal Inheritance; and ſhe, of her Eſtates of Foix and Bearn: and therefore ſided with the French King. Ferdinand having (as we ſaid) levied an Army under colour of extirpating the Moors, turneth upon the French King, and demanded of theſe Princes not only a free paſſage through their Country, but alſo to have certain places of ſtrength put into his hand, for his better aſſurance. Theſe unjuſt demands the Navarrois denyed. Whereupon Ferdinand with all expedition invadeth the Kingdom, the greateſt part of which he took without a blow given; the French King being as backward in affording due aſſiſtance, as the other was unprovided of means for defence. The French netled with this loſs, divers times attempted the recovery of it, but in vain: for the Spaniard ſtill keepeth thoſe parts of it which lye on that ſide of the Pyrenees; leaving the reſt, which lyeth on the French ſide of thoſe Mountains (being about a ſixth part of the whole) to the Deſcendents of thoſe Princes whom he had diſſeized.

The chief Order of Knighthood was of the Lilly, begun by Garcia the ſixth; their Blazen, a Pot of Lillies, with the Portraiture of our Lady engraven upon it, their duty, to defend the Faith, and daily to repeat certain Ave-Maries.

The Arms of Navarre, are Gules, a Carbuncle nowed Or. Which Carbuncle having a reſemblance unto chains of Gold, is ſaid to have been firſt taken by Sancho the 8th, in memory that he and his Forces had firſt broken the Fortification made with Chains, about the Pavilion of Mahomet Enaſir, the Meramomolin of Morocco, at the great fight in Sierra Morena; before which time the Arms of this Kingdom had been Azure, a Croſs Argent.

3. BISCAY and GUIPUSCOA.

OF theſe two we ſhall ſpeak together, becauſe of the ſimilitude and reſemblances which are between them, both in the Country and the People: the names being alſo forged from the ſame Original: Bounded on the Weſt, with the Kingdom of Leon, on the Eaſt with the Pyrenees, and Guyenne in the Realm of France; on the North, with the Cantabrian Ocean; and on the South, with Navarre and old Caſtile. Thus named from the Vaſcones, inhabiting the neighbouring Kingdom of Navarre, in the time of the Romans: part of which people, in the year 640, or thereabouts, paſſed over unto the further ſide of the Pyrenees, where they took up thoſe parts of France, ſince from them called Gaſcoigne. The reſt continuing in their old Seat, or ſpreading more into the Weſt, towards the Cantabrians, gave to thoſe parts the name of Guipuſcoa, and Viſcaia, (for ſo the Spaniards write and ſpeak it) now by us called Biſcay: their language alſo (which is much different from the reſt of Spain) being called the Baſquiſh, more near in ſound to that of Vaſcons, the original name.

The whole Country is very Mountainous and Woody, yielding but little ſtore of Corn, and leſs of Wine: the defect of the firſt being ſupplied from other Countries; of the laſt, by Sider; for which end they plant Apples here in great abundance. But from thoſe Woods they draw continually great ſtore of Timber for the building of Ships: and from thoſe Hills there do not only iſſue pleaſant Rivers, (ſome ſay 150 in number) of which Iberus and Duero are ſaid to be two: but ſuch infinite ſtore of Iron and Steel, that no Country yieldeth better, or in greater plenty. Called and accounted for this cauſe, the Armory of Spain; and giving occaſion unto Pliny to report, that there was in this Country a whole Mountain of Iron: Maritima Cantabriæ parte, Mons præruptè altus (incredibile dictu) totus ex ea materia eſt. lib. 33. cap. 45. Nor do they only furniſh all Spain with Iron, which they make into Inſtruments of War, and others for domeſtick uſes: but with Timber alſo for their ſhipping, with which ſo ſtored, that whole Fleets may be built and armed from this Country only.

It is divided commonly into two parts; the Eaſtern bordering on the Pyrenees, and the Realm of France, which is called GUIPUSCOA, and the Weſtern, bordering on the Kingdom of Leon, which properly is called BISCAY: the Town of Montrico ſtanding in the Confines of both. Both of them heretofore of the ſame Original, though by ſeveral means united to the Crown of Caſtile: both ſpeak the ſame Cantabrian language, now called the Baſquiſh; the people of both, being more rude and ſimple, than the reſt of Spain; but ſtanding much upon their Gentry, according to the cuſtom of moſt mountainous and unconquered Nations. The difference is, that thoſe of Guipuſcoa, by reaſon of their traffick and commerce with other Countries, ſavour a little more of Chriſtianity than the others do: in which the common Biſcains are ſo far to ſeek, that though they have ſome general notions of God and CHRIST, yet very few of them are able to render an account of their Faith, in any tolerable meaſure. And thus a view being taken of thoſe general notions in which both Countries are concerned; let us next look upon them in their ſeveral and diſtinct capacities, with reference to their chief Towns and Stories.

And firſt for GUIPUSCOA. The places of chiefeſt note in it are, 1. S. Sebaſtians, (Don Baſtia, as the Vulgar call it) a noted and well traded Port, at the mouth of the River Gurvineo; beautified with a fair and capacious Haven, defended at the entrances with two ſtrong Caſtles founded upon the oppoſite Rocks, and honoured with an Epiſcopal See. 2. Toloſa, (commonly called Toloſette at the confluence of the Rivers Oria and Duarzo. 3. Placenza, on the River Denia, inhabited by none but Black-ſmiths, who do attend their Hammers with ſuch endleſs diligence, that Vulcan's Forge may ſeem to be tranſlated hither out of the Iſle of Lemnos. 4. Guetaria, beautified with a ſafe and convenient Haven; defended from all Winds by a little Iſland lying before it: the birth-place of Sebaſtian del Cabo, that famous Pilot, the firſt that ſailed about the World: Magellanus who went chief in that expedition, periſhing in the Action. 5. Fonterabia, at the mouth of the River Vidoſa, which divides this Country from Guyenne in France: for that cauſe very well fortified, and as ſtrongly garriſoned. 6. Renteria, ſituate near a Brook abounding with moſt excellent Salmons. 7. Montrico, at the mouth of the River Denia; the fartheſt Town hereof on the edge of Biſcay. Moſt of which ſtand upon or near the Sea, there being but few Towns of note within the Land, (though ſtore enough of ſcattered Villages, as in Biſcay alſo) becauſe of the roughneſs of the Mountains.

As for the Fortunes and Affairs of this part of the Country, after the ſubverſion of the Kingdom of the Goths in Spain, (for till that time they followed the ſame Fortunes with the reſt of this Continent) it was at firſt a member of the Crown of Navarre; afterwards wreſted from K. Sancho the ſixth, by Alfonſo the firſt of Caſtile, An. 1079; by whom committed to the Government of Lopes Diaz de Haro, Lord of Biſcay. Reſtored again to the Kings of Navarre, upon ſome following Capitulations: It ſo continued till the year 1200; when having experience of the Government of both Kingdoms, and liking better that of Caſtile, they offered themſelves to the ſubjection of Alfonſo the 4th; who without ſo much as one blow ſtruck, became Maſter of all the Country, and left it ſetled and confirmed unto his Succeſſors, as it hath ever ſince remained.

2. For BISCAY next; the principal Towns thereof are, 1. Larrabechia, the chief Town of this Province in elder times; in the chief Church whereof, the Kings of Spain, as Lords of Biſcay, uſe to be ſolemnly inaugurated, here making Oath to maintain the Liberties of the Country, and receiving the Homage and Allegiance of the people of it. 2. Berneo, an old Town alſo, and amply priviledged; the Franchiſes whereof, the Kings are ſolemnly ſworn to keep, in the Church dedicated to the honour of S. Euphemia. 3. Guernica, the third Town for antiquity in this part of theſe Countries. Then of a later date, we have 4. Bilbo, or Bilbao, ſituate ſome two Leagues from the Sea, but on a fair and deep Creek thereof; on the other ſide ſurrounded with Mountains: built out of the ruines of the old Flaviobriga, by Diego de Haro, Lord of Biſcay, An. 1300; and ſituate the beſt of any Town in this Country, for plenty of Victuals, eſpecially for fleſh, and moſt excellent bread. Exceedingly enriched by making of Armour, and all ſorts of Weapons, (their chiefeſt Manufacture) the Bilbo-blades in ſuch requeſt being brought from hence. Beſides which trade of Arms and Iron, they deal alſo in Wool; by the vent of which Commodities they are grown ſo wealthy, that here are many private Merchants which build yearly three or four good Ships for their own trade only. 5. Laredo, a Sea Town alſo, with a capable Port. The landing-place of Charles the fifth, when he had relinquiſhed the Empire, and all his other Eſtates, with reſolution to ſpend the reſt of his life in Spain, in a private manner: it being obſervable, that he was no ſooner landed, but the Admiral-ſhip in which he came, and the greateſt part of the Navy which came with him, periſhed in the Haven; to ſhew him (as it were) that there was no receding from this reſolution. 6. Portogaletre, commodiouſly ſeated on an Arm of the Sea, which floweth up to their very houſes, and ſerveth them exceeding fitly for the lading and unlading of their Commodities.

The old Inhabitants of this Tract, before the coming in of the Vaſcones, were the Cantabri; theſe ſubdivided into the ſeveral Nations of the Marbogi, the Cariſti, the Antrigones, the Varduli, and the Cantabri properly ſo called. From theſe deſcend the modern Biſcains. An argument whereof may be their Language, different from the reſt of Spain; and ſaid by ſome to have continued in this Country ever ſince the confuſion at Babel. And though they over-ſhoot themſelves, that go as far as Babel for the Pedigree and Antiquity of it: yet that it was the ancient Language of Spain, is more than probable; becauſe this people have ever continued without any mixture of Foreign Nations, as being never throughly ſubdued either by Romans, Carthiginians, Goths, or Moors, and ſo they remained, as in their Liberties not maſtered, ſo in their Language not altered. In like manner the Arabick continueth uncorrupt, in the hilly parts of Granada, the Tongue of the old Britans, in our Wales; and the ancient Epirotick, in the high, woody, and more mountainous parts of that Country. And though thoſe of Guipuſcoa ſpeak the ſame Language alſo, yet is it with a greater mixture of other words, (by reaſon of their neighbourhood with France, and commerce with Strangers) than it is in Biſcay; where the old natural Language, whatſoever it was, is in far more purity.

Nor do the Biſcains differ from the reſt of Spain in Language only, but in Cuſtoms alſo; four of which I will here ſet down as a light to the reſt. Firſt, they account themſelves free from Taxes and Contributions to the Kings of Spain; yielding them obedience with their Bodies, but not with their Purſes. And when any of the Spaniſh Kings, in their Progreſſes, come to the Frontiers of this Country, he bareth one of his Legs, and in that manner entreth into it. There he is met by the Lords and Gentlemen there dwelling, who proffer him ſome few ſmall Braſs pieces (Maravides they call them, whereof 600 go to a Crown) in a Leathern Bag, hanged at the end of a Lance: but withall they tell him, that he muſt not take them. Which Ceremony performed, they all attend the King in his journey. Secondly, They admit no Biſhops to come amongſt them; and when Ferdinand the Catholick came in Progreſs hither, accompanied, amongſt others, by the Biſhop of Pampelune, the people aroſe in Arms, drave back the Biſhop; and gathering all the duſt on which they thought he had trodden, caſt it into the Sea. Which averſneſs unto Biſhops, as they firſt took up, in all probability, on ſome hard uſage which they found at the hands of their Prelates; and ſtill retain it out of a ſtubbornneſs of nature, moſt peculiar to them: ſo poſſible enough it is, that the want of Biſhops, and of Epiſcopal Viſitations amongſt the Biſcains, is not the leaſt cauſe of that ignorance and rudeneſs (ſpoken of before) which is found amongſt them. Thirdly, they allow not any Prieſts to live in their Villages, except he bring his Concubine with him: conceiving it impoſſible for them to keep their Wives unto themſelves, if the Curate hath not a Woman of his own. Fourthly, The Women, at all meetings, do firſt taſte of the Cup, and ſo diſpoſe of it to the men; which cuſtom they have had amongſt them ever ſince Ogno, the Counteſs of Caſtile, attempted to have poyſoned her Son Sancho, in a Cup of Wine.

But to return again to the old Inhabitants; they were a people of that courage, that they defended the liberty of their Country againſt the Romans, when the reſidue of Spain was ſubdued; and were at laſt, not without great effuſion of blood, and manifeſt tokens of manly reſolution, and heroick ſpirits on their parts, vanquiſhed by the Darling of Fortune, Auguſtus. Such hilly and mountainous people, are always the laſt that are conquered, and the firſt that ſtand on their own guard: as beſides theſe Biſcans, the Navarrois and Aſturians, here in Spain, in reſpect of the Moors; and our Britains, in relation to the Saxons. Whether it be, that living in a ſharp air, and being inured to labour, they prove on occaſion good and able men; or that the Forts of Nature's own building are not ſo eaſily won, as defended; or that the unpleaſantneſs of the Country, and unfruitfulneſs of the Soil, yield no occaſion to ſtrangers to deſire an Adventure for it; I take not on me to determine. But being overcome at laſt, they were firſt caſt into the Province of Tarraconenſis; and ſo continued after the new modelling of Spain, by the Emperour Conſtantine. Under the Romans they continued, till that Empire fell; and then not conquered by the Goths, but reſigned over to them by the Romans, with the reſt of that Province. Nor loſt they any thing of their ancient and natural courage, by the intermixture of the Vaſcons; continuing ſtill good Souldiers both for Sea and Land; a ſtubborn, fierce, and couragious people; impatient of ſervitude, and not eaſie to be forced to any thing which they like not of. The laſt of all the Spaniards that ſubmitted to the fury of the Moors, (excepting thoſe of the Aſturia's, never conquered by them) and one of the firſt Provinces which ſhook off that yoak: animated and conducted in that undertaking, by Soria, deſcended of the Blood-Royal of Scotland, Anno 870. made upon that good ſervice, the firſt Lord of Biſcay. After this, they continued a free and diſtinct Eſtate, under their own Proprietary Lords and Princes of the Noble Family of Haro; till that Nero of Spain, Don Pedro the Cruel, violently took it from Donna Jeanne, the right Heir of it, Anno 1358. From which Donna Jeanne, the eldeſt Daughter, married to Ferdinand the younger Son of Ferdinand de la Cerde, the right heir of Caſtile, iſſued the Lady Jeanne Manuel, the Wife of Henry the ſecond, and Mother of John the firſt, both Kings of Caſtile: by which laſt, this Country was united to that Crown for ever, Anno 1379. The names of the Proprietary Lords of this Eſtate, we have in this following Catalogue of

The Lords of Biſcay.

A.Chr.
870	1	Soria, the Son of Lopes of Biſcay, but Nephew by the Mother's ſide to a King of Scotland, the firſt Lord of Biſcay.
	2	Manſo Lopes, the Son of Soria.
	3	Inigo the Deaf, Son of Manſo Lopes.
	4	Lopes Diaz, the Son of Inigo.
	5	Sancho Lopes, the Son of Lopes Diaz.
	6	Inigo II. the baſe Son of Lopes Diaz; the two Sons of Sancho Lopes, by reaſon of their tender years, being ſet aſide.
	7	Lopes Diaz II. Son of Inigo the ſecond.
	8	Diego Lopes, ſirnamed the White, Son of Lopes Diaz the ſecond.
	9	Lopes Diaz III. Son of Diego Lopes; the firſt who took unto himſelf the ſirname of Haro, from a Town of that name, of his foundation.
	10	Diego Lopes Diaz de Haro, Son of Lopes Diaz the third.
	11	Lopes Diaz IV. Son of Diego Lopes Diaz de Haro.
1257	12	Diego Lopes Diaz II. aſſiſted Sancho the ſecond ſon of K. Alfonſo the fifth of Caſtile, in excluding the Children of Don Ferdinand de la Cerde, his elder Brother; by which Sancho he was after ſlain. A reward not unſuitable to his bold attempt.
1289	13	Diego Lopes de Haro, the ſon of Diego.
1290	14	Diego Lopes III. the Brother of Diego Lopes Diaz the ſecond, the Founder of the Town of Bilbo.
1309	15	John of Caſtile, Brother to King Sancho, and Husband of Mary Diaz de Haro, Daughter of Diego Lopes the ſecond.
1319	16	John the Blind; ſo called, becauſe he had loſt an Eye; Son of John of Caſtile, and Mary Diaz of Haro; ſlain by King Alfonſo.
1329	17	John Nugnes of Lara, in right of his Wife, Daughter and Heir of John the Blind, (whoſe name I find not) ſucceeded after the deceaſe of Donna Maria Diaz.
1350	18	Nugno de Lara, an Infant of two years old, ſucceeded John Nugnes of Lara, his Father.
1351	15	Jean and Iſabel, the Siſters and Heirs of Nugno de Lara, ſeized upon by Don Pedro; and the whole Signeury of Biſcay ſubjected by ſtrong hand to the Crown of Caſtile, with many other fair Eſtates which depended on it.

The Arms of theſe Lords of Biſcay, were Argent, two Wolves Sable, each of them in his mouth a Lamb of the ſecond.

4. LEON and OVIEDO.

THE Kingdom of LEON and OVIEDO, hath on the Eaſt, the Country of Biſcay: on the North, the main Cantabrian Ocean: on the South, Caſtile: on the Weſt, Gallicia. So called from Leon and Oviedo, the chief Cities of it, and firſt Seat of their Kings; the ancienteſt Kingdom in all Spain. By a more ancient name it was called Aſturia, from the Aſtures; who poſſeſſed it in the time of the Romans: divided into the two general names of Auguſtani, and Tranſmontani; but comprehending the particular Tribes or Nations of the Peſici, Gigari, Zoelæ, and Lancienſes.

The Country mountainous and woody, but formerly of ſome eſteem for thoſe ſmall, though ſwift Horſes, which the Romans (from hence) called Aſturcones; we may read it, Hobbies; which afterwards became a common name for all Nags or Geldings: Aſturco Macedonicus, being uſed for a Macedonian Nag, by Petronius Arbiter.

It is divided commonly into two parts; that is to ſay, 1. Aſturia de Oviedo, bordering on Gallicia, towards the Weſt: and 2. Aſturia Santillana, confining on Biſcay, towards the Eaſt. From which diviſion of the Country, the eldeſt Son of Caſtile is called Prince of the Aſturia's in the plural number; which title ſome ſuppoſe to be given unto them, becauſe it was the firſt Country which held up againſt the Moors. But indeed, the true Original hereof, is referred by the beſt Spaniſh Writers, to the time of the marriage of Catharine, Daughter of John of Gaunt, and in right of her Mother Conſtance, the right Heir of Caſtile, unto Henry Son of John the firſt, then in poſſeſſion of that Kingdom. For to this new-married Couple it was granted, ſaith Mariana, that after the manner of England, where the Heir apparent is called Prince of Wales, they ſhould be called Princes of the Aſturia's. In times ſucceeding, the Towns of Jaen, Vbeda, Biatia, or Bacca, and Andujar, all ſituate near together in Andaluſia, and each of them inveſted with a goodly Territory, were added to the Patrimony and Eſtate hereof; and ſo continue to this day.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Sublanco, now a ſmall Village, but once a Town of ſo great ſtrength, that it was deſtroyed by the command of the Emperour Nerva, leſt it might animate theſe Mountainers unto a revolt, 2. LEON, ſituate at the foot of the Mountain, not far from the place of the old Sublanco, (as it was then called.) The Town but mean, were it not beautified by a fair and large Cathedral; the Biſhop whereof acknowledgeth no Metropolitan but the Pope alone. Recovered from the Moors, An. 722. Afterwards made the Regal Seat of the Kings of Leon: by ſome called Legio, becauſe the ſeventh Legion was here lodged: by Ptolomy called Legio Germanica; and by others, Gemina. 3. S. Andera, ſo named from a Church there built to the honour of S. Andrew; by Ptolomy called Flavionavie; now a well traded Port on the Cantabrian Ocean. 4. Santillana, which gives name to the Eaſtern part of Aſturia. 5. Llanes, where the two Aſturia's meet together. 6. Cividad Real, in the Weſtern part of Aſturia, called Aſturia de Oviedo. 7. Villa Vicioſa, the only noted Port in this part of the Country. 8. Aviles, on the borders of Gallicia, near the Sea, and not far from the Promontory called of old Promontorium Sythicum, but now Cabo de Pinnus. 9. OVIEDO, called for a time, the City of Biſhops, becauſe many of the Biſhops of Spain, diſpoſſeſſed of their Churches by the Moors, had retired thither; and there preſerved the line of Epiſcopal Succeſſion, till their Sees were filled again with Biſhops in more happy times. Anciently it was called Lucus Aſturum, and was of old a Biſhops See; re-edified by King Froila the firſt, in the year 757. Famous enough in giving the Title of a Kingdom to the firſt Chriſtian Princes, after the Conqueſt by the Moors; called from hence, Kings of Oviedo. Afterwards, An. 896, in the time of K. Ordogno the firſt, they began to be ſtiled Kings of Oviedo and Leon; and at laſt, Kings of Leon only; Oviedo being quite left out of the Regal ſtile, by Raymir the ſecond, Anno 940. More towards the Inlands of this Kingdom, (now reckoned part of old Caſtile) are 10. Palenza, the Palantia of Ptolomy and Antoninus, ſeated on the River Carrion, once a ſmall Univerſity, till the tranſlation of it unto Salamanca, by King Ferdinand the third. This Town firſt felt the fury of the Suevians, when they maſtered theſe parts of Spain. 11. Aſtorga, anciently called Auguſta Aſturica, whence the Aſtures of this Tract were called Auguſtani; a Biſhops See, frontiering on Gallicia: happy in this, that it felt not the fury of the luſtful King Vitiza; who to ſecure himſelf in his unlawful pleaſures, and to weaken his Subjects if they ſhould attempt any thing againſt him, diſmantled all the Towns in his Dominions, except Leon, Toledo, and this Aſtorga. 12. Benevent, on the South-eaſt of Aſtorga, which gave the title of Duke to Frederick the baſe Son of King Henry the 2d, of Caſtile, the ſtem of the potent Family of Spain, for the times they lived in. 13. Toro, the moſt Southern Town of all this Kingdom: and for that cauſe well fortified againſt the encroachments of the Caſtilians, till the uniting of the Kingdoms: made afterwards, (as lying neareſt to Caſtile, and the Court of the King) the ordinary place of conference with the States of Leon.

Who were the old Inhabitants of this Country, hath been ſhewn already. When conquered by Auguſtus Cæſar, they were made part of the Province of Tarraconenſis; part, afterwards, of the Province of Gallicia, by the Emperor Conſtantine. Won from the Romans, by the Goths; and from them, by the Moors; though long they did not lye under their command. For as the luſt of Roderick, the laſt King of the Goths in Spain, occaſioned the coming in of the Moors; ſo the luſt of Magnutza, a Mooriſh Vice-Roy, occaſioned (though in long courſe of time) their expulſion thence. For Magnutza having employed Pelagius, a young Prince of the Aſturia's, on an Embaſſie to Muſa the Lieutenant-General of the Moors, then reſiding at Corduba, in his abſence raviſhed his Siſter, and at his return died by the edge of his Sword. Deſpairing of pardon for this act, he was fain to ſtand upon his guard, and fortifie himſelf in the Mountainous places of this Country; to which many of the old Inhabitants reſorted, put themſelves under his command, and elected him to be their King: firſt by the name of King of the Aſturia's; and after by the title of King of Leon, when he had got that City into his hands; as being the City of moſt note, and the ſtrongeſt Hold that he was poſſeſſed of. The Kingdom at the firſt beginning, contained only the more mountainous parts of the two Aſturia's; enlarged a little further South, on the taking of Leon by this firſt Pelagius. Afterwards, by the valour of Ordogno the ſecond, it extended over both Aſturia's, Gallicia, and the Old Caſtile: divided from the Moors by the Mountains of Avila, and Segovia; but more defended by the valour of the people, and Gallantry of their Princes, than it was by thoſe Mountains. Kings of moſt note, beſides the two before remembred, were 1. Mauregate, the baſe Son of Alfonſo the firſt; who having by the help of Abderamen, King of the Moors, obtained the Kingdom, came to a baſe agreement with them; in which he bound himſelf to pay them, as a yearly Tribute, 50 Virgins of Noble Families, and as many of inferiour birth: for which he dyed hated and deteſted of all men. 2. Raymir the firſt, who ſo diſcomfited the Moors at the Battel of Clavigio, near Calahorra in Navarre, An.836, that from that time the Power and reputation of the Kings of Corduba began to languiſh. 3. Alfonſo the third, who refuſed to pay unto the Moors the ſaid tribute of Virgins; and for his many Victories againſt the Moors, was ſirnamed, The Great: who being outed of the Kingdom by his Son Garcia, not only patiently digeſted ſo great a wrong, but willingly became his Son's Lieutenant againſt the Moors. 4. Veramund the ſecond, choſen King in the minority of Raymir the third; in whoſe time the Moors took Leon, and ſpoiled the Church of S. James in Gallicia; but were after beaten to their homes with the loſs of many of their own places. 5. Veramund the third, who making War againſt Ferdinand the firſt, King of Caſtile, was by him ſlain in Battel; the Conqueror ſeizing on his Kingdom in right of Sancha his Wife, the Siſter of Veramund; the three Kings next ſucceeding, being Kings of both. 6. Ferdinand the third, Son of Alfonſo the 9th, and of Berengaria, the younger Siſter of Henry King of Caſtile; by the Power and Policy of his Mother, ſeized on the Caſtiles, of right belonging to Blanch the elder Siſter, Wife of Lewis, Son to Philip the ſecond, King of France: and after the death of his Father, ſucceeded in Leon. Of whom we ſhall hear more when we come to Caſtile. After this time, theſe Kingdoms never were divided, but incorporate into one Eſtate, called for a long time the Kingdom of Caſtile and Leon: though afterwards Leon was left out of the Regal ſtyle, and only that of Caſtile mentioned; except in Legal Inſtruments, Letters Patents, and Inſtruments of Negotiation with Foreign Princes. The whole ſucceſſion of theſe Kings, the Hiſtories of Spain thus preſent unto us.

The Kings of Oviedo and Leon.

1028	23	Veramund III. Son of Alfonſo. 9.
1037	24	Sancha, Siſter of Veramund. Ferdinand, King of Caſtile. 30.
1607	25	Alfonſo VI. the youngeſt Son of Ferdinand and Sancha: firſt King of Leon only; but after the death of Sancho's elder Brother, he ſucceeded alſo in Caſtile. 41.
1126	26	Vrraca, the Daughter of Alfonſo. Alfonſo VII. King of Aragon and Navarre. 13.
1122	27	Alfonſo VIII. the Son of Vrraca, by Raymond of Burgundy, ſucceeded in Leon and Caſtile. 35.
1157	28	Ferdinand II. younger Son of Alfonſo, King of Leon only. 31.
1188	20	Alfonſo IX. Son of Ferdinand. 42.
1230	30	Ferdinand III. Son of Alfonſo, by Berengaria, or Berenguela, Siſter of Henry of Caſtile, by the power and practices of his Mother, ſucceeded in the Realm of Caſtile, whilſt his Father lived, An. 1217, to the prejudice of Blanch her elder Siſter, married to Lewis the eighth of France; by whom ſhe had Lewis the ninth, and other children. Which Lewis the ninth, on the marriage of Blanch his eldeſt Daughter, with Ferdinand eldeſt Son of Alfonſo the fifth, ſurrendred all rights in the Crown of Caſtile, and ſo confirmed the ſame more abſolutely to the houſe of Leon, Anno 1267; though neither this Ferdinand, nor Blanch, nor any of their Heirs, did attain that Kingdom; diſſeized thereof by Sancho a younger Son. The Kingdoms never ſince that time disjoined, as they had been twice before ſince the firſt uniting.

The Arms of this Kingdom are Argent, a Lyon Paſſant, crowned Or. Which Arms when it was joined to the Kingdom of Caſtile, were quartered with the Coat thereof: that being the firſt time (as Cambden notes) that ever Arms were born Quartered. Followed herein by Edward the third of England, who not only took unto himſelf the title of King of France, but (to ſhew his right unto that Crown) quartered the Flower de Lyces with his Engliſh Lions.

5. GALLICIA.

GALLICIA, or GALÆCIA, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Aſturia's, from which parted by the River Mearo; on the South with Portugal, from which divided by the River Minio; on the North with the Cantabrian; and on the Weſt with the Atlantick Oceans. The ancient Inhabitants of it, were the Gallaici, (whence it had the name) diſtinguiſhed into the ſeveral Tribes of the Bedyi, Sueri, Cilini, Capori, and Lemavi, ſpoken of by Ptolomy.

The Country, like that of the Aſturia's, mountainous, and almoſt inacceſſible, overſpread with the Cantabrian Hills; and ſo the fitter to hold out againſt Foreign Invaſions, in defence of Liberty and Religion: in that regard choſen for a retiring-place by the diſtreſſed and vanquiſhed Chriſtians, in their firſt Wars againſt the Moors: Not well inhabited to this day; not ſo much for the hillineſs of the Country, as for want of Water; which defect makes the people generally draw more towards the Sea, where they improve their Fortunes by trade and fiſhing. The barrenneſs of the Country recompenſed heretofore by the rich Mines of Gold and Silver, which in this Country, and the Aſtures, and ſome part of Luſitania, afforded yearly 20000 pound weight of Gold unto the Romans, amounting in our money to two millions of Crowns: but now no ſuch Mines found in it of any value. Inſtead of which, it yieldeth the beſt Mines for Iron, of any Province of Spain: for which their Waters are ſo proper, that they are ſaid to fortifie and improve the metal.

Places of principal importance are, 1. Compoſtella, an Univerſity and Arch-biſhops See, vulgarly called St. Jage, in honour of St. James, the Son of Zebedee, whom they pretend to be buried here, and of whom there is denominated an Order of Knights: his Relicks ſaid to be kept in the chief Church of it, worſhipped by the Romaniſts with great devotion: and drawing to this place a wonderful concourſe of people, coming thither on pilgrimage. 2. Baiona, not far from the mouth of the River Minio. 3. Corunna, by Ptolomy called Flavium Brigantium; by us Engliſh, the Groyn: often mentioned in the ſtory of our Wars with the Spaniard, in Queen Elizabeth's time; then taken by the Engliſh: but ſince, very well fortified to avoid the like ſurpriſal. Divided then, as now, into the High Town, and the Low; ſituate on the Cantabrian Sea, betwixt the Promontory Trilencum, now Cabo Ortegal, lying towards the Eaſt; and that of old called Nerium, now Cabo Finis terræ; as being the moſt Weſtern end of the then known World. 4. Orenus, upon the Minia, a Biſhops-See, by Ptolomy called Aquæ Calidæ, from the Bathes here being, now much commended for the beſt Wines. 5. Tui, on the River, frontiering upon Portugal: a Biſhops See, in ancient Writers called Tude. 6. Ponte-vedre, 7. Ribadeo: both upon the Sea, both fitted with convenient Harbours.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof, as before is ſaid, were the Gallaici, one of the laſt Nations which ſubmitted to the Power of the Romans: by whom firſt made a part of Tarraconenſis; after, a Province of it ſelf, by the name of Gallicia; the Aſturia's, and ſome part of the old Caſtile and Portugal, being added to it. In the declining of that Empire, the Suevi, a potent Nation of Germany, accompanying the Vandals and Alani in their tranſmigrations, invaded Spain, and firſt poſſeſſed themſelves of this Country. But not content with their Eſtate, they warred on the Silinges, (a Vandal; Tribe) then poſſeſſing Bætica, whom they vanquiſhed, and took that Province from them, under the conduct of Rechila their ſecond King. They added, ſhortly after, Luſitania, to their former Conqueſts: ſtopped in their career, by Theodorick the ſecond, King of the Goths: by whom vanquiſhed, and confined again within Gallicia, which they enjoyed till the final ruine of their Kingdom by Leutigild the Goth, Anno 858: reduced then to a Province of the Gothiſh Kingdom. Their habitation before their coming into Spain, was in the Eaſtern part of Germany, beyond the Elb. Their Religion at the firſt, under Recciarius their third King, was very Orthodox, and ſound. But vanquiſhed by the Goths, and obliged unto them for the reſtoring of their Kingdom, they fell off to Arianiſm: perſiſting in that Hereſie for the ſpace of an hundred years, and then again returning to the Catholick Faith, under Theodmire their King; therein continuing conſtant till their final overthrow. The Kings hereof (as many as are upon Record) are theſe that follow.

The Kings of the Suevi in Gallicia.

1 Hermenericus; who firſt brought the Suevians into Spain, and poſſeſſed Gallicia, Arcadius and Honorius, then Emperors of the Eaſt and Weſt.
2 Reohila, who conquered the Siliges, and ſubdued Bætica.
3 Recciarius, the firſt Chriſtian King who won Luſitania; afterwards vanquiſhed and ſlain by Theodorick, King of the Goths; the Suevians for a time becoming ſubject to that King.
4 Maſdras, reſtored unto the Kingdom by Theodorick.
5 Frumarius, the Son of Maſdras.
6 Remiſmundus, Brother of Frumarius, recovered ſome part of Luſitania, and fell off to Arianiſm.
7 Theodomirus, the Reſtorer of the Catholick Faith amongſt the Suevians.
8 Ariamirus, Son to Theodmire.
9 Eboricus, the Son of Ariamirus, depoſed and ſhorn Monk by Andeca.
10 Andeca, the laſt King of the Suevi in Gallicia, or rather the Uſurper of the Regal Title, ſerved in the ſame kind by Leutigildis, King of the Goths, as he had ſerved Eboricus his Lord and Maſter. After which time, Gallicia was made a Province of the Gothiſh Monarchy, and the name of Suevians no more heard of in Spain. In times enſuing, it became a part of the Kingdom of Leon, by the Kings whereof it was won piece-meal from the Moors, as their fortunes favoured them. Erected to a Kingdom by Alfonſo the third, ſirnamed the Great, Anno 886; and given unto Ordogno his ſecond Son: by whoſe ſucceſſion to the Crown on the death of his elder Brother Garcia, it was again united to the Kingdom of Leon; but ſo as to continue a Realm diſtinct. In the year 955, the Gallicians not brooking the ill qualities of Raymir the third, elected Veramund for their King, the Son of Ordogno the third, and right Heir of the Kingdom: who, coming to the Crown of Leon on the death of Raymir, did once again unite it unto that Eſtate. Diſmembred from it once more by Ferdinand the firſt King of Caſtile and Leon, who gave it unto Garcia his youngeſt Son, Anno 1067; but conquered ſhortly after by Sancho the eldeſt Son of Ferdinand; by whom Garcia was diſcomfited and impriſoned, Anno 1081. Never ſince ſeparated from the Crown of Caſtile and Leon: but when Leon was ſevered from Caſtile; going along with Leon in thoſe ſeparations, till the union of thoſe Kingdoms in the perſon of Ferdinand the ſecond, Anno 1230; the Caſtilians being then grown better Stateſmen, than to canton Kingdoms.

The Arms hereof were Azure, ſemee of Croſſets Pitchee, a Chalice crowned Or.

6. The Kingdom of CORDUBA.

Having thus ſurveyed thoſe Provinces under the Government of Caſtile, which lye at the foot of the Pyrenees, and on the ſhores of the Northern or Cantabrian Ocean; we will next look on thoſe which lye more towards the Straights of Gibralter, and the Mediterranean, and ſo come round at laſt to Caſtile it ſelf. And firſt, we will begin with the Kingdom of CORDUBA

DVBA, which at firſt erection of it, contained all thoſe parts of Spain conquered by the Moors, and not again recovered by the King of Leon and Navarre: contracted within narrower bounds, when ſubdued by the King of Caſtile; at that time comprehending only the Provinces of Andaluſia, Extramadura, Granada, and the Iſle of Gades. We will conſider it, notwithſtanding, in both capacities: in the firſt and largeſt notion, as unto the ſtory and affairs thereof, till diſtracted by the Moors, into many Kingdoms: in the laſt and ſtricteſt, as to the Chorographie, and deſcription of it.

The Kingdom of CORDVBA, as it ſtood when ſubdued by the Spaniards, was bounded on the Eaſt with Murcia, and the Mediterranean; on the Weſt with Portugal, and the Ocean; on the North with the Mountains of Sierra Morena, and Caſtile; and on the South with the Ocean, the Straights of Gibraltar, and the Midland Seas: ſo called from Corduba, the chief City of it, and the Seat-Royal of their Kings.

It contained, as before was ſaid, the Provinces of 1. Andaluſia, 2. Gades, 3. Extramadura, and 4. Granada. But becauſe Granada had the fortune to continue a Kingdom, when the reſt were conquered, we will conſider it by it ſelf; and here proceed to the deſcription of the other three.

1. ANDALVSIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Granada; on the Weſt with the Atlantick Ocean, and Algarve in Portugal: on the North, with Sierra Morena, and Extremadura: on the South, with the Ocean, the Straights, and the Mediterranean. By Pliny it is called Conventus Cordubenſis, from Corduba, at that time the chief City of it: and after, Andaluſia, quaſi Vandaluſia, from the Vandals; who having won it from the Romans had for ſome time (and till their expulſion into Africa) poſſeſſed themſelves of it.

This is the moſt rich and fertile Country of all Spain; extreamly fruitful of Wine, Oyl, Oranges, (which laſt being ſhipped at Sevil, and ſo brought for England, are by us called by the name of Sevil Oranges) and better furniſhed with Corn than moſt part of this Continent; watred with the Rivers, 1. Anas, 2. Odier, 3. Bætis, and 4. Tenot: which makes it flouriſh with a continual greenneſs of Olives, Vines, and other Fruits; of which the Hills, though watered only with the dew of Heaven, do partake alſo in reaſonable meaſure. The Air hereof, by reaſon of its Southernly ſituation, is exceeding hot, inſomuch that their Corn there is ripe in April: but thoſe exceſſive heats, much moderated by thoſe conſtant refreſhings which the cool winds, breathing from the North, do beſtow upon it. In which reſpect King Ferdinand the Catholick did uſe to ſay, that it was beſt living in the Summer at Sevil, (one of the chief Cities of this Province) by reaſon of theſe cool refreſhings, and in the winter-time at Burgos in old Caſtile, which though ſituate more Northernly, in a very ſharp Air, had yet many notable defences againſt the cold.

The principal Cities and Towns hereof, are 1. Corduba, ſeated at the foot of Sierra Morena, on the left ſhore of Guadalquiver, overlooking towards the South, a ſpacious and fruitful Plain. Firſt founded by Marcellus a Roman Conſul, An. V. C. 601; employed at that time in the Wars of Spain: the firſt Colony planted in this Province by the Romans, and the chief City of Bætica. For a long time the Seat of the Mooriſh Vice-Roys, Lieutenants to the great Caliph of the Saracens; after, of its own Kings of that Nation, who built here for their Palace, a magnificent Caſtle. Reduced by Ferdinand of Caſtile, it was reſtored unto the honour of an Epiſcopal See; which anciently it had, and doth now enjoy. A City of great circuit, but of very few Houſes, by reaſon of the multitude of Gardens in it. Famous in former times for the birth of Lucan, and both the Seneca's.

Duoſque Senecas, unicumque Lucanum,
Fœcunda loquitur Corduba: ſaith Martial.

Corduba glorying in her fruitful field.
One Lucan, and two Seneca's did yield.

Nor was it leſs fruitful of good wits in the times ſucceeding. For not to ſay any thing of Hoſius that renowned Confeſſor, who was Biſhop here in the times of Conſtantine, and before: it was a flouriſhing Univerſity in the time of the Moors: Avicen, Averroes, Rhaſis, Almanſor, Meſſahalah, thoſe famous Philoſophers and Phyſicians, being Students or Profeſſors in it. It is now vulgarly called Cordova; and hence cometh our true Cordovan Leather, made of the Skin of a Sardinian Beaſt. Near unto this City, is a Wood of 30 miles in length, having nothing but Olive-trees. 2. Jaen, a Biſhops See; remarkable for nothing more, than that the Kings of Spain, ever ſince the firſt recovery of it, have ſtiled themſelves Kings of Jaen, and uſe it to this day amongſt the reſt of their Titles: it having been, before that time, the ſeat and title of ſome petit Kings amongſt the Moors. Not far hence ſtood the famous Town of Illiturgis, (by Ptolomy, Illurgis) mentioned ſo often in the Wars betwixt Rome and Carthage. 3. Oſuna, of moſt note for the Dukes hereof, and a ſmall Univerſity founded here, Anno 1549. 4 Eccia, on the River Chenil; of more eſteem formerly, than at the preſent: by Ptolomy and Antoninus called Aſtigi, by Pliny, Auguſta Firma; a Roman Colony, and one of the four Juridical Reſorts of Bætica. 5. Marchena, ſituate on an Hill, where is ſaid to be the beſt breed of Gennets, (a ſwift race of Horſes) not of this Province alone, but of all Spain: the River Bætis (as it was thought) conveying ſome ſecret virtue into them. Of this Race was the Horſe which Cæſar ſo loved, that he erected his Statue (when dead) in the Temple of Venus: and the ancient Luſitani thought they were begotten by the Wind. 6. Xerxes, ſituate more within the Mid-lands, towards the borders of Granada, and therefore called Xeros de la Frontera, (the Aſta of Ptolomy and Antoninus) famous for plenty of that Wine which we call Xeres Sack: but more for that great and fatal Battel fought near unto it, betwixt K. Roderick and the Moors; the loſs of which, drew along with it the loſs of Spain. 7. Medina Sedonia, (ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from a Town of Caſtile, called Medina Cœli) the Duke whereof was General of all the Forces both by Sea and Land, intended for the Conqueſt of England, Anno 1588. The Town called anciently Aſinda, and Aſido Cæſariana; the Duke whereof is of the Family of the Guzmans, and the greateſt Prince, for Revenue, in all Spain; his Intrado being eſtimated at 130000 Crowns per annum. 8. Algezire, on the Sea-ſide; a Town of ſuch ſtrength and conſequence, that it held out a Siege 19 months, for the Moors of Africk, againſt Alfonſo the fifth of Caſtile; to whom ſurrendred at the laſt upon Compoſition, Anno 1343. Since which, the Kings of Caſtile have ſtiled themſelves Kings of Algezire; not yet diſcontinued. 9. Conil, a Town on the Sea-coaſt, beyond the Iſle of Gades, part of the Patrimony of the D. of Medina Sidonia. 10. Gibralter, a ſtrong Town, ſeated at the mouth of the Straights from hence denominated, lying at the foot of the Mountain of Gaipe, ſuppoſed to be one of Hercules Pillars; the furtheſt point Southwards of all Europe. 11. S. Lucar de Barameda, (the Luciferi forum of the Ancients) the Port-Town to Sevill, ſituate at the mouth of the River Bætis, or Guadalquiver: where the Ships of that rich City ride, either for a fair wind to put to Sea, or for a tide to carry them up the River, as they come from America. 12. Tariffa, ſeated at the end of the Promontory which looks towards Africk; and ſo called, becauſe Tariff, Leader of the Moors into Spain, here landed: recovered from the Moors by Sancho the third of Caſtile, Anno 1292, or thereabouts; the firſt Governour thereof being Alfonſo Peres de Guzman, the firſt Founder of the now potent Family of Medina Sidonia. Suppoſed by ſome to be the Carteia of the Ancients. And if ſo, then a Colony of the Libertines (begotten on ſome unmarried Spaniſh Women, by the Roman Souldiers) placed here, and indulged the Priviledges of the Latins, by Decree of the Senate, An. V. C. 600. Not far from theſe laſt Towns, in a little Iſland made by two branches of the Bætis, where it falleth into the Sea, ſtood the famous 13. Tarteſſus, celebrated in moſt ancient Writers, for the abundance of Silver which the Mines of it did produce. Which was ſo great, that (as we read in Ariſtotle's Book de Mirabilibus) when the Tyrians or Phœnicians firſt came thither, ὥςε μηκέτι χωρεῖν δύνασθαι, μήτε ἐπιδέξασθαι τὸν ἄργυρον, that their Ships were neither able to contain or tranſport it thence: inſomuch that they were fain to make their Anchors, and other Utenſils, of Silver. The like commodity the Græcians found in their Voyages hither, of which Herodotus maketh mention, Lib. IV. Hereupon ſome have been perſwaded, that the Ships which Solomon built to go for Tarſhiſh, (whereof we read 1 Kings 10.22.) were bound no further than this place. As for the ſituation of it, that it was neither Tariff, as ſome, or Carteia, as others do conjecture, (though where Carteia was, be alike uncertain, if it were not the ſame with Tariff) but in a ſmall Iſland, at the mouth of the River Bætis, as before is ſaid, doth appear by Strabo; who telleth us, that Bætis falls into the Sea with two mouths or chanels, πόλιν ἐν τῷ μεταξὺ χάρῳ κατοικεῖσθαι, ἣν καλεῖσθαι Τάρτησσον, &c. and that in the midſt thereof there is a City called Tarteſſus, of the ſame name with the River, (for Bætis anciently was ſo named) from whence the whole Country thereabouts is called Tarteſſus. The like Pauſanias ſaith expreſly in his Eliaca. Which ſituation of this Town in an Iſland, at the mouth of Bætis, occaſioned Pliny, and ſome others of the ancient Writers, to give the name of Tarteſſus to the Iſle of Gades; whereof more anon.

In the mean time go we on to 14. Sevil, (in Latin, Hiſpalis) the faireſt City, not only of Andaluzia, but of all Spain. It is in compaſs ſix miles, divided into two parts by the Bætis; but joined together by a ſtrong and beautiful Bridge; the whole environed with beautiful Walls, and adorned with many magnificent and ſtately Buildings, as Palaces, Churches, and Monaſteries; amongſt which, that of the Gertoſins, or Carthuſians, is endowed with 25000 Crowns of yearly Revenue. It is alſo the See of an Arch-biſhop, under whoſe Juriſdiction are ſaid to be 20000 Villages; and a moſt flouriſhing Univerſity, wherein ſtudied Avicen the Moor, that excellent and learned Scholar: Pope Sylveſter the ſecond, and Leander, who was Arch-biſhop hereof, about the year 580; a ſtout defender of the Catholick tendries of the Church againſt the Arians. The Univerſity adorned with one of the greateſt and goodlieſt Libraries in the Chriſtian World; furniſhed by Diego, the Son of Chriſtopher Columbus, the firſt Founder of it, with no fewer than 12000 Volumes, in ſeveral Languages, gathered together with extraordinary charge and care: and endowed with a very fair Revenue for the maintenance and enlargement of it. Famous in former times, for two Provincial Councils holden here; the firſt, Anno 584; the laſt, Anno 636; and at the preſent, for that here are continually maintained 30000 Gennets for the ſervice of the King; but moſt of all, for the great traffick of the place. For from this Town the Caſtilians ſet forwards towards America; and here they do diſcharge the Fleets of Gold and Silver, which they bring from thence. To this Town come the Pearls of Cubagna, and the Emeralds of S. Martha, the Cochineile of Mexico, the Corals of Hiſpaniola, and, in a word, the whole treaſure of the New-found-World. Here is the publick Emporie of all Spain, for her Wines, Oranges, and Oyls; ſent from hence in ſo great abundance into all parts of Europe, that the people uſe to ſay, in the way of a By-word, That if there enter not into Sevil 4000 Pipes of Wine every day in the year, the Farmer of the Cuſtoms is ſure to break: inſomuch as the Revenues coming out of this City only, are worth a very good Realm to the Catholick King: Maginus reckoning it at no leſs than a Million of Crowns yearly. Laſtly, here reſteth the body of Chriſtopher Columbus, the fortunate diſcoverer of the New-World, with a Latin Epitaph upon his Tomb; but ſhort (God knoweth) of the great merit of the Man: of which more hereafter.

As for the Fortunes of this City, as they relate to Eccleſiaſtical or Spiritual matters, it hath been long the See of an Arch-biſhop, (as before is ſaid) next in revenue and degree unto him, of Toledo; his revenue eſtimated at 100000 Crowns per annum; his Juriſdiction reaching over all Andaluſia, and the Fortunate Iſlands; in which are ſaid to be contained 20000 Villages; the very Dioceſes of which, being ſaid to comprehend 2000 Benefices, beſides Frieries, Nunneries, and Hoſpitals, which may make the former computation of the Villages, ſubject to his Power, as a Metropolitan of more eaſie credit Yet not ſo much conſiderable for its Wealth and Revenue, as for being once the See of Iſidore, ſo much renowned (conſidering the time he lived in) for the univerſality of his learning; who was Biſhop here, called uſually Iſidorus Hiſpalenſis, to diſtinguiſh him from another of that name in Egypt, called Peluſiota. As for the civil Fortunes of it, in the declining of the Moors, when their Eſtate was broken into many Realms and Principalities, it became a Kingdom of it ſelf under a noble Moor named Allcorrexi, An. 966. One of the Kings whereof called Almuneamuz, was of ſo great power, that he had the Regal City of Corduba, and the greateſt part of Andaluſia, under his command, made ſubject with the reſt of the Moors in Spain, to the Miramolines of Morocco, An. 1091, till the retreat of Mahomet Enaſer unto Africk, An. 1214. After which, once more made a Kingdom in the perſon of Aben Lalle, a great Prince of the Moors; but no longer continuing in that Royal Dignity and Eſtate, than till the year 1248, when taken and ſubdued by Ferdinand the ſecond of Caſtile, and made a part of his Eſtate: but ſo, that it remaineth a Realm diſtinct in the Regal ſtile; in which the Kings of Spain are called Kings of Sevil.

2. South of Andaluſia, at the mouth of Guadalquiver, ſtands the Iſle of GADES, diſtant from the main land 700 paces, and joined unto it with a Bridge called Puento de Suaco. It is in length 13 miles, of a very fruitful ſoil; beſides the riches which it gets by Fiſhing, and making of Salt. Firſt peopled by the Tyrians 562 years before the Birth of CHRIST; ſubdued by the Carthaginians, An. V.C. 236, being invited by the Tyrians to aid them in a defenſive War againſt the Spaniards: and was the laſt hold which the Carthaginians had in Spain, out of which beaten by the valour and good fortune of Scipio Africanus. Here ſtood in ancient times a Temple conſecrated to the honour of Hercules; in which all Seafaring-men (at their being here) uſed to pay their vows, and offer ſacrifice, as being arrived at the furtheſt parts of all the World.

Places of moſt importance in it, are, 1 Porto Real, a fair and capacious Haven, between the Town of Cadiz, and the main Land of Andaluſia. 2 Santa Maria, another Port more towards the North. 3 Cadis, or Gades, the chief Town of the Iſland, and giving name unto the whole. Situate on the Weſtern part of the whole Iſle, on a large Bay, ſerving as a Road for the Indian Fleet; by the reſort and trade whereof, it is much enriched. Firſt founded by the Tyrians, afterwards made a Municipal City, by the Romans; and one of the Juridical Reſorts for the Province of Bætica: in whoſe times it was held to be the nobleſt and richeſt in all Spain, not yielding to any in the Empire, for greatneſs, magnificence, or number of Inhabitants of account and quality. In ſo much, that here lived, at one time, 500 Roman Knights; which number was not equalled in any one place, except Padua only: beſides the great concourſe of Merchants from all parts of the World. Which great reſort, occaſioned Cornelius Balbus, a Native of it, to add a new Town to the old, the whole circumference of both being 20 Furlongs. By the Moors, at their conqueſt of Spain, it was utterly ruined, but ſince repaired, well fortified, and made the Magazin for the Ammunition of the Spaniſh Navies. Taken, notwithſtanding, in one day by the Engliſh, under the command of Charles Lord Effingham, Robert Earl of Eſſex, and Sir Walter Raleigh; in which they burned the Indian Fleet, conſiſting of 40 Ships, whoſe Lading was worth 8 Millions of Crowns; overcame the Spaniſh Navy, conſiſting of 57 Men of War; took the St. Michael, and the St. Andrew, two great Galleons, and their luggage; ſpoiled and carried away more Martial Furniture, than could be ſupplied in many years; and forced the Town, in which they ſlew, and took Priſoners, 4000 Foot, and 600 Horſe, and brought thence a very great booty in the ſackage of it, Anno 1596. The fortunacy of which enterpriſe, gave occaſion to one of the Wits then living, to frame this excellent Anagram on the name of the Earl of Eſſex, (who was looked on as the greateſt Adventurer in it) viz. Devereux. Vere dux. Which he aftewards caſt into this Diſtich.

Vere dux De'vreux, & verior Hercule; GADES
Nam ſemel hic vidit, vicit at ille ſimul.

Alcides yields to Devereux; he did ſee
Thy beauties (Cales) but Devereux conquer'd thee.

Near to this Iſle, is that ſo celebrated Straight, called by ſome, Fretum Gaditanum, for the nearneſs of it to this Iſland; by others, Fretum Herculeum, not becauſe Hercules did there break out a paſſage to let the Ocean into the Mediterranean, as the Poets fable; but becauſe of the two Pillars which he cauſed to be erected on each ſide of it, with the inſcription of Nil Vltra, this being ſuppoſed to be the furtheſt Country Weſtward. But when that ſuppoſition was proved untrue by the diſcovery of America, Charles the fifth being in thoſe parts, cauſed two new Pillars to be placed where the old ones ſtood, or rather, where he thought they ſtood, and Plus Vltra to be written on them. As for thoſe Pillars ſo much memorized in the ancient Writers, ſome place them in the Temple of Heroules, within this Iſland; others, on the Promontory of Calpe in Spain, and that of Abila in Africk: and ſome again in two little Iſlands near thoſe Promontories. This therefore being a matter doubtful, and not worth the looking after, let us return unto the Straight, called now the Straight of Gibraltar, from the Town and Caſtle of Gabraltar, ſituate on the brink hereof; the Straight being in length fifteen miles; and in breadth, where it is narroweſt, ſeven.

EXTREMADVRA hath on the Eaſt and North, Caſtile; on the Weſt, Portugal; and on the South Andaluſia. It was firſt called Bæturia, from the River Bætis, which runneth through it; and for diſtinction's ſake, Beturia Celtica, from the Celtici, then the Inhabitants of this Tract; to difference it from Bæturia Turdulorum, containing thoſe parts of Granada, and Andaluſia, which lye neareſt unto Tarraconenſis. And when firſt it had the name of Extremadura, it was of larger extent than now it is, reaching unto the Banks of the River Ducro, the bounds, at that time, of the Kingdom of the Moriſco's; ſo called by the Chriſtians, as lying on the extremities, or furtheſt ſide of that River.

Principal places in it, are, 1 Alcantara, on the banks of the River Tagus, ſituate near the ruins of Norba Cæſarea, deſtroyed by Petronius and Afranius, two of Pompey's Captains, for adhering faithfully to Cæſar: now of moſt note for an Order of Knights here ſeated, and from hence denominated; whereof more hereafter. 2 Guadalcanal, famous for its Mines of Silver and Gold. 3 Merida, ſituate alſo on the Tagus; firſt called Auguſta Emerita, founded and made a Colony by Auguſtus Cæſar, who placed herein his old Soldiers, whom the Romans called Emeriti; hence it had the name. The chief City, after that, of Luſitania; and, by Auſonius, preferred before any in Spain: now ruinous, meanly built, and but ill inhabited: Famous for nothing, but the Bridge upon the River Tagus, a Monument of the Roman greatneſs. Nigh to this Town was fought that memorable battel betwixt Wallia, the firſt King of the Goths in Spain; and Attace, King of the Alani and Silinges, (this laſt a people of the Vandals) the victory whereof falling to the Goths, cauſed the whole Nation of the Vandals to draw forth out of Spain. 4 Medelino, near which the River Guadiana hideth it ſelf under the ground, for the ſpace of ten leagues; but more famous for the birth of Ferdinand Cortez, the fortunate Diſcoverer and Conqueror of the Realm of Mexico. 5 Badaios, a Biſhops See on the borders of Portugal. 6 Guadalupe, on a River of the ſame name; renowned amongſt thoſe of the Church of Rome, for the Miracles and Image of our Lady of Guadalupe; as much reſorted to in Spain, as our Lady of Loretto in Italy. 7 Placenza, a Biſhops See, near the Hills of Caſtile; amongſt which Hills, (by reaſon of their ſtrength and ſafety) Sertorius made his laſt retreat, when perſecuted by the Romans of the contrary Faction; and where he was moſt wickedly ſlain by Perpenna, and ſome other of his own Aſſociates. Not far from hence, if it be not in the ſelf-ſame place, in a retired and ſolitary Valley, ſtandeth the Monaſtery of Saint Juſtus, remarkable for a greater Miracle than any the Lady of Guadalupe is able to boaſt of: which is, that Charles the fifth, that moſt puiſſant Monarch, having reſigned his Empire to his Brother Ferdinand, and all the reſt of his Dominions to his Son Philip the ſecond, did here bid farewel unto the World; ſpending the reſidue of his time in Prayers and devout Meditations. The greateſt Monument and Example of Self-denial, which theſe later Ages have afforded. Far beyond any abnegation of the World by our Cloyſtered-Monks, or any quitting of their Crowns by ſome Kings and Emperors in the darker Ages of the Church; who living in the time of Ignorance and Superſtition, ſaw not ſo clearly what they did, (or did it out of weakneſs, and want of ſpirit) as this Maſculine and Heroick Emperor.

The old Inhabitants of theſe Countries, were the Turduli, the Baſtuli, and the Turditani, of Andaluſia, and Granada; the Celtici, and ſome part of the Luſitani, in Extremadura, all vanquiſhed by the Romans, during the ſecond Punick War, under the fortunate command of Scipio Africanus. From them extorted by the Vandals, who paſſing over into Africk, left it to the Suevians; loſt by them to Theodorick the fourth King of the Goths, who hereby added all Bætica to his other Dominions. Under the Goths it remained ſubject till their fatal overthrow by the Moors, who having made almoſt an entire Conqueſt of all the Continent of Spain, were at firſt ſubject to the Great Caliphs, Lords of the Saracenical Empire; governing here by their Lieutenants, from Vlidor Vlit, under whom they firſt made this Conqueſt, Anno 714; to Abdalla, of the Houſe of Alaveci, Anno 757. At what time Abderamen, of the Line of Mahomet the Impoſtor, and firſt Emperor of the Saracens, flying the fury of Abdalla, by whom the old Line of the Caliphs, of the Race of Humeia (of which Race this Abderamen was) had been diſpoſſeſſed of that Empire; came into Spain, and was with great joy entertained by the Spaniſh Moors, cordially affected to his Houſe: whoſe Government he took upon him, diſcharged of all ſubjection and ſubordination to the Caliphs, or Mahometan Emperors, and making it an abſolute Kingdom of it ſelf. In his Race it continued without any fraction or ſubdiviſion, till the time of Hizen the ſecond, the tenth King of theſe Spaniſh Moors: after whoſe death, diſtracted amongſt many petit Tyrants, till they were all brought under by the Moors of Africk; of which more anon. In the mean time, take here the Catalogue of the Kings of theſe Moors of Spain, called commonly, from Corduba, their Royal Seat,

The Kings of Corduba.

A. C.

757 1 Abderamen, the firſt Soveraign-Prince of the Moors in Spain. 31.

787 2 Hizen, the ſecond ſon of Abderamen, by whom Zuleima, his elder Brother, was put by his Throne. 7.

794 3 Hali Hatan, the Son of Hizen. 24.

819 4 Abderamen II. Son of Hali Hatan, diſcomfited by the Chriſtians in the memorable battel of Clavigio, Anno 836.

839 5 Mahomet, Son of Abderamen the ſecond, who reduced Toledo, then revolted, under his Command. 35.

874 6 Almundie, the Son of Mahomet. 2.

876 7 Abdalla, Brother to Almundie, and as little memorable.

889 8 Abderamen III. ſirnamed Almanſor, too fortunate in his Wars againſt the Chriſtians. 50.

939 9 Hali Hatan II. Son of Abderamen the ſecond.

959 10 Hizen II. Son of Hali Hatan; in the 33 year of his reign, depoſed for his ſloth and negligence, by 989 11 Zuleima, an African Moor, of the Family of Alaveci; and he expelled by 993 12 Mahomet II. ſirnamed Almohadi, of the old Houſe of Humeia; outed again by Zuleima, and made King of Toledo. Betwixt theſe three, and their ſeveral Factions, the Kingdom wretchedly torn in pieces, never reſtored again to its ancient luſtre; and finally, made a prey to 1001 13 Hali, another African Moor. 2.

1003 14 Cacin, the Brother of Hali. 4.

1007 15 Hiaia, the Son of Mahomet. Menſ. 4.

1007 16 Abderamen IV. a King of 4 weeks only.

1008 17 Mahomet III. poyſoned by his own Servants. 1.

1010 18 Hizen III. depoſed by the Moors, grown weary of the Houſe of Humeia, of which Houſe he was.

1011 19 Ioar of Algezire. 3.

1014 20 Mahomet IV. the ſon of Ioar, the laſt King of the Moors in Corduba, before the ſecond Conqueſt of theſe parts of Spain by the Moors of Africa. Concerning which, we are to know, that after the great Victory obtained at Clavigio, againſt Abderamen the ſecond, by Raymir King of Leon Anno 836, in which the Moors loſt 60000 of his men; the power and reputation of the Spaniſh Moors began to decline: brought utterly to nothing, by the ſloath and negligence of Hizen the ſecond; after a long and unprofitable reign, depoſed by Zuleimea, who ſucceeded. But the Moors not eaſily brooking the command of a new Vſurper, fell into many Fractions and Diviſions amongſt themſelves: every great man ſeizing on ſome part of the Kingdom, which he retained unto himſelf with the name of King; from whence we have a King of Sevil, another of Toledo, a third of Valentia, a fourth of Cordova, &c. the names of which laſt only, do occur in the former Catalogue; as they which did pretend a Sovereignty over all the reſt. And 'twas a ſign the Kingdom was in the exſpiring, when ſo many Kings ſucceeded in ſo few years, after one another: there paſſing from the depoſing of Hizen the ſecond, to the beginning of Mahomet the fourth, not above 34 years in all; during which time, we find no fewer than ten Kings. The often change of Princes, and ſhort lives of Kings, are the apparent ſigns of a ruinous State, approaching very near to its exſpiration; as may be ſeen by the ſhort lives and reigns of the laſt Weſtern Emperors, nine of them hardly reigning 20 years: as alſo, of the Kings of the Goths in Italy, of which the ſix laſt held the Throne no longer than the nine Weſtern Emperors had done before them. But to proceed: Mahomet the laſt King of this firſt Rank, having left the ſtage in the 13th year of his reign, Anno 1027, we find no good conſtat of his Succeſſors in the Kingdom of Corduba; made inconſiderable by the withdrawing ſo many Provinces from the body of it: the pride and inſolency of which Roytelets and petit Tyrants, forced them at laſt to call unto their aid the Kings or Miramomolins of Morocco, by whom themſelves, and all the reſt of their Corrivals, were in fine ſubdued. Under ſeven Princes of Morocco, the Spaniſh Moors continued ſubject about 120 years; that is to ſay, from the firſt coming in of Joſeph Telephin, the Miramomoline, Anno 1091; unto the going out of Mahomet, ſirnamed the Green, An. 1214. During which time, the affairs of thee Moors in Spain were ſo well conducted, that they loſt nothing to the Chriſtians, but Extremadura, taken from them by Alfonſo the ſecond, in the accompt of Caſtile; the ſeventh, in accompt of Leon, An. 1147: and the City of Lisbon taken from them in the ſame year alſo, by Alfonſo the firſt King of Portugal. But Mahomet the Green being vanquiſhed in the great Fight at Sierra Morena, by the joint Forces of the confederated Chriſtians, Anno 1214, left off all further care of the Moors in Spain; after his going thence, diſtracted once again into many Kingdoms, almoſt as many as great Towns, all of them ſwallowed up, in a little time, by the Kings of Caſtile, Arragon, and Portugal. And amongſt them, the Kingdom of Corduba, not able to ſtand long on this new Foundation, was ruinated and brought under the command of the Caſtilians, by their King, Ferdinand the ſecond, Anno 1236. Since that time there no more mention of the Kingdom of Corduba.

The Arms whereof were Or, a Lion Gules, armed and crowned of the firſt, a Border Azure charged with 8 Towers Argent.

7. GRANADA.

GRANADA is bounded on the Weſt, with Andaluſia; on the Eaſt, with Murcia, and the Mediterranean; on the North, with New Caſtile; on the South, with the Mediterranean only. So called from Granada, the chief City, and Seat-Royal of it.

It is in length 200 miles, 100 miles in breadth, and about 700 miles in compaſs: a Kingdom of no great extent; but ſuch as contained in it more fair Towns, ſtrong Fortreſſes, and defenſible places, than the like quantity of Ground in the World beſides. The North part of the Country plain; the South parts over-ſpread with the Alpuxarra's, and other ſpurs and branches of the Oroſpeda. In the time of the Moors, wonderfully well inhabited, and full of all ſorts of Commodities; the Hills planted with Vines and Fruits, the Plains and Valleys ſwelling with Corn and Gardens: ſince their expulſion, neither much peopled, nor very fruitful, for want of men to dreſs and manure the Land.

The principal Cities of it, are 1 Granada, ſituate on two Hills, divided by a Valley, through which runneth the River Darien; conſiſting of four ſeveral parts, called Albambre, Sierre de Sol, Granada, and Antequerula: the two firſt ſtanding on the Hills, the two laſt in the valley; the whole circuit being about 7 miles, and containing in the time of the Mooriſh Kingdom, about 200000 of ſouls. Fenced with ſtrong Walls, fortified with 130 Turrets, and repleniſhed with abundance of wholſome and pleaſant Springs. The Merchants and Gentry of the beſt ſort, do dwell in that part which is called Granada: the houſes of which, are for the moſt part built of Free-ſtone, with delicate and artificial Maſonry, ſhewing great magnificence. Herein ſtandeth the Cathedral Church, a work of admirable ſtructure: of Figure round, as having ſometimes been a Mahometan Moſquet. Here is alſo the place which they call Alcazar, repreſenting a little Town, to which are ten Gates. In the Albambre is the Palace of the Mooriſh Kings, covered with Gold, indented with Moſaical work; and which, by reaſon of the ſtructure, and multitude of Fountains which are about it, may be put amongſt the Wonders of the world; having withal a goodly proſpect over all the Town, lying under it upon the Eaſt; a ſpacious Champian towards the North, and the ſnowy tops of Sierrra Novado, towards the South. This City is the ordinary Parliament, and Court of Juſtice, for all the Southern parts of Spain, as Valladolit is for the Northern: Madrid, which is the higheſt Court, having Juriſdiction over, and receiving Appeals from both. A Town firſt raiſed out of the ruins of Illiberis, ſituate not far off the Hill Elvire, much mentioned in the ſtories of Rome and Carthage. In the two other parts of the Town, there is nothing remarkable, inhabited only by Mechanicks of the poorer ſort. 2 Albama, ſeated amongſt ſteep and craggy Rocks, out of which iſſue Medicinal Waters, occaſioning a great reſort of the Spaniſh Gentry: the firſt Town taken by the Spaniards in their laſt long War againſt the Moors, for the recovery of this Kingdom, Anno 1482; and looked on, by the Moors, as a ſad preſage of a ruinated and expiring Empire. 3 Guadix, an Epiſcopal See, about nine leagues from Granada. 4 Veles Malaga, by Ptolemy called Cex; by Antoninus, Sexicanum; ſituate at the foot of the Mountains called Alpuxarra's; a large branch of the Oroſpeda over-ſpreading a great part of this Country: heretofore planted with incredible numbers of Moors, who choſe to dwell there for the ſtrength and ſafety of the ſituation: ſince their expulſion, deſolate and unfrequented; nothing remaining of them now, but the Arabick Language; which is ſtill ſpoke by thoſe few people which inhabit in it. The Mountains in this Tract ſo high, that from the tops hereof a man may eaſily diſcern the whole courſe of the Straights of Gibraltar, together with the Towns of Seuta, and Tangier, in Africk, 5 Ronda, at the foot of another branch of the Oroſpeda, called from this Town, Sierra de Ronda: not far from which, by Munda, now a very ſmall Village, was fought that memorable battel betwixt Cæſar and the Sons of Pompey; the honour of which, fell to Cæſar, who then made an end of the Civil-Wars, which that very day, four years before, were begun by Pompey the Father. In this fight was Cn. Pompeius ſlain, and his Forces broken: Cæſar himſelf being ſo put to it, that ſeeing his Souldiers give back, he was fain to maintain the fight by his own great courage, bidding them Remember, that at Munda they forſook their General. The ſhame of which reproach, and his noble example, encouraged them to a new onſet, which was honoured with a ſignal and remarkable Victory: this being the laſt fight that Cæſar was in; murdered not long after in the Senate-houſe. And of this fight he uſed to ſay, That in all other places he fought for his Honour, in this for his life. 6 Antequera, heretofore a well-fortified Town, bordering cloſe upon Caſtile. 7 Maxacra, on the ſhore of the Mediterranean, ſuppoſed to be the Murgis of Ptolemy. 8 Vera on the ſame ſhore; the furtheſt Town of Bætica, and of this Country, towards Murcia: ſuppoſed to be the Virgao of Pliny, from whence the neighbouring Creek or Bay was called Virgitanus. 9 Loxa, on the River Darien, enjoying a ſituation both ſtrong and pleaſant. 10 Malaga, or Malaca, ſituate at the mouth of Guadalquiver, once ſacked by Craſſus the rich Roman; who flying out of Spain, to avoid the Fury of Marius and Cinna, who had ſlain his Father and Uncle, hid himſelf, and his Companions, in a Cave hereabouts, for eight Months together: but after hearing of their deaths, iſſued out, and ranſacked, amongſt many other Cities, this Malaga. A Town of great Traffick, and much Reſort, eſpecially for Raiſins, Almonds, Malaga Sacks: well fortified, and of great importance, as a Town of War; and, to the great prejudice of the Moors, taken by Ferdinand the Catholick, Anno 1487: the Conqueſt of the whole Kingdom of Granada, following not long after. It was ſince made a Biſhops-See, or reſtored rather to that dignity which it had of old. 11 Almeria, a noted Haven on the Mediterranean, the Abdera of Mela; a Colony of the Carthaginians, and anciently a Biſhops See. 12 Carthema, 13 Coim, and 14 Baſa, more within the Land: this laſt, the ſtrongeſt Bulwark of the City of Granada, on the North-eaſt whereof it ſtandeth. A place of great ſtrength both by Art and Nature; and by the Moors defended with ſo great a gallantry, that it held out a ſiege of 7 Months againſt an Army of 13000 Horſe, and 24000 Foot, King Ferdinand the Catholick, being there in perſon: and yielded at the laſt, Decemb. 4. 1489, upon better conditions than any Town had done before it.

As for the Fortunes of this Country, after the Conqueſt of it by the Moors and Saracens, it was a part or member of the Kingdom of Corduba, and ſo continued till that Kingdom was ſubdued by the Spaniards.

But the Moors were too ſtout to yield all at once. Having yet ground enough both to ſecure themſelves in, and endow their King: they are reſolved, though they had loſt one Kingdom, to erect another. And therefore Corduba being taken, and that Kingdom ruinated, the Moors, with Mahomet Aben Alhamar, their unfortunate, but valiant King, removed themſelves unto Granada, and there renewed their ſtrength and Kingdom, which laſted 256 years, under 20 Kings; whoſe names here follow in this Catalogue of The Kings of Granada.

A. C.
1236	1	Mahomet Alhamar, the laſt King of Corduba, and the firſt King of Granada.	36.
1272	2	Mahomet Mir Almir.	30.
1302	3	Mahomet Aben Ezar.	7.
1309	4	Mahomet Aben Evar.	10.
1319	5	Iſmael.	3.
1322	6	Mahomet.	12.
1334	7	Joſeph Aben Amet.	20.
1354	8	Mahomet Lagus.	23.
1377	9	Mahomet Vermeil.	2.
1379	10	Mahomet Guadix.	13.
1392	11	Joſeph II.	4.
1396	12	Mahomet Aben Balva.	11.
1407	13	Joſeph III.	16.
1423	14	Mahomet Aben Azar.	4.
1427	15	Mahomet the little.	5.
1432	16	Joſeph Abud Almud.	13.
1445	17	Mahomet Oſmen.	8.
1453	18	Imael II.	9.
1462	19	Muley Alboacen.	20.
1482	20	Mahomet Boabdelin, the laſt King of the Moors in Spain.

Of all which, there is little left upon Record: their whole time being ſpent in defending their borders againſt the encroachments of Caſtile; or elſe in Civil-Wars and diſcords amongſt themſelves: in which they were ſo frequent, and ſometimes ſo violent, as if they had no Enemy near them. Mahomet Aben Evar, the fourth King, depoſed by Mahomet Aben Levin; and he again thruſt out by Iſmael the ſon of Ferrachen, before he could enjoy the fruits of his treaſon. Mahomet, ſon of Iſmael, murdered by his Subjects. Joſeph the ſon of Mahomet, ſlain by Mahomet Lagus; and he again depoſed by Mahomet Vermeil; who in the end was miſerably ſlain by Pedro the Cruel, of Caſtile, to whom he had fled for help and ſuccour. After this time, they ruined and depoſed one another, to the end of their Kingdom; the Succeſſor never ſtaying till the death of his Predeceſſor, but violently making way for himſelf to enter on the Government: even Mahomet Boabdelin, the laſt King hereof, not having patience to expect the death of his Father; but ſetting him beſides the Throne, as he himſelf was for a time, by Muley Moabdelin his Uncle; and thereby opening a fair Gate for Ferdinand, King of Caſtile and Aragon, to bring in his Forces to the ſubduing of them all. Such was the fortune of this Kingdom, that as it began under a Mahomet, a Ferdinand being King of Caſtile; ſo it ended under a Mahomet, a Ferdinand being King of Caſtile alſo. In the firſt year, then, of this man's Reign, did the War begin, or rather in the laſt year of his Father, who by taking Zahara from the Chriſtians, gave the firſt occaſion: and in the tenth year of the War, (for ſo long it laſted) Anno 1492, the Empire of the Moors ended in Spain, by the valour of Ferdinand the Catholick, and Iſabel his Wife, afer their firſt entrance into it, more than 760 years.

Such of them as, after the decay of their Kingdom, had a deſire to ſtay in Spain, which had for ſo long time been their native Country, were ſuffered ſo to do by the prudent Victors, (fearing a deſolation of the Country, if they ſhould abandon it) conditioned, that they would be Chriſtened. And that they might be known to be as they profeſſed, the Inquiſition was eſtabliſhed in the City of Granada, conſiſting of a certain number of Secular Prieſts, and Dominican Friers; who finding any counterfeit or Apoſtate Chriſtians, were firſt gently to reprove and exhort them; and after, if no amendment followed, to inflict ſuch puniſhment on them, as was accuſtomed in like caſes. By the terror of which Inquiſition, many profeſſed, in ſhew, the Chriſtian Faith. But being Chriſtians only in the outward ſhew, and practiſing on all occaſions againſt the State, the Kings of Spain reſolved long ago on their Extermination; but never had opportunity to effect it, till the year 1609. At what time Philip the third having made a Peace with England, and a Truce with Holland; and finding the Moors of Africk ſo embroiled in Wars, that they were not able to diſturb him; put that extream rigour in execution, which had before been thought of in their conſultations; 1100000 of them being forced to quit this Country, and provide new dwellings; under colour that they went about to free themſelves from the Inquiſition, and to recover their old Liberty loſt ſo long before.

The Forces which the Kings of Granada, in the times of their greateſt power, were able to raiſe, were far beyond the ameaſurement and extent of their Kingdom; not above 700 miles in compaſs, as before is ſaid: but ſo exceeding populous, and well accommodated with all manner of neceſſaries, that within two days ſpace, the King hereof was ſaid to have been able to draw together 50000 Horſe, and 200000 Foot, for defence of his Kingdom. Turquet reports it ſo, in his Spaniſh Hiſtory. But this proved more than they were able to do in their greateſt need; when this Kingdom was finally invaded, and at laſt ſubdued by Ferdinand and Iſabel, Kings of Spain: though poſſibly by reaſon of their diviſions at that time, (ſome following the Party of Mahomet Boadolin; and others, that of his Uncle Muley, choſen King againſt him) they might not join together in a common intereſt, for the defence of their Eſtate.

The Arms whereof were Or, a Pomgranate (or Apple of Granada) ſlipped, Vert.

8 MURCIA.

MURCIA is bounded on the Weſt, with Granada; on the Eaſt & North, with Valentia, and a part of Granada, and on the South, with the Mediterranean Sea. So called from Murcia the chief City. In former times eſteemed a rich and wealthy Country, ſtored with all ſorts of fruits; and ſo abounding in Silver Mines, that when the Romans were Lords of it, they kept continually four hundred men at work, and received 2500 Drachma's of of daily profit: now for the moſt part barren, and but ill-inhabited.

Cities of note there are not many in ſo ſmall a Country. The principal, 1 Murcia, by Ptolemy called Menralio, ſeated upon the River Segura, a Biſhops See, ſituate in a pleaſant and delightful Plain, planted with Pomgranates, and other excellent fruits: from this, the Country had the name of the Kingdom of Murcia. 2 Carthagena, or Nova Carthago, firſt built by Aſdrubal of Carthage, the brother of Annibal, for the better receiving of ſuch aids, both of men and money, as ſhould come from Africa. Situate in a Demi-Iſland, in the very jaws of the Mediterranean: by which, and by a deep Mariſh on the Weſt ſide of it, ſo impregnably fortified, that if Scipio, afterwards called Africanus, who then lay at the ſiege thereof, had not been ſhewed a way over that Mariſh, at a dead low water, by poor Fiſher-men of Tarragon, who knew the Secret, he had there loſt both his time and his honour. Nothing more memorable, in the ſackage and ſpoil thereof, (though there was found abundance of Arms and Treaſure) than the vertue of Scipio, who finding there many Spaniſh Ladies of great birth and beauties, left there as Hoſtages for the Spaniards, with the Carthaginians, would not permit any of them to be brought before him, for fear it ſhould betray him to ſome inconvenience. Being re-edified, it was made a Roman Colony, and one of the ſeven Juridical Reſorts of Tarraconenſis: by Conſtantine made the chief City of the new Province of Carthaginenſis, which was hence denominated. Afterwards, twice ſacked by the Goths and Vandals, it lay for a long time buried in its own ruins. And though again new built and peopled, it is ſtill but ſmall, containing at the moſt but 600 houſholds: and would be utterly abandoned, but for the ſafety of the place, and the ſtrength thereof, garriſoned, and fortified very ſtrongly by King Philip the ſecond, for fear of ſurpriſal by the Turks: and the ſecurity of the Haven (which is withal very large and capacious) coming from a little Iſland, lying at the mouth thereof; by which aſſured from tempeſtuous winds, and the violent ragings of the Sea. Hence the occaſion of that ſaying of Andreas Doria, Admiral unto Charles the fifth, That there were but three ſafe Ports in the Mediterranean; that is to ſay, Auguſt, July, and this Carthagena: meaning, as I conceive, that thoſe two Months being commonly free from tempeſtuous weather, were of as great ſafety to the Mariners, as this famous Port. 3 Lorca, another Port-Town, ſituate on a Creek more within the Land. 4 Almanca, 5 Sarazel, two ſtrong Towns bordering on Valentia; well fortified, when Murcia and Valentia were in ſeveral hands. 6 Cervillan, 7 Albama, 8 Rus, &c.

This County, being part of the Province of Carthaginenſis, was by the Alani taken from the Romans, at their firſt entrance into Spain: from them recovered by Wallia, the firſt King of the Goths, in this part of Europe. Together with the reſt of Spain, it was ſubdued by the Moors of Africk, in the diſtractions of whoſe Empire; after the going hence of the Moors of Africk, it was made a diſtinct Kingdom by Aben Hut, of the Race of the Kings of Saragoſſa, who had ſeiſed upon it, Anno 1228; and for a time was the moſt puiſſant King of the Moors in Spain, commanding over this Country, Granada, and a part of Andaluſia. Invited to a Feaſt, made Drunk, and then baſely Murdered by Aben Arramin, a falſe ſervant of his, An. 1236. One Aben Hudiel ſeized on the Realm of Murcia, diſturbed in his poſſeſſion by Alboaquis, the laſt King hereof. But he not able to defend himſelf againſt his Competitor, ſurrendred it to Ferdinand the ſecond of Caſtile, whom he put into poſſeſſion of the Fort of Murcia, and many other places of great importance; conditioned, that Alboaquis ſhould enjoy the title of King of Murcia, as long as he lived, under the Soveraignty of Caſtile: and that Ferdinand ſhould enjoy one half of the profits of it. This was in the year 1241, after it had continued in the ſtate of a Kingdom but 12 years only, united to Caſtile without blood or trouble, and ſo remains ever ſince.

9 TOLEDO.

THE Kingdom of TOLEDO, ſo called from Toledo the chief City of it; contained once the greateſt part of that Country which is now called New-Caſtile: of which it is now reckoned only for a part or member. The Country lying next unto it, was anciently the Seat of Carpentani, the nature of the Soil we ſhall find elſewhere.

Principal Cities of this Kingdom, 1 Toledo, of great antiquity, as being taken by Fulvius a Roman Prætor, in the time of Scipio Africanus; and then a City of good note. Pleaſantly ſeated on the Tagus, beautified with many pieces of rare and excellent Architecture; and fortified with thirty Towers ſtanding on the Walls. By reaſon of the ſituation of it in the very midſt, almoſt, of Spain, it is paſſing well inhabited; as well by the Nobility, who reſide there for pleaſure; and by Scholars, who abide in it for their Studies; as by Merchants, who reſort thither for their profit: beſides ſuch Soldiers and their Officers, who are continually garriſoned in it for defence thereof. The private buildings generally are but mean and ordinary; though, by far, more handſom in the inſide, than the outſide promiſeth: moſt of them being furniſhed with water from the River Tagus, conveyed into them by the admirable invention of one James, a native of Cremona, in the Dukedom of Millain. The Streets narrow, cloſe, hilly, and uneven, exceeding troubleſom to walk or go upon, eſpecially in ſlippery or dirty weather, by reaſon of its ſteep and uneven ſituation on the ſide of a Rocky Hill: by which, and by the River which almoſt ſurrounds it, it is naturally very ſtrong, and well helped by Art. For that cauſe made the Seat of the Gothiſh Kings: by one of which, called Bamba, ſo repaired and beautified, (beſides the addition of a ſtrong Wall for defence of the place) that he is by ſome accounted for the Founder of it. For ſo we find it in theſe old Verſes:

> Erexit (fautore Deo) Rex inclytus Urbem
> Bamba, ſuæ celebrem protendens Gentis honorem.
> That is to ſay,
>
> King Bamba (God aſſiſting) rais'd this Town,
> Extending ſo the ancient Goths renown.

When the Goths fell, it was in chief eſtimation amongſt the Moors, and by them advanced unto the honour of a Kingdom; whereof more anon: but under both, (as it continueth to this day) the See of an Arch-biſhop, who is the Metropolitan of Spain, and Preſident, for the moſt part, of the Inquiſition. His Revenue anſwerable to his Place, the greateſt of any Clergy man in the Chriſtian World, next to the Popes of Rome; as being eſtimated at 300000 Crowns per annum. Finally, this City hath been honoured with no fewer than 18 National Councils, here holden in the time of the Goths; and is now a famous Univerſity for the ſtudy of the Civil and Canon Laws, and hath to this day the Temporal Juriſdiction over 17 Walled Towns, beſides Villages. 2 Calatrava, the next Town of note, is ſituate on the River Ana; of moſt fame in theſe later times, for an Order of Knights, called the Knights of Calatrava; of which more when we come to Caſtile. Neighboured by the ruins of the ſtrong and famous City Caſtulo, which being under the command of the Romans, was by the Gyreſoeni, a people that dwelt on the other ſide of the River, ſuddenly entred and taken. But Sertorius following after them by the ſame Gate, put them all to the Sword: and cauſing his men to apparel themſelves in the clothes of the Enemy, led them to the chief City of the Gyriſeoni; who ſuppoſing them to be their own Party, opened their Gates, and were all either ſlain, or ſold for Slaves. More of this Town anon, when we come to Caſtile, to which now belonging. 3 Talbora, commonly called Talvera de la Reyna, or the Queen's Talvera; and called ſo on occaſion of an execrable Murder committed there by the command of Queen Mary, the Widow of Alfonſo the ſixth, on the Lady Leonore de Guſman, her Huſband's Paramour. A proper and neat Town it is, pleaſantly ſeated on the Tagus; ſuppoſed to be the Libora of Ptolemy, and now belonging to the Arch-biſhop of Toledo, as chief Lord thereof. Medina Zelim, commonly called Medina Celi; of great importance when poſſeſſed or neighboured by the Moors. Now of moſt note for giving the title of Dukes to the illuſtrious Family De la Cerde, deſcended from Ferdinand, the eldeſt Son of Alfonſo the fifth; claiming, by that deſcent, a title to the Crown of Caſtile. What other Towns belonged unto it, we ſhall ſee anon.

As for Toledo it ſelf, in the time of the Romans it was the Metropolis of the Province of Tarraconenſis; after that, the Seat-Royal of the Gothiſh Kings; removed hither from Tholouſe in Languedoc: forced by the Moors, at their firſt entrance into Spain, An. 716; more prudently aiming at the Head, than the Goths poſſibly expected from ſuch Barbarians. In the Confuſions of that Kingdom, betwixt the beginning of the reign of Mahomet the fourth, and the ſecond coming in of the Moors of Africk, made a diſtinct Kingdom of it ſelf; continuing in that eſtate, till taken from Haia Alchaduchir, the laſt King hereof, by Alfonſo the firſt, King of Caſtile, An. 1083. This Alfonſo being the younger Son of Ferdinand, the firſt King of Caſtile and Leon, had the Kingdom of Leon for his part. Ejected out of that, by his Brother Sancho King of Caſtile, he lived in exile with the Moors; kindly received and entertained by Almenon the Father of this Haia, King of Toledo, till the death of his Brother. After which, coming to the Crowns of Caſtile and Leon, Anno 1073, he picked a quarrel with his Hoſt, and beſieged Toledo; his long abode there, making him acquainted with all advantages that might facilitate his deſigns; which notwithſtanding held him a ſiege of five years, before he could make himſelf maſter of it, by him incorporated preſently on the taking of it, with the reſt of that Kingdom, and made the head of New-Caſtile. But for the Kings hereof, as well thoſe who held it but for life, as thoſe who left the ſame unto their Poſterity, they are theſe that follow:

The Mooriſh Kings reigning in Toledo.

A. C.

1 Galafroy, King of Toledo, in the time of Charlemagne, under the Vaſſalage of the great Caliphs of Damaſcus: ſubdued by Abderamen the firſt, King or Miramomolin of the Moors in Corduba, of the Houſe of Humeia.

787 2 Zuleima, the eldeſt ſon of Abderamen King of Corduba, being diſpoſſeſſed of the Realm of Corduba, and the reſt of his Eſtates in Spain, by Hizen his younger Brother, reigned a while in Toledo; of which outed not long after: Toledo from that time continuing a Member of the Kingdom of Corduba, till the latter end of the reign of Abderamen the ſecond. At what time, 833 3 Aben Lope, (the ſon of Muſa Aben Cacia, a Goth by Nation and deſcent; but a Moor by profeſſion: who had cauſed the Toledans, and others of the Moors of Spain, to rebel againſt Abderamen) aſſumed unto himſelf the title of King of Toledo: a ſtrict confederate of Ordogno the 11th, King of Leon; by whom ſupported in his Wars againſt thoſe of Corduba; but at laſt vanquiſhed and diſſeized by Mahomet, the ſon of Abderamen, Anno 848.

990 4 Abdalla, a great man among the Moors, during the contentions betwixt Zuleima and Hizen the ſecond, for the realm of Corduba, ſeized on the City of Toledo; which he held as King: and kindly entertained Mahomet Almohadi, made King of Corduba during thoſe contentions; by whom ſucceeded in this Kingdom.

995 5 Mahomet, ſirnamed Almohadi, of the Regal Family of Humeya, King of Corduba; and diſpoſſeſſed thereof by the Faction of Zuleima, retired to Toledo; and was kindly entertained by King Abdalla, whom he ſucceeded in this Kingdom.

999 6 Obeydalla, the Son of Mahomet, ſlain in his Wars with Hizen, the King of Corduba, in the firſt or ſecond year of his reign.

1010 8 Hizen, the Son of Hairan, of whom nothing memorable.

1045 9 Ali Maynon, or Almenon, as the Spaniards call him, the Son of Hizen, who entertained Alfonſo the ſixth of Leon, when diſpoſſeſſed of his Eſtate by his brother Sancho.

1076 10 Hizen II. Son of Ali Maynon.

1078 11 Haya, ſirnamed Alcadarbile, the Son of Ali Maynon, and Brother of Hizen; a cruel Prince, and ill beloved of his Subjects; which gave occaſion unto Alfonſo King of Caſtile and Leon, ſpoken of before, to invade this Kingdom; by whom at laſt it was ſubdued, and Toledo, with its Territories, added unto Caſtile, as before is ſaid, Anno 1083. By which means there accrued to the Realm of Caſtile, beſides Toledo it ſelf, and the Towns ſpoken of already, thoſe of Illeſcus, Eſcallona, Maqueda, Canales, Coria, Conſuerga, Berlanga, Guadalaiara, Arienca, and divers others, now paſſing in the eſtimate of New-Caſtile.

But to conclude, Toledo thus reduced under the command of the Chriſtians, was forthwith made the Metropolitan City of Spain, (in regard of Eccleſiaſtical or Spiritual matters) as it had been before in the time of the Goths: and ſhortly after honoured by Alfonſo with the title of the Imperial City; that King, upon the conqueſt hereof, having aſſumed unto himſelf the ſtile of Emperor of Spain, but ſomewhat too affectedly, as the caſe then ſtood, there being other Kings in Spain as well as he. In which reſpects he gave unto this City for the Arms hereof, in a Field Azure, a Crown Mitral Imperial Or, garniſhed with ſundry precious Gems Proper; changed afterwards by Alfonſo the third of Caſtile, and eighth of Leon, affecting the ſame title of Emperor, to an Emperor ſitting on his Throne in a Robe of Gold, with a Globe in his left hand, and a Sword in his right.

But the Blazon of theſe Arms I find not, nor much worth the ſearching: the old Coat being worn again after his deceaſe.

10. CASTILE.

CASTILE is bounded on the Eaſt, with Navarre, Arragon, and part of Valentia; on the Weſt, with Portugal; on the North, with Biſcay, Guipuſcoa, and the Aſturia's; on the South, with Extremadura, Andaluſia, and Granada. The reaſon of the name we ſhall have anon.

This was the moſt prevailing-Kingdom of all this Continent; to which the reſt are all united either by Marriages or Conqueſt. Divided commonly into the New and Old; parted from one another by the Hills of Segovia: the one being called the Old Caſtile, becauſe it was the Ancient Patrimony of the Earls hereof; and the other named the New, from that addition which was made to the firſt Inheritance, by the Conqueſt of the Realm of Toledo, and other pieces, from the Moors. The Old Caſtile is the leſs fruitful of the two; more fit for Paſturage, than Corn; but better ſtored with that, and all ſorts of Fruits, than the neighbouring Countries, which lye betwixt it and the Northern or Cantabrian Ocean: the New more plain and Champian, better ſtored with Fruits, and furniſhed with ſufficient plenty of Corn, and other Proviſions neceſſary for the life of man. The Old Caſtile watered with the Rivers of 1 Relaunos, riſing not far from Burgos. 2 Tormes, paſſing by Salamanca. 3 Duero, the Receptacle of the others. The New with Guadarama, honoured with the neighbourhood of Madrid. 5 Tævina, and 6 Tagus, the moſt famous River of all Spain.

The OLD CASTILE is ſituate on the North of the New; and hath for the chief Cities of it. 1 Soria, of great note in the ancient Story, by the name of Numantia; which for the ſpace of 14 years, withſtood the whole Forces of Rome: during which time, they valiantly repulſed their Enemies, and forced them to diſhonourable Compoſitions. But finding, at leaſt, no hope of holding longer out, they gathered together all their Armour, Money, and Goods, laid them in an heap, then ſet fire on them, and, finally burnt themſelves in the midſt of the flame; leaving Scipio (who had brought them to that extremity) nothing but the bare name of Numantia, to adore his triumph. 2 Avilla, ſituate under the great Mountains, which are called from hence, the Mountains of Avila. Known anciently by the name of Abule; and by that name giving the title of Abulenſis to the renowned Toſtatus, who was Biſhop of it. A Man, who in his time was Preſident of the Council to John King of Arragon; yet could find leiſure enough not only to attend his Epiſcopal Charge, but to compoſe thoſe learned and painful Commentaries on a great part of the Bible. Of which, and his other Abilities, (beſides that which hath before been noted of him) we may take that Elogie which Caſaubon hath given him, in his Book againſt Baronius, ſaying, Laudo acumen viri, ſi in meliora incidiſſet Tempora, longe maximi. 3 Valodolid, a fine neat Town, and one of the ancienteſt Univerſities of Spain: diſcontinued for a time, by Students, and then reſtored again by King Philip the ſecond, whoſe birth-place it was; and who erected here a Colledge (among others) for the education only of young Engliſh Fugitives. Seated upon the River Piſuerga, and one of the Chanceries of the Kingdoms of Caſtile and Leon. By means whereof, and of the King's Court here reſiding in the Summer-times, it became, in little ſpace, a fair, large, populous City, and of great reſort, not yielding unto any in Spain, except Lisbone, and Sevil. It is called in Latin, Vallis Oletum, and Vallis Oletana, from the abundance of Olives growing near it: but by Ptolemy, Pintia. 4. Segovia, a Biſhops See, of great trade in Clothing; ſituate under a branch of the Mountain Idubeda, called from hence, the Hills of Segovia. 5 Burgos, near the head of the River Relaunos or Relanzon, at the foot of the great Mountain d' Oca, part of the Idubeda: built out of certain Villages lying hereabouts, by Nugno Bellides, a German, Son-in-law unto one of the firſt Earls of Caſtile. For a long time the ſeat of thoſe Kings, ſince of the Archbiſhops hereof; the Cathedral being one of the faireſt in Spain; built with ſuch art, that Maſs may be ſung aloud in five ſeveral Chappels, without diſturbing one another. This City doth contend for Primacy and Precedency, (in Civil matters) with that of Toledo, of which it hath the firſt place or vote in all Parliaments or Aſſemblies of the States of Caſtile. But yet to ſatisfie Toledo, the Controverſie is ſtill undecided, and was once finely taken up by one of the Ferdinands, ſaying, that he would firſt ſpeak for Toledo, and then Burgos ſhould ſpeak for it ſelf. Without the Walls of this City, is a famous Nunnery, called De las Huelgas, conſiſting of 150 Religious Women, all of Noble Houſes. 6 Cividad Rodrigo, a Biſhops-See, on the River Gada. 7 Zamomora, a ſtrong and well-built City, and a Biſhops-See, the Sentica of Ptolemy: ſituate on the River Druero, and now famous for the beſt Bag-pipes. 8 Tordeſillas, the Segiſana of the Ancients. 9 Lerma, not far from Burgos, the chief Seat of the Dukes ſo called; a Prince of great Poſſeſſions, and the chief of the Family of Roias, and Sandoval. 10 Salamanca, the moſt Famous Univerſity of Spain eſpecially for the ſtudy of the Civil and Canon Laws: firſt inſtituted by Ferdinand the ſecond of Caſtile, Anno 1240; and by an Order of the Pope's, together with Paris, Oxford, and Bononia in Italy, created a Generale Studium; wherein there were to be Profeſſors of the Greek, Hebrew, Chaldee, and Abrabick Tongues, beſides thoſe of the Arts. It was of old called Salmantica; is now a Biſhops-See, ſituate on the River Tormes, as before was ſaid.

Not far from this City, about the times of our Grand-Fathers, was diſcovered in a Valley ſituate amongſt high and impaſſable Mountains, a kind of Patoecos, or Savage people, never heard of in Spain before. The occaſion, this: An Hawk of the Duke of Alva's, which he very much valued, flew over thoſe Mountains; and his men not being able to find her at firſt, they were ſent back by the Duke to ſeek her. Clambring from one Hill to another, they hapned at laſt upon a large and pleaſant Valley, where they ſpied a company of naked Savage people, hemmed in amongſt many craggy Rocks. The Salvages gazing a while upon them, ran into their Caves, made in the hollows of the Rocks, the beſt Houſes they had: which being obſerved by the Falconers, they returned again unto their Lord, telling him, that inſtead of a Falcon, they had brought him news of a New-world in the midſt of Spain, and of a race of People which came in with Tubal. Strongly affirming what they ſaid, they obtained belief. And the Duke ſhortly after went with a Company of Muſquetiers, and ſubdued them eaſily; they having no offenſive Weapons, but only Slings. They worſhipped the Sun and Moon, fed upon nothing that had life; but had good ſtore of excellent Fruits, Roots, and Springs of Water, wherewith Nature was well contented. And though their Language was not altogether underſtood by any; yet many of their words were found to be purely Baſquiſh. Reduced, on this diſcovery, to Chriſtianity; but eaſily diſcernable from all other Spaniards, by their tawny complexions, occaſioned by the reverberation of the Sun-beams, from thoſe Rocky Mountains wherewith on all ſides they are encompaſſed.

compaſſed. The truth hereof, beſides the credit of James Howel, in his Inſtructions for Foreign Travel; I have upon enquiry found to be atteſted by men of gravity and great place in this Realm of England; employed there in affairs of publick intereſts. Satiſfied therefore in the truth of the Relation, I am partly ſatiſfied in the men: whom I conceive to be ſome remnant of the Ancient Spaniards, who hid themſelves amongſt theſe Mountains for fear of the Romans. Their Language and Idolatry ſpeak them to be ſuch. For had they either fled from the Goths or Moors, there had been found ſome Croſs, or other Monument of Chriſtianity, as in other places; or ſome ſuch mixture in their ſpeech, as would have ſavoured ſomewhat of the Goths or Romans. But it is time I ſhould proceed.

NEW CASTILE is ſituate on the South of the Old. The chief Cities there, 1 Siguenca, a City heretofore of the Celtiberi, now a Biſhops-See, beautified with a fair Cathedral, ſuppoſed to be the Condabora of Ptolemy. 2 Madrid, upon the Guadarama, the Mantua of the ancient Writers, now the Seat of the Kings: whoſe reſidence there, though the Country be neither rich nor pleaſant, hath made it, of a Village, the moſt populous City in all Spain. It is a cuſtom in this Town, that all the upper Rooms in their Houſes do belong to the King, except ſome compoſition be made with him for them. And of this Town the Spaniards do uſe to brag to ſtrangers, that they have a City walled with fire; and then make good the boaſt, by ſaying, That it is ſituate in the midſt of Quarries of Flint. 3 Alcala de Henares, (of old called Complutum) renowned for an Univerſity of Divines, founded here in the time of Ferdinand the Catholick, by Franciſco de Ximines, Cardinal and Arch-biſhop of Toledo; and by him furniſhed with the ableſt men both for Divinity and the Tongues, that all Spain afforded. By whoſe joint diligence and ſtudy in turning over ſo many Copies of the Bibles, gathered together at his charge from all parts of the World, he publiſhed the Complutenſian Edition of the holy Scriptures in the Original Greek, Hebrew, and Vulgar Latin, with the Tranſlation of the Septuagint into Latin alſo. A work of very great charge and pains, (taking up 15 years in doing) but of greater profit; there being at the end thereof, an Hebrew Dictionary, for the underſtanding of that Language. 4 Alcoraz amongſt the Mountainous tracts of Oroſpeda, called Sierra de Alcoraz; memorable for a great diſcomfiture given unto the Moors, Anno 1094. 5 Molina, in the ſame Mountainous Tract, hence called Monte de Molina; remarkable for giving the title of Lord, to the Kings of Caſtile, who in the Regal ſtile are called Lords of Molina: the Signeury hereof accruing to that Crown, by the marriage of Sancho the third, with Mary the Daughter of Alfonſo, the laſt Lord Proprietary. The Territory large, and the Town of ſtrength; well fortified in the times foregoing, both by Art and Nature. 6 Cuenca, ſeated at the Spring-head of the River Xucar, and not far from that of Tagus alſo, amongſt the Mountains of Oroſpeda; built by the Moors on the top of thoſe craggy Hills, whom it ſerved for an impregnable Fortreſs againſt the Chriſtians, till taken by Sancho the ſecond of Caſtile, Anno 1177.

Here alſo is the Eſcurial, or Monaſtery of St. Lawrence, built by King Philip the ſecond. A place (ſaith Quade, who ſpendeth 13 pages in its deſcription) of that magnificence, that no building in times paſt, or this preſent is comparable to it. The front, toward the Weſt, is adorned with three ſtately Gates, the middlemoſt whereof leadeth into a moſt magnificent Temple, a Monaſtery in which are 150 Monks of the Order of S. Jerome, and a Colledge: that on the right hand, openeth into divers Offices, belonging to the Monaſtery: that on the left, unto Schools and out-houſes belonging unto the Colledge. At the four corners, there are four Turrets of excellent Workmanſhip; and for height, majeſtical. Towards the North, is the King's Palace; on the South parts, divers beautiful and ſumptuous Galleries; and on the Eaſt ſide, ſundry Gardens and Walks, very pleaſing and delectable. It containeth, in all, 11 ſeveral Quadrangles, every one encloyſtered; and is indeed ſo brave a ſtructure, that a Voyage into Spain were well employed, were it only to ſee it, and return. Here is alſo in this Tract, the old Town of Caſtulo, (the Caſtaon of Strabo) then the chief City of the Carpentani, and the birthplace of Himilce, the Wife of Annibal: from whence this whole Tract had the name of Saltus Caſtulonenſis, and ſo called by Cæſar; now a poor Village, known by the name of Caſtona la Veia; in which is ſomewhat to be found of the ancient ruines. But of this more already, when we were in the Kingdom of Toledo; to which it more properly belonged.

The old Inhabitants of theſe Caſtiles, were the Vaccai, Ventones, Arevacæ, Oretani, Carpentani, Dittani, &c. From none of which, the name of Caſtile can be deduced; ſo that we muſt fetch it either from the Caſtellani, once a People of Catalogne; or from ſome ſtrong fortified Caſtles erected in the Frontiers, againſt the Moors. This laſt conjecture may ſeem probable, becauſe the Arms of this Kingdom are Gules, a Caſtle triple-towered, Or. Neither is it any way ſtrange, for Provinces, eſpecially ſmaller ones, ſuch as at firſt this was, (though now much extended both in bounds and power) to take their names from a Caſtle. For (to go no further) even with us, Richmondſhire was ſo called from the Caſtle of Richmond, there built by Alain, Earl of Bretagne; and Flint-ſhire took denomination from the Caſtle built of Flint-ſtones, by Henry the ſecond. We may ſee hereby, how much Cœlius Secundus Curio was deceived, who writeth, that Alfonſo the third, having overthrown Mahomet Enaſer, King of Morocco, and put 60000 of his men to the Sword; aſſumed theſe Arms, that thus named this Kingdom, which was before called the Kingdom of the Baſtitanes; becauſe that Victory, like a ſtrong Caſtle, had confirmed his Eſtates unto him. Whereas, in caſe there were no other error in his ſuppoſition, the Baſtitanes were no Inhabitants of Caſtile, but of Valentia and Murcia, Provinces far enough off from the Old Caſtile, at the firſt taking of that name. And for the former Etymologie, it appeareth moſt evidently, in that the people are by the Latins called Caſtellani; the Country, Caſtella: the ſame name with thoſe elder Caſtellani which inhabited Catalogne. But not to ſtand upon the name, certain it is, that the Inhabitants hereof, having been conquered by the Romans, and made a part of their Empire, fell by degrees to the Alani, and from them to the Goths, as hath been ſhewed already on ſome other occaſion. From them extorted by the Moors, with the reſt of Spain: recovered, foot after foot, by the Kings of Leon; governed under them, at firſt, by Provincial Earls, Commanders of ſo many Caſtles in the Country of the Vaccæi, fortified and defended againſt the Moors. Ordogno the ſecond, harbouring ſome ſuſpicions againſt theſe Earls, cauſed them all to be cruelly murdered. The people upon this, revolted from the Crown of Leon; governed firſt by Judges, then by Earls again, as an abſolute and free Eſtate. Ferdinand Gonſales, the firſt that re-aſſumed the title of Earl of Caſtile, coming to the Court of Leon with a brave Retinue, ſold to King Sancho an Hawk, and an Horſe, of excellent kinds, for a ſum of money; conditioned, that if the money were not paid at the time agreed on, it ſhould be doubled, and redoubled, till the Debt were ſatisfied. This money, by the negligence of the King's Officers, who looked upon the Contract as a matter of jeſt, became ſo great a ſum, that the King, to ſatisfie Gonſales, made him the firſt Proprietary-Earl of Caſtile, Anno 939; releaſing that Eſtate from all acknowledgment to the Kings of Leon. Nugna, or Elvica, as ſome call her, Siſter and Heir of Garcias the fourth Earl hereof, brought this Eſtate by marriage to Sancho, ſirnamed the Great, King of Navarre, Anno 1028; by whom it was erected into a Kingdom, and given by him to Ferdinand his ſecond Son, Anno 1034. Kings of moſt note and obſervation in the courſe of their ſtory, are 1 Ferdinand their firſt King, who added Leon to his Kingdom, in right of Sancha his Wife, Siſter and Heir of Veramund the laſt King thereof, of the race of Pelagius. 2 Alfonſo the firſt, who ſubdued the Kingdom of Toledo, adding it, by the name of New Caſtile, unto his Eſtate. 3 Alfonſo the Fourth, who not only conquered from the Crown of Navarre, whatſoever lay on the Caſtilian ſide of the River Iberus, but alſo the whole Countries of Alava and Guipuſcoa, all which he united to Caſtile: but grew ſo great, that he cauſed himſelf to be ſolemnly crowned Emperor of Spain, in the Cathedral Church of Leon, by the Arch-biſhop of Toledo; and gave his Son Sancho the title of King of Caſtile, in his own life-time. The chief of the Confederates againſt Mahomet Enaſar, the Miramomoline of Morocco, whom he vanquiſhed in the famous battel of Muradal, or Sierra Moracca, Anno 1214. 4 Ferdinand the third, who incorporated Leon and Caſtile into one Eſtate, and added the Kingdoms of Murcia, Corduba, and Sevil, taken from the Moors, unto his Dominions. 5 Alfonſo the fifth of Caſtile, and the ninth of Leon, elected Emperor of the Germans, but more famous for his eminence in Aſtronomy; the Author of the Alfonſine Tables: compiled by many Learned Men aſſembled together, by his means, in the City of Toledo, where, in the compiling of it, it is affirmed by a Spaniſh Writer, that he ſpent more than the Revenues of the Pope in ten years did amount unto. 6 Sanch the 3d, ſon of this Alfonſo, the Author of the great breach in the Line of Caſtile: for having the hap to ſurvive Ferdinand, ſirnamed de la Cerde, his elder Brother; he made himſelf ſo ſtrong a Party in his Father's Life-time, that he ſucceeded in the Kingdom, depriving his Brother's Children of their Right therein, though many attempts were made, in their favour, afterwards. Don Alfonſo, eldeſt Son of which Ferdinand married into France, was Father of Lewis Earl of Clermont; who by Leonora de Guſman, a Daughter of the now houſe of Medina Sedonia, was Father of Lewis, John, and Iſabella de la Cerde, (in which laſt, the Male-Iſſue being quite extinct) the whole Rights of that Line remained: brought by her to her Husband Bernard, a baſe Son of the Houſe of Foix; created by King Henry the ſecond, the firſt Earl of Medina Geli; whoſe Son, called Gaſton, left the name of Foix, and took unto himſelf that of de la Cerde; continued ever ſince in his Poſterity advanced unto the honour of Dukes of Medina Celi, in the perſon of Lewis the firſt Earl) the better to preſerve in memory their deſcent from, and lawful title to that Crown. And for the better keeping and preſerving of their claim unto it, it is affirmed to be the cuſtom of this Houſe, once, at the leaſt, in the life-time of every Duke, to put up a Petition to the King then reigning, for reſtitution to the Throne; which the King receiving as of courſe, doth of courſe ſubſcribe this anſwer to it, viz. No eſt lugar; that is to ſay, there is no room for him. 8 Pedro the Cruel, driven out of this Kingdom by Henry of Tranſtamare, his Brother: reſtored again, for a time, by the valour of Edward the Black-Prince, Son of Edward the third. 9 John, Son of Henry of Tranſtamare, who married his Son Henry, to Katharine Daughter of John of Gaunt, by Conſtance, one of the Daughters of Don Pedro the Cruel; ſo uniting both Titles into one. The times in which theſe Princes, and the reſt, did reign, appeareth in theſe Catalogues of the Earls and Kings of Caſtile, which are as follow.

The Earls of Caſtile.

A. Chr.
910	1	Ferdinand Gonſales, the firſt Proprietary Earl.
932	2	Garcias, Son of Ferdinand.
980	3	Sancho, or Sanctius, Son of Garcias.
1018	4	Garcias II. Son of Sancho, ſlain by Treaſon; without iſſue.
1028	5	Nugna, or Elvira, the Siſter of Garcias the ſecond, married to Sancho King of Navarre, Father of Ferdinand, made by him the firſt King of Caſtile.

The Kings of Caſtile.

A. Chr.
1036	1	Ferdinand, King of Caſtile by the gift of his Father, and of Leon, in right of his Wife. 33
1067	2	Sancho, Son of Ferdinand, King of Caſtile only; his younger Brother Alfonſo ſucceeding in Leon. 6.
1073	3	Alfonſo, the Brother of Sanch, King of Leon, and afterwards of Caſtile alſo.
		Urraca, Queen of Caſtile and Leon.
1108	4	Alfonſo, II. King of Navarre and Aragon. 15.
1122	5	Alfonſo III. King of Caſtile & Leon, the Son of Urraca, by Raymond of Burgundy, her former Husband.
1157	6	Sancho II. the elder Son of Alfonſo the third; his younger Brother Ferdinand ſucceeding in Leon. 2.
1159	7	Alfonſo IV. ſirnamed the Noble, Son of Sancho the 2d. 55.
1214	8	Henry, Son of Alfonſo the fourth. 3.
1217	9	Ferdinand II. Son of Alfonſo the ninth of Leon, and of Berenguela the Siſter of Henry, ſucceeded his Father in Leon alſo, An. 1230; the Kingdoms never ſince disjoyned, though the title of Leon in ſhort time became diſcontinued.
1252	10	Alfonſo V. ſirnamed the Wiſe, Son of Ferdinand the ſecond, King of Caſtile and Leon, and Emperor Elect. 32.
1283	11	Sancho III. the ſecond Son of Alfonſo the fifth; the children of Ferdinand de la Cerde, his elder Brother, being ſet beſide. 12.
1195	12	Ferdinand III. of Caſtile, and IV. of Leon, Son of Sancho the third. 18.
1312	13	Alfonſo, VI. Son of Ferdinand. 38.
1350	14	Pedro, the Son of Alfonſo, for his infinite Tyrannies, ſirnamed the Cruel. 18.
1368	15	Henry II. the Baſtard-ſon of Alfonſo the 6th, Earl of Tranſtumare. 11.
1379	16	John, the Son of Henry the ſecond. 11.
1390	17	Henry III. Son of John, and Husband of Katharine, the Daughter of John of Gaunt, and the Lady Conſtance, one of the Daughters of King Pedro. 17.
1406	18	John II Son of Henry and Katherine, 48.
1454	19	Henry IV. Son of John the ſecond. 21.
1478	20	Iſabel, Siſter of Henry the Fourth, married to Ferdinand V. Son of John King of Aragon.

Of whoſe Acts, and Iſſue, we will make more ample mention when we ſhall come to ſpeak of the Monarchy of Spain, which began in them, and hath been ſince continued in their poſterity.

The chief Orders of Knighthood within theſe Kingdoms of Caſtile and Leon, long ſince united into one, were Three in all; partly Religious, partly Military; and one Order of Religious perſons, not known in any Country but Spain alone.

This of the laſt ſort, is called the Order of Mercy, or de la mercede; firſt inſtituted by King James of Aragon, in the chief Church of Barcelone, Anno 1218. Admitted afterwards into the Kingdoms of Caſtile, whereof moſt eſteem; but ſo, that in remembrance of their firſt foundation, they ſtill retain their ancient Arms, which are thoſe of Aragon, viz. a Croſs Argent, and four Bends Gules, in a field Or. Their habit white; The Rule of their Order, that of St. Auguſtine: the practice and profeſſion of it, to gather Alms amongſt the People wherewith to redeem ſuch Chriſtian Captives, as either by Piracy, the chance of War, or by ſome other means are enthralled to the Turks and Moors: ſending their Agents yearly to Algiers and Feſſe, to inform them of the ſtate, age, and quality, of each ſeveral Captive, and after, on inſtruction from the Brethren of this Society, to deal in the redemption of them. A buſineſs which they manage with great care and faithfulneſs, and are accordingly truſted with great ſums of money, given and collected to that end: few men here dying, who give not ſome Legacy or other to this pious uſe. Nor are the Kings behind hand in ſo good a work, promoting it with a liberal purſe, and giving as much ordinarily out of his Eſtate, as the Brethren have collected in all Spain beſides. And to ſay truth, it doth concern him more than others, becauſe they are his Subjects chiefly, for whoſe redemption the whole ſum is given and gathered: Religious perſons are ranſomed firſt, and then the Laity; the young and ſerviceable men, before old and impotent: if after the Redemption of the Spaniſh Captives, they have any ſtock left, they keep it not till another year, but therewith ranſom Captives of ſome other Nations. So that this ſeemeth to ſucceed in the place of the now antiquated and uſeleſs Orders of Knighthood, which were heretofore of great authority and power: that is to ſay,

1 Of Calatrava, a Town of the Kingdom of Toledo, abandoned by the Templers, (to whom the defence thereof belonged) on the approach of the Moors, made good by Raymond the Abbot of Piſuria, and the Monks of Ciſteaux, Anno 1157. For the future preſervation and defence whereof, they ordained this Order; which in proceſs of time grew to ſuch eſtate, that beſides eight fair Priories, they enjoyed in Spain no leſs than 61 Towns and Caſtles. The Knights hereof do wear for their habit, a White Robe, with a Red Croſs upon their breaſts; confirmed by Pope Alexander the third, An. 1164, under the Diſcipline of Ciſteaux. Their reſidence is at the Caſtle Covo; bound, by their Order, to ſerve in the Wars againſt the Infidels: upon which ſervices, they have been ſometimes in the field with three hundred great Horſe.

2 Of St. Jago, inſtituted by the Canons of Eloy, and certain Gentlemen of Caſtile, in imitation of the Order of Calatrava; for the ſecurity and entertainment of Chriſtian Pilgrims, travelling to the Shrine of St. Jago; confirmed by the ſaid Pope Alexander the third, Anno 1175, under the Rule of St. Auguſtine. Their Habit is a White Robe, with a Red Croſs like a Sword: the companions of it, according to the firſt Founders, being part Eccleſiaſtical, and part Secular: whereof theſe laſt are only tied unto the vow of conjugal Chaſtity. They grew in little time unto ſuch eſteem, that beſides two Colledges or Seminaries in Salamanca, and a Colledg in Sevil; they had four Hermitages in the Mountains, and five Hoſpitals well endowed for the entertainment of Strangers; together with 90 Towns and Caſtles in ſeveral parts of the Kingdom. The whole number of Gentlemen, beſides Friers ſerving in their Cures, and other Miniſters, are above 600. Their firſt reſidence, at the Hoſpital of St. Mark, in the Suburbs of Leon, on a diſlike with Ferdinand the ſecond King of Leon, removed to Vcles in Caſtile, beſtowed upon them by Alfonſo the 4th. Upon this occaſion being divided, they have ſince two Maſters, or Commendadors, the one called the Commendador of Leon, who reſides at St. Marks; the other the Commendador of Caſtile, who reſides at Vcles.

3 Of Alcantara, a Town of Extremadura, defended by Ferdinand of Leon, againſt the Moors; where he framed this Order; confirmed by Pope Lucio, A. 1183. Others aſcribe it to Alfonſo, the Succeſſor of that Ferdinand, An. 1217; by whom endowed with all the Lands of the Calatravians, in the Realm of Leon: but acknowledging the ſuperiority thereof, and under the ſame Rule of Ciſteaux. Their device at firſt was a Pear-tree Vert, in a field Or, to which hanged a pair of Shackles, as a ſign of their ſubjection to them of Calatrava: changed, Anno 1411, to a White Robe, and a Green Croſs on their breaſts.

I omit here the Order of the Dove and Reaſon, inſtituted by King John of Caſtile, becauſe of ſmall eſteem, and but ſhort continuance: nor ſhall I now ſpeak any thing of the Arms of the Kingdom, which we have ſeen before on another occaſion. And ſo much for Caſtile, the firſt of thoſe Three greater Kingdoms of Spain, under which all the reſt are now reduced; containing in this Continent all the Provinces and Eſtates before deſcribed; amounting to two third parts of the whole: and many large Eſtates elſewhere, as ſhall be ſhewed hereafter in its proper place. Paſs we on, next, to Portugal; the ſecond, in repute, of the ſaid three Kingdoms; not ſo much for the largeneſs of the Territories which it had on the Continent, as for its great Appendixes in all other parts of the World.

II. The Kingdom of Portugal.

THE Kingdom of PORTVGAL containeth, 1 Portugal it ſelf: 2 Algarve, or Regnum Algarbiorum: and 3 the Tercera's, or Iſles of Azores: theſe laſt not reckoned parts of Spain, by any of our Writers, either old or new; but made by us a part hereof, becauſe ſituate over againſt Portugal, one of the firſt additions which was made unto it on the Ocean: and finally, becauſe I know not under what Head to reduce them better.

And firſt, for PORTVGAL it ſelf, it is bounded on the North, with the Rivers Minio and Avia, which part it from Gallicia; on the South, with Algarve; on the Weſt, with the Atlantick Ocean: and on the Eaſt, with the two Caſtiles, and Extremadura, from which divided by a Line drawn from Ribadania, ſtanding on the Avia, to Badaios, on the Anas, or Guadiana. Extended on the Sea-coaſt from North to South, 400 miles: the breadth of it, in the broadeſt place (not taking in the Iſlands into the accompt) 100 miles; in the narroweſt, 80: the whole circumference, 879 miles: and in that compaſs, 1460 Pariſhes.

It was firſt called Luſitania, from the Luſitani, the chief Inhabitants thereof; and took the name of Portugal either from the Haven or Port of Cale, now called Caia, ſometimes a very rich and flouriſhing Emporie; or rather from the Haven-Town of Porto, at the mouth of Duerus; where the Gauls (or the French rather) uſed to land their Merchandiſe: which was therefore called Portus Gallorum; and which Town was given in Dower with Tereſa, the Daughter of Alfonſo the ſixth, to Henry of Lorreign, with the title of Earl of Portugal. Whoſe Succeſſors coming to be Kings, extended this name to all thoſe Countries which they got from the Moors, as it continueth at this day.

The Air is very healthy, the Country for the moſt part hilly, and bare of Corn; ſupplied from France, and other parts of the North; that which they have, being as good as any in Europe, if not better. The ſoil, and people, in all places, not rich alike. For where the ſoil is richeſt, (as in the parts lying on the North of Duero) there the people are pooreſt; in regard of the great diſtance thereof from Lisbon; and ſo not benefitted by the Trading of that wealthy City. And where the ſoil is pooreſt, there the people be richeſt, helping themſelves by trade and manufactures; eſpecially by making of Silks and Salt, ſufficient for themſelves, and for other Countries. But where there is a defect of Corn, that defect is otherwiſe ſufficiently recompenſed with abundance of Honey, Wine, Oyl, Allom, Fruits, Fiſh, Salt, white Marble, and ſome Mines of Silver, &c.

The people of a more plain and ſimple behaviour, than the reſt of Spain; and (if we believe the old Proverb) none of the wiſeſt. For, whereas the Spaniards are ſaid to ſeem wiſe, and yet to be Fools, the French to ſeem Fools, and yet to be wiſe, the Italians both to ſeem wiſe, and to be ſo: the Portugals are affirmed to be neither wiſe indeed, nor ſo much as to ſeem ſo. But little different from which, is the Spaniſh By-word, which telleth us of the Portugals, that they are Pocos y Locos; few, and fooliſh: which others vary with the addition of another part of their Character; ſaying, they are Pocos, Sotos, y Devotos, Few and Fooliſh, but withal Devout. They have great animoſities (if it be not grown to an Antipathie) againſt the Caſtilians, for bereaving them of their Kingdom and Liberty, though both, of late, recovered by them: but, when moſt Fools, were counted for good Seafaring-men, and happy in the diſcovery of Foreign Nations.

Rivers it hath of all ſorts, both great and ſmall, almoſt 200. Thoſe of moſt note, 1 Minius, full of Red-Lead (from hence called Minium by the Latins), navigable with ſmall Veſſels 100 miles.. 2 Lethes, now Lavada. 3 Muliadas, now Mondego. 4 Tagus. 5 Duerus, and 6 Anas: theſe three laſt common alſo to the reſt of Spain; Anas, or Guadiana, paſſing by Portugal but for 7 Leagues only; Tagus for 18, and Duero for 80. None of them navigable for any long ſpace, by Ships of burden; the Rivers of all Spain being generally ſwift of courſe, reſtrained within narrow Chanels, banked on both ſides with very ſteep Rocks, which make them incommodious for Navigation: inſomuch that it is reckoned for a great Prerogative of Tagus, and the Realm of Portugal, that this River is there navigable with great Ships, fifteen or twenty miles within the Continent. But here that want is ſomewhat tolerably ſupplied with three excellent Havens: 1 That of Lisbon upon Tagus: and 2 Porto, on Duero, to the North of Lisbon; of which, more anon: 3 of Setaval, South of Lisbon, ſituate on a Golf of 20 miles in length, and 3 in breadth: a place of principal importance to thoſe parts of the Realm. Rivers, however, of great fame; according to whoſe courſe, the whole Country was divided, by the Romans, into Vlteriorem, lying beyond Duero, Northwards. 2 Citeriorem, on the South of Tagus: and 3 Interamnem, betwixt both.

Principal Cities of this part, 1 Lisbon, ſeated upon Tagus, a famous City for Traffick; the Portugals in all their Navigations ſetting ſail from hence. By the Latins called Olyſippo, and Vlyſippo; becauſe, as ſome ſay, Vlyſſes built it, coming hither in the courſe of his ten years travel: a thing meerly fabulous, it being no where found that Vlyſſes did ever ſee this Ocean, but like enough it is, that this Town being ſeated conveniently for Navigation, and inhabited by Seafaring-men, might at the firſt be conſecrated to the memory of ſo great a Traveller: as Athens, being a place of Learning, was dedicated to Minerva, whom the Greeks call Athene. It is in compaſs 7 miles, and containeth upwards of 30 Pariſhes, and in them 20000 houſes: all of neat and elegant building. Turrets and Towers it numbreth upon the Walls, about 76; Gates toward the Sea-ſhore, 22. And towards the Continent, ſituate upon five ſmall Hills, betwixt which is a Valley which runs down to the River: on the higheſt Hill, an ancient Caſtle, not ſtrong, but by reaſon of the ſituation, ſerving now only for a Priſon for men of quality: the entry of the River being defended by the Caſtle of Caſcais; and nearer to the City, by the Fort of St. Julians, and the Rock of Belem; munitioned with 20 pieces of Ordnance. This City heretofore was honoured with the Seat of the Kings, ſince of the Vice-Roys, an Archbiſhops-See, the Staple of Commodities for all the Kingdom, and thought to be more worth than the whole Realm beſide, ſaid, by ſome French Writers, to be the beſt peopled City in Chriſtendom, next unto Paris; and by Botero an Italian, made to be the fourth Mart-Town of Europe; the other three being Conſtantinople, Paris, Moſco. In which they do great wrong to London, as populous, and well-traded, as the beſt of them all. 2 Santaren, on the Tagus, ſo called from S. Irene, a Nun of Tomar, (a Monaſtery, in which the old Kings of Portugal did uſe to be crowned) here martyred by the Moors; by Ptolemy called Scabaliſcus then a Roman Colony. 3 Sintra, upon the main Atlantick, at the end of huge Mountains, called Montes Lunæ; whither by reaſon of the cool refreſhings from the Sea, and pleaſure of the Woods adjoining, the Kings of Portugal uſed to retire in the heats of Summer. 4 Conimbre, on both ſides the River Mondego, pleaſantly ſeated amongſt Vineyards, and Woods of Olives, a Biſhops-See, and an Univerſity; the Maſters whereof made the Commentary on moſt part of Ariſtotle, called from hence, Schola Conimbricenſis. Then on the North of the River Duero; betwixt that and Minio, are 5 Braga, by Ptolemy called Bracaria Auguſta, reckoned by Antonine for one of the four chief Cities in Spain, the Royal Seat, when time was, of the Suevian Kings, and now the See of an Archbiſhop, contending for the Primacy with him of Toledo. 6 Porto, the Haven of the Gauls, on the mouth of Duero. 7 Miranda, a Biſhops-See on the ſame River. 8 Bragance, the Duke whereof is ſo great a Prince, that it is thought a third part of the people of Portugal are his Vaſſals, and live on his Lands: originally deſcended from Alfonſo, natural Son to John the firſt; created by his Father, Earl of Borcellos, after Duke of Bragance; the later Dukes, ſince the time of King Emanuel, being withal of the right Royal Blood; two ſteps of main advantage to the Regal Throne, lately aſcended and obtained by John Duke of Bragance, now called John the 4th. And finally, on the South of Tagus, betwixt that and the Kingdom of Algarve, there is 9 Ebora, in the midſt of a large and ſpacious Plain, an Archbiſhops See, and an Univerſity; this laſt of the Foundation of King Henry the Cardinal. 10 Portelegre, a Biſhops-See. 11 Olivenca on the Guadiana. 12 Beia, by Pliny called Pax Julia, now Meau, and not very well inhabited; but anciently a Roman Colony, and one of the three Juridical Reſorts of Luſitania.

2. The Kingdom of ALGARVE lyeth on the South of Portugal, from which divided by a line drawn from Aſcorin, on the Weſtern Sea, to Odechore, a Caſtle on the Guadiana: on the Eaſt, bounded by Andaluſia; on the Weſt and South, by the main Atlantick. This is the moſt wild and deſert-part of all this Kingdom, barren and dry: peopled with few Towns, nor thoſe very populous: hilly and mountainous withal; but yielding, by the benefit of the Sea, a great Trade of Fiſhing; of Tunny eſpecially, whereof more caught upon this Coaſt, than in all the Kingdom.

The name is took from the Weſtern ſituation of it, for ſo the word Algarve ſignifieth in the Arabick, Tongue. The utmoſt end of it, called anciently, Promontorium Sacrum; now, the Cape of S. Vincent; becauſe the bones of S. Vincent, religiouſly preſerved by the Chriſtians, were here burnt and ſcattered about by the Moors. Places of moſt importance in it, 1 Niebla, the Seat of Aben Meſad, once a King of this Country. 2 Silvis, an Epiſcopal-See, ſeated in the In-land parts. 3 Villa nova, ſituate beyond the Cape. 4 Tavila, the Balſa; and 5 Faro, the Oſſonoba of Ptolemy; both noted Ports on the Atlantick. 6 Lagos, another Haven-Town alſo.

This Country, conquered by the Moors, with the reſt of Spain, in the diſtractions of their Power, was for a time under the Soveraignty and Command of the Kings of Sevil. Recovered from the Moors of Sevil, by the Kings of Morocco, it became ſubject unto them till they left this Country; and, after their retreat, was parcelled among many Princes. One of which, called Aben Meſad, reigning in Niebla, and the parts adjoyning, being diſpoſſeſſed of his Eſtate by Alfonſo the Wiſe, moſt of the other Towns and Princes ſubmitted to him, and became his Vaſſals, Anno 1257. More abſolutely ſubdued and made ſubject to the Crown of Portugal, by Alfonſo the third, Anno 1260; to whom the ſaid Alfonſo, the tenth of that name in Leon, and the fifth in Caſtile, had given the ſame in Dowry with Beatrix his Daughter. From which Marriage iſſued Dionyſius, or Denys, King of Portugal, the firſt that ever uſed the title of Rex Algarbiorum, Anno 1279.

3. The AZORES are certain Iſlands lying in the Atlantick Ocean, oppoſite to the City of Lisbon, from which diſtant but 250 Leagues. Situate betwixt the 38 and 40 degrees of Northern Latitude; and one of them in the firſt Longitude; which is commonly reckoned from theſe Iſlands, as being the moſt Weſtern part of the World, before the diſcovery of America.

They were thus called from the multitude of Goſhawks which were found there in the beginning; (the word Azor, in the Spaniſh Tongue, ſignifying a Goſ hawk) though at this time there be none of them to be found. Called alſo, the Flemiſh Iſlands, becauſe firſt diſcovered by the Flemings; and the great numbers of them in the Iſle of Faial, (one of the chief of all the pack) where there are yet ſome Families which reſemble the Flemings both in their complexion and habit: and not far from the place of their abode, a Torrent, which the Spaniards call Riberados Flamengos, or the River of Flemings. They are alſo called the Tercera's, from Tercera the chief Iſle among them.

The Air of thoſe Iſlands is generally good, and ſubject unto few Diſeaſes, except that which the Portugals call the Blood; being an impoſthumation of the blood, breaking out at the eyes, or other parts of the body. Some other inconveniences they are ſubject to, proceeding from the humility of the place; the great winds and ſtorms, of ſuch a violent and ſtrange kind of working, that Bars of Iron as big as a man's arm, have in ſix years been worn as little as a Straw. All of them well ſtored with Fleſh, Fiſh, and other things neceſſary, except Salt and Oyl, with which they are furniſhed out of Portugal. Wines they have alſo for their own uſe, but not to be tranſported far, becauſe of their weakneſs: for which cauſe alſo, the richer men provide themſelves of Canary Wines, or thoſe of the Iſland of Madera. Of like nature is their Wheat, & other Fruits, which hold not good above a year. All of them ſubject unto Earthquakes, and ſome to breathings out of fire, which continually ſendeth forth fuming-vapours. The chief Commodities which they tranſport unto other Countries, are Canary-Birds for Ladies, Oad for the Diers, Joyners-work, which they ſell to the Spaniards, and Beeves for the victualling of ſuch ſhips as come there to be victualled.

The Inhabitants are generally laborious, excellent Husbands on their grounds; inſomuch as they make Vines to grow out of Rocks: much given to Joynery; by which they make many pretty fancies, much eſteemed by the Spaniards, but not ſo expert at it, as thoſe of Nuremberg. They take great pains to teach their Cattel underſtanding; the Oxen being taught to know when their Maſter calleth them. In other things they conform to the Portugals, both in their Cuſtoms and Apparel; but with ſome ſmattering of the Fleming, which Nation they affect above any other.

The Iſlands, nine in number; and diſtinguiſhed by the ſeveral names of, 1 Tercera, 2 S. Michael, 3 Faial, 4 Gratioſa, 5 S. George, 6 Pico, 7 Corvo, 8 Flores, and 9 S. Maries; of which, S. Michael, and S. Maries, lye next to Spain; Tercera, on the North-weſt of thoſe, (by conſequence, the third in Order, whence it had the name) S. Georges, Gratioſa, Pico, Faial, on the Weſt of that; and finally, thoſe of Corvo, and Flores, neareſt to America.

1 TERCERA, the chief of all the reſt, 18 miles in compaſs; well ſtored with Peaches, Apples, Limons, Oranges: and for the Kitchin, with Turneps, Cabages, plenty of Pot-herbs, and as good Batato-roots, (which are the beſt food the people have) as any be in the world; but more eſteemed in Portugal, than they be in this Iſland, by reaſon of their great abundance. Here is alſo great quantity of the beſt kind of Woad, (which from hence is called Iland Woad) and a Plant about the height of a man, which bears no fruit; but hath a Root as profitable as thoſe that do, out of which the people draw a thin and tender film, wherewith they fill their Mattreſſes, inſtead of Feathers. Fowl enough for the uſe of man, and yet none of prey. No Port of any ſafety in it, but that of Angra; and that made ſafe by Art, and not by Nature: the whole begirt with Rocks, which ſtick out like a pointed Diamond, able to pierce the feet of any who ſhould venture over them. Places of moſt importance in it, 1 Praye, on the Sea-ſide, well walled, but not very well peopled. 2 S. Barbara, 3 S. Sebaſtians, 4 Gualne, and 5 Villa Nova, Burroughs of good note. 6 Angra, the chief, not of this Iſland only, but of all the nine: the Reſidence of the Governour, and an Archbiſhops-See, who hath in it his Cathedral-Church: ſeated on a convenient Bay, made in the form of a Creſcent, with two Promontories on each ſide, (like the two Horns of a half-Moon) bearing into the Sea; each Fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle for defence of the Haven: the Town it ſelf alſo well walled about, and environed with ſharp Rocks on all ſides. Both Town and Caſtle well garriſoned, and no leſs diligently guarded. This, in regard of its great ſtrength, and commodious Haven, is eſteemed the principal of theſe Iſlands, and communicates its name unto all the reſt; though neither neareſt unto Spain, nor the greateſt in compaſs.

2. S. MARIES, ſo called from the Saint (as S. Georges and S. Michaels are) unto which it is dedicated; is the moſt Southern of theſe Iſles, and the next to Spain: twelve miles in circuit, inhabited by Spaniards only, and thoſe much given unto the making of Earthen Veſſels. So naturally fenced with Rocks, that it is, and may be eaſily kept by the Inhabitants, without the charge of a Garriſon. The chief Town of it hath the name of S. Maries alſo, which it either giveth unto the Iſland, or borroweth from it.

3. S. MICHAELS, directly North of S. Maries, from which, little diſtant; the biggeſt in the whole pack, as being 20 miles in length, though the breadth not anſwerable: much ſubject unto Earth quakes and fiery vapours of moſt note amongſt our modern Geographers, who have removed hither the firſt Meridian (by which they divide the World into Eaſt and Weſt) from the Canaries, or Fortunate Iſlands; where it was fixed in the time of Ptolemy, and others of the Ancient Writers.

And this remove ſeems countenanced even by Nature it ſelf; it being obſerved, that the Compaſs when it cometh under the Meridian, drawn through this Iſle, hath little or no variation at all, but pointeth almoſt directly towards the North: whereas in all other places, or leſs Meridians, Eaſt and Weſt, it pointeth not ſo directly North, but more or leſs to the North-eaſt, or the North-weſt; which the Mariners call the Variation, or the North-eaſting, and the North weſting, of the Compaſs. And yet it's obſerved of late, that there is ſome more ſenſible variation of it in this Iſle of S. Michael, than in that of Corvo; which therefore is conceived more fit for the firſt Meridian.

The chief Town hereof, beſides many Burroughs and leſſer Hamlets, Punta del Gada, ſeated upon a dangerous Sea, and without any Port; yet more frequented by Strangers, than the Port of Angra, becauſe here they may go in and out as they pleaſe; but not ſo in the other.

4 FAYAL, 17 or 18 miles in length; plentifully provided with all things neceſſary for the life of man, and well furniſhed with Woad, for which Commodity, much frequented by the Merchants of England. The chief Town of it, Dorta; defended with a Caſtle, and that guarded by Spaniards: both Town and Iſland taken by Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1597. This Action was called the Iſland-Voyage; undertaken as well to divert the War which the Spaniards threatned to bring to our own doors; as, by ſeizing ſome of thoſe Iſlands, to intercept the Spaniſh Fleets in their return, and to hinder them in their ſetting out: by which means, wanting their Indian Gold, they might be brought to better terms with their Neighbour-Nations. And though the Engliſh were not able to hold it long, yet it was ſaid, that the Booty got in this Expedition, amounted to 400000 Crowns; beſides the honour of beating the Spaniard upon his own ground. It took this name from its abundance of Beeches.

5 GRATIOSA, not above five or ſix Leagues in compaſs; but ſo well furniſhed with Fruits, that they ſend much yearly to Tercera; inhabited by Portugals only, but ſo poor, that they are not able to bear the charge of a Garriſon. The chief Town of it called La Plaia.

6 S. GEORGES, twelve miles long, about three in breadth; mountainous, and full of Foreſts: but thoſe Foreſts ſo well ſtored with Cedars, that they uſe them many times for Shipping, and ſometimes for Fewel. The chief Town of it, called S. Georges, as the Iſland is.

7 PICO, lyeth on the South of the Iſle of S. George, and took this name from an high Hill, in the form of a Pyramid, which the Portugals generally call a Pike, or Pico. Repleniſhed with Fruits, ſome Cedars, and a tree called Teixo, of great bulk, and as much beauty; the wood thereof, exceeding hard, red within, and waved; ſo admirably beautiful, that it is allowed only to the King's Officers, the other Subjects being interdicted the uſe of it, (but on ſpecial licenſe) by a publick Edict. In bigneſs, it is ſecond only unto that of S. Michael, if not equal to it; hardly ſo much in length, but of greater breadth. The chief Towns of it, 1 S. Sebaſtians, 2 Callota ne Neſquin, both upon the Sea, and in the Eaſt parts of the Iſland.

8 FLORES, directly Eaſt from Fayal, ſo called from its abundance of Flowers, (as Gratioſa from the like flouriſhing Verdure of it) is in compaſs not above 8 miles; but plentifully furniſhed with Cattel, and good grounds to feed them. The chief Town of it, Santa Crux. The Iſle (though ſmall, yet) twice as big as the Iſle of 9 CORVO, ſo called from its abundance of Crows, ſituate on the North hereof, and but little diſtant: both very unſafe, and both moſt miſerable poor, by reaſon of the many Pirates which lye betwixt them, to intercept ſuch ſhips as trade towards America. But this, though much ſmaller than the others, may in time be of more eſteem than any of them, in regard it is conceived to be the moſt natural place for the firſt Meridian, as before was noted: the Needle here pointing directly to the North, without Variation. which whether it proceed from ſome ſecret inclination of the Load-ſtone to that part of the World, more in this place than any other; or that being ſituate between the two great Continents of Europe and America, it is drawn equally towards both, but the magnetical vertue of the Earth it ſelf, I leave to be diſputed by more able Judgments.

Theſe Iſlands were firſt diſcovered and ſubdued by the Portugals, under the conduct, or by the direction of Prince Henry, Son of John the firſt; who firſt made the Portugals in love with the Seas. And they were alſo the laſt Members of the Crown of Portugal, which held out for Don Antonio the Baſtard, againſt Philip the ſecond of Caſtile: againſt whom the Iſland of Tercera was for a while gallantly defended by Emanuel de Silva, with the help of the French; but taken at the laſt by the Marqueſs of Santa Cruz, and the French, after promiſe of life, cruelly murdered in cold blood. After which, garriſoned at the firſt by none but Portugals. But upon ſome commotion hapning in that Kingdom, it was thought fit, on ſome reaſon of State, to make ſure of the beſt Iſlands, by Spaniſh Garriſons; which accordingly were put into the Caſtle of Angra, in Tercera; the Towns of Punta del Gada, in S. Michaels; and Dorta in Fayal. And to ſay truth, ths Spaniards had good reaſon to be careful of them: theſe Iſlands being of ſuch importance, as without them the Navigation of the Indies, Æthiopia, Braſil, and New Spain, could not be continued: becauſe the Fleets which come from thoſe Countries to Lisbon, or Sevil, muſt, in a manner, of neceſſity touch upon ſome of them; as well in following their courſe, if they come from the Weſt, as in recovering ſuch Winds as are uſeful to them, if they came from the Eaſt.

But to return again to the main Land of Portugal, know, that the ancient Inhabitants of it, were the Luſitania dwelling betwixt Tagus and Duerus, the old Luſitani, being bounded within thoſe Rivers; the Celtici, and Turditani, who took up alſo ſome part of Bætica, dwelling on the South of Tagus: and the Gallaici Bracarii, (ſo called to difference them from the Gallaici Lucenſes, who poſſeſſed Gallicia) on the North of Duerus. Subjected firſt unto the Romans; by whom accounted one of the three parts of Spain. In the declining of their Empire conquered by the Alani; and from them taken by the Suevians; who, for a time, made the City of Braga the Royal Seat of their Kings. The Suevians loſt it to the Goths; and the Goths, to the Moors, as hath been ſhewn already in their ſeveral ſtories. Recovered, in part, by the Kings of Leon; to whom that part continued ſubject, till given by Alfonſo the ſixth of Leon, in Dowry with his baſe Daughter Teraſa, to Henry of Lorrein, (whoſe vertue and good ſervice, merited no leſs reward) Anno 1099. Who having fortunately governed it by the title of an Earl, for the ſpace of 12 years, left his Son, Alfonſo, Heir both to his Fortunes and Vertues; honoured with the title of King of Portugal, by the Soveraigns of Leon, for his moſt gallant demeanor ſhewn in the Battel of Obrique, Anno 1139. He had, before the Aſſumption of the Regal Stile, ruled 27 years with a great deal of honour; and he reigned here with no leſs, 45 years after that Aſſumption; reverenced by his friends, and feared by his enemies. So that the whole time of his ſitting in the Chair of State, was 72 years: a longer enjoying of Soveraignty, than any Prince ſince the firſt beginning of the Roman Monarchy. His Succeſſors we ſhall have in order in the following Catalogue. But we muſt firſt tell you, as in other places of this Work, that the Princes of moſt note in the whole Succeſſion, are, 1 Henry of Lorrein, (whom ſome make a Burgundian, of the City of Beſancon) who coming into Spain to the Holy Wars, and deſerving nobly in the ſame, was honoured by Alfonſo the ſixth, with his Daughter Teraſa, and the Town of Porto for her Dower; given to him with the title of the Earl of Portugal. He extended his Eſtate as far as Conimbre, on the South of the River Duero; that River being before that time, the utmoſt bound of it that way. 2 Alfonſo the firſt King, who took Lisbon from the Moors, Anno 1247. and made it the Seat of his Kingdom; which he extended Southward, as far as Algarve. 3 Alfonſo the 3d, who partly by Conqueſt, and partly by Marriage, added Algarve to his Eſtate, getting it by the Sword, and confirming it to him by the Bed. He alſo did prevail ſo far with Alfonſo the Wiſe, (never the wiſer for ſo doing) as to get his Realm diſcharged of the Homage which formerly had been done to the Kings of Leon, An. 1270. 4 Alfonſo the 4th, confederate with the fifth of the ſame name in Caſtile, againſt Alboacen the Miramomolin of Africk, at the fight near the River Salado, not far from Tariff; where they diſcomfited the vaſt Army of Moors, conſiſting of 470000 Horſe and Foot. 5 John the firſt, the baſe ſon of Pedro the firſt; ſetting aſide the Lady Beatrix, Queen of Caſtile, the Daughter of Ferdinand the firſt, and the Lawful Children of his Father, being many in number; by force and colour of Election, obtained the Kingdom. Fortified it by his marriage with the Lady Philip, Daughter of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaſter; a ſtrong Competitor, at that time, for the Crown of Caſtile: on which relation, this King, the four Kings next ſucceeding, and two of this Kings younger Sons, were made Knights of the Garter. 6 Edward the ſon and ſucceſſor of John the firſt; of whom there goes a ſtory, that on the day of his Coronation, he was adviſed by a Jew, (one of his Phyſicians) learned in Aſtrology, to defer the Ceremony until noon, in regard he found by his Art, that if they did proceed unto it in that conjuncture, his reign would be very ſhort, and full of trouble. But the King, either out of magnanimity, or contempt of that Art, going on with the Ceremony, the Jew's Prediction was found true; for he reigned not fully five years, and with ill ſucceſs in his attempts againſt the Moors. 7 Henry Duke of Viſco, (Viſcontinus the Latins call it) the ſecond ſon of John the firſt, created Knight of the Garter, by King Henry the ſixth, An. 1444. By whoſe encouragement and example, the Portugueze began to be affected to Foreign Voyages: diſcovering in his time, (and, for the moſt part, under his conduct alſo) the Iſlands of Azores, Madera, Holy-Port, thoſe of Capo Verde, and a great part of the coaſt of Africk, as far as Guinea. He dyed Anno 1465. 8 Alfonſo the fifth, who warring on the Moors in Africk, took from them the ſtrong Towns of Tangier, Alcaſer, and Azilla. 9 John the ſecond, under whoſe reign the Portugals fully ſetled themſelves in Guinea, and the Realms of Congo; diſcovering all the Coaſts and Iſles of Africk, (not before diſcovered) as far as to the Cape of good hope, Anno 1487: planting and fortifying as they paſſed; the whole Diſcovery of Africk, the Eaſt-Indies, and Brazil, being perfected in the Reign of King 10 Emanuel; under whom alſo they diſcomfited great Armies of the Turks, and Sultans of Egypt; bringing by Sea the riches of the Eaſt, into the Weſt. 11 Sebaſtian, the Grandchild of King John, ſon of Emanuel, embarking himſelf unadviſedly in the Wars of Africk, loſt his life (as it is generally ſuppoſed) at the battel of Alcaſar, in which three Kings fell in one day. But many of the Portugals are of opinion, that he was not killed, but that for ſhame and ſorrow he returned not home; wandring from one place to another, and at laſt was found and avowed at Venice: thence carried to Naples, where he was kept three days in a dark Dungeon, without any ſuſtenance but a Knife and a Halter: brought into Spain by the King's Command, where at laſt he dyed. A man in whom ſo many circumſtances met, to make up a truth, that the very Spaniards uſed to ſay, that either he was the true Sebaſtian, or elſe the Devil in his likeneſs. But whether true or not, it is not now material; Death having put an end to that diſputation; though the controverſie which enſued upon his death, for the Crown of Portugal, be not yet decided. For, though King Philip the ſecond of Spain, ſucceeded in it next after Henry the Cardinal-King (who only came upon the ſtage, that the Competitors might have time to declare their titles); and claimed the Crown as eldeſt Heir-male, and neareſt Kinſman to King Henry: yet all the World was not well ſatisfied in the Juſtice and Equity of his Demands. In the carrying on of which Affair, he ſeemed to deal very candidly to the eyes of men, not biaſſed by their proper Intereſs: offering to ſubmit his Title to a Diſputation, profeſſing, that the Laws of Portugal were more favourable to him, than the Law of Caſtile; and openly acknowledging, that if he ſhould chance to dye before the ſaid Henry, his eldeſt Son, as being a degree further off, would come behind ſome others of the Pretendants to it, of whom himſelf had the precedence. But finding nothing done by Henry, and meaning to make ſure work after his deceaſe, (Antonio the Baſtard having got poſſeſſion of Lisbon, and taking on himſelf as King, by a popular and tumultuous Election) he raiſed an Army under the command of Ferdinand de Toledo, Duke of Alva, and ſubdued all that ſtood againſt him; Katharine the Dutcheſs of Bragance, Daughter of Prince Edward, ſurrendring alſo all her intereſs and pretenſions to him; ſo entring by a mixt title of Deſcent and Arms, Anno 1580. Threeſcore years it was peaceably enjoyed by the Kings of Spain, when ſuddenly diſpoſſeſſed by a potent Faction, appearing for John Duke of Bragance, deſcended from the youngeſt ſon of King Emanuel: which wrought ſo cunningly and ſucceſsfully in his behalf, (by the great wit and under-hand practices of Cardinal Richelieu, and others, Miniſters of the French) that the King of Spain was ſooner diſſeized of Portugal, than he heard of any plot or practice ſet on foot againſt him, An. 1639. In which it is to be obſerved, that as King Philip the ſecond, for the better obtaining of this Crown, had embroyled the French, engaging that King in a bloody War againſt the Proteſtants of that Kingdom; to make him ſure enough from troubling him in his preſent Enterpriſe: ſo the French Miniſters had cauſed a revolt in Catalogne; to the end, that when the King of Spain was buſied in reducing that Province, the Portugals might have opportunity to redeem themſelves from the power of the Spaniards; whom the Antipathy betwixt the Nations made leſs pleaſing to them. Nor was it a partial defection only, or the loſs of Portugal, and no more: but a general falling off of the whole Eſtate in Africk, Aſia, America, in the Iſles and Continents: the Acceſſories (excepting only the Town of Ceuta in Barbary, and ſome of the Tercera's) going the ſame way as the Principal did. And here methinks that grave and deliberate Nation of the Spaniards may be juſtly taxed for committing a greater Solœciſm in point of State, than ever people did before them; in that, having got the full and peaceable poſſeſſion of the Crown of Portugal, and all the out-parts and Members of it; they continued all the Garriſons and ſtrong Holds of the whole Eſtate, in the hands of the Natives. By means whereof, when Portugal it ſelf fell off from the King of Spain, the Provinces and Plantations did the like, without any hæſitancie, which, had ſome of the chief Pieces in every Province, Factory, and Plantation, been brought by little and little (if not all at once) into the power of the Caſtilians, might have been eaſily prevented. Nor hath the Spaniard hitherto attempted any thing material, for the recovery of that Kingdom: having been ever ſince ſo over-laid by the French in Catalogne, Navarre, Biſcay, Flanders, Artoys, and Italy; that he hath not had much leiſure to attend that buſineſs. But leaving him and them to their own affairs, it is time to repreſent you with a Catalogue of

The Kings of Portugal.

A. C.
1139	1	Alfonſo, the ſecond Earl, and firſt King of Portugal. 45.
1184	2	Sancho, the Son of Alfonſo. 28.
1212	3	Alfonſo II. Son of Sancho. 11.
1223	4	Sancho II. Son of Alfonſo the 2d. 34.
1257	5	Alfonſo III. Brother of Sancho the 2d 22.
1279	6	Denys, the Son of Alfonſo the 3d. 48.
1325	7	Alfonſo IV. the Son of Denys. 32.
1357	8	Pedro, the Son of Alfonſo the 4th. 10.
1367	9	Ferdinand, the Son of Pedro, the laſt King of the lawful Iſſue of Henry of Lorrein. 18.
1385	10	John the baſe Son of Pedro, of whom ſufficiently before. 48.
1433	11	Edward, the Son of John, and of the Lady Philip of Lancaſter. 5.
1438	12	Alfonſo V. the Son of Edward. 43.
1481	13	John II. the Son of Alphonſo the 5th. 14.
1495	14	Emanuel, the Nephew of Edward, by his Son Ferdinand, Duke of Viſco. 26.
1521	15	John III. Son of Emanuel. 38.
1557	16	Sebaſtian, the Nephew of John the 3d, by his Son Don John; unfortunately ſlain in the Fields of Africk. 21.
1578	17	Henry the Cardinal, Son of King Emanuel, the laſt of the Male-Iſſue of Henry of Lorrein. 2.
1580	18	Philip the ſecond of Spain, Son of Charles K. of Caſtile, and Emperor, and of the Lady Mary his Wife, daughter of Emanuel. 18.
1598	19	Philip II. of Portugal, and III. of Spain.
1621	20	Philip III. of Portugal, and IV. of Spain. During his Reign, the Portugueze weary of the Spaniſh Government, choſe for their King
1636	21	John D. of Bragance, the IV. of that Name: a Prince of great Poſſeſſions, and of Royal Race, who hitherto hath peaceably enjoyed it.

Now that we may the better ſee by what title both the Kings of Spain, and the Dukes of Bragance, claim the Crown of Portugal; and what other pretenders there were to it, on the death of Sebaſtian; and what right as well Antonio the Baſtard, (but alledging a ſentence of Legitimation) as the Princes of the houſe of Savoy, did pretend unto it: we will lay down their Genealogies from King Emanuel, in this following Scheme.

Emanuel had theſe Children;
1 John, King of Portugal --- John, Prince of Portugal --- Sebaſtian K. of Portugal.
2 Lewis --- Don Antonio, a Baſtard --- Chriſtopher, and others.
3 Henry the Cardinal, King of Portugal.
4 Edward
  1 Marry, wedded to Alexander Duke of Parma. --- Rainuccio Farneſis.
  2 Kath. married to John D. of Bragance.
5 Mary, married to Charles the fifth, King of Caſtile. --- Philip the II. K. of Spain.
6 Beatrix, married to Charles Duke of Savoy.

By this it may appear how the Claims are grounded: but whether Title will prevail, cannot now be told. Suffice it, that as the Royal Line of Portugal did begin in an Henry, ſo it ended in an Henry alſo; the Male-Line failing in the Perſon of the Cardinal-King, and the Crown falling (on whomſoever it ſhall faſten) on the Heirs of the Females.

The principal Orders of Knighthood in this Kingdom, are 1 Of Avis, ſo called from a Town of that name in Portugal, the Seat thereof: Founded by Sanctius or Sancho the firſt, in imitation of the Order of Alcantara, whoſe Green Croſs they wear; but equal to it neither in Power nor Riches.

2 Of CHRIST; inſtituted by Denys King of Portugal, who conferred on them all the Lands and Poſſeſſions of the exautorated Templers: confirmed by Pope John the twenty ſecond, Anno 1231. Their Robe is a Black Caſſock, under a White Surcoat; over which, a Red Croſs, ſtroaked in the midſt with a white Line: their Duty, to expel the Moors out of Bætica, the next Neighbour to Portugal. To which Crown, they have added many gallant Countries in Aſia, Africk, and Braſil; and ſo improved their own Eſtates, that all the Iſles in the Atlantick do belong to them: beſides, the Rents of the Mine of St. George, in Guinea, amounting to 100000 Ducats of yearly income.

The Arms are Argent, on five Eſcocheons Azure, as many Bezants in Saltier of the firſt, pointed Sable, within a Border of Gules, charged with ſeven Towers, Or. Which five Eſcocheons were born in memory of five Kings, whom Alfonſo, the firſt King, ſlew at the battel of Obrique, Anno 1139; the Border, with the Towers or Caſtles, being added by Alfonſo the third, on his Inveſtiture into the Kingdom of Algarve, by Alfonſo the fifth of Caſtile, Anno 1257. whoſe Daughter Beatrix he then married, and ſo conceived himſelf to have ſome relation to the Arms of that Kingdom. And ſo proceed we on to thoſe Provinces which are under the Government of Aragon: the third great Body of this State.

VALENTIA hath on the Eaſt, the Mediterranean; on the Weſt, part of Caſtile, and Aragon; on the North, Catalogne; and Murcia upon the South. It is watered with the Rivers, 1 Xucar, called of old Sucron, and Surus. 2 Guadalonder, ſignifying a River of pure water: and 3 Millar.

This Country ſtandeth in the moſt temperate and pleaſing Air of all Spain, full of Gardens and places of wonderful delight, where groweth abundance of Rice, Sugar, Corn, and Fruit: garniſhed all the year long with ſweat ſmelling Flowers, and miraculouſly fruitful of Pomgranats, Limons, and other delicacies. It hath alſo Mines of Silver, at Buriol; of Gold, at Lodor; of Iron, at Finiſtrat; of Alabaſter, at Piacent; and of Allom, Lime, and Plaiſter, in many places. From thence alſo come the beſt Silks in the World, Cotton of Murcia, Crimſon, Scarlet, and other precious Colours, and rich Perfumes. Finally, all the Senſes of man may be delighted and refreſhed with that which comes from this happy Region; in quality, and ſweetneſs, much like that of Naples. The delicacy and great pleaſures whereof, have made the Inhabitants of it to be thought leſs Warlike than the other Spaniards. The Sheep of this Country alſo, bear the fineſt Fleeces of any in Spain: firſt ſtocked with Cotſwold Sheep from England, at the requeſt of John King of Aragon, Anno 1465, by the imprudent courteſie of King Edward the fourth.

Places of moſt note in it, are, 1 Alicante, a noted Port on the Mediterranean, whence come our true Alicant-Wines, made of their Juice of Mulberries; by Ptolemy called Illicias; by Mela, Ilice: from whence the Bay adjoining is called Sinus Ilicitanus, now the Bay of Alicante. 2 Olivela, a Biſhops-See, on the River Segura, which divides the Province from Murcia. 3 Segorve, a Biſhops-See; by Ptolemy named Segobriga, the chief City, in old times, of the Celtiberi. 4 Xelva, ſuppoſed to be the Incibilis of Livy, where Scipio defeated Hanno and his Carthaginians. 5 Valentia, a fair, pleaſant, and well-traded City, the See of an Arch-biſhop, and giveth name to the whole Province: in its firſt glory, one of the chief Roman Colonies in theſe parts of Spain: in its laſt, the Royal Seat of the Mooriſh Kings of this Country. Situate three miles from the Mediterranean, not far from the mouth of the River Durcas, now a called Guadalander: and is by ſome ſaid to have been heretofore named Roma, which ſignifieth ſtrength. But when the Romans maſtered it, to diſtinguiſh it from their Rome, it was called Valentia; which in the Latin Tongue, is of the ſame ſignification with the Greek ἡ Ρώμη. Here is an Univerſity in which Saint Dominick, the Father of the Dominicans, ſtudied. 6 Laurigi, now a ſmall Village: once a Town of great ſtrength, called Lauron: which Sertorius beſieged, took, and burned, even then when Pompey, whoſe Confederates the Lauronites were, ſtood with his whole Army nigh enough unto the Flame, to warm his hands; and yet durſt not ſuccour it. It was formerly named Sucron, after the name of the River: and is famous in Plutarch, for the victory which Sertorius here got of Pompey; Pompey's Army being not only overthrown, but himſelf, with life, hardly eſcaping. 8 Morvedre, ſituate in or near the place of the old Saguntum: the People whereof, when beſieged by Annibal, continued ſo obſtinate in the expectation of aid from Rome, that they choſe rather to burn themſelves, than yield up the Town: the occaſion of the ſecond War between Rome and Carthage. Firſt founded by the Zacynthians, and after this deſtruction of it, repaired, or re-edified, by the Romans, (they could not poſſibly do leſs) by whom made a Colony. 9 Gandia, which gives the title of a Duke to the Houſe of Borgia, and was the ſtyle of Franciſco Borgia, the eldeſt ſon of Pope Alexander the ſixth, (of this noble Family) called commonly in Guicciardine) by the name of the Duke of Gandy. 10 Denia, ſeated on the brink of the Mediterranean, over which it hath a goodly proſpect; the Marquiſate of the Duke of Lerma: firſt founded by the Maſſilians, by whom called Dianium. Not far from which, is the Promontory of Ferraria, of old called Promontorium Dianium; the Refuge of Sertorius in his Wars againſt Pompey, and Metellus, both of great renown: the one aged, and of much experience; the other young, and of high reſolutions. And yet Sertorius found himſelf more troubled with the old man's Gravity, than the young man's Gallantry: inſomuch as he was uſed to ſay, That had it not been for the old Woman Metellus, he would have whipped the Boy Pompey home with Rods. For he had twice overcome this Great Pompey, before Metellus was joined in the Action with him: the firſt time dangerouſly wounding, and the ſecond time driving him out of the Field. But fighting againſt both, he was over-matched; and yet ſeemed rather to retire, than flye before them; the Spaniards behaving themſelves very valiantly, in the time of theſe Wars, under him: to which Florus alludeth, ſaying, Nec unquam magis apparuit Hiſpani militis Vigor, quàm Romano duce. At the laſt, when he had a long time upheld the Marian Faction, he was traiterouſly murthered by Perpinna, one of his Aſſociates: for which, Metellus and Pompey had a Triumph at Rome. So high an eſtimate did they ſet upon the caſual death of this Proſcript.

The ancient Inhabitants hereof, were the Baſtetani, the Edetani, the Conteſtani, and ſome part of the Celtiberi; originally of the Province of Tarraconenſis; afterwards (in the ſub-dividing of that Province by Conſtantine) of Carthaginenſis. In the declining of the Empire, firſt ſubdued by the Alani, who were ſcarce warm in their new dwellings, when diſſeized by the Goths. From the Goths taken by the Moors, of whoſe Kingdom reckoned as a Province; till the fatal overthrow given to Mahomet Enaſer, at the battel of Sierra Morena; and the departure of the Moors of Morocco, to their own Country; which followed preſently upon it. By Zeit Aben-Zeit, the Brother of this Mahomet, made a diſtinct Kingdom of it ſelf, Anno 1214: but taken from him by one Zaen, a Prince of the Moors of Spain, under colour that he had a purpoſe of turning Chriſtian, and making his Kingdom ſubject to the Crown of Aragon, (as indeed he did) Anno 1228. Conquered from Zaen the new King, before he could enjoy the ſweets of a new raiſed Kingdom, by James King of Aragon, Anno 1238. Since reckoned a Member of that Kingdom, never diſmembred from the body of it, ſince the firſt uniting. But ſtill ſo overgrown with Moors, (not to be blamed for loving ſuch an excellent ſeat) that at the final expulſion of that people by King Philip the third, there were reckoned no fewer than 22000 Families of them in this little Country.

The Arms hereof were Gules, a Tower embatteled Argent purfled (or pennon'd) Sable.

13. CATALONIA.

CATALONIA is bounded on the North-eaſt, with the Land of Rouſillon, and the Pyrenees; on the Eaſt, with the Mediterranean, on the South, with Valentia; on the North, and North-weſt, with Aragon. The Country ſomewhat mountainous, and full of Woods, and not very well cultivated: beholding more, in that reſpect, for Corn, Fruits, and other neceſſary Proviſions, unto the courteſie of the Sea, which ſerves them out of other Countries, than to the Goodneſs of the Land. And it is as well watered, as moſt parts of Spain; having in it, beſides the Ebro, or Iberus, common to many other Provinces; and Cinia, which runneth betwixt it and Valentia; the Rivers of, 1. Tardera, 2. Lobregat, 3. Segre, 4. Francolino, 5. Beſons, and 6. Onhar.

The name of Catalonia, ſome derive from the Caſtellani, who formerly inhabited ſome part hereof: others will have it called Catalonia, corruptly, for Gothalania, from the mixture of the Goths and Alani, ſucceſſively the Maſters of it: and ſome, more improbably, from one Carthalot, a Noble-man of this Country, who lived here they know not when. More like it is, that it took this name from the Catalauni, an old French people of Languedoc, the adjoyning Province; from whom the fields called Campi Catalaunici, near unto Tholouſe, took denomination. But from what root ſoever they came, certain it is, that they are generally a ſtout and couragious people, as may be ſeen by their exploits in moſt parts of Greece, which they miſerably ſpoiled and pillaged many years together, in the time of Andronicus the ſecond; to whoſe aid called in. But then withal, they are a very perverſe and obſtinate people, little obſervant of the pleaſure or profit of their natural Princes: but on the other ſide, ſo zealous in defence of their own Priviledges, that they have created more trouble to their Kings, under that pretence, than all the reſt of the Subjects of Spain. Of which we need no other inſtance, than their late revolt unto the French Anno 1638, which drew after it the loſs of the Realm of Portugal, and many Towns of great importance in Flanders, and the reſt of the Netherlands.

Principal places in it, are, 1. Barcelone, ſituate on the Mediterranean, near the River Lobregat; accommodated with a large and commodious Port, where commonly the Spaniſh Souldiers do embark, which are bound for Italy. The Town adorned with large ſtreets, handſom buildings, ſtrong walls, and a very pleaſant ſituation. Called Barſino by the ancient Writers, in whoſe time it was a Roman Colony, now honoured with a Biſhops-See, and the Seat of the Vice-Roy. 2. Tarragon, ſeated alſo on the Mediterranean, Eaſt of the River Francolino: built, fortified, and peopled by the two Scipio's, the Father and Uncle of Africanus, for a Counter-Fort to Carthagena (or New Carthage) not long before founded by the Carthaginians. Afterwards made the Metropolis of Tarraconenſis, hence denominated: but ſtript of that honour by Toledo, and is now but two miles in compaſs, and containing not above ſeven hundred Families. Yet ſtill it holdeth the reputation of an Arch-biſhops-See, contending with Toledo, for the Primacy of all Spain (as Braga alſo doth in the Kingdom of Portugal): the controverſie being undecided to this very day. 3. Ampurias, on the ſame Sea alſo; once of great eſteem, founded by the Maſſilians, a Roman Colony, and a well-traded Town, as the name doth ſignifie: this being the Emporia, ſpoken of by Strabo and Ptolemy; now not obſervable for any thing, but a ſafe Road for Ships. 4. Blamos, 5. Palamos, and 6. Roſas, all ports on the ſame Sea, but ſubject unto divers Winds, and not very ſpatious, this laſt by Ptolemy called Rhoda, firſt founded by the Rhodians, or people of the Iſle of Rhodes, and by them ſo named. More in the Land, are 7. Girone, a ſmall, but handſomly built, and a well-traded Town; a Biſhops-See, and the title of the eldeſt Son of Aragon, called Prince of Girone. Which title was firſt given to John, the eldeſt Son to King Pedro the fourth, immediately upon his birth, Anno 1351; and hath ſince continued. 8. Tortoſa, on the River Ebro, in the moſt rich and pleaſant part of all the Country; recovered from the Moors, by Raymond the fifth, Earl of Barcelone, and prince of Aragon, about the year 1146. The principal Agent in that work, William Raymond of Moncada, Seneſchal of Catalogne; rewarded for his good ſevice in it, with a third part of the City. A goodly Town, and of good importance; garriſoned by the French, ſince the late revolt of Catalonia from the King of Spain; and like to draw a great part of this Province after it, whileſt it continueth in their power, or in the poſſeſſion of their party. 9. Urgel, an Earl's Honour, and a Biſhops-See, ſituate at the foot of the Pyrenees. 10. Momblanc, which heretofore gave the title of Duke to the ſecond Sons of the Kings of Aragon. 11. Moncada, once a Town of ſtrength; but of more note for giving denomination to the Noble Family de Moncada, Hereditary Seneſchals of Catalogne, and Lords of Bearn. Here is alſo on the Eaſt part, where it joyneth with the Land of Rouſillon, the Promontory called of old, Templum Veneris, now Cabo de Ceux. And not far from Barcelone, the Mountain called Montſerrato, on the ſides full of Hermitagees and Anchorets Cells; and having towards the ſummit of it, a Chappel dedicated to the Virgin Mary: much famed and reſorted to by Pilgrims from all parts of the World, for her miraculous Image, which is there enſhrined.

The old Inhabitants of this Province, were the Caſtellani, Auxitani, Indigites, Coſitani, with part of the Ilercones, and Iacetani; all of them part of Tarraconenſis. In the declining of the Empire, ſeized on by the Alani; and they ſoon after vanquiſhed, if not diſpoſſeſſed, by the power of the Goths. Loſt to the Moors, in the general ruin of the whole: from them recovered by the puiſſance of Charles the Great; who having taken the City of Barcelone, Anno 801, gave it to one Bernard a French-man, with the title of Earl, who governed the Country for that Emperor; as Wifredus, or Godfredus, his Succeſſor, did for Lewis the Godly. Godfredus, Son to this Godfrede, by the gift of Charles the Groſs, was the firſt Proprietary; united unto Aragon by the marriage of Earl Raymond, with the Heir of that Kingdom. Firſt held in Vaſſalage of the French, but that acknowledgment related to King James the firſt, An. 1260, by the King St. Lewis; the King of Aragon releaſing, at the ſame time, his pretenſions and rights of Soveraignty to Carcaſſon, Beziers, Albi Niſmes, and ſome other pieces in France, of old belonging to that Crown. But before that, the Catellans had neglected the acknowledgment of their ſubjection to that Crown; it being ordered by Alfonſo the ſecond King of Aragon, about the year 1180, That the year of the reigns of the Kings of France, ſhould no more be uſed in any Inſtrument or Writings which concerned that People; but the year only of the Incarnation of our Lord and Saviour: which, in effect, was to diſclaim the Soveraignty of the Crown of France.

The Earls of Barcelone.

An. Chr.
884	1	Godfredus, ſirnamed the Hairy, Son of Wifrede, the Provincial Governour for the Emperor Ludovicus Pius.
914	2	Miron, Son of Godfredus.
933	3	Godfredus II. Son of Miron, by ſome called Seniofrid.
971	4	Borellus, Brother of Miron, and Unkle of Godfredus the ſecond.
993	5	Raymond Son of Borellus.
1017	6	Berengarius, ſirnamed Borellus, Son of Raymond.
1035	7	Raymond II. Son of Berengarius Borellus,
1076	8	Raymond III. Son of Raymond the ſecond.
1082	9	Raymond IV. Son of Raymond the third, Earl of Provence alſo in right of Doulce his Wife.
1131	10	Raymond V. Son of Raymond the fourth, and Doulce Counteſs of Provence, married Petronilla, Daughter of Raymir, or Raymond, the ſecond, King of Aragon; whom he ſucceeded, in that Kingdom, Anno 1134. Uniting theſe Eſtates together, never ſince diſjoyned : the chief procurer of this Match, being William Raymond, of Moncada, ſpoken of before.

The Arms hereof, were four Pallets Gules, in a field Or : now the Arms of Aragon. Which Arms were given to Geoffry, ſirnamed the Hairy, the firſt Earl hereof, by Lewis the Stammering, Emperor and King of France, to whoſe aid he came againſt the Normans with a Troop of Horſe : and being bloody in the fight, deſired of the Emperor to give him ſome Coat of Arms, which he and his Poſterity might from thenceforth uſe. Who dipping his four fingers in the blood of the Earl, drew them thwart his Shield, (which was only of Plain Gold, without any Deviſe) ſaying, This ſhall be your Arms hereafter.

14. The Kingdom of Majorca.

THE Kingdom of MAJORCA, contained the Iſlands of Majorca, Minorca, Ebuiſa, and Frumentaria, in the Mediterranean; the Land of Rouſillon, Sardaigne, or Cerdagne, in the Continent of Spain; and the Earldom of Montpelier in France.

The Land of ROUSILLON, which is the firſt Member of this Kingdom, is ſituate betwixt two Branches of the Pyrenees; bounded on the South, with the Mediterranean; on the Weſt, with Catalogne; on the North, with the ſaid Pyrenees; on the Eaſt, with Languedoc in France. Places of moſt importance in it, are, 1. Helna, a Biſhops-See on the River Techo. 2. Collibre, now a poor and ignoble Village, of note only for a ſafe and commodious Harbour; but formerly, the great and famous City of Illiberis, ſo often mentioned in the Wars betwixt Rome and Carthage. 3. Perpignan, (in Latin, Perpinianum) built in the year 1068, by Guinard, Earl of Rouſillon, in a pleaſant Plain on the River Thelis: now a rich Town, well traded, and as ſtrongly fortified againſt the French; to whoſe fury, in the time of War, it is ſtill expoſed. Beſieged by Henry, Son to King Francis the firſt, with a puiſſant Army, An. 1542 : partly to be revenged upon Charles the fifth, who had before attempted Marſeilles in Provence; and partly, to get into his hands the chief door of Spain, by which he might at all times enter into that Kingdom. But he found here ſuch ſtrong reſiſtance, that he was fain to raiſe his ſiege, with as little honour as Charles had gotten by his Expedition which he made into Provence. 4. Salſus, (the Salſulæ of Strabo) a ſtrong place on the Frontier of Languedoc; fortified according to the Rules of modern Fortification, and one of the chief Bulwarks againſt the French. 5. Rouſillon, a Caſtle of more honour and antiquity, than ſtrength or beauty; by Pliny, and other Ancients, called Ruſcino; the Country, Comitatus Ruſcianenſis, now Rouſillon and the Land of Rouſillon; accounted heretofore a part of Gaul of Narbonenſis; and added unto Spain in the time of the Goths. On the death of Gerrard the laſt Proprietary-Earl, it was added to the Crown of Aragon, by Alfonſo the ſecond : by James the firſt, laid to the Kingdom of Majorca; united to the Crown again by King Pedro the fourth. After that, ſold (or rather pawned) by King John the ſecond, to Lewis the 11. of France, for the ſum of 300000 Crowns, Anno 1462, and freely returned back again to Ferdinand the ſecond, (after called the Catholick) by King Charles the 8. Anno 1493; conditioned that he ſhould not hinder him in the Conqueſt of Naples. Joyning hereto, as part of the Kingdom of Majorca, was the Country of Sardaigne, or Cerdagne; the habitation of the Ceretani in former times, and afterwards accounted of as a part of Aragon. The chief Town of thoſe Ceretani, called Julia Lybica; the principal now being, hath the name of Cardono (or Sardona, as the Spaniards, commonly pronounce) retaining ſome reſemblance to the name of the Nation. The Country lying in the Vallies of the Pyrenees, and conſequently in a corner ſome what out of the way, was thought fit to be added to the Land of Rouſillon, (for the better endowment of this Kingdom:) the Fortunes of which, it hath ſince followed, as appendent on it: pawned when that was, unto the French; and with that reſtored.

2. The Earldom of MONTPELIER, is ſituate in the Province of Languedoc, adjoyning to the Land of Rouſillon: ſo called from Montpelier, the chief City: for the deſcription whereof, we muſt ſend the Reader back to France, having ſpoken of it there already. All I ſhall here repeat, is this, That Mary, the Daughter of William the laſt Earl thereof, brought it by marriage, to her Husband, Peter the ſecond King of Aragon : and that it was ſold to Philip de Valoys, the French King, by James King of Majorca, of that name the third. Nothing elſe memorable in the ſtory and affairs of this little Earldom, but the fortunes of the two laſt Counteſſes of it. Of which, the firſt being Daughter of Emanuel Comnenus, Emperor of Conſtantinople, and aſſianced to Alfonſo the 2. King of Aragon, was brought as far as Moutpelier, in her way towards Spain, and there lodged, with her whole retinue, in the houſe of William, then Earl thereof Anno 1174 But hearing that Alfonſo, contrary to his word and promiſe, was in treaty of another marriage with the Princeſs Sancha of Caſtile (which he celebrated very ſhortly after) and aſhamed to return to the Court of her Father, after ſuch an injury; ſhe hearkned to the counſel of her Lords and followers, who perſwaded her to marry with Earl William, then a luſty Batchelor: which was done accordingly. To him ſhe brought a daughter, named Mary, (their only child) afterwards married to Don Pedro the 2. Son of Alfonſo, and ſucceſſor to him in that Kingdom : ſo that, although the Mother could not have the happineſs to be Queen of Aragon; yet the Daughter had. But being of no great beauty, the King her Husband grew weary of her, and would have been divorced, had the Pope conſented: whoſe conſent not being to be had, he forſook her Bed, and betook himſelf to other Women. Which the Queen not being otherwiſe able to remedy, prevailed with one of the Grooms of his Chamber, called Pedro Flavian, to bring her one night unto his Bed, (when ſome other Miſtreſs was expected) and by him did conceive that night, as it after proved: the King perceiving the deceit on the morrow morning, was neither well pleaſed, nor much offended, at the honeſt fraud they had put upon him. Of this conjunction was born a Son at Montpelier, whom they named James; Succeſſor to his Father in the Kingdom of Aragon; and to his Mother, (the laſt Counteſs of it) in the Earldom of Montpelier; united, in his perſon, into one Eſtate; and by him finally parted from it, in the erection of the new Kingdom of Majorca, as before was ſaid.

3. The Iſland of MAJORCA is ſituate in the Mediterranean, juſt over-againſt Valentia; from which diſtant about 60 miles: about 300 miles in circuit, the length above an hundred, the breadth ſomewhat under; the number of Inhabitants reckoned at 30000. The Land, on all ſides, towards the Sea, is ſomewhat mountainous, and barren withal: the Inlands more Champian and Fruitful yielding ſufficient quantity of Oyl, Corn, Wines, and Fruits, for the uſe of its people. The whole Iſland is devided into 30 parts, (as ſo many Wapentakes) in every one of which, are reckoned from 300 to 600 Families. No hurtful Creatures are here bred, except Conies only; and thoſe not hurtful, but by accident: of which more anon.

Places of chief note, in the former times, were 1. Palma, and 2. Pallentia, which had the rights of Roman Citizens. 3. Cinium, and 4 Cunici, which enjoyed the rights of the Latins: and 5. Bochri, (or Bochorum) which was in the condition of a Town confederate; beſides divers others not ſo priviledged. Of theſe none left, at this day, but Palma only, vulgarly called Majorca, by the name of the Iſland: a Biſhops-See, the Seat of the Vice-Roy for theſe Iſles, and an Univerſity: the birth place of Raymundus Lullius, a man of great Wit, and profound Judgment; the Author of ſome Books in the Art of Chymiſtry: whoſe Works are read and ſtudied in that Univerſity, as Ariſtotle's are in others. This is the greater of the two Iſlands called Baleares, whence it hath the name. Adjoyning hereunto, two others of inferior note, called Dragonera, and Cabrera; of which nothing memorable.

4. MINORCA, ſo called, becauſe it is the leſſer of the Baleares; is ſituate Eaſtward of Majorca, from which diſtant near 100 miles: of about 60 miles in length, and 150 in circuit. More fruitful than the other, though leſs in quantity: of a rich ſoyl, which breedeth them great Herds of Cattel, and Mules of the largeſt ſize of any in Spain: accommodated alſo with two convenient Havens, the one called Maon, the other Farneſſus. Other conſiderable places, are, 1. Minorca, now ſo called by the name of the Iſland; but anciently known by the name of Mago: ſituate in the Eaſt part thereof, firſt founded by the Carthaginians, as the name imports. And ſo was alſo 2. Jamno, ſeated in the Weſt, (Duo parva Oppida, quibus à Pœnis indita nomina, ſaith Severus Biſhop of theſe Iſles, Anno 420, or thereabouts.) It is now called Citadella, or the little City. Here was was alſo in the mid-land, a third Town, called Saniſera by Pliny; of which I find now no track remaining.

5. EBUSA, now called YVICA, lyeth between the main Land, and the Baleares, oppoſite to the Promontory of Ferraria, in the Realm of Valentia; from which diſtant about 50 miles, and near an hundred miles in compaſs. The Country plentiful of Corn, and all manner of Fruits; breeding no hurtful Creature, except Conies only which many times deſtroy their Harveſt. The chief Town here, Yvica, (of old called Ebuſus) the Inhabitants of which make yearly great ſtore of Salt; wherewith they do not only furniſh Spain, but ſome parts of Italy.

6. FRUMENTARIA, ſo called from the plenty of Corn, is diſtant ten miles from Yvica, and about 60 miles from that main Land of Spain: in circuit about 70 miles. Not well inhabited, by reaſon of the multitude of Serpents; from which called by the Græcians Ophiuſa; and Colubraria, by the Latins. Both Iſlands anciently known by the name of Pytuſæ, and Pityodes, from the abundance of Pines there growing

About theſe Iſlands are ſix others of little worth, called 1. Veda, 2. Conirello, and 3. Dragonago, 4. another called Moncolibre, betwixt Majorca, and the influx of the River Iberus. 5. Alfaques, lying in the very mouth of that River: and 6. Scombraria, (anciently called the Iſland of Hercules) over-againſt Carthagena; ſo named from a kind of Tunny, in Latin named Scombri, of which great ſhoals uſe to lye about it. All theſe, together with the Baleares, make up the Province of the Iſlands, the ſeventh Province of Spain.

But the chief glory of theſe Iſlands, were the BALEARES, ſo called (as the general conceit is) from the Greek word βάλλειν, which ſignifieth to throw; becauſe the pople were ſo expert in throwing their Slings or Darts: but, as Bochartus will needs have it, (to the ſame effect) from Baal-iare, a Punick, or Phœnician word, ſignifying a maſter in the Art of ſlinging. An Art ſo natural and innative to them, that Parents uſed to give no meat unto their Children, after ſome fit age, but what they could hit down with their Slings from the top of a Beam. Of their dexterity at this weapon, there is much mention made in the ancient Writers, as well Hiſtorians as Poets. And from this Exerciſe they had the name alſo of Inſulæ Gymnaſiæ; or elſe becauſe the people of it uſed to go naked to the Wars, (and poſſible enough, in thoſe firſt Ages of the world, as at other times alſo) from the Greek word Γυμνὸς, the ſame with Nudus in the Latin. Nor were they good at ſlinging only, but at ſwimming too; an exerciſe not ordinarily performed, but by naked people: at which the very women are at this day expert, Biddulph reporting, in the relation of his travels, That being becalmed about theſe Iſlands, there came a woman ſwimming from one of them with a Basket of Fruit to ſell. But that which made them moſt talked of in former times, was their harm done them by their Conies; which here, and in the neighbouring-Continent, encreaſed ſo wonderfully, that Varro telleth us of a Town in Spain, undermined by them: and Strabo, that they did not only deſtroy their Plants, but rooted up many of their Trees. Inſomuch that the Inhabitants did requeſt the Romans to give them ſome new ſeats to inhabit in; ἐκβάλλεσθαι γὰρ ὑπὸ τῶν ζώων τύπων, being ejected by thoſe Creatures out of their Poſſeſſions, whoſe multitudes they were not able to reſiſt. And when that could not be obtained, they moved Auguſtus Cæſar (as Pliny telleth us) for ſome aid againſt them; who, inſtead of Souldiers, ſent them Ferrets, by which their numbers where diminiſhed in a little time.

Theſe Iſlands were firſt planted by the Tyrians, or Phœnicians, the founders of many of their Cities: one of which, in the Iſle of Ebuſus, had the name of Phœniſſa: From them alſo they derived the Art of Slinging. Made ſubject to the Carthaginians, under the conduct of Hanno and Himilco, Anno M. 3500, or thereabouts, at what time the Decemviri governed Rome. Under that State they remained ſubject, till the end of the ſecond Punick War: when Carthage was no longer able to protect them, made a State of themſelves, till conquered by Metellus, the Brother of him who ſubdued Creet. The people were much given to Piracy: and ſeeing the Roman Navy ſayling by their Coaſts, ſuppoſed them to be Merchant-men; aſſaulted them, and at firſt prevailed. But the Romans getting betwixt them and the ſhore, diſcovered from whence they came, and forced them to an unwilling ſubmiſſion: for which Metellus was rewarded with the honour of a Triumph. Being once made a Province of Spain, they always, after that, followed the Fortunes thereof. In the deſtraction of the Empire of the Moors, in Spain, they were united into one Kingdom, by the name of the Kingdom of Majorca: won from the Moors, by Raymond Earl of Barcelone, with the help of the Genoeſe, Aanno 1102. By the Genoeſe delivered to the Moors again; and from them reconquered by James King of Aragon, deſcended from that Raymond, Anno 1228.

Of theſe Eſtates conſiſted the Kingdom of Majorca, erected by James the firſt, immediately (almoſt) on his recovery of theſe Iſlands, from the hands of the Moors; and by him given unto James his ſecond Son; who, fearing the diſpleaſure of his Brother, King Peter the third, ſubmitted his new Kingdom to the Vaſſalage of the Crown of Aragon. Yet could not this ſo ſatisfie the ambition or jealouſies of thoſe mightier Kings, as to preſerve his Succeſſors in poſſeſſion of it. By Pedro the 4. extorted from King James, the fourth and laſt King thereof, under colour of denying his accuſtomed Homage. So ended

The Kings of Majorca, of the Houſe of Aragon.

An. Chr.
1276	1	James the firſt, Son to James the firſt, King of Aragon.
1412	2	Sancho, Son of James the firſt.
	3	James the II. Son of Ferdinand, the Brother of James 2d.
	4	James III. Son of Ferdinand, overcome and ſlain in Battel by Pedro the 4. King of Aragon. Majorca, and other members of this little Kingdom, remaining ever ſince united unto that Crown; except Montpelier, ſold by this James unto the French, in hope that by their aid, he might be enabled to recover his Kingdom. But being aided by them, and attempting the recovery of it, he was diſcomfited and ſlain in the Iſle of Majorca, An. 1341, as before is ſaid.

The Forces of this little Kingdom may be beſt eſtimated by the Army which the Moors brought into the field againſt James the firſt, for defence of the Iſland of Majorca, conſiſting of 50000 Horſe: but better, by the Army of James the laſt King hereof, in defence of his Eſtates againſt Pedro the 4. (for the Moors might poſſibly be aided by the reſt of their Nation) conſiſting of 3000 Horſe, and 15000 Foot, of his natural Subjects.

15. ARAGON.

ARAGON, hath on the Eaſt, the Land of Rouſillon, and the Pyrenees; on the Weſt, the two Caſtiles; on the the North, Navarre; on the South and South-eaſt, Catalonia, and ſome part of Valentia. So called from the River Aragon, by which it is divided from the Realm of Navarre; where the firſt Princes of this Houſe, having won certain Towns from the hands of the Infidels, commanded as Lords Marchers, under the Kings of that Realm: and called themſelves, for that reaſon, the Earls of Aragon: ſpreading the name, as they enlaged their bounds, by enſuing Conqueſts: as, in like manner, the great Earldom of Moſelle, founded by the diſherited Sons of Cloidon, ſecond King of the French, was named from that River; upon the courſe whereof, and the parts adjoyning, it was firſt erected.

The Country lyeth on both ſides of the River Iberus, and hath alſo ſeveral Riverets, as Gallego, Senga, Xalon, and Cagedo, running like ſo many Veins through the body of it; yet is generally ſo deſtitute of waters, and ſo ill-inhabited, eſpecially towards the Mountains of the Pyrenees; that one may travel many days, and find neither Town, nor Houſe, nor People. But where the Rivers have their courſe, the caſe is different, the Valleys yielding plenty both of Corn and Fruits, eſpecially about Calataiub, where the air is good, and the ſoil fruitful.

The ancient Inhabitants were the Celtiberi, who took up a great part of Tarraconenſis: divided into leſſer Tribes, not here conſiderable. Theſe ſprung originally from the Celtæ, (as before is ſaid) the greateſt and moſt potent Nation of all Gallia: who being too populous for their Country, or willing to employ themſelves upon new Adventures, paſſed the Pyrenees, and mingled themſelves with the Iberi. From thence the name of the Celtiberi, and Celtiberia, according unto this of Lucan:

> ——Profugique à gente vetuſta
> Gallorum, Celtæ miſcentes nomen Iberi.

> Who being chas'd from Gaul, their home, did frame,
> Of Celtæ and Iberi mixt, one name.

Others of leſs conſideration, were the Jaccetani, and Lucetani, with part of the Edetani, and Illergetes.

Places of moſt importance in it, are, 1. Jacca, the chief City heretofore of the Jaccetani, ſeated amongſt the Pyrenees; and for that cauſe choſen for the chief ſeat and reſidence of the firſt Kings of Aragon: continued there till the taking of Saragoſſa, by Alfonſo the firſt. 2. Calataiub, ſeated on Xalon, in the beſt Country of Aragon: ſo called from Aiub, a Mooriſh Prince, the firſt Founder of it. Not far from which, upon an Hill, ſtood the old Town Bibilis, a Municipium of the Romans, and the birth-place of Martial. 3. Venaſque amongſt the Pyrenees. 4. Balbaſtro, on the Senga, formerly called Burtina; now a Biſhops-See. 5. Lerida, on the River Segre, as ſome ſay; but others place it on the Senga: which riſing in the Pyrenees, divideth Catalonia from Aragon, and ſo paſſeth into Iberus. Now an Univerſity; called formerly Ilerda, and famous for the encounter hapning nigh unto it, betwixt Herculeius, Treaſurer or Quæſtor to Sertorius; and Manilius, Proconſul of Gallia: wherein Manilius was ſo diſcomfited, and his Army, conſiſting of three Legions of Foot, and 1500 Horſe, ſo routed, that he, almoſt alone, was ſcarce able to recover this City, few of his Souldiers ſurviving the overthrow. 6. Moſon, famous for entertaining the King of Spain every third year: at which time the people of Aragon, Valence, and Catalogne, preſent the King with 600000 Crowns, viz. 300000 for Catalogne, 200000 for Aragon, and 100000 for Valentia. And well may they thus do, for at other times they ſit Rent-Free, as it were: only they acknowledge the King of Spain to be the Head of their Commonwealth. This revenue is proportionably, 200000 Crowns a year; all which, if not more, the King again expends, in maintaining his Vice-Roys in their ſeveral Provinces. 7. Hueſca, (called of old, Hoſca) ſomewhat South of Iacca, an Univerſity; a place long ſince dedicated to Learning. For hither Sertorius cauſed all the Noble-mens Sons of Spain to be brought, and provided them of School-Maſters for the Greek and Latin Tongues, bearing their Parents in hand, that he did it not only to make them fit to undergo charge in the Commonwealth, but indeed, to have them as Hoſtages for their Fathers Faith and Loyalty towards him. 8. Saragoſſa, on the River Iberus; called, at firſt, Salduba, by reaſon of the Salt-pits there: but being afterwards re-edified by Cæſar Auguſtus, it had the name of Cæſarea Auguſta, (whence that of Saragoſſa had its origination) by whom firſt made a Colony of the Romans, and afterwards a Municipium or Free-Burrough, ſuffered to live according to the Laws of the Country. Under the Romans, it was one of the ſeven Juridical Reſorts of Tarraconenſis: under the Moors, a peculiar Kingdom of it ſelf: and now a Biſhops-See, and an Univerſity. Amongſt the Kings of it, when it was a Kingdom, two are chiefly famous, viz. 1. Marſilius, who joyned with the confederate Moors and Chriſtians, againſt Charles the Great, in the Battel of Roncevaux. 2. Aigoland, of whom there goeth a tale, in Arch-biſhop Turpine. That being by the ſaid Charls perſwaded to become a Chriſtian, he came unto the Emperor's Court very well accompanied, according to the time appointed. Where finding many Lazars, and poor people before the Gates, attending for their uſual Alms from the Emperor's Table: he asked what and who they were; and was anſwered, that they were the poor ſervants of God. Upon which words he ſpeedily returned again, proteſting, That he would never ſerve that God, who could keep his Servants no better. Took from the Moors, by Alfonſo King of Aragon and Navarre, An. 1118, it was made the Seat-Royal of the Kings of Aragon; removed hither from Iacca: and, of late times hath been the Seat of the Vice-Roy for the Kings of Spain. Which, together with being an Arch-biſhops-See, and an Univerſity, hath ſo enriched it, that it is one of the faireſt Cities in all Spain, for handſomneſs of ſtreets, and ſumptuouſneſs of Palaces, and publick Buildings; containing ſeventeen Pariſh-Churches, and fourteen Monaſteries; beſides divers Chappels erected in moſt parts of it to the Virgin Mary.

Who were the old Inhabitants of this Tract, hath been ſhewn heretofore; toſſed from the Carthaginians, unto the Romans; from them, to the Goths; and finally, unto the Moors. Recovered from the Moors, about the firſt beginning of the Kingdoms of Leon and Sobrarbe. At which time, one Aznar, a man of great puiſſance and action, poſſeſſed himſelf of ſome Lands on the banks of the River Aragon, to be holden by him and his Succeſſors, of the Kings of Sobrarbe, or Navarre, An. 775, the Title of Earl being given unto him, and them, for their better honour. The ſixth of which, from Aznar, was Fortunio Ximines, whoſe Daughter Urraca being married to Don Garcia Inigo, King of Navarre, Anno 867, conveyed this Earldom to that Crown: of which it continued a Member, till Sancho the Great, King of Navarre and Earl of Aragon, erected it into a Kingdom, and gave it unto Raymir his natural Son, Anno 1034. The whole Succeſſion I ſhall borrow from the Spaniſh Hiſtories; firſt taking (as in other places) ſome ſhort notes of the Princes which have been moſt obſervable in the courſe of the Story. Of which the principal were, 1. Aznarius the firſt Earl, his Eſtate then containing ſome few Towns on the River of Aragon: not much enlarged, when made a Kingdom, by Sancho King of Navarre, ſirnamed the Great, deſcended from Fortunio the ſecond of Navarre, and Urraca the Siſter and Heir of Fortunius Ximines, the laſt Earl of Aragon. 2. Raymir the firſt King baſe Son to Sancho the Great, advanced to this honour to the prejudice of Garcia, eldeſt Son of Sancho, for ſtanding ſo generally in defence of Donna Elvira, the Wife of his Father, wrongfully and unnaturally accuſed of Adultery, by the ſaid Garcia her own Son; againſt whom he undertook to maintain her Honour in a Single-Combat. 3. Raymond, Earl of Barcelonia, who by marriage with Petronilla, the Heir of Aragon, united Catalonia unto that Kingdom. 4. Peter the ſecond, who on a ſuperſtitious zeal, firſt made his Kingdom tributary to the See of Rome, Anno 1214. But preſently repenting of it, he ſided againſt the Pope, with the Albigenſes: ſlain, in their Cauſe, by Simon de Montfort, and the reſt of his Aſſociates, in that War. 5. James the firſt, who conquered the Kingdoms of Valentia and Majorca; and was the firſt that enlarged his Dominions upon the Seas: being ſhut up from making any further impreſſion on the Moors, by the interjection of Caſtile betwixt him and them. 6. Peter the third, pretending a Title unto Sicil, in right of Conſtantia his Wife, the Daughter of Manfred, King thereof; and by the laſt Will of Corradine, rightful King both of that, and Naples; extorted that Iſland from the French, maſſacred by him at the fatal Sicilian Veſpers. 7. James the ſecond, by whom the Iſle of Sardinia was added to the Crown of Aragon. 8. Martin, the laſt of the Maſculine Race of the Houſe of Barcelone: to whom ſucceeded, 9. Ferdinand of Caſtile, Son of John King of Caſtile, and Leonora, the Daughter of Peter the fourth of Aragon. 10. Alfonſo, Son of Ferdinand, adopted by Queen Joan the ſecond, got the Kingdom of Naples. Of Ferdinand the ſecond, ſirnamed the Catholick, we ſhall ſpeak more anon, in the cloſe of all.

The Earls of Aragon.

1458	19	John II. Son of Ferdinand, and Brother of Alphonſo: King of Navarre alſo, in right of Blanch his Wife. 20.
1478	20	Ferdinand II. of that name, of Aragon, Son of John the ſecond, King of Aragon and Navarre, by a ſecond Wife: and the fifth of that name, of Caſtile and Leon; which Kingdoms he obtained by the marriage of Iſabel, or Elizabeth, Siſter and Heir of Henry the Fourth; uniting thereby, the great Eſtates of Caſtile and Aragon, and all Appendixes of either. In which regard, he may well challenge the firſt place in the Catalogue of the Monarchs of Spain, to be preſented in due ſeaſon.

In the mean time, to draw to a concluſion of the Affairs and Eſtate of Aragon, we are to underſtand, that of all the Kingdoms which belong to the Spaniards, it is the moſt priviledged, and free from the abſolute Command of the Kings of Spain: having in it ſuch a temper or mixture of Government, as makes the Kings hereof to be well nigh Titular: of little more authority than a Duke of Venice. For at the firſt erecting of this Eſtate, the better to encourage the people to defend themſelves againſt the Moors, they had many Priviledges indulged them; and, amongſt others, the creating of a Juſticiar, or Popular Magiſtrate; which, like the Ephori or Sparta, had, in ſome caſes, ſuperiority over their Kings, reverſing their Judgments, cancelling their Grants, and ſometimes cenſuring their Proceedings. And though King Philip the ſecond, in the buſineſs of Antonio de Perez, had made a Conqueſt of that Kingdom, and annulled all their Priviledges, yet after, of his own meer goodneſs, he reſtored them (in part) again, as they continue at this day.

Chief Orders of Knighthood (beſides that of Mercede, ſpoken of before) in this Kingdom, are, 1 Of S. Saviour, inſtituted by Alfonſo the firſt, Anno 1118, to animate the Members of it againſt the Moors. Of the habit and cuſtoms of this Order, I have met with nothing.

2 Of Monteſa, inſtituted by James the firſt, King of Aragon, Anno 1270, or thereabouts Endowed with all the Lands of the Templers (before diſſolved) lying in Valentia; together with the Town and Caſtle of Monteſa, made the Seat of their Order, whence it took the name. Subject, at firſt, unto the Maſter of the Order of Calatrava, out of which extracted; and under the ſame Rule of Ciſteaux. But after, by the leave of pope Benedict the 13th, they quitted themſelves of that ſubjection; and, in ſign thereof, changed the Habit of Calatrava, which before they uſed, to a Red Croſs upon their Breaſts; now the Badge of the Order.

The Arms of Aragon, ſince poſſeſſed by the Earls of Barcelone, are Or, four Pallets Gules: before which, they were, Azure, a Croſs Argent.

The Monarchy of SPAIN.

THus having ſpoke of Spain, and the Eſtate thereof, when broken and divided into many Kingdoms; let us next look upon it as united into one main body; effected, for the moſt part, by Ferdinand the laſt King of Aragon before-mentioned. Before which time, Spain, being parcelled into many Kingdoms, was little Famous, and leſs Feared; the Kings thereof, as the Author of the Politick Diſpute, &c. hath well obſerved, being only Kings of Figs and Oranges. Their whole puiſſance was then turned againſt one another, and ſmall atchievements had they out of that Continent, except thoſe of the Houſe of Aragon, upon Sicily, Naples, Sardinia, and the Baleares. Thuanus, a diligent Writer of the Hiſtory of his own times, (if in ſome things he favour not more of the Party, than the Hiſtorian) telleth us, that before this King's Reign, the name and glory of the Spaniard, was, like their Countrey, hemmed in by the Seas on ſome ſides, and the Hills on the other: Potinſque patuiſſe exteris invadentibus, quàm quicquam memorabile extra ſuos finis geſſiſſe. 'Tis true, that Sancho the Great, King of Navarre, aſſumed unto himſelf the title of King of Spain, and that Alfonſo the fourth of Caſtile, and the ninth of Leon, cauſed himſelf to be crowned Emperor of Spain, in the Cathedral-Church of Leon: Titles ambitiouſly affected upon no good ground, and ſuch as ended with their Perſons. But this Prince, worthily named, The Great, ſeized on the Kingdom of Navarre, conquered Granada from the Moors, ſubdued the Kingdom of Naples, united Aragon to Caſtile, baniſhed 124000 Families of the Jews, began, by the conduct of Columbus, the diſcovery of the Weſtern Indies; and finally, by marrying his Daughter Joan, to Philip, Son of the Emperor Maximilian, Duke of Burgundy, and Lord of the greateſt part of the Netherlands, laid the Foundation of the preſent Auſtrian Greatneſs. Continued ſince by ſo many inter-marriages betwixt the Spaniſh and Imperial Branches of that potent Family, that Philip the ſecond might have called the Arch-Duke Albertus, Brother, Couſin, Nephew, and Son. A ſtrange Medley of Relations. Thus by the puiſſance of this Prince, the Spaniards became firſt conſiderable in the eye of the World, and grew to be a terror to the Neighbouring-Nations. Nomen Hiſpanicum obſcurum antea & Vicinis pene incognitum, (ſaith the ſame Thuanus) tum primum emerſit, tractuq; temporis in tantam magnitudinem excrevit, ut formidoloſum ex eo, & terribile toti terrarum Orbi eſſe cœperit. And he ſaith true, with reference to the French and Italian Nations; to whom the Spaniards have adminiſtred no ſmall matter of fear and terror; though, unto others, they appear no ſuch dreadful Bug-bears. But ſure it is, and we mas warrantably ſpeak it without any ſuch impreſſions of fear and terror, that this Kingdom, ſince that time, is wonderfully both enlarged and ſtrengthned: ſtrongly compacted in it ſelf, with all the Ligaments both of Power and State, and infinitely extended over all parts of the World; his Dominions beholding (as it were) both the riſing and the ſetting of the Sun; which, before the Spaniard, no monarch could ever ſay. A greater change, than any man can poſſibly imagine to have been effected in ſo ſhort a time, as was between the firſt year of Ferdinand the Catholick, and the laſt year of Charles the fifth.

Concerning the title of the moſt Catholick King, reattributed to this Ferdinand, I find, that Alfonſo the firſt of Oviedo, was ſo named for his ſanctity: with whom it dyed; and was revived in Alfonſo the Great, the twelfth King of Leon and Oviedo, by the Grant of Pope John the 8th. After, it lay dead till the days of this Prince, who re-obtained this title from Pope Alexander the ſixth: either becauſe he compelled the Moors to be baptized, baniſhed the Jews, and in part converted the Americans unto Chriſtianity; or becauſe, having united Caſtile to his Dominions, ſurprized the Kingdom of Navarre, and ſubdued that of Granada; he was, in a manner, the Catholick or general King of all Spain. The laſt reaſon ſeemeth to ſway moſt in the reſtauration of this attribute, in that when it was granted and confirmed on Ferdinand, by Pope Alexander the ſixth, the King of Portugal exceedingly ſtomached at it: Quando Ferdinandus imperio univerſam Hiſpaniam, (ſaith Mariana) non obtineret, ejus tum non exigua parte penes Reges alios. It ſeems Emanuel could not think himſelf a King of Portugal, if the title of the Catholick King did belong to Ferdinand. Wherein he was of the ſame mind, as was Gregory the Great; who when John of Conſtantinople had aſſumed to himſelf the title of the Oecumenical or Catholick Biſhop, adviſed all Biſhops of the world to oppoſe that arrogancy; and that upon the ſelf-ſame reaſon, Nam ſi ille eſt Catholicus, vos non eſtis Epiſcopi: for, if John were the Catholick Biſhop, they were none at all. But upon what conſideration ſoever it was firſt re-granted, it hath been ever ſince aſſumed by his Poſterity: to whoſe Crown as hereditary and in common uſe, as the moſt Chriſtian King to France, the Defender of the Faith to England.

And yet there was ſome further reaſon, why the Spaniard might affect the title of Catholick King, his Empire being Catholick in regard of extent, (though not of Orthodoxy of Doctrines) as reaching not over all Spain only, but over a very great part of the World beſides. For, in right of the Crown of Caſtile, he poſſeſſeth the Towns of Mellila and Oran, the Haven of Maſalquivir, the Rock of Velez, and the Canary-Iſlands in Africk; the Continent and Iſlands of all America, except Braſil, and ſome Plantations in the North, and in the Cannibal Iſlands, of the Engliſh, Hollanders, and a few poor French. In the right of the Kingdom of Aragon, he enjoyeth the Realms of Naples, Sicil, and Sardinia, with many Iſlands interſperſed in the Mediterranean; and in the right of the Houſe of Burgundy, the Counties of Burgundy, and Charolois, the greateſt part of Belgium, with a title unto all the reſt: beſides the great Dukedom of Millain, the Havens of Telamon, and Plumbino, and many other pieces of importance in Italy, held by inveſtiture from the Empire. To which if thoſe Eſtates be added which accrewed to Philip the ſecond, by the Crown of Portugal, we have the Towns of Ceuta, Tangier, and Maragon in Barbary, the Fortreſs of Aquin, and S. George, in Guinea; the Iſles of Azores, Madera, Cape Verd, S. Thomas, Del Principe, on this ſide of the Cape, and of Meſambique on the other: in Aſia, all the Sea-coaſt almoſt from the Gulf of Perſia, unto China, and many ſtrong-holds in the Moluccoes, Bantan, Zeilan, and other Iſlands; and finally, in America, the large Country of Braſil, extending in length 1500 miles. An Empire of extent enough, to appropriate to theſe Monarchs the ſtile of Catholick.

The Monarchs of Spain.

A. Chr.
1504	2	Joan, Princeſs of Caſtile, Granada, Leon, &c. and of Aragon, Navarre, Sicily, &c. Philip, Arch Duke of Auſtria, L. of Belgium.
1516	3	Charles King of Caſtile, Aragon, Naples, &c. Archduke of Auſtria, Duke of Millain, Burgundy, Brabant, &c. Earl of Catalogne, Flanders, Holland, &c. Lord of Biſcay, Frieſland, Utrect, &c. and Emperor of the Germans. He added the Realms of Mexico and Peru, the Dukedoms of Gelderland and Millain, the Earldom of Zuitphen, and the Signeuries of Utrecht, Over-Yſſel and Groyning, unto his Eſtates. A Prince of that magnanimity and puiſſance, that had not Francis the firſt in time oppoſed him, he had even ſwallowed all Europe. He was alſo, for a time, of great ſtrength and reputation, in Tunis, and other parts of Africa, diſpoſing Kingdoms at his pleaſure: but the Turk broke his power there; and being hunted alſo out of Germany, he reſigned all his Kingdoms, and dyed private. 42.
1558	4	Philip II. of more ambition, but leſs proſperity than his Father; fortunate only in his attempt on the Kingdom of Portugal; but that ſufficiently ballanced by his ill ſucceſſes in the Netherlands, and againſt the Engliſh. For the Hollanders, and their Confederates, drove him out of eight of his Belgick Provinces: the Engliſh overthrew his Invincible Armada, intercepted his Plate-Fleets; and, by awing the Ocean, had almoſt impoveriſht him: and though he held for a time an hard hand upon France, in hope to have gotten that Crown by the help of the Leaguers: yet, upon caſting up his Accompts, he found that himſelf was the greater loſer by that undertaking. So zealous in the cauſe of the Romiſh Church, that it was thought that his eldeſt Son Charles was put to death, with his conſent, in the Inquiſition-houſe, for ſeeming favourably enclined to the Low-Country-Hereticks, as the Spaniards called them. Theſe four great Kings were all of the Order of the Garter; but neither of the two that followed.
1598	5	Philip III. Finding his Eſtate almoſt deſtroyed by his Father's long and chargeable Wars, firſt made Peace with England, and then concluded a Truce for 12 years with the States of the Netherlands: which done, he totally baniſhed all the Moors out of Spain, and was a great ſtickler in the Wars of Germany.
1621	6	Philip IV. Son of Philip the third, got into his power all the Lower Palatinate; but loſt the whole Realm of Portugal, and the Province of Catalonia, with many of his beſt Towns in Flanders, Artois, and Brabant; and ſome Ports in Italy: not yet recovered to that Crown, from the power of the French.

This Empire, conſiſting of ſo many ſeveral Kingdoms united into one Body, may ſeem to be invincible. Yet had Qu. Elizabeth followed the counſel of her Men of War, ſhe might have broken it in pieces. With 4000 men ſhe might have taken away his Indies from him; without whoſe Gold, the Low-Country-Army, (which is the very beſt) could not be paid, and by conſequence muſt needs have been diſſolved. Nay, Sir Walter Rawleigh in the Epilogue of his moſt excellent Hiſtory of the World, plainly affirmeth, that with the charge of 200000 l. continued but for two years, or three at the moſt, the Spaniards might not only have been perſwaded to live at peace; but all their ſwelling and overflowing-ſtreams, might be brought back to their natural Chanels, and old Banks. Their own Proverb ſaith, The Lion is not ſo fierce as he is painted; yet the Americans tremble at his name: it's true; and it is well obſerved by that great Politician Machiavel, that things which ſeem to be, and are not, are more feared far off, than near at hand. Nor is this judgment built upon weak conjectures, but ſuch as ſhew the Power of Spain not to be ſo formidable, as it's commonly ſuppoſed: which I find marſhalled to my hand in this manner following. 1 The disjointedneſs of his Realms and other Eſtates, ſevered by infinite inſtances both of Sea and Land, which makes one part unable to relieve or defend the other. 2 The ſlowneſs of his Preparations in offenſive or defenſive Wars; his Forces, of neceſſity, being long a gathering in places ſo remote from the Royal Seat, and being gathered, no leſs ſubject to the dangers both of Sea and Land, before united into a body, and made fit for action. 3 The danger and uncertainty which the moſt part of his Forinſique Revenues are ſubject to; many times intercepted by Pirates and open Enemies; ſometimes ſo long delayed by croſs Winds and Seas, that they come too late to ſerve the turn. 4 The different tempers and affections of a great part of his Subjects, not eaſily concurring in the ſame ends, or travelling the ſame way unto them. 5 The diſcontendedneſs of the Aragonians, Portugueze, and Italian Provinces, not well affected, for their private and particular reaſons, unto the Caſtilians; apt to be wrought on by the Miniſters of neighbouring-Princes, whom jealouſies of State keep watchful upon all advantages, for the depreſſing of his power. 6 And laſt of all, the want of people of his own natural Subjects, whom he may beſt rely on for the encreaſe and grandure of his Eſtates, exhauſted and diminiſhed by thoſe ways und means which have been touched upon; without any politick or provident courſe, to remedy that defect for the time to come. And this I look on as the greateſt and moſt ſenſible Error in the Spaniſh Government: therein directly contrary to the ancient Romans; who finding that nothing was more neceſſary for great and important enterprizes, than Multitudes of Men, employed all their ſtudies to encreaſe their numbers, by Marriages, Colonies, and ſuch helps; making their conquered Enemies free Denizens of their Commonwealth: by which means the number of the Roman Citizens became ſo great (all being equally intereſſed in the preſervation of it) that Rome could not be ruined (in Annibal's judgment) by any forces but her own. But, on the other ſide, the Spaniards, employ none in their Plantations, but their own native Subjects; and ſo many of them alſo in all their enterprizes both by Sea and Land, that ſo many thouſands going forth every year, in the flower of their age, not one of ten returning home; and thoſe few which return, either lame or old: the Country is not only deprived of the Men themſelves, but alſo of the Children which might be born. An evidence whereof may be, that John the firſt of Portugal, who reigned before the ſeveral Voyages and Plantations of that people, was able to raiſe 40000 Men for the War of Africk: whereas Emanuel, who lived after thoſe Undertakings, had much ado to raiſe 20000 Foot, and 3000 Horſe, on tbe ſame occaſion: and Sebaſtian, after that, found as great a difficulty to raiſe an Army of 12000.

As for the Forces which the King of Spain is able to make out of all his Eſtates, they may be beſt ſeen by his preparations for the Conqueſt of England, France, and Flanders. In his deſign for England, An. 1588, he had a Fleet conſiſting of 150 ſail of Ships, whereof 66 were great Galleons, 4 Galeaſſes of Naples, 4 Gallies, the reſt ſmaller Veſſels: fraughted with 20000 Souldiers for land-ſervice, *9*000 Saylers, 800 Gunners, 4000 Pioneers, 2650 pieces of Ordnance: not reckoning into this accompt the Commanders, and Voluntaries; of which laſt, there were very great numbers who went upon that ſervice for Spoil, Merit, or Honour. In the deſign of Charles the Fifth, for the Conqueſt of Provence, he had no leſs than 50000 in the field, and in that of Philip the ſecond, for the reducing of Flanders, the Duke of Alva had an Army, at his firſt ſetting forward out of Italy, conſiſting of 8800 Spaniſh Foot; and 1200 Horſe; all of them old experienced Souldiers, drawn out of Naples, Sicil, and the Dutchy of Millain; 3600 German Foot, 300 Lances, and 100 Haquebuſiers on Horſe back, of the County of Burgundy; all old Souldiers alſo: beſides many Voluntiers of great rank and quality, very well attended, and his old ſtanding Army in the Belgick Provinces: a Strength ſufficient to have conquered a far greater Country.

Of ſtanding-Forces in this Country, he maintaineth in theſe Realms of Spain, but three thouſand Horſe; and in his Forts and Garriſons, no more than 8000 Foot: his Garriſons being very few, and thoſe open the Frontiers only, and in Maritime Towns: his Gallies ſerved with ſlaves out of Turkie and Barbary. And yet he is able, on occaſion, to raiſe very great Forces; partly, becauſe the ordinary Subjects are ſo well affected to their Prince, whom they never mention without reverence: and partly in regard there is ſo great a number of Feudataries and Noble-men, who are by Tenure, to ſerve perſonally at their own charges, for defence of the Realm. And certainly, it muſt be a conſiderable Force which the Noblemen of Spain are able to raiſe, conſidering the greatneſs of their Revenue, and the number of Vaſſals which live under them: it being ſuppoſed, that the Dukes of Spain (of which there were 23 when my Author lived) were able, one with another, to diſpend yearly from 50000 Ducats, to 100000; ſome going very much above that proportion; and that of 36 Marqueſſes, and 50 Earls, the pooreſt had 10000 Ducats of yearly Rent; and ſo aſcending unto 50 and 60000. The Arch-biſhops, Biſhops, and others of the greater Clergy, being all endowed with fairer Temporal Eſtates, than in moſt places in Europe, are alſo bound to ſerve (though not perſonally) on the like occaſions. And to theſe ſervices the Noblemen are for two reaſons more forwards than the other Feudataries: 1 Becauſe their Honours deſcend not de jure from the Father to the Son, unleſs confirmed to the Son by the Kings acknowledgment and compellation, which makes them more obſervant of him, than in France or England, where it is challenged as a Birth-right, 2 Becauſe out of the groſs body of theſe Noblemen, the King doth uſe to honour ſome with the title of Grandees, priviledged to ſtand covered before the King, and to treat with him as their Brother: which being the higheſt Honour which that State can yield, keeps thoſe great perſons in a readineſs to obey his pleaſure, in hope to come to an Honour of ſo high eſteem.

For the Revenues of this King, which ordinarily ariſe out of his Eſtates (taking Portugal into the accompt) they are computed at Eleven millions of Crowns yearly; that is to ſay, four from his Dominions in Italy, two from Portugal and the Appertinents thereof, three from the Weſt-Indies, and the other two remaining, from his

Kingdom

Kingdoms in Spain. Beſides this, he receiveth yearly the Revenues of the Maſterſhips of all the great Orders in his Kingdom, incorporated to the Crown by Ferdinand the Catholick, not without good Policy and reaſon of State: The Maſters (or Commendadors, as they call them) of thoſe ſeveral Orders drawing after them ſuch Troops of the Nobility, Gentry, and other dependants; that their power began to be ſuſpected by the Kings themſelves. By which addition there accrueth to the Crown (beſides the opportunity of preferring Servants of the greateſt merit) above 150000 l. of yearly Rents. As for his Caſualties and extraordinary ways of raiſing money, they are very great: reckoned by the Author of the General Hiſtory of Spain to amount (according to divers Opinions) to 14, 18, and 23 millions of Crowns. For making up of which ſum, he puts in the Firſt Fruits, and ſome part of the Tenths of Rectories; and other Church Preferments, amounting to three millions yearly. And the Author of the Politique Diſpute, &c. affirmeth the Pardons ſent to the Indies, given him by the Pope, to be worth half a million of pounds yearly. Add hereunto the ſale and diſpoſal of all Offices, which make up a good round ſum; and the free Gifts & Contributions of his Subjects, which amount unto a good Revenue. For the Kingdom of Naples preſents him every third year with a million and 20000 Crowns; and Caſtile only at one time granted a Contribution of four millions, to be paid in four years: his Subjects generally being ſo well affected unto the Crown, that he can demand nothing in reaſon of them which they are not ready to grant; the King of Spain being called in that regard by the Emperour Maximilian, the King of Men. And yet this great King is not counted to be rich in Treaſure, his expences being very great. Firſt, in keeping Forts and Garriſons in many parts of his Eſtates againſt the Revolt of the Natives. Secondly, maintaining ſo many Frontier places againſt Foreign Invaſions: Thirdly, in the continual pay of an Armada for conducting his Plate-Fleets from America. And laſt of all, the many and unprofitable Wars of King Philip the Second, ſo plunged the Crown in the Gulfs of Bankers and Money-Changers, that much of the Revenues of it ſtand engaged for payment to this very day.

BEfore we can arrive in Britain, the laſt Weſtern Dioceſe, we muſt croſs the OCEAN, that ingens, and infinitum pelagus, as Mela calls it; in compariſon of which, the Seas before-mentioned are but as Ponds or Gullets: a Sea in former times known more by fame than tryal, and rather wondred at on the ſhore ſide, than any more remote place of it. The Romans ventured not on it with their Veſſels, unleſs in the paſſage from France to Britain: And much famed is Alexander for his hazardous Voyage on this unruly Sea, he having ſailed in all but 400 Furlongs from the ſhore. The Name and Pedegree take here both from the Poets and Etymologiſts. The Poets make Oceanus to be the Son of Cœlum and Veſta, or of Heaven and Earth. They termed him the Father of all things, as, Oceanumq; Patrem rerum, in Virgil, becauſe moiſture was neceſſarily required to the conſtitution of all bodies: and uſually painted him with a Bulls head on his ſhoulders, (whence Euripides called him 'Ωκεανὸς Ταυρόκρανος, Oceanus Tauriceps) from the bellowing and fury of the Winds; which from it come to the ſhore, and to which it is ſubject. As for the Children attributed unto him, they are doubtleſs nothing but the clouds and vapours hence ariſing. The name of 'Ωκεανὸς, Oceanus, ſome derive from ὠκὺς, celer, becauſe of its ſwiftneſs; ſome from κέω, findo, divido, becauſe it cleaveth and interlaceth the Earth: And others make it ὠκεανὸς, quaſi ὠκανανὸς παρὰ τὸ ὦκυ νάειν, à celeriter fluendo, which agreeth in meaning with the firſt. Particular names it hath divers, according to the name of the ſhore, by which it paſſeth, as Cantabricus, Gallicus, Britannicus, &c. The chief Iſles of it appertaining to Europe, beſides thoſe called the Azores or Iſles of Tercera, which we have ſpoken of when we were in Portugal; thoſe of the Aquitain Ocean, deſcribed in our Hiſtory of France; thoſe of the Netherlands, and the Northern Seas, which are to be deſcribed hereafter in their proper places, are the Britiſh Iſlands: by many of the moſt ancient and approved Writers called ſimply BRITAIN, becauſe united all in that common notion; though afterwards diſtinguiſhed into the particular appellations of Great Britain, Ireland, and the reſt. Of which, as lying in my way betwixt Spain and Germany; or rather as the next Dioceſe of the Empire to France and Spain, under the Prætorian Præfectus of Gaul, I am next to ſpeak.

Of BRITAIN.

BRITAIN, according to the largeſt latitude of that name and notion, comprehendeth all thoſe Iſlands both great and leſs, which lie in compaſs about Albion, or Britain properly ſo called: by Ptolomy called Britanniæ, in the plural number. For ſpeaking of France he thus ſubjoineth, Ex adverſo hujus Britannia Inſula, Albion ipſi nomen fuit, cum Britanniæ omnes vocarentur, i. e. Oppoſite hereunto lieth the Iſland of Britain, which formerly by a more proper name was called Albion, the name of Britain comprehending all the Iſles adjoining. And in this latitude and extent we now take the word; the whole dominion of theſe Iſlands, diſtinguiſhed into ſeveral names, being united in the perſon and under the command of the King of Great Britain: that name including all the reſt, as appendants of it; with reference to this called the Iſles of Britain, or the Britiſh Iſlands. Thus Ariſtotle in his Book De Mundo (if the Book be his) Quo in mari duæ Inſulæ Britannicæ ſitæ ſunt, quarum maximæ Albion & Ierna; i. e. In which Sea there are ſituate two Britiſh Iſlands of great note and compaſs, Albion (or Britain properly ſo called) and Ireland. Ptolomy goeth to work more punctually, and he ſtates it thus; Complectitur prima hæc Europæ tabula duas Britannicas inſulas, quas Dionyſius Bretanides vocat, Hiberniam nempe & Albionem, cum minoribus aliquot adjacentibus inſulis, ut ſunt Orcades, Ebudæ, Thyle, Mona, & reliquæ ſuis nominibus expreſſæ: that is to ſay, This firſt Table of Europe, comprehendeth the two Iſlands of Britain, which Dionyſius calls the Britannides, namely Ireland and Albion, with ſome leſſer Iſlands joining to it, as the Orcades, the Hebrides, Thule, Angleſey, (or Man) and others called by diſtinct names. By which we ſee, firſt, that the general name of Britain or the Britiſh Iſlands comprehendeth all thoſe which are ſituate in the Britiſh Ocean: and ſecondly, that the greateſt and moſt famous of them, more ſpecially called Britain by the following Writers, was anciently called Albion by its proper name. And it was called Albion, as my Authors tell me, either from Albion the Brother of Bergion, the Son of Neptune, mentioned by Aeſchylus, Dionyſius, Strabo, Mela, Solinus, Pliny, and others; it being not improper, that the greateſt Iſland of the Ocean, ſhould be denominated from a Son of the greateſt Sea-god: or from the old word ῎Αλφον, ſignifying White amongſt the Greeks, (from whence the Latines had their Album,) by reaſon of the white chalky Cliffs, ſeen by the Mariners afar off as they ſailed thoſe Seas.

But to return again to Britain in the general notion, and to the ſeveral Iſlands which that name includeth, we may diſtinguiſh them into the Greater and the Leſſer; the Greater ſubdivided into 1. Great Britain, or Britain ſpecially ſo called, and 2. Ireland; the Leſſer, 1. the Orcades, 2. the Hebrides, 3. Man, 4. Angleſey, 5. the Iſlands of the Severn Sea, 6. the Sorlinges, or Iſles of Scilly, 7. Wight, 8. Thanet, 9. Sunderland, and 10. Holy Iſland.

GREAT BRITAIN.

TO ſpeak much of GREAT BRITAIN, or BRITAIN ſpecially and properly ſo called, I hold ſomewhat ſuperfluous, it being our home, and we therefore no ſtrangers to it. Yet as Mela once ſaid of Italy, De Italia, magis quia ordo exiget, quam quia monſtrari egeat, pauca dicenter; nota ſunt omnia; ſo ſay I of Britain. It is ſo obvious to the eye of every Reader, that he needs not the ſpectacles of Letters. Yet ſomething muſt be ſaid, though for methods ſake, rather than neceſſity. Firſt then, we will begin with laying out the bounds thereof (as in other places;) which are, on the Eaſt, the German Ocean, dividing it from Belgium, Germany, and Danemark; on the Weſt, S. Georges Chanel, which divides it from Ireland; and to the North of that, with the main Vergivian or Weſtern Ocean, of which the Ancients knew no ſhore; on the North, with the Hyperborian or Deucaledonian Ocean, as Ptolomy calls it, extending out to Iſeland, Freezeland, and the ends of the then known World; and on the South, the Engliſh Chanel, which divides it from France.

The length hereof from North to South, is reckoned at 620 Italian miles; the greateſt breadth from Eaſt to Weſt, meaſured in a right line, no more than 250 of the ſame miles, but by the crooks and bendings of the Sea-Coaſt, comes to 320 miles: the whole circumference accompted 1836 miles. The greateſt Iſland in the World, except Java, Borneo, Sumatra, and Madagaſcar; and therefore by Solinus & ſome other Ancients (to whom thoſe Iſlands were not known) called the other world: by others of late times, the Lady and Miſtreſs of the Seas. Situate under the 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th Climes: ſo that the longeſt day at the Lizard point in Cornwall, (being the moſt Southerly part hereof) containeth 16 hours and a quarter; at Barwick which is the Border of England and Scotland, 17 hours 3 quarters, and one hour more at Straithby head, in the North of Scotland; where ſome obſerve that there is ſcarce any night at all in the Summer Solſtice, but a darker Twilight. To which alludes the Poet, ſaying, Et minima contentos nocte Britannos: and the Panegyriſt in the time of Conſtantine, amongſt other commendations which he gives to Britain, ſaith, that therein is neither extreme cold in Winter, nor any ſcorching heats in Summer, and that which is moſt comfortable, long days, and very lightſome nights. Nor doth the Panegyriſt tell us only of the temperateneſs of the Air or the length of the days; but of the fruitfulneſs of the ſoil: "affirming Britain to be bleſſed with all the commodities "of Heaven and Earth; ſuch an abundant plenty of "Corn, as might ſuffice both for Bread and Wine; the "Woods thereof without wild Beaſts, the Fields without "noiſom Serpents, infinite number of milch Beaſts, and "Sheep weighed down with their own Fleeces. Whereto add that of Alfred of Beverly, a Poet of the middle times, ſaying thus of Britain.

Et cujus totus indiget orbis ope.
Inſula prædives, cujus miretur & optet
Delicias SOLOMON, Octavianus opes.

A wealthy Iſland, which no help deſires,
Yet all the world ſupply from her requires;

Able to glut King SOLOMON with pleaſures,
And ſurfeit great Auguſtus with her treaſures.

Proceed we next to the name of Britain,of which I find many Etymologies,ſome forced, ſome fabulous and fooliſh, and but few of weight. That which hath paſſed for currant in former times, (when almoſt all Nations did pretend to be of Trojan race) was that it took this name from Brutus, affirmed to be the Son of Silvius,who was the Grandchild of Æneas,and the third King of the Latines of the Trojan blood. Which Brutus having unfortunately killed his Father, and thereupon abandoning Italy with his Friends and Followers; after a long voyage and many wandrings, is ſaid to have fallen upon this Iſland, to have conquered here a race of Giants; and having given unto it the name of Britain,to leave the Soveraignty thereof unto his poſterity, who quietly enjoyed the ſame, till ſubdued by the Romans. This is the ſum of the Tradition concerning Brute: Which though received in the darker times of ignorance,and too much credulity; in theſe more learned days hath been laid aſide, as falſe and fabulous. And it is proved that there was no ſuch man as Brutus, 1. from the newneſs of his Birth, Geofry of Monmouth, who lived in the reign of King Henry the ſecond, being the firſt Author which makes mention of him: for which immediately queſtioned by Newbrigenſis, another Writer of that Age. 2. By the ſilence of all the Roman Hiſtorians, in whom it had been an unpardonable negligence to have omitted an Accident ſo remarkable, as the killing of a Father by his own Son (eſpecially when they wanted matter to fill up the times) and the erecting of a new Trojan Empire in ſo great an Iſland. 3. By the Arguments which Cæſar uſeth to prove the Britains to be derived from the Galls; as Speech, Laws, Cuſtoms, Diſpoſitions, Making, and the like. 4. And leſt it might be ſaid, that though the Britains in Cæſars time were of Gallick race, yet there had been a more ancient people, who had their Original from the Trojans, Tacitus putteth off that diſpute with an Ignoramus: Qui mortales initio coluerint, parum compertum eſt, ſaith that knowing Writer. And 5. By the Teſtimony of all Roman Hiſtories, who tell us that Cæſar found the Britains under many Kings, & never under the command of one ſole Prince, but in times of danger. Summa Belli adminiſtrandi communi conſenſu commiſſa eſt Caſſivellauno, as it is in Cæſar: Dum ſinguli pugnabant, univerſi vincebantur, as we read in Tacitus. To omit therefore that of Brutus,and other Etymons as unlikely, but of leſs authority: the name of Britain is moſt probably derived from Brit, which in the Ancient Britiſh ſignifieth Painted; and the word Tain,ſignifieth a Nation: agreeable unto the cuſtom of the ancient Britains, who uſed to diſcolour and paint their bodies, that they might ſeem more terrible in the eyes of their enemies. Britain is then a Nation of painted men; ſuch as the Romans called Picts in the times enſuing. Which I prefer before the Etymologie of Bochartus,a right Learned man, but one that wreſteth all originations to the Punick or Phœnician language: by whom this Iſland is called Britain or Britanica,from Barat-anac, ſignifying in that Language a Land of Tynne, wherewith the Weſtern parts of it do indeed abound. Other particulars concerning the Iſle of Britain, ſhall be obſerved in the deſcription of thoſe parts into which it now doth ſtand divided, that is to ſay, 1. England, 2. Wales, and 3. Scotland.

ENGLAND.

E*NGLAND* is bounded on the Eaſt with the German; on the Weſt with the Iriſh; on the South with the Britiſh Oceans; and on the North,with the Rivers of Tweed and Solway; by which parted from Scotland: Environed with turbulent Seas, guarded by inacceſſible Rocks: and where thoſe want, preſerved againſt all foreign Invaſions by ſtrong Forts and a puiſſant Navy.

In former time the Northern limits did extend as far as Edenburgh Fryth on the Eaſt, and the Fryth of Dunbriton on the Weſt, (for ſo far not only the Roman Empire, but the Kingdom of Northumberland did once extend:) the intervenient ſpace being ſhut up with a Wall of Turfs by Lollius Urbicus, in the time of Antonius Pius. But afterwards, the Romans being beaten back by the Barbarous people, the Province was contracted within narrow bounds; and fortified with a Wall by the Emperour Severus, extending from Carliſle to the River Tine, the track whereof may eaſily be diſcerned to this very day. A Wall ſo made,that at every miles end there is ſaid to have been a Caſtle, between every Caſtle many Watch-Towers; and betwixt every Watch-Tower a Pipe of Braſs, conveying the leaſt noiſe unto one another without interruption: ſo that news of any approaching enemy was quickly over all the Borders, and reſiſtance accordingly provided. In following times the ſtrong Towns of Barwick, and Carlile, have been the chief Bars, by which we kept the back door ſhut: and as for other Forts, we had ſcarce any on the Frontiers, or Sea-Coaſts of the Kingdom; though in the midland parts too many. Which being in the hands of potent and factious Subjects, occaſioned many to rebel; and did create great trouble to the Norman Kings, till in the later end of the Reign of King Stephen, 1100 of them were levelled to the very ground, and thoſe few which remained diſmantled, and made unſerviceable. The Maritime parts were thought ſufficiently aſſured by thoſe Rocks and Cliffs, which compaſs the Iſland in moſt parts: and hardly any Caſtle all along the ſhore, except that of Dover; which was therefore counted by the French, as the Key of England. But in the year 1538. King Henry the Eighth, conſidering how he had offended the Emperour Charles the Fifth, by his Divorce from Queen Katherine; and incurred the diſpleaſure of the Pope, by his falling off from that See; as alſo that the French King had not only married his Son to a Neece of the Pope, but a daughter of the King of Scots, thought fit to provide for his own ſafety,by building in all places where the ſhore was moſt plain and open, Caſtles, Platforms, and Block-Houſes; many of which in the long time of Peace enſuing were much neglected and in part ruined.

His Daughter Queen Elizabeth of happy memory,provided yet better for the Kingdom. For ſhe not only fortified Portſmouth, and placed in it a ſtrong Garriſon; but walled the Kingdom round with a moſt ſtately,royal,and invincible Navy: with which ſhe always commanded the Seas, and vanquiſhed the mightieſt Monarch of Europe: whereas her Predeceſſors in their Sea ſervice, for the moſt part, hired their Men of War, from the Hanſmen, and Genoeſe. Yet did neither of theſe erect any Caſtles in the inward part of the Realm: herein imitating Nature, who fortifieth the head and the feet only, not the middle of Beaſts; or ſome Captain of a Fort, who plants all his Ordnance on the Walls, Bulwarks, and Out-works; leaving the reſt by theſe ſufficiently guarded.

The whole Iſland was firſt called Albion, as before is ſaid, either from the Giant Albion, or ab albis rupibus, the white Rocks towards France. Afterwards it was called Britain, which name being firſt found in Athenæus, amongſt the Græcians; and in Lucretius and Cæſar, amongſt the Latines; followed herein by Strabo, Pliny, and all other ancient Writers, except Ptolomy only, by whom called Albion as at firſt; continued till the time of Egbert the firſt Saxon Monarch, who called the Southern parts of the Iſland by the name of England, from the Angles, who with the Jutes and Saxons conquered it.

It is in length 320 miles, enjoying a ſoil equally participating of ground fit for tillage and paſture: yet to paſture more than to tillage are our people addicted, as a courſe of life not requiring ſo many helpers, which muſt be all fed and paid; and yet yielding more certain profits. Hence in former times Husbandry began to be neglected, Villages depopulated, and Hinds for want of entertainment to turn way-beaters: whereof Sir Thomas Moor in his Utopia complaineth; ſaying, that our Flocks of Sheep had devoured not only men, but whole houſes and Towns. Oves (ſaith he) quæ tam mites eſſe, tamq; exiguo ſolent ali; nunc tam edaces, & indomitæ eſſe cœperant, ut homines devorent ipſos, agros, domos, oppida vaſtent, ac depopulemur. To prevent this miſchief, there was a Statute made in the Fourth year of Henry the Seventh, againſt the converting of Arable Land into Paſture ground; by which courſe Husbandry was again revived, and the ſoil made ſo abounding in Corn, that a dear year is ſeldom heard of. Our Vines are nipped with the cold, and ſeldom come to maturity, and are more uſed for the pleaſantneſs of the ſhade, than for the hopes of Wine. Moſt of her other plenties and Ornaments, are expreſſed in this old Verſe following.

Anglia, 1. Mons, 2. Pons, 3. Fons,
4. Eccleſia, 5. Fœmina, 6. Lana.

That is to ſay,

For 1. Mountains, 2. Bridges, 3. Rivers, 4. Churches fair,
5. Women, and 6. Wooll, England is paſt compare.

1. For the Mountains lifting up here and there their lofty heads, and giving a gallant proſpect to the lower Grounds; the principal are thoſe of Mendip in Somerſet, Malvern Hills in Worceſterſhire, the Chiltern of Buckinghamſhire, Cotſwold in Glouceſterſhire, the Peak of Derbyſhire, York Wolds, &c. All of them either bowelled with Mines, or clothed with Sheep, or adorned with Woods. The exact deſcription of which, would require more time than I can ſpend upon that ſubject. Proceed we therefore to

2. The Bridges, which are in number 875. The chief of which are, the Bridge of Rocheſter over Medway, the Bridge of Briſtol over Avon, and the Bridge of London over Thames. This laſt ſtanding upon 19 Arches of wonderful ſtrength and largeneſs, ſupporteth continual ranges of Buildings, ſeeming rather a Street than a Bridge; and is not to be parallel'd with any Bridge of Europe; though of late by ſome defacement made by fire, Anno 1632. the Buildings are not ſo contiguous, as they were before.

3. The Rivers of this Country are in number 325. The chief is Thamiſis, compounded of the two Rivers, Thame and Iſis; whereof the former riſing ſomewhat beyond Thame in Buckinghamſhire, and the later beyond Cyrenceſter in Glouceſterſhire, meet together about Dorceſter in Oxfordſhire: the iſſue of which happy conjunction is the Thamiſis or Thames. Hence it flyeth betwixt Berks, Buckinghamſhire, Middleſex, Surrey, Kent, and Eſſex; and ſo weddeth himſelf to the Kentiſh Medway, in the very jaws of the Ocean. This glorious River feeleth the violence of the Sea more than any River in Europe; ebbing and flowing twice a day, more than 60 miles: about whoſe Banks are ſo many fair Towns, and Princely Palaces, that a German Poet thus truly ſpoke,

Artifici excultos dextra, tot vidimus arces;
Ut nunc Auſonio Thamiſis cum Tibride certet.

We ſaw ſo many Woods and Princely Bowers,
Sweet Fields, brave Palaces and ſtately Towers:
So many Gardens, dreſs'd with curious care,
That Thames with Royal Tiber may compare.

The ſecond River of note, is Sabrina or Severn. It hath its beginning in Plinlimmon Hill in Montgomeryſhire, and his end about ſeven miles from Briſtol: waſhing in the mean ſpace, the Walls of Shrewsbury, Worceſter, and Glouceſter. 3. Trent, ſo called, for that 30 kind of Fiſhes are found in it, or that it receiveth 30 leſſer Rivers; who having his Fountain in Staffordſhire, and gliding through the Countries of Nottingham, Lincolne, Leiceſter, and York, augmenteth the turbulent current of Humber, the moſt violent ſtream of all the Iſle. Yet Humber is not, to ſay truth, a diſtinct River, having a ſpring-head of his own; but rather the mouth or Æſtuarium of divers Rivers here confluent and meeting together, namely, Youre, Darewent, and eſpecially Ouſe and Trent. And as the Danow, having received into its Chanel the Rivers Dravus, Savus, Tibiſcus, and divers others, changeth his name into Iſther: So alſo the Trent, receiving and meeting the waters above named, changeth his name into this of Humber; Abus, the old Geographers call it. 4. Medway, a Kentiſh River, famous for harbouring the Royal Navy. 5. Tweede, the North-Eaſt bound of England, on whoſe Northern bank is ſeated the ſtrong & impregnable Town of Barwick. 6. Tine, famous for New-Caſtle, and her inexhauſtible Coal-pits. Theſe and the reſt of Principal note are thus comprehended in one of Mr. Draytons Sonnets:

Our Flood Queen Thames for Ships and Swans is crown'd,
And ſtately Severn for her ſhore is prais'd,
The Chryſtal Trent for Fords and Fiſh renown'd,
The Avons fame to Albions Cliffs is rais'd.
Carlegion Cheſter vaunts her holy Dee,
York many Wonders of her Ouſe can tell,
The Peak her Dove, whoſe Banks ſo fertile be,
And Kent will ſay her Medway doth excel.
Cotſwoll commends her Iſis to the Thame,
Our Northern Borders boaſt of Tweeds fair flood;
Our Weſtern parts extol their Willies Fame,
And the old Lea brags of the Daniſh blood.

4. The Churches, before the general ſuppreſſion of Abbies, and ſpoiling the Church Ornaments, were moſt exquiſite; the chief remaining, are 1. the Church of St. Paul founded by Ethelbert King of Kent, in the place where once was a Temple conſecrated to Diana: A Fa-brick of the largeſt dimenſions of that kind, of any in the Chriſtian World. For whereas the ſo much celebrated Temple of S. Sophia in Conſtantinople hath but 260 foot in length, and 75 in breadth: this of S. Paul is 690 foot long, and 130 foot broad, the main body being 102 foot high, over which the Steeple of the Church was mounted 482 foot more. Which Steeple being made with Timber, and covered with Lead, was by the careleſneſs of the Sexton, in the fifth year of the Reign of Q. Elizabeth, conſumed with fire, which happening in a thundring and tempeſtuous day, was by him confidently affirmed to be done by Lightning, and was ſo generally believed till the hour of his death: but not many years ſince to diſabuſe the world, he confeſt the truth of it; on which diſcovery, the burning of St. Paul's Steeple by Lightning, was left out of our Common Almanacks, where formerly it ſtood amongſt the ordinary Epoche, or accounts of time. A Church of ſuch a gallant Proſpect, and ſo large dimenſions, that had not the late reparation of it been diſcontinued, it would have been the ſtatelieſt and moſt majeſtical Fabrick in the Chriſtian World. 2. The Collegiate Church of S. Peter in Weſtminſter, (wherein I have the honour to be a Prebendary) famous for the Inauguration and the Sepulture of the Kings of England, the Tombs whereof are the moſt ſumptuous, and the Chappel the moſt accurate piece of Building in Europe. 3. The Cathedral Church at Lincoln. 4. For a private Church, that of Radcliffe in Briſtol. 5 For a private Chappel, that of Kings Colledge in Cambridge. 6. For the Curious Workmanſhip of the Glaſs, that of Chriſt Church in Canterbury. 7. For the exquiſite beauty of the Fronts, thoſe of Wells and Peterborough. 8. For a pleaſant lightſom Church, the Abbey Church at Bath. 9. For an ancient and reverend Fabrick, the Minſter of York. And 10. to comprehend the reſt in one, our Lady-Church in Salisbury, of which take theſe Verſes:

Mira canam; ſoles quot continet annus, in una
Tam numeroſa, ferunt, æde feneſtra micat.
Marmoreaſq; tenet fuſas tot ab arte columnas,
Comprenſas horas quot vagus annus habet.
Totq; patent portæ, quot menſibus annus abundat:
Res mira, at vera res celebrata fide.

How many days in one whole year there be,
So many Windows in one Church we ſee.
So many marble Pillars there appear,
As there are hours throughout the fleeting year.
So many Gates as Moons one year do view;
Strange tale to tell, yet not ſo ſtrange as true.

5. The Women generally are more handſom than in other places, ſufficiently endowed with natural beauties, without the addition of adulterate Sophiſtications. In an abſolute Woman, ſay the Italians, are required the parts of a Dutch Woman, from the girdle downwards; of a French-Woman, from the girdle to the ſhoulders; over which muſt be placed an Engliſh face. As their beauties, ſo alſo are their Prerogatives the greateſt of any Nation; neither ſo ſervilely ſubmiſſive as the French, nor ſo jealouſly guarded as the Italian: but keeping ſo true a decorum, that as England is termed the Purgatory of Servants, and the Hell of Horſes; ſo it is acknowledged the Paradiſe of Women. And it is a common by-word among the Italians, that if there were a Bridge built over the Narrow Seas, all the Women of Europe would run into England. For here they have the upper hand in the ſtreets, the upper place at the Table, the thirds of their Husbands eſtates, and their equal ſhare in all Lands, yea even ſuch as are holden in Knights-ſervice: priviledges wherewith other Women are not acquainted. Of high eſteem in former times amongſt foreign Nations, for the modeſty and gravity of their converſation, but of late times ſo much addicted to the light garb of the French, that they have loſt much of their ancient honour and reputation amongſt the knowing and more ſober men of foreign Countries, who before admired them.

6. The Wooll of England, is of exceeding fineneſs, eſpecially that of Cotſwold in Glouceſterſhire; that of Lemſter in Herefordſhire; and of the Iſle of Wight. Of this Wooll are made excellent Broad-cloaths, diſperſed all over the World, eſpecially High-Germany, Muſcovy, Turkie, and Perſia, to the great benefit of the Realm: as well in return of ſo much money which is made of them, as in ſetting to work ſo many poor people, who from it receive ſuſtenance. Before the time of King Edward the third, Engliſh men had not the art, or neglected the uſe of making Cloth: till whoſe time our Wooll was tranſported unwrought. And as his Succeſſors have laid impoſitions on every Cloth ſold out of the Realm; ſo his Predeceſſors had, as their occaſions required, ſome certain Cuſtoms granted on every ſack of Wooll. In the beginning of this Edwards Wars with France, the Cities and Towns of Flanders being then even to admiration rich, combined with him, and aided him in his Wars againſt that King. And he for his part by the compoſition then made, was to give them 140000 l. ready money to aid them by Sea and Land, if need required, and to make Bruges, then one of the great Mart-Towns of Chriſtendom, the Staple for his Woolls. Here the Staple continued 15 years, at which time the Flemmings having broke off from the King; and he having by experience ſeen what the benefit of thoſe Staples were, removed them from Bruges into England. And for the eaſe as well of his Subjects in bringing their Wools unto the Ports, as of ſuch Foreign Merchants that came to buy; he placed his Staples at Exceſter, Briſtol, Wincheſter, Weſtminſter, Chicheſter, Canterbury, Norwich, Lincoln, York, and Newcaſtle, for England, at Caermarden for Wales; and at Dublin, Waterford, Cork, and Tredagh, for Ireland. He further enacted, that no Engliſh, Iriſh, or Welch-men ſhould tranſport this Stapled commodity, no not by Licenſe (if any ſuch ſhould be granted) on pain of Confiſcation, and Impriſonment during the Kings pleaſure. Laſtly, he allured over hither divers Flemmings, which taught our men the making of Clothes, who are now grown the beſt Cloth-workers in the World;) and to encourage them in that Art, it was by a Statute of the 27th of Edward the third, Enacted to be Felony, to carry any Woolls unwrought. When England had ſome ſhort time enjoyed the benefit of theſe Staples, the King removed them to Calice, which he had conquered, and deſired to make wealthy. From hence they were at ſeveral times and occaſions tranſlated, now to one, now to another Town in Belgium: and happy was that Town, in what Country ſoever, where the Engliſh kept a houſe for this Traffick; the confluence of all people thither to buy, infinitely enriching it. Antwerp in Brabant long enjoyed the Engliſh Merchants, till upon ſome diſcontents between King Henry the Seventh, and Maximilian Arch-Duke and Lord of Belgium, they removed: but at their return again, were received by the Antwerpiane, with ſolemn Proceſſion, Princely Triumph, ſumptuous Feaſts, rare Banquetings, and other expreſſions of much Love, but more Joy. And giving of ſome Cotſwold Sheep by Edward the Fourth, to Henry of Caſtile, and John of Aragon, An. 1465. is counted one of the greateſt prejudices, that ever happened to this Kingdom.

The Wooll tranſported bringeth into the Kingdom no leſs than 1500000 l. and the Lead half the ſum, ſo that Lewis Guicciardine reporteth, That before the Wars of the Low-Countries, the Flemmings and the Engliſh bartered Wares yearly to the value of 12 Millions of Crowns.

The next commodity to the Wooll, though not mentioned in the verſe foregoing, are the rich and inexhauſtible Mines of Cole, Lead, and Tin: to ſay nothing of the Mines of Iron, as bringing more damage to the publick by the ſpoil of Woods, than profit to particular perſons in the encreaſe of their eſtates. The Mines of Cole chiefly enrich Newcaſtle in Northumberland, and by that the great City of London, and many other good Towns beſides: which could not poſſibly ſubſiſt in this general decay of Woods, and neglect of planting, but by this Commodity. The Mines of Lead are moſt conſiderable in the Peak of Derbyſhire; thoſe of Tin in Cornwall, where they dig Tin not much inferiour to Silver in fineneſs. A Commodity which brought great wealth to England in former times, the art of making it not being elſewhere known in Europe; till one of the Tin-workers, flying out of England for a Murder, paſſed into Germany, An. 1240. and there diſcovered ſome Tin-Mines in Miſnia, not known before, and ſet on foot that Trade amongſt them, to the great prejudice (ſaith my Author) of the Earls of Cornwall, who had before the ſole Monopoly of that uſeful metal.

To theſe particulars being matters of profit and neceſſity, if I would add ſuch things as are for delight and pleaſure; I might ſubjoin the Bells and Parks; for which this Kingdom is as eminent among Foreign Nations, as for any of thoſe mentioned in the ſaid old Verſe. The Bells ſo many, tunable, and of ſuch excellent Melody to a Muſical ear (brought more to the command of the skilful ringer than in former times) that it is thought there are more good Rings of Bells in this part of the Iſland than in half Chriſtendom beſides. Parks more in England than in all Europe. The firſt of which kind for the incloſing of Veniſon, being that of Woodſtock, made by King Henry the firſt: whoſe example being followed by his Succeſſors, and the Lords and great men of the Realm; the number ſo encreaſed in a little time, that at the laſt, beſide 55 Foreſts, and 300 Chaſes, there were reckoned 745 Parks in England; all well repleniſhed either with Red or Fallow Deer.

And that the Deer might graze with pleaſure, and the Sheep with ſafety, great care was taken by our Progenitors for the deſtruction of Wolves. I know it hath been a tradition of old Writers, That England never had any Wolves at all, and that they would not live here brought from other places; but it is not ſo: here being ſtore of them, till Edgar King of England commuted the 20 l. of Gold, 300 l. of Silver, and 300 head of Cattel impoſed as a yearly tribute by King Athelſtane upon Idwallo Prince of Wales, for the like yearly tribute of 300 Wolves: by which means they were quite rooted out in time, the Welch proteſting at the laſt they could find no more.

The Air of this Country is very temperate, neither ſo hot as France and Spain in the Summer, becauſe of its Northernly ſituation; nor ſo cold in the Winter; becauſe the air of this Kingdom being groſs, cannot ſo ſoon penetrate as the thin air of thoſe Countries. For to ſay truth, the air in the Winter time is thick and foggy, cloudy, and much diſpoſed to miſts; eſpecially near the Sea, and the greater Rivers: inſomuch that many times, the Sun is not ſeen to ſhine out clearly for ſome weeks together. And thereupon there goeth a tale, that the great Conſtable of Caſtile being Ambaſſadour to King James in the firſt Winter of his reign, and tarrying here about a month, is ſaid not to have ſeen the Sun all the time of his ſtay: which occaſioned him at his going on ſhip-board, to deſire ſuch Lords and Gentlemen as attended him thither, to preſent his humble ſervice to the King their Maſter, and to the bleſſed Sun of Heaven when they chanced to ſee him. And ſomething alſo touching the temperature of the Air, may be aſcribed unto the Winds, which participating of the Seas, over which they paſs unto us, do carry with them a temperate warmth.

But if warmth were all the benefit we received from the Seas, it might indeed be ſaid, that we were come from Gods bleſſing into the warm Sun: but it is not ſo. For there are no Seas in Europe that yield more plenty of Fiſh than ours. Our Oyſters were famous in the times of the old Romans, and our Herrings are now very beneficial unto the Netherlands; to whom, the Engliſh-men, reſerving to themſelves a kind of Royalty, (for the Dutch by Cuſtom demand liberty to fiſh off Scarborough Caſtle in Yorkshire) have yielded up the commodity; by which thoſe States are exceedingly enriched, and our Nation much impoveriſhed and condemned for lazineſs and ſloth. Beſides the loſs of employment for many men, who uſing this trade might be a ſeminary of good and able Mariners, as well for the Wars, as for further Navigations and diſcoveries, cannot but be very prejudicial to the ſtrength and flouriſhing of the Common-wealth and Empire of England.

But to make this appear more fully in all particulars, I ſhall extract ſome paſſages out of M. S. diſcourſe of the late Learned Knight Sir John Burroughs, principal King of Arms by the name of Garter, entituled, The Soveraignty of the Britiſh Seas. By which it doth appear, that there is fiſhing in thoſe Seas for Herrings, Pilchards, Cod, Ling, or other Fiſh, at all times of the year: and that too in ſo plentiful a manner, that not long ſince near Minnegal on the Coaſts of Devonſhire, 500 Ton of Fiſh were taken in one day, and 3000 pounds-worth in another, near S. Ives in Cornwall; the Hollanders taking at one draught 20 Laſts of Herrings.

Secondly, That almoſt all Nations hereabouts, as French, Spaniards, Netherlands, and thoſe of the Hanſe, do mightily improve themſelves both in power & wealth, by the benefit of the Engliſh Fiſhing; inſomuch as 10000 Sail of Foreign Veſſels (of which 1400 from the Town of Emden in Eaſt-Friſeland only) are thought to be maintained by this Trade alone.

Thirdly, That the Hollanders in particular employ yearly 8000 Veſſels of all ſorts for this Trade of Fiſhing on our Coaſts, whereby they have a Seminary of 150000 Sailers and Mariners, ready for any publick ſervice: all which maintain treble that number of Men, Women, and Children, of ſeveral Trades upon the Land.

Fourthly, That for the holding up of this Trade, the ſaid Hollanders, inhabiting a Tract of Land not ſo big as many of our Shires, do build 1000 Sail of Ships yearly; and thereby furniſhing all the parts of the world (even as far as Braſil) with our Commodities; returning home thoſe of other Countries in exchange thereof, which they ſell to us many times at their own prices.

Fifthly, That the ſaid Hollanders (as appeared upon computation) made in one year of the Herrings only, caught upon theſe Coaſts, the ſum of 5 Millions of our pounds, (the Cuſtoms and tenth Fiſh advancing to the publick Treaſury no leſs than 800000 l. Sterling): it being thought, that the Herrings caught by thoſe of the Hanſe Towns, and other Nations, amount to as great a ſum as that.

Sixthly, and finally, That by erecting only 250 Buſſes, (Veſſels of great Bulk and Stowage, but not ſwift of ſail) for the Herring Fiſhing, (which is not a ſixth part of thoſe which are employed yearly by the Hollanders) either at the publick charge of the State of England, or private Adventurers thereto authorized and regulated, there would be found employment yearly for 1000 ſhips, and at leaſt 20000 Mariners and Fiſhers at Sea, and conſequently for as many Tradeſmen and Labourers at Land, by means whereof, beſides the vindication of our credit now at ſuch a loſs, there would ariſe in Cuſtoms, Tonnage, Poundage, and other Impoſts, no leſs than 300000 l. per Annum to the publick Treaſury. The proſecution of which Project (if not in greater proportion than that before) as it was once deſigned by Mr. Atturney Noy, my much honoured Friend: ſo do I heartily commend it to the Care of the State, and to his Succeſſors in that Office, as the fitteſt remembrancers to advance it: there being no readier way than this to make the people wealthy, and the Nation formidable.

For notwithſtanding theſe advantages of Fiſh, the Diet of England is, for the moſt part Fleſh; in London only there are no fewer than 67500 Beefs, and 675000 Sheep ſlain and uttered in a year, beſides Calves, Lambs, Hogsfleſh, and Poulterers ware. To prove this, ſuppoſe there be in London 60 Butchers Free of the City, whereof every one, and one with another, killeth an Oxe a day, as at leaſt they do. Then reckon (as the London Butchers do affirm) that the Foreigners in the Suburbs and Villages ſell four for their one. Laſtly, count for every Oxe ten Sheep, (for this is alſo certainly known) to be killed and ſold, and you have both the numbers above-mentioned. The Earl of Gondomar, once the Spaniſh Lieger here, having in ſome ſeveral Market days ſeen the ſeveral Shambles of this great City, ſaid to them who made the diſcovery with him, That there was more fleſh eaten in a month in that Town, than in all Spain in a year. Now had I his skill who by the length of Hercules Foot, found out the proportion of his whole body, I might by this proviſion of fleſh conſumed in the head, gueſs at the quantity of that which is ſpent in the body of the Realm. But this I leave to be determined by an abler hand. The uſual and natural drink of the Country is Beer, ſo called from the French word Boire, (for Wines they have none of their own growing, as before is ſaid) which, without controverſie, is a moſt wholſom and nouriſhing Beverage: and being tranſported into France, Belgium, and Germany, by the working of the Sea is ſo purg'd, that it is amongſt them in higheſt eſtimation; celebrated by the name of la bonne Beere d'Angle Terre. And as for the old drink of England, Ale, which cometh from the Daniſh word Ola, it is queſtionleſs in it ſelf, (and without that commixture which ſome are accuſed to uſe with it) a very wholſom drink; howſoever it pleaſed a Poet in the time of Henry the Third, thus to deſcant on it:

Neſcio quid monſtrum Stygiæ conforme paludi,
Cerviſiam pleriq; vocant; nil ſpiſſius illa
Dum bibitur, nil clarius eſt dum mingitur; ergo
Conſtat quod multas fæces in ventre relinquit.

In Engliſh thus;

Of this ſtrange drink ſo like the Stygian Lake,
Men call it Ale, I know not what to make.
Folk drink it thick, and piſs it very thin;
Therefore much Dregs muſt needs remain within.

Now to conclude this general diſcourſe concerning England, there goes a tale, that Henry the ſeventh (whoſe breeding had been low and private) being once preſſed by ſome of his Council, to purſue his title unto France, returned this Anſwer: That France indeed was a flouriſhing and gallant Kingdom, but England in his mind was a fine Seat for a Country Gentleman, as any could be found in Europe.

Having ſtaid thus long in taking a Survey of the Country it ſelf, together with the chief commodities and pleaſures of it; and amongſt them of the Women alſo, (as the method of the old Verſe led me on:) it is now time that we ſhould look upon the men. And they are commonly of a comely feature, gracious countenance, for the moſt part gray-ey'd, pleaſant, beautiful, bountiful, courteous, and much reſembling the Italians in habit and pronunciation. In matters of war, (as we are ready to prove) they are both able to endure, and reſolute to undertake the hardeſt enterpriſes: in peace quiet, and not quarrelſom; in advice or counſel, ſound and ſpeedy. Finally, they are active, hearty, and chearful. And yet I have met with ſome Gentlemen, who upon the ſtrength of a little travel in France, have grown ſo un-Engliſhed (and ſo affected or beſotted rather on the French Nation) that they affirm the Engliſh in reſpect of the French, to be an heavy, dull, and Phlegmatick people; of no diſpatch, no mettle, no conceit, no audacity, and I know not what not. A vanity, meriting rather my pity, than my anger. Perhaps in vilifying their Nation, they had conſulted with Julius Scaliger, who in the 16. Chap. of his 3d Book De re Poetica, giveth of the two moſt noble Nations, Engliſh and Scotiſh, this baſe and unmanly Character, Gothi belluæ, Scoti non minus; Angli perfidi, inflati, feri, contemptores, ſtolidi, amentes, inertes, inhoſpitales, immanes. His bolt (you ſee) is ſoon ſhot, and ſo you may happily gueſs at the quality of the Archer. A man indeed of an able learning, but of his own worth ſo highly conceited, that if his too much learning made him not mad, yet it made him to be too peremptory and arrogant. To revenge a National diſgrace on a Perſonal, is an ignoble victory. Beſides Socrates reſolution in the like kind in my opinion was very judicious, ἐι δὲ με ὄνος ἠλάκτισε, δίκην ἂν ἀυτῷ ἐλάγχανον; If an Aſs kick us, we muſt not put him in the Court. To confute his cenſure in every point, would be to him too great an honour, and for me too great a trouble; it being a task, which of it ſelf would require a Volume. The beſt is, many ſhoulders make the burden light; and other Nations are as deeply engaged in this quarrel againſt that proud Man, as ours: for ſo maliciouſly hath he there taxed all other people, that that Chapter might more properly have been placed among his Hypercriticks.

How the Engliſh and Germans, which of all Nations are thought moſt given to their bellies, do agree and differ in this point; the ſame Scaliger hath thus ſhewed in one of his Epigrams.

Tres ſunt Convivæ, Germanus, Flander, & Anglus;
    Dic quis edat melius; quis meliuſve bibat.
Non comedis Germane, bibis; tu non bibis Angle,
    Sed comedis; comedis Flandre, bibiſq; bene.

Dutch, Flemmings, Engliſh, are your only gueſts;
Say which of all doth eat, or drink it beſt.
Th' Engliſh love moſt to eat, the Dutch to ſwill,
Only the Flemming eats and drinks his fill.

Thus was it in his time with the Engliſh Nation; though ſince, I fear, we have borrowed too much of the Dutch, and learnt a great deal more than needs of the Flemmings alſo.

The Nobility of this Country is not of ſo much unlimited Power, as they are (to the prejudice of the State) in other Countries; the name of Dukes, Earls, and Marqueſſes, being meerly titular: whereas in other places they have ſome abſolute, ſome mixt Government; ſo that upon any little diſtaſt, they will ſtand on their own guard, and ſlight the power of their Soveraign. And on the other ſide, the Commonalty enjoy a multitude of Priviledges above all other Nations; being moſt free from Taxes,and burdenous Impoſitions, but what they take upon themſelves by their own conſent. They have twice in a year (a laudable cuſtom no where elſe to be ſeen) Juſtice adminiſtred even at their own doors, by the Itinerary Judges of the Kingdom: an Order firſt inſtituted by King Henry the ſecond. They dwell together with the Gentlemen, in Villages, and Towns, which makes them ſavour of civility and good manners: and live in far greater reputation, than the Yeomen in Italy, Spain, France, or Germany; being able to entertain a ſtranger honeſtly, diet him plentifully, and lodge him neatly.

The Clergie was once of very great riches,as appeareth by that Bill preferred to King Henry the fifth, againſt the temporal Revenues of the Church; in which it was ſuggeſted, that they were able to maintain 15 Earls, 1500 Knights, 6000 men of Arms, more than 1000 Almſhouſes, and yet the King might clearly put up 20000 l. per Annum into his Exchequer. How true this was, I cannot ſay. But after this, King Henry the eighth took his Opportunities, to pare away the excreſcencies of it; demoliſhing the Monaſteries, and Religious houſes, and paring off the ſuperfluities of Biſhopricks and Cathedral Churches:in which he found not a few followers amongſt the Miniſters and great Officers of State, and Court, in the time of King Edward the ſixth,and Queen Elizabeth. Yet left they not the Clergy ſo poor and naked, or deſtitute of the encouragements and rewards of learning, but that they have been ſtill the objects of a covetous envy, (that which the former Harpies left them, being thought too much): though for abilities of Learning(I dare boldly ſay it) not to be parallel'd in the World. For beſides 5439 Parochial Benefices, being no Impropriations; and beſides the Vicarages, moſt of which exceed the competency beyond the Seas; there were left in England at the time of the Reformation under Queen Elizabeth, 26 Biſhopricks, (taking thoſe of Wales into the reckoning) 26 Deaneries, 60 Archdeaconries, and 544 Dignities and Prebends; moſt of which, places of fair Revenue. And as for the maintenance of Prieſts, Monks, and Friers, before the Reformation, there were reckoned 90 Colledges, beſides thoſe in the Univerſities, 100 Hoſpitals, 3374 Chanteries and Free Chappels, and 645 Abbies and Monaſteries: more than half of which had above the yearly income of 200 l. in old Rents, many above 2000, and ſome 4000 almoſt. So ſtudious were our Anceſtors both in thoſe times of blindneſs, and theſe of a clearer ſight,to encourage men to Learning, and then reward it.

The Souldiery of England is either for the Land or for the Sea. Our Victories by Land are moſt apparent over the Iriſh, Scots, Cypriots, Turks, and eſpecially French, whoſe Kingdom hath been ſore ſhaken by the Engliſh many times, eſpecially twice by King Edward the Third, and Henry the fifth: this later making ſo abſolute a conqueſt, that Charles the Seventh, like a poor Roy d' Ividot, confined himſelf to Bourges, where (having caſhier'd his retinue) he was found in a little Chamber at Supper, with a Napkin only laid before him, a rump of Mutton and two Chickens. And ſo redoubted even after our expulſion from France, (our civil diſſentions rather cauſing that expulſion, than the Franchmens valour) was the Engliſh name in that Country: that in the Wars between King Charles the Eighth,and the Duke of Bretagne, the Duke, to ſtrike a terror into his enemies apparelled 1500 of his own Subjects, in the Arms and Croſs of England. But as the Aſs, when he had on the Lions Skin, was for all that but an Aſs and no Lion: ſo theſe Britons, by the weak reſiſtance they made againſt their Enemies, ſhew'd that they were indeed Britons, and no Engliſhmen. Spain alſo taſted the valour of our Land-Souldiers, when John of Gaunt purſuing his Title to Spain,was ſent home with 8 Waggons laden with Gold, and an Annual Penſion of 10000 marks; as alſo when the Black-Prince re-eſtabliſhed King Peter in his Throne. And then alſo did they acknowledge, though they felt not the puiſſance of the Engliſh, when Ferdinand the Catholick ſurprized the Kingdom of Navarre. For there were then in Fontarabia, a Town of Guipuſcoa, 6000 Engliſh Foot, who lay there to join with this Ferdinand in an Expedition againſt France. Concerning which, Guicciardine giveth this Item, That the Kingdom of Navarre was yielded rather for the fear and reputation of the Engliſh Forces that were at hand, than by any puiſſance of the King of Aragon. Since thoſe times the Spaniard much eſteemed us, as appeareth by this Speech of theirs to our Souldiers at the Siege of Amiens; You are tall Souldiers, and therefore when you come down to the Trenches, we double our guards, and look for blows; but as for thoſe baſe and cowardly French, when they come, we make account we have nothing to do, but play, or ſleep on our Ramparts. The like the Netherlanders can teſtifie; only this is the grief of it; The Engliſh are like Pyrrhus King of Epirus, fortunate to conquer Kingdoms, but unfortunate to keep them. Not to ſay any thing of the late, but great experience, which the Engliſh Souldiery hath gotten by the Civil Broils among themſelves; at which my heart ſo aketh, and my hand ſo trembleth, that I ſhall only add in the words of Lucan,

Heu! quantum potuit cœli pelagiq; parari,
Hoc quem Civiles fuderunt ſanguine dextræ!

That is to ſay,

How much both Sea and Land might have been gain'd
By their dear blood, which Civil wars have drain'd!

As for their power and valour at Sea, it may evidently be perceived in the Battel of Scluſe, wherein King Edward the 3d, with 200 Ships, overcame the French Fleet conſiſting of 500 Sail; of which he ſunk 200, and ſlew 30000 Souldiers. Secondly, at the Battel in 88, wherein a few of the Queens Ships vanquiſhed the invincible Armado of the King of Spain,conſiſting of 134 great Galleons, and Ships of extraordinary bigneſs. Sir Francis Drake with 4 Ships took from the Spaniard one million and 189200 Ducats in one Voyage, An. 1587. And again with 25 Ships he awed the Ocean, ſacked S. Jago, S. Dominico, and Cartagena; carrying away with him, beſides Treaſure, 240 Pieces of Ordnance. I omit the Circumnavigation of the whole World, by this Drake and Candiſh; and the voyage to Cales: as alſo how one of the Queens Ships named the Revenge, in which Sir Richard Greenvile was Captain, with 180 Souldiers (whereof 90 were ſick on the balaſt)maintained a ſea fight for 24 hours againſt above 50 of the Spaniſh Galleons. And though at laſt after her Powder was ſpent to the laſt barrel,ſhe yielded upon honourable terms; yet ſhe was never brought into Spain: having killed in that fight more than 10000 of their Souldiers, and ſunk four of their greateſt Veſſels. I omit alſo the diſcovery of the Northern paſſages, by Hugh Willoughby, Davis, and Frobiſher; concluding with that of Kekerman, Hoc certum eſt, omnibus hodie gentibus navigandi induſtria & peritia ſuperiores eſſe Anglos: & poſt Anglos, Hollandos: Though now I know not by what neglect, and diſcontinuance of thoſe honourable employments the Hollanders begin to bereave us of our ancient Glories, and would fain account themſelves Lords of the Seas, and probably had been ſo indeed, had not his Majeſty by the timely re-inforcing of his Naval val Power, An. 1636. recovered again the Dominion of it.

The Engliſh Language is a De-compound of Dutch, French and Latine; which I conceive rather to adde to its perfection, than to detract any thing from the worth thereof; ſince out of every Language we have culled the moſt ſignificant words, and equally participate of that which is excellent in them; their imperfections being rejected. For it is neither ſo boyſterous as the Dutch, nor ſo effeminate as the French; yet as ſignificant as the Latine, and in the happy conjunction of two words into one little inferiour to the Greek.

The Chriſtian Faith was firſt here planted as ſome ſay, by S. Peter and Paul; more probably (as others ſay) by Joſeph of Arimathea, whoſe body they find to have been interred in the Iſle of Avalonia where the Abby of Glaſtonbury after ſtood. But that of his plantation being almoſt rooted out by long Perſecutions, and no ſupply of Preachers ſent from other places; Lucius a King of Britain (and the firſt Chriſtian King of Europe,) An. 180. or thereabouts, ſent his Ambaſſadors to Eleutherius the then Pope of Rome to be furniſhed with a new ſupply of Paſtors, if not to plant, yet at the leaſt to water, and confirm the Goſpel planted here before; but almoſt rooted out again by prevailing Gentiliſm. At which time Lucius did not only receive the Faith himſelf, but by the piety of his example, and the diligence of the firſt Preachers ſent from Rome (being both of them natural Britains) it ſpread by little and little over all his Dominions; and in ſome tract of time over all the Iſland. Which being thus recovered to the Faith of Chriſt, was forthwith furniſhed with Biſhops and Metropolitans, according to the number of the Provinces and principal Cities (twenty eight in all) continuing here as long as Chriſtianity it ſelf. For not to truſt herein to the authority of the Britiſh Hiſtory, we find three Biſhops of this Iſle ſubſcribing to the Council of Arles, An. 314. viz. Eborius Biſhop of York, Reſtitutus Biſhop of London, and Adelfius Biſhop of Colcheſter, there called Colonia Londinenſium; and ſome of them alſo preſent in the Council of Sardica, An. 358. concurring with the reſt in voting to the condemnation of the Arian Hereſies; and the ſame or others the next year in the Synod of Arimin. And when the Britains were expulſed their native Country, or ſhut up in the mountainous parts of the Ordovices, and Silures, which we now call Wales; they carried Chriſtianity and Biſhops along with them: Auguſtine the Monk, finding no fewer then ſeven Biſhops in the Britiſh Church, when he was ſent by Gregory the Great to convert the Engliſh. And yet it is no fabulous vanity, (as ſome men ſuppoſe) to ſay that Auguſtine the Monk firſt Preached the Goſpel in England: becauſe it muſt be underſtood, not with Relation to the Britains, but the Engliſh Saxons: from whom theſe parts of the Iſle had the name of England; and from whom both the Britains, and the Faith it ſelf were driven into the Mountains of Wales & Cornwal, and Heatheniſm introduced again over all the Kingdom. Long after which it pleaſed God, that Gregory the Great, (but at that time a Deacon only in the Church of Rome) ſeeing ſome handſom youths to be ſold in open Market, demanded what and whence they were: to whom it was anſwered they were Angli: and well may they be ſo called (ſaith he) for they ſeem as Angels. Aſking again of what Province they were amongſt the Angli; and anſwer being made of the Province of Deira (part of the Kingdom of the Northumbrians) therefore (ſaid he) De ira Dei ſunt liberandi. And laſtly underſtanding that the King of their Nation was named Alle; how fitly (ſaid he) may he ſing Allelujahs to the moſt High God? After which time he ſeriouſly endeavoured the Converſion of the Engliſh Nation; which being Pope he happily effected, by the travel and diligence of Auguſtine the Monk, the firſt Archbiſhop of Canterbury. And ſo well did the work proſper after this beginning, that not only all the Saxons did receive the Goſpel, but communicated the Light of it to other Nations: the Haſſians, Franconians and Turingians, being converted by Winfred; the Friſons or Hollanders by Wittikind the firſt Biſhop of Utrecht; the Saxons of Weſtphalen, by Weldrode, the firſt Biſhop of Breme; all of them being Engliſh Saxons, as we find in Beda and ſome others.

Now as theſe parts of Britain were the firſt which generally entertained the Goſpel, ſo were they the firſt alſo in theſe later times, which univerſally ſubmitted to the Reformation of ſuch corruptions, as had been brought upon them by the power and tyranny of the Church of Rome. Endeavoured firſt in France, by the Albigenſes, and Waldenſes, as was ſaid before. Who being ſuppreſſed and ruinated by the Sword of the Kings of France, ſheltred themſelves in the mountainous parts of Gaſcoigne and Cuienne, then in poſſeſſion of the Engliſh; who by that means became acquainted with their Tenets: maintained here publickly by Wiclef, and ſpreading under-hand amongſt the people of this Kingdom, till the times of Luther and the Reformation by him aimed at. Which being in moſt other Countries received tumultuouſly, by the power of the people; was here admitted upon mature deliberation, by the authority and conſent of the Prince and Prelates: the Architects in this great work, without reſpect unto the Dictates of Luther or Calvin, looking only on Gods Word and the Primitive Patterns, aboliſhing ſuch things as were repugnant unto either, but ſtill retaining ſuch Ceremonies in Gods publick worſhip, as were agreeable to both, and had been countenanced by the practice of the Primitive times. A point wherein they did obſerve a greater meaſure of Chriſtian prudence and moderation, than their neighbour Churches; which in a meer deteſtation of the See of Rome, allowed of nothing which had formerly been in uſe amongſt them, becauſe defiled with Popiſh Errors and abuſes: and thereby utterly averting thoſe of the Papal party from joining with them in the work, or coming over to them when the work was done. Whereas had they continued an allowable correſpondency in theſe extrinſecals of Religion, with the Church of Rome; their party in the world had been far greater, and not ſo much ſtomached as it is. And ſo it was conceived by the Marqueſs de Rhoſne, after Duke of Sully, and Lord High-Treaſurer of France, and one of the chief men of that party there: when being ſent Ambaſſadour to King James, from King Henry the fourth, he had obſerved the Majeſty and Decency of Gods publick Service, in ſome Cathedrals of this Kingdom; Religion would be ſoon defaced and trod under foot if not preſerved and fenced about with the hedge of Ceremonies.

As for the Government of the Church ſince the laſt Converſion, as by the piety and example of Lucius there were founded three Archbiſhopricks, and 25 Biſhopricks, according to the number of the Archi-Flamins, and Flamines (whoſe great Revenues were converted to more ſacred uſes in the timee of Idolatry: So by the like pious care of Pope Gregory the Great, by whoſe means this laſt Converſion happened; Archbiſhopricks, and Biſhopricks were deſigned to convenient places. The number 26 in all; to each Province twelve, beſides the two Archbiſhops and Metropolitans: wherein he had the happineſs to have his deſires fulfilled, though the number was not made compleat till theſe later days, nor with ſuch equal diſtribution, as he did intend. For in the Province of York, laid waſte and deſolate by the Danes, and not ſo ſoon converted as the other was; the number of the Suffragan Biſhops came not up to his purpoſe, but did as much exceed in the Province of Canterbury: eſpecially when K. Henry the 8th had incorporated Wales with England and founded five Epiſcopal Sees out of the ruins and Revenues of ſome principal Monaſteries: of which none but the Biſhoprick of Cheſter (and that of the Iſle of Man, which maketh up the 27th,) were laid unto the Province of York. And ſo it ſtood, notwithſtanding the alterations of Religion, without any diſpute, till Calvin having hammered out his new Presbitery, and recommended it to the uſe of all Chriſtian Churches (the Hiſtory whereof we had ſuccinctly in the Alpine Provinces) found many apt Schollars in moſt places to decry this Order, though conſonant to the word of God: and moſt pure Antiquity.

But the truth is, it was not ſo much the Authority of Calvin, or the malignant zeal of Beza, or the impetuous clamors of their Diſciples, which cauſed the Epiſcopal Order to grow out of credit; as the Avarice of ſome great perſons in Court and State, who greedily gaped after the poor remnant of their Poſſeſſions. It had been elſe a miracle that Calvins Plat-form made only for the uſe of a private City, and not proportioned, no nor intended at the firſt, to the ſtate of other Churches, eſpecially where the Biſhops had been inſtrumental in the Reformation: ſhould be ſo headily received in ſome Kingdoms, and ſo importunately and clamorouſly deſired in others.

The moſt valorous Souldiers of this Country, when poſſeſſed by the Britains; were 1 Caſſibelane, who twice repulſed the Roman Legions, though conducted by Cæſar; and had not a party here at home been formed againſt him, he had for ever done the like. 2 Pratuſagus, King of the Iceni. 3 Conſtantine the Great. 4 Arthur, one of the Worlds nine Worthies. In the times of the Saxons. 5 Guy Earl of Warwick. 6 King Edmund Ironſide; and 7 Canutus the Dane. Under the Normans, of moſt note have been 1 William ſirnamed the Conqueror, 2 Richard, and 3 Edward, both the firſt of thoſe names, ſo renowned in the Wars of the Holy-Land, 4 Edward the 3d, and 5 Edward the Black Prince, his Son Duo fulmina belli, as famous in the Wars of France; 6 Henry the 5th, and 7 John Duke of Bedford his Brother, of equal gallantry with the other. 8 Montacute Earl of Saliſbury. 9 Sir John Falſtolf, and 10 Sir John Hawkwood, of great eſteem for valour in France and Italy: not to deſcend to later times. And for Sea Captains, thoſe of moſt note, have been Hawkins, Willoughby, Burroughs, Jenkinſon, Drake, Frobiſher, Cavendiſh and Greenvile; of ſome of which we have ſpoke already, and of the reſt we may have an opportunity to ſpeak more hereafter.

Scholars of moſt renown amongſt us, 1 Alcuinus, one of the Founders of the Univerſity of Paris. Beda, who for his Piety and Learning obtained the Attribute or Adjunct of Venerabilis. Concerning which, the Legends tell us, that being blind, his Boy had knaviſhly conducted him to preach to an heap of ſtones; and that when he had ended his Sermon with the Gloria Patri, the very ſtones concluded, ſaying, Amen, Amen, Venerabilis Beda. But other of the Monkiſh Writers do aſſign this reaſon and both true alike; that at his death ſome unlearned Prieſt intending to honour him with an Epitaph, had thus far blundered on a verſe, viz. Hic ſunt in foſſa Bedæ oſſa: but becauſe the Verſe was yet imperfect, he went to bed to conſider of it, leaving a ſpace betwixt the two laſt words thereof; which in the mourning he found filled up in a ſtrange Character, with the word Venerabilis; and ſo he made his Verſe, and Beda (pardon his diverſion) obtained that Attribute. 3 Anſelm, and 4 Bradwardin, Archbiſhops of Canterbury, Men Famous for the times they lived in. 5 Alexander of Hales, Tutor to Thomas Aquinas, and Bonaventure. 6 Thomas of Walden, the profeſſed Enemy of Wiclef, againſt whom he writ. 7 John Wiclef Partſon of Lutterworth in the County of Leiceſter, who ſo valiantly oppoſed the Power and Errours of the Church of Rome; though he vented many of his own. Then ſince the time of the Reformation, 1 John Jewel Biſhop of Saliſbury, to whoſe Learned and Induſtrious Labours, in defence of the Religion here by Law eſtabliſhed, we are ſtill beholding. Dr. John Reynolds, and 3 Mr. Richard Hooker, both of Corpus Chriſti Colledg in Oxon; the firſt, a man of infinite reading, the ſecond of as ſtrong a judgment. 4 Dr. Whitakers of Cambridge, the Antagoniſt of the famous Bellarmine. 5 Dr. Thomas Bilſon, and 6 Dr. Lancelot Andrews, both Biſhops of Wincheſter, the Ornaments of their ſeveral times. 7 Biſhop Mountague of Norwich, a great Philologer and Divine. 8 Dr. John Whitgift, and 9 Dr. William Laud, Archbiſhops of Canterbury. Of which laſt, and his diſcourſe againſt Fiſher the Jeſuite, Sir Edward Dearing his profeſſed Enemy, hath given this Character, that in that Book of his he had muzled the Jeſuits, and ſhould ſtrike the Papiſts under the fifth rib, when he was dead and gone: and that being dead, whereſoever his grave ſhould be, PAVLS (whoſe reparation he endeavoured, and had almoſt finiſhed) would be his perpetual Monument, and his Book his laſting Epitaph. And as for thoſe who have ſtood up in maintenance of the Church of Rome, thoſe of moſt note were Dr. Harding, the Antagoniſt of Biſhop Jewel. 2 Nic. Sanders, and 3 Dr. Thomas Stapleton, to whoſe Writings the great Cardinal Bellarmine doth ſtand much indebted. 4 Campian, and 5 Parſons, both Jeſuites: and 6 William Reynolds, a Seminary Prieſt, and the Brother of Dr. John Reynolds ſpoken of before. Of which two Brothers (by the way) it is very obſervable, That William was at firſt a Proteſtant of the Church of England, and John trained up in Popery beyond the Seas, William out of an honeſt zeal to reduce his Brother to his Church, made a journey to him: where in a Conference betwixt them it ſo fell out, that John being overcome by his Brothers Arguments, returned into England, where he became one of the more ſtrict or rigid ſort of the Engliſh Proteſtants, and William being convinced by the Reaſons of his Brother John, ſtayed beyond the Seas, where he proved a very violent and virulent Papiſt. Of which ſtrange accident, Dr. Alabaſter, who had made trial of both Religions, and amongſt many notable Whimſeys, had ſome fine Abilities, made this following Epigram; which for the Excellency thereof, and the Rareneſs of the Argument, I ſhall here ſubjoin,

Bella inter geminos pluſquam Civilia Fratres,
  Traxerat ambiguus Religionis apex.
Ille Reformatæ Fidei pro partibus inſtat;
  Iſte Reformandam denegat eſſe fidem.
Propoſitis cauſæ rationibus, alter-utrinque;
  Concurrere pares, & cecidere pares.
Quod fuit in votis, Fratrem capit alter-uterque;
  Quod fuit in fatis, perdit uterque fidem.
[illegible]ptivi gemini ſine captivante fuerunt,
  Et victor victi transfuga caſtra petit.
Quod genus hoc pugna eſt, ubi victus gaudet uterque;
  Et tamen alter-uter ſe ſuperaſſe dolet?

Which excellent Epigram, though not without great diſadvantage to the Latine Original, I have thus tranſlated:

In points of Faith ſome undermin'd jars,
Betwixt two Brothers kindled Civil Wars.
One for the Churches Reformation ſtood;
The other thought no Reformation good.

The points propos'd, they traverſed the field
With equal skill, and both together yield.
As they deſir'd, his Brother each ſubdues;
Yet ſuch their Fate, that each his Faith did looſe.
Both Captives, none the priſoners thence do guide;
The Victor flying to the Vanquiſht ſide.
Both joy'd in being Conquer'd, (ſtrange to ſay)
And yet both mourn'd becauſe both won the day.

And then for men of other Studies, 1 Lindwood the Canoniſt, 2 Coſins, and 3 Cowel, eminent in the ſtudies of the Civil Laws. 4 Bracton, and 5 Briton of old times; 6 Dier, and 7 Coke of late days, as eminent for their knowledge in the Laws of England. 8 Johannes de Sacro Boſco, the Author of the Book of the Sphere; and 9 Roger Bacon, a noted Mathematician in the darker times. 10 Sir Francis Bacon the Learned Viſcount of S. Albans, of whom more hereafter. 11 Sir Thomas More, Lord Chancellour, one of the Reſtorers of Learning to the Iſle of Great Britain. 12 Sir Henry Savile of Eaton, the reviver of Chryſoſtom. 13 Sir Henry Spelman, a right Learned Antiquary, and a Religious aſſertor of the Churches Rights. 14 Camden, Clarenciaux, the Pauſanias of the Britiſh Iſlands. 15 Matthew Paris, 16 Roger Hovedon, 17 Henry of Huntingdon, 18 William of Malmesbury, 19 Matthew of Weſtminſter, and 20 Thomas of Walſingham; all known Hiſtorians. And finally for Poetry, 1 Gower, 2 Lidgate, a Monk of Bury; 3 the Famous Geofry Chawcer, Brother in Law to John of Gaunt the great Duke of Lancaſter; of which laſt Sir Philip Sidney uſed to ſay, that he marvelled how in thoſe miſty times he could ſee ſo clearly, and others in ſo clear times go ſo blindly after him. 4 Sir Philip Sidney himſelf, of whom and his Arcadia, more when we come to Greece. 5 The renowned Spencer, of whom and his Fairy Queen, in another place. 6 Sam. Daniel, the Lucan, 7 with Michael Draiton, the Ovid of the Engliſh Nation. 8 Beamount, and 9 Fletcher, not inferiour unto Terence and Plautus; with 10 My friend Ben. Johnſon, equal to any of the Antients for the exactneſs of his Pen, and the decorum which he kept in the Dramatick Poems, never before obſerved on the Engliſh Theatre. Others there are as eminent both for Arts and Arms, as thoſe here ſpecified, of whom, as being ſtill alive, I forbear to ſpeak; according to that caution of the Hiſtorian, ſaying, Vivorum ut magna admiratio, ita Cenſura eſt difficilis.

But from the Men to return again unto the Country, we find it to be ſubject (according to the ſeveral reſpects of Church and State) to a treble diviſion; viz. 1 into 6 Circuits deſtinated to the Itinerary Judges: Secondly, into 22 Epiſcopal Dioceſſes. Thirdly, into 40 Shires. The Realm was firſt divided into Circuits by King Henry the Second, who appointed twice in the year, two of the moſt Grave and Learned Judges of the Land, ſhould in each Circuit adminiſter Juſtice in the chief or head Towns of every County. Of theſe Judges, one ſitteth on matters Criminal, concerning the life and death of Malefactors: the other in Actions Perſonal, concerning Title of Land, Debts, or the like, between party and party. The firſt Circuit (for we will begin at the Weſt) comprehendeth the Counties of Wilts, Somerſet, Devon, Cornwal, Dorſet, and Southampton. The ſecond containeth the Counties of Oxford, Berks, Glouceſter, Monmouth, Hereford, Worceſter, Salop, and Stafford. The third hath in it the Counties of Surrey, Suſſex, Kent, Eſſex, and Hartford. The Fourth conſiſteth of the Shires of Buckingham, Bedford, Huntingdon, Cambridge, Norfolk, and Suffolk. The fifth of the Shires of Northampton, Rutland, Lincoln, Nottingham, Darby, Leiceſter, and Warwick. And the ſixth and laſt, of the Shires of York, Durham, Northumberland, Cumberland, Weſtmerland, and Lancaſter. So that in theſe ſix Circuits are numbred 38 Shires. The two remaining are Middleſex, and Cheſhire: whereof the firſt is exempted, becauſe of its vicinity to London; and the ſecond as being a County Palatine, and having peculiar Judges and Counſellours to it ſelf.

The ſecond Diviſion, but more antient far in point of time, is that of Dioceſſes, 22 in all, proportioned according to the number of Epiſcopal Sees: each Dioceſs having in it one or more Arch Deaconries, for diſpatch of Eccleſiaſtical buſineſs; and every Arch-Deaconry ſubdivided into Rural Deanries, fewer or more, according to the bigneſs and extent thereof. Of theſe there are but four in the Province of York, that is to ſay, the Dioceſſes of York, Cheſter, Durham, and Carlile: the other 18 (together with the 4 of Wales) being reckoned into that of Canterbury. In reſpect of which great authority and juriſdiction, the Archbiſhops of Canterbury had anciently the titles of Primates and Metropolitans of all England; & for ſome Ages before the Reformation, uſed to take place in all General Councils, at the Popes right Foot. Which Cuſtom took beginning at the Council of Laterane, when Urban the ſecond called Anſelm the Archbiſhop of Canterbury from amongſt the other Prelates then aſſembled, and placed him at his right foot, ſaying, Includamus hunc in Orbe noſtro tanquam alterius Orbis Papam. This happened An. 1099. They were anciently alſo Legati nati; which honourable Title was firſt given to Archbiſhop Theobald, by Innocent the Second, and continued unto his Succeſſors. And both to honour their calling in the courſe of their Government, and to have the benefit of their Counſel, being men of Learning, both the Archbiſhops and the Biſhops, were anciently priviledged to have their place and ſuffrage in the High Court of Parliament (ever ſince any Parliaments were firſt held in England) as Peers of the Realm; and that too in a double reſpect: firſt in relation had to their ſacred Office, and ſecondly to thoſe temporal Eſtates and Baronies, which they held of the King. Yet did they not enjoy in the times of their greateſt power and flouriſhing, all the Prerogatives and Priviledges of the temporal Barons: as neither being tryed by their Peers in Criminal cauſes, but left to an Ordinary Jury; nor ſuffered in examinations to make a Proteſtation upon their honour, to the truth of the Fact, but put unto their Oaths like others of the lower Clergy. As for their Eccleſiaſtical Courts, it was antiently ordered alſo, that beſides ſuch as appertained to the Archbiſhops themſelves; beſides thoſe holden by the Chancellors and Arch-Deacons of every Biſhop, in their ſeveral Dioceſſes, and ſome in many private Pariſhes which they call Peculiars: and finally, beſides the Courts of Viſitation, held every two years by the Arch-Deacons or their Officials, & every third year by the Biſhop himſelf in perſon, or his lawful Deputy: there ſhould be alſo Synods or Convocations, which are the Parliaments of the Clergy, aſſembled primarily for the Reforming of the Church in Doctrine and Diſcipline: and ſecondarily, for granting Tenths and Subſidies to the King: Which Synods, whether they be National, or Provincial only, do naturally conſiſt of all the Right Reverend Fathers, the Arch-biſhops, Biſhops, the Deans, Arch Deacons, and one Prebend out of each Cathedral, and a certain number of the Clergy, (two for every Dioceſs) elected by the reſt to ſerve for them in that great Aſſembly: the Clergy not being bound antiently by any Act, to which they had not given conſent by thoſe their Proxies: Of which ſo called and met together, the Biſhops ſitting by themſelves make the Upper Houſe; the Deans, Arch-deacons, and the reſt, do conſtitute the Lower Houſe of Convocation.

The third and laſt Diviſion, though the ſecond in courſe of time, is that of Shires made by King Alfride, both for the eaſier Adminiſtration of juſtice; and to prevent ſuch Outrages and Robberies, as (after the example of the Danes) the natural Inhabitants of the Realm began in all places to commit. For over every one of theſe Shires or Counties, he appointed an High Sheriff and divers Officers, to ſee into the behaviour of private men, and to puniſh ſuch as were delinquent: and in times of war either already begun, or intended, he inſtituted a Perfect or Lieutenant; to whom he gave authority to ſee their muſters, their proviſion of arms, and if occaſion ſerved, to puniſh ſuch as rebelled or mutined. This wiſe King ordained alſo, that his Subjects ſhould be divided into tens or tithings, every of which ſeverally ſhould give bond for the good abearing of each other; and he who was of that diſſolute behaviour, that he could not be admitted to theſe tithings, was forthwith conveyed to the houſe of correction. By this courſe every man was not only careful of his own actions, but had an eye to all the nine for whom he ſtood bound; as the nine had over him: inſomuch that a poor girl might travel ſafely with a bag of gold in her hand, and none durſt meddle with her. The antienteſt of theſe 10 men were called κατ᾽ ἐξοχὴν, the Tithing men, 10 of the nigheſt and neighbouring tithings, made the leſſer Diviſion which we call hundreds: which name cannot be derived from the like number of Villages, for none of our hundreds are ſo large: and one of them there is in Berkſhire, which containeth five hamlets only. We have then a diviſion of the Realm into 40 Shires; of the Shires into divers hundreds; and of the hundreds into ten tithings. And this diviſion made by Alfride ſtill remains in force: as alſo doth the High Sheriff, and the reſt of the ſubordinate Officers of the High Sheriff conſiſting eſpecially at this time, in executing Arreſts, aſſiſting the Itinerary Judges, gathering the Kings Fines and Amerciaments, and raiſing the Poſſe-Comitatus if occaſion be. But for the Civil part of government in the ſeveral Counties, it is moſt in the hands of ſuch as we call Juſtices of the Peace, authorized by Commiſſion under the great Seal of England: appointed firſt by that prudent Prince King Edward the firſt, by the name of Cuſtodes Pacis, Guardians of the Peace, and firſt, called Juſtices of the Peace in the 36 of King Edward the 3d. Cap. 11. A form of Government ſo much conducing to the propriety of the Country, and the ſecurity of the People; that King James the firſt Monarch of Great Britain, eſtabliſhed it by law in the Kingdom of Scotland. Then for the Courts which are ſtill kept in every ſhire, they are either the County Court holden every month, wherein the Sheriff or his ſufficient deputy commonly preſideth; or the Aſſizes and court of Goal-delivery held twice a year by the Judges Itinerant aſſiſted by the Juſtices of the Peace and others in Commiſſion with them. There are alſo two Offices in every hundred choſen out of the Yeomanry, whom we call the Conſtables of the hundred: who receiving the Precepts or Warrants of the Sheriff, or Juſtices, diſpatcheth them to the Tithingman or Petit Conſtable of each Town, and Village, in their ſeveral Diviſions. And in each hundred, a Court kept once in three Weeks, by the Steward of the hundred, or his Deputy, capable of Pleas or Actions under the value of 40s. though in ſome few of theſe Courts alſo (as in that of Slaughter hundred in Gloceſter-ſhire): the value of the Action, by ſome ſpecial Charter, be left unlimited. The like Court alſo hidden in ſome antient Burroughs. And beſides theſe, in every Village are two ſeveral Courts, and theſe two holden twice a year if occaſion be, held by the Steward of the Manor: in the one of which called the Court Leet, there is Enquiry made into Treaſons, Felonies, Murders, and other Caſes, falling between the King and the Subject, and in the other, which we call by the name of Court-Baron, ſuch only as concern the Lord and Tenants, and theſe laſt for the moſt part ſummoned at the will of the Lord: So that Comines had (we ſee) good reaſon for this Affirmation, that of all the Signiories in the World that ever he knew, the Realm of England was the Country in which the Common-wealth was beſt governed.

To return again unto the Shires, ſome of them take their names from the old Inhabitants, as Cumberland from the Cymbri or ancient Britains, Eſſex and Suſſex from the Eaſt and South Saxons: ſome from the ſituation of them, as Northumberland, Norfolk, Southfolk, Devonſhire; this laſt ſo called from Devinam, a Welch or Britiſh word, ſignifying Low Vallies, of which it very much conſiſteth: Some from the form or figure of them, as Cornwal, from the reſemblance which it hath to an horn; and Kent, (in Latine, Cantium) becauſe it lyeth in a Canton or Corner of the Iſland. Some from ſome Accidents therein, as Berkſhire, or Berockſhire, from the abundance of Boxe, which the Saxons call by the name of Beroc: the moſt part from the principal Town of all the County, as Glouceſter, Oxford, and the like. Of theſe Shires the biggeſt beyond all compare, is the County of York, out of which 70000 men may be raiſed for preſent ſervice, if need ſo require. And in them all are comprehended 8709 Pariſhes (beſides thoſe of Wales) not reckoning in ſuch Chappels as we call Chappels of Eaſe, in greatneſs not inferiour to many Pariſhes; 22 Cities, 585 Market Towns which are no Cities; and in the Towns and Villages to the number of 145 Caſtles, or ruines of Caſtles; few of them places of importance, and ſuch as are belonging generally to the Kings, who ſuffer not any of their Subjects to neſt themſelves in Strong Holds and Caſtles.

Cities of moſt obſervation in it, 1 London, ſeated on the Thames, by which divided into two parts, conjoyned together by a ſtately and magnificent Bridge, ſpoken of before. The River capable in this place of the greateſt Ships, by means whereof it hath been reckoned a long time for one of the moſt Famous Mart-Towns in Chriſtendom: and not long ſince, had ſo much got precedency of all the reſt, that the greateſt part of the wealth of Europe was driven up that River. A City of great Note in the time of the Roman Conqueſt; to whom it was firſt known by the name of Londinum: a Town at that time of great Trade and Riches; and by them honoured with the Title of Auguſta. Increaſed of late very much in Builings: contiguous to ſome Towns and Villages, from which in former times disjoined by ſome diſtant intervals So that the circuit may contain 8 miles at leaſt: in which ſpace are 122 Pariſh Churches; the Palace of the King, the Houſes of the Nobility, Colledges for the ſtudy of the Laws, I mean not the Civil Law, which is Jus Gentium, but (as we call it) the Common Law, appropriate only to this Kingdom. It is wondrous populous, containing well nigh 600000 people; which number is much augmented in the Term time. Some compare London with Paris thus: London is the richer, the more populous, and more antient; Paris the greater, more uniform, and better fortified. But for my part, as I do not think that London is the more populous, ſo neither can I grant that Paris is the greater City, except we meaſure them by the Walls. For taking in the Suburbs of both, and all that paſſeth in Accompt by the name of London: I cannot but conceive, that if London were caſt into the ſame orbicular figure, the circumference of it would be larger than that of Paris. For uniformity of Building, Paris indeed doth go beyond it; but may in that be equalled alſo in ſome tract of time, if the Deſign begun in King James his Reign, tending to the advancement of ſuch Uniformity, be not interrupted.

For other things, certain is that London is the antienter City, as being an Archbiſhops See in the time of the Britains, when the name of Paris was ſcarce heard of, a Biſhops See at the firſt converſion of the Saxons: increaſed ſo much in wealth and honour from one age to another, that it is grown at laſt too big for the Kingdom; which whether it may be profitable for the State, or not, may be made a queſtion. Great Towns in the body of a State, are like the Spleen or Milt in the body natural, the monſtrous growth of which impoveriſheth all the reſt of the Members, by drawing to it all the animal and vital ſpirits, which ſhould give nouriſhment unto them: And in the end cracked or ſurcharged by its own fulneſs, not only ſends unwholſom fumes and vapours unto the head, and heavy pangs unto the heart, but draws a conſumption on it ſelf. And certainly the over-growth of great Cities is of dangerous conſequence, not only in regard of Famine, ſuch multitudes of mouths not being eaſie to be fed: but in reſpect of the irreparable danger of Inſurrections, if once thoſe multitudes, ſenſible of their own ſtrength, oppreſſed with want, or otherwiſe diſtempered with faction or diſcontent, ſhould gather to an head, and break out into action. Yet thus much may be ſaid to the honour of London, though grown by much too big now for the Kingdom, that it is generally ſo well governed, and in ſo good peace, that thoſe Murders, Robberies, and Outrages ſo frequent in great and populous Cities beyond the Seas, are here ſeldom heard of. 2 York, in the Weſt Riding of that County, the ſecond City of England, as the old Verſe hath it:

Londinum caput eſt & Regni urbs prima Britanni, Eboracum à prima jure ſecunda venit.

That is to ſay,

In England, London is the chiefeſt Town;
The ſecond place York claimeth as its own.

And ſo it may, being indeed the ſecond City of the Kingdom, both for fame and greatneſs. A pleaſant, large and ſtately City, well fortified and beautifully adorned, as well with private as publick Edifices; and rich, and populous withal. Seated upon the River Ouſe, or Eure, which divides it in twain; both parts being joined together with a fair ſtone Bridge, conſiſting of high and mighty Arches. A City of great eſtimation in the time of the Romans, the Metropolis of the whole Province or Dioceſs of Britain; remarkable for the death & burial of the Emperour Severus, and the birth of Conſtantine the Great: by conſequence the Seat of the Primate of the Britiſh Church, as long as Chriſtianity did remain among them, Nor ſtooped it lower when the Saxons had received the Faith: and notwithſtanding thoſe mutations which befel this Kingdom, under the Saxons, Danes, and Normans, it ſtill preſerved its antient luſtre, and encreaſed it too. Adorned with a ſtately and magnificent Cathedral, inferiour to few in Europe; and with a Palace of the Kings, (called the Manorhouſe) the dwelling in theſe later days, of the Lord Preſident of the Court or Council here eſtabliſhed by K. Henry the 8th, for the benefit of the Nothern Subjects, after the manner of a French Parliament, or Preſidial Sieges. 3 Briſtol, the third in rank of the Cities of England, ſituate on the meeting of the Frome and Avon, not far from the influx of the Severn into the Ocean: in that regard commodiouſly ſeated for Trade and traffick; the Ships with full Sail coming into the City, and the Citizens with as full purſes trading into moſt parts of the World, with good Faith & Fortune. A Town exceeding populous, and exceeding cleanly, there being Sewers made under ground, for the conveyance of all filth and naſtineſs, into the Rivers. Churches it hath to the number of 18 or 20, reckoning in the Cathedral, and that of Ratcliff. The Cathedral firſt built by Rob. Fitz-Harding, Son to a King of Denmark, once a Burger here, and by him ſtored with Canons Regular, An. 1248, but made a Biſhops-See by King Henry the 8th, An. 1542. The principal building next the Church, is an ancient Caſtle, a piece of ſuch ſtrength, that Maud the Empreſs having took King Stephen Priſoner, thought it the ſafeſt place to ſecure him in. 4 Norwich, the fourth City of the firſt rank, of which more hereafter. 5 Oxford, the firſt of the ſecond rank of Engliſh Cities ſeated upon the Ouſe, or Iſis: but whether ſo called as Vadum Iſidos, Ouſeford, or the Ford of Ouſe; or Voda-boum (as the Greeks had their Boſphore in former times) I determine not. An antient Town, and antiently made a Seat of Learning co-eval unto that of Paris, if not before it; the Univerſity hereof being reſtored rather than firſt founded by K. Alured, An. 806, after it had been overborn a while by the Daniſh Furies; but hereof as an Univerſity, more anon. This only now, that for the ſtatelineſs of the Schools and publick Library, the bravery and beauty of particular Colledges, all built of fair and poliſhed ſtone; the liberal endowment of thoſe houſes, and notable encouragements of Induſtry and Learning in the ſalary of the Profeſſors in moſt Arts & Sciences, it is not to be parallel'd in the Chriſtian World. The City of it ſelf well built, and as pleaſantly ſeated, formed in the Figure of a Croſs, two long ſtreets thwarting one another, each of them near a mile in length; containing in that compaſs, 13 Pariſh Churches, and a See Epiſcopal founded here by King Henry the 8th, Anno 1541. The honourable Title of twenty of the noble Family of the Veres, now Earl of Oxon, 6 Salisbury, firſt ſeated on the Hill, where now ſtands old Salisbury, the Sorboidunum of the Antients. But the Cathedral being removed down into the Vale, the Town quickly followed, and grew up very ſuddenly into great Renown; pleaſantly ſeated on the Avon, (a name common to many Engliſh Rivers) which watereth every ſtreet thereof; and for the populouſneſs of the place, plenty of Proviſions, number of Churches, a ſpacious Market-place, and a fair Town-hall, eſteemed the ſecond City of all the Weſt. 7 Glouceſter, by Antonine called Glevum, by the Britains Caer Glowy, whence the preſent name; the Saxons adding Ceſter, as in other places. A fine neat City, pleaſantly ſeated on the Severn, with a large Key or Wharf on the banks thereof, very commodious to the Merchandize and trade of the place: well built, conſiſting of fair large Streets, beautified with a fair Cathedral; for the magnificence of the Quire, elegancy of the Cloiſters, and gratiouſneſs of the Bel-tower there ſcarce to be fellowed in the Kingdom: and ſituate in ſuch a Vale, that there is nothing wanting to the uſe of man except only Wine, which life or luxury may require. 8 Cheſter, upon the River Dee, built in the manner of a quadrate, incloſed with a Wall, which takes up more than two miles in compaſs; containing in that compaſs 12 Pariſh Churches, and an old Cathedral dedicated antiently to S. Wereburg, Daughter of Wolfre K. of the Mercians, and the Viſitreſs of all the Monaſteries of England. But made a Biſhops See by King Henry the 8th. The buildings generally fair, the Sreets wide and open, with Galleries before every door under which a man might walk dry from one end to the other. The reſt of chief note ſhall be ſpecified on another occaſion, with this advertiſement, that the ordinary Cities of England are not to be compared with thoſe of France, and Italy: Firſt becauſe the Nobles and Gentry of thoſe Countries live for the moſt part in the Cities, ours in the Country-Villages; And ſecondly, becauſe the Londoners ſo ingroſs all trading, that they drew thither all the Wealth and treaſure of the Kingdom. By means whereof, that every day encreaſeth in wealth and beauty; the reſt (except Briſtol only) do decay as ſenſibly: that City being like the Spleen in the body natural, the monſtrous growth whereof ſtarveth all the reſt of the Members. Liene excreſcente, reliquum corpus contabeſcit, as the Doctors have it.

There are in England but two Univerſities, which may equal ſix, nay ten of all other Countries (ſo that Paris be not in the number) moſt of them being no better than our Colledges of Weſtminſter, Eaton, or Wincheſter; and none ſo liberally endowed, as ſome one of theſe in the Univerſities. Of which there are 16 in Cambridge, ſome of them called only by the name of Halls, but theſe endowed with Lands and Fellowſhips as the others are. In Oxford there are 18 Colledges endowed with Lands, beſides ſix Halls, where Students live at their own charges: in both of them Profeſſors of the Arts and Sciences, as alſo of Divinity, Law, Phyſick, and the Learned Languages, with liberal Salaries, and in each to the number of 3000 Students, ſo regular in their lives and converſations, as are not to be found in the World beſides. The fairer and more antient, Oxford, which of long time, together with Paris in France, Bononia in Italy, and Salamanca in Spain, hath been honoured with the Title of Generale ſtudium. For that the Univerſity of Cambridge, (though giving upper hand to her Siſter of Oxford, ſhe may take place of all the Univerſities in the World beſides) is not of ſo long ſtanding as that of Oxford, is evident by the teſtimony of Robertus de Remington, cited by Maſter Camden, viz. Regnante Edwardo primo, (it ſhould rather be read ſecundo) de ſtudio Grantbridge facta eſt Academia, ſicut Oxonium: where the word ſicut doth not import an idendity of the time; but a relation to Oxford, as to the pattern. We ſee this truth yet clearer in the Bull of Pope John the 21, the contemporary of our Edward the Second, as I find in the work of that great Searcher of Academical Antiquities, Mr. Brian Twine. Apoſtolica Authoritate ſtatuimus (ſaith the Bull) quod Collegium Magiſtrorum & Scholarium ejuſdem ſtudii (ſpeaking of Cambridge) Univerſitas ſit cenſenda, &c. But what need more than the Reſolution of the Commons of the firſt Parliament holden under K. James? For when the Clerk of that Houſe had put the name of Cambridge before Oxford; they taking diſdainfully that Hyſteron Proteron, commanded the Antiquities of both Univerſities to be ſearched, and after ſearch made, gave the place to Oxford. But to proceed, the Univerſity of Cambridge as it was much of a later Foundation, ſo was it long before it grew into eſteem: inſomuch, that when William of Wainflete Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Founder of Magdalen Colledge in Oxon, (whereof I was once an unworthy Member) perſwaded King Henry the Sixth to erect a Colledge in Oxford, as ſome of the Kings his Predeceſſors had done before him: immo potius Cantabrigiæ (replyed the King) Ut duas ſi fieri poſſit in Anglia Academias habeam. No, ſaid the King, in Cambridge rather, that ſo, if poſſible, I may have two Univerſities in my Realm of England.

As for the Story of this Country, that it was firſt peopled out of Gaul, is affirmed by Cæſar, and proved by many ſtrong and concluding Arguments; as their Religion, Manners Languages, Cuſtoms, and the nearneſs of the one to the other. To omit therefore the Fable of Brute, and the Catalogue of 68 Kings, which are ſaid to have reigned here ſucceſſively before the coming of the Romans: Certain it is, that Cæſar found the Country cantoned into many Kingdoms (four in Kent alone) and the people to be very rude and illiterate. Such Learning as they had was locked up in the breſts of the Druides; who committed nothing unto Writing, and by that means kept the People in continual ignorance: communicating what they knew to none but thoſe of their own Order, and therein being ſought to by the Druides or Prieſts of Gaul; who came over into this Iſland to them, and did from them receive the knowledge of their ſacred Myſteries. Being conquered or diſcovered rather by Julius Cæſar, it was not ſo much as looked after by the two next Emperors: Auguſtus and Tiberius counting it an high point of Wiſdom, not to extend the Empire beyond the Ocean. Caligula had once a mind to the Adventure, but he durſt not follow it. But Claudius, his Succeſſor, undertook the Enterprize, ſollicited thereunto by Bericus a noble Briton, who for ſedition and ſome practices againſt the publick, was expelled the Country. Hereupon Aulus Plantius is ſent over with ſome Roman Forces, by whom and P. Oſtorius Scapula, his Succeſſor, Codigunus and Caracticus two Kings of the Britains, were ſeverally overcome in battel, a Roman Colony planted at Camalodunum, (now Malden in Eſſex) and the Southern parts thereof reduced to the form of a Province. After this time by little and little the whole was conquered, as far as to the Frythes of Dunbarton and Edenburgh. Agricola in the time of Domitian, having the happineſs and good fortune to go beyond the furtheſt of his Predeceſſors; and ſo much moderation not to venture further, where there was nothing to be got but blows cold, and hunger.

At the firſt entrance of the Romans, the Iſland was divided into ſeveral Nations, each governed by its own Kings and particular Princes, different in their ends and counſels, and ſo more eaſily ſubdued by united Forces. The principal of which (for it is needleſs to make mention of inferiour Clans) where 1 the Danmonii, containing Devonſhire, and Cornwal, whoſe chief Cities were Iſca, now Exeter and Volcha near the Town of Falmouth in Cornwal. 2 The Duroiriges, inhabiting only in the County of Dorſet; whoſe chief City was Durnium or Durnovaria, which we now call Dorcheſter. 3 The Belgæ, planted in the Counties of Somerſet, Southampton, and Wilts, whoſe chief Cities were Aquæ Calidæ, now Bath: Venta Belgarum, now Wincheſter; and Sorbiodunum, the ſeat of old Salisbury. 4 The Attrebatii, confined within Barkſhire only, the chief City of whom was Guallena, where now is Wallingford. 5 The Regni, poſſeſſed of Suſſex and Surrey, whoſe chief Cities were Vindelis, now Winchelſey; and Neomagus, ſituate ſome ten miles from London. 6 The Kantiani, or the Kentiſh, having Durovernum, now Canterbury; Dubris, now Dover; and Rhutupiæ, now called Richborough, for their principal Cities. 7 The Trinobantes of Middleſex, and Eſſex, where London called afterwards Auguſta Trinobantum; and Camalodunum the firſt Roman Colony, now called Maldon, the Seat-Royal of Cunobelinus, King of the Trinobantes in the time of the Romans. 8 The Catieuchlani, dwelling in the Counties of Buckingham, Bedford, and Hartford, whoſe Towns of moſt importance were Magivintum, now called Dunſtable; and Verulamium, (near S. Albans) the ſtrongeſt Hold the Britains had in their Wars with Cæſar. 9 The Iceni, living in the Counties of Suffolk, Norfolk, Huntington, and Cambridge; their principal Cities being Villa Fauſtini, now S. Edmundsbury; Sito-magus, now Thetford; Durolis, now Godmancheſter; and Camboritum, or Cambridge. 10 Coritani, who took up the whole Counties of Lincoln, Leiceſter, Rutland, Nottingham, Northampton, and Darby; principal Towns of which were Lindum, now Lincoln; Rhage, where now is Leiceſter, Guaſennæ not far from Stamford, now called Bridge-Caſterton; Agelocis, now Littleborough, a ſmall Village near Newark upon Trent; Tripontum, now Torceſter, not far from Northampton. 11 The Brigantes, the greateſt Nation of the Iſland, filling all Yorkſhire, the Biſhoprick of Durham, Cumberland, Weſtmerland, and the County Palatine of Lancaſter, in a word all the North of England, (except Northumberland, the dwelling of the (12) Ottadini, whoſe chief Town was Bremenium, thought now to be Ribcheſter in Riddeſdale.) Principal places of which large and potent Nation, were Iſaurium, now Aldborow in in the North Riding; Eboracum or York, in the Weſt Riding and Petuaria, thought to be Beverley, in the Eaſt Riding of Yorkſhire; Vinovium, where now is Bincheſter, in the Biſhoprick; Epiacum, now Pap-Caſtle, in Cumberland; Calatum, now Wheallop-Caſtle in Weſtmerland; and Rhigodunum, now Rible-Cheſter in the County Palatine of Lancaſter. 13 The Cornavii, ſeated in the Counties of Cheſter, Salop, Worceſter, Stafford, and Warwick, whoſe Principal Towns were, Deuvania, or Legio viceſima Victrix, now Weſt-Cheſter: Uriconium, now Wroxeter, an ignoble Village: Pennocrucium, now Penkridge, not far from Stafford: Brannogenium, now Worceſter: Manduesſedum, now Mancheſter, on the River Ankor. 14 And laſt of all, the Dobuni of Oxford, and Glouceſterſhires: Principal places of the which were Dorcinia, now Dorcheſter, ſeven miles from Oxford, and Corinium, or Cyrenceſter, near the head of the Thames, Such names as are comprehended under the name of Wales, and Scotland, ſhall be remembred when we come to ſpeak of thoſe Countries.

Theſe, and the reſt of Wales and Scotland (as far as the Romans did proceed, being once ſubdued, Britain became a Member of the Roman Empire; yet ſo that many of the Tribes had their own Kings, and were ſuffered to govern by their own Laws: it being a known Cuſtom amongſt the Romans, as we find in Tacitus, habere ſervitutis inſtrumenta & Reges, to permit Kings ſometimes in the conquered Countries, making them inſtrumental to the peoples bondage. And it is ſaid of Lucius Verus the Roman Emperour, that having put an end to the Parthian War, Regna Regibus, Provincias Comitibus ſuis regendas dediſſe: he gave thoſe Kingdoms he had conquered to be ruled by Kings; the Provinces to be governed by Provincial Earls. Kings of which kind were Codigunus and Praſutagus, ſpoken of by Tacitus: Lucius, before mentioned, the firſt Chriſtian King, and Coilus the Father of Helena, Mother of Conſtantine the Great. But as afterward in the Heptarchie of the Saxons, that King who overruled the reſt, and was of moſt power and eſtimation, was called the Monarch of the Engliſh: ſo probable enough it is, that amongſt the Britiſh Kings, who was in moſt credit with the Romans, or of moſt power amongſt his neighbours, might be permitted to aſſume the Title of King of Britain. The Catalogue of whom from Caſſibelane to Conſtantine, I have here ſubjoyned, according to the tenor of the Britiſh Hiſtory.

The Kings of Britain after the coming in of the Romans.

A. Ch.
		Caſſibelane, King of the Trinobantes, Commander of the Britains in the War againſt Julius Cæſar.
	2	Theomantius.
	3	Cymbeline.
	4	Guiderius.
45	5	Arviragus, by Hector Boetius, called Pratuſagus, in whoſe time Britain was ſubdued by Aulus Plantius, ſent hither from the Emperour Claudius.
73	6	Marius.
125	7	Coilus, the ſuppoſed Founder of Colcheſter.
180	8	LUCIUS the firſt Chriſtian King of Britain, and of all the World, who dying without Iſſue, left the Roman Emperour his Heir.
207	9	Severus, Emperour of Rome, and King of Britain.
211	10	Baſſianus Caracalla, Son of Severus, Emperour of Rome after his Father; who loſt the Kingdom of Britain to
218	11	Carauſius, a Native of the Iſland, who rebelling againſt Caracalla, obtained the Kingdom for himſelf.
225	12	Alectus.
232	13	Æſclepiodorus.
260	14	Coilus II. the Father of Helena.
289	15	Conſtantius, Emperour of Rome, in right of Helena his Wife, ſucceeded on the death of Coilus the 2d.
	16	Conſtantine the Great, the Son of Helena and Conſtantius, who added his Eſtates in Britain to the Roman Monarchy.

But to proceed, Britain being thus made a Member of the Roman Empire, it was at firſt divided into three Provinces only, that is to ſay, Britannia prima, (ſo called becauſe firſt ſubdued) containing all the Countries on the South ſide of the Thames, and thoſe inhabited by the Trinobantes, Iceni, and Cattieuclani, whoſe Metropolis or chief City was London. 2 Britannia ſecunda, compriſing all the Nations on the further ſide of the Severn, whoſe chief City was Caer Leon upon Uſk, in the County of Munmouth; and 3 Maxima Cæſarienſis, including all the reſt of the Northern border, whereof the Metropolis was York: each Province having ſeveral Cities, 28 in all. Accordingly, the Church conforming to the Platform of the Civil State, there were appointed for the Government hereof eight and twenty Biſhops, reſiding in thoſe ſeveral Cities: three of the which reſiding in the principal Cities, where honoured with the Title of Metropolitans, and a ſuperiority over all the Biſhops of their ſeveral and reſpective Provinces. And in this ſtate it ſtood till the time of Conſtantine, who in his new moulding of the Empire, altered the bounds, and enlarged the number of the Provinces; adding two more unto and out of the former, viz. Valentia, containing all the Country from the Frith of Solway, and the Picts wall on the South, to the Friths of Edenburg and Dunbritton North, and Flavia Cæſarienſis, comprehending all between Thames and Humber, the reſt betwixt the Humber and the bounds of Valentia, continuing under the old name of Maxima Cæſarienſis, though now made leſs than any of the other four. The number of the Provinces being thus enlarged, he made the whole a full and compleat Dioceſs of the Roman Empire (whereas Spain had Tingitana added to it, as before was ſhewn) ſubordinate, as Spain was alſo to the Præfectus Prætorio Galliarum, and governed by his Vicarius or Lieutenant General. Of which diviſion, or rather ſubdiviſion of the Roman Provinces, there was no other alteration made in the Eccleſiaſtical government, but that the Britiſh Church became more abſolute and independent than it was before; and had a Primate of its own (as each Dioceſs had) reſiding in the ſame City with the Vicar or Lieutenant General (which was then at York) of as great power and juriſdiction in the Iſle of Britain, as any Patriarch of Alexandria, Rome, or Antioch, in their ſeveral Patriarchites. The Metropolitans were no more than before they were: It being ordered by a Canon of the Council of Chalcedon, that their number ſhould not be augmented by any alteration made of the Roman Provinces. As for the Forces which the Romans kept here in continual pay, as well to keep their Coaſts and Frontiers againſt the Enemy, as for retaining of the Natives in their due obedience; they came in all (if Pancirol be not miſtaken in his reckoning) to 23000 Foot, & 2000 Horſe: three Legions keeping here their conſtant and continual Reſidence, that is to ſay, the ſixth Legion, ſirnamed Victrix, at York; the 20th Legion, ſirnamed alſo Victrix, at Weſt-Cheſter; and the ſecond Legion ſometimes at Iſca Dannmoniorum, which we now call Exeter, ſometimes at Iſca Silurum, which is now Caer-Leon upon Usk. Which Legions with their Aids and Cohorts, may well make up the number ſpoken of before. Of ſo high eſtimation was this Iſland in the State of Rome.

Yet could not all theſe Forces ſo preſerve the Country from foreign Enemies, but that in the declining of the Roman Empire, the Saxons made great ſpoils on the coaſts thereof; as did the Scots and Picts on the Northern borders: againſt all which the Romans held out well enough, and made good their ground; till the recalling of the Legions out of Britain for defence of Italy it ſelf, then waſted and deſtroyed by the barbarous Nations. Which hapned in or about the year of Chriſt 407, and ſome 470 years from the firſt invaſion; Honorius being at that time the Roman Emperor, and Victorinus the laſt Governor for the Empire, in the Iſle of Britain. For though the noble Ætius, on the Petition and complaint of the ſlaughtered people, unmercifully butchered by the Scots and Picts, ſent ſome ſmall Forces to aſſiſt them againſt thoſe Enemies: yet were they preſently called back for defence of Gaul, againſt the Hunnes breaking in upon it. And then the wretched Britains hopeleſs of all help from Rome, and being unable, by their own ſtrength to repel the Enemy, by reaſon of their long eaſe and diſuſe of Arms, applyed themſelves to Aldroenus King of Armorica in France, (called Little Britain) a Prince extracted from the ſame ſtock, for relief and ſuccour. Whoſe Brother Conſtantine (according to the Britiſh ſtory) paſſing over with a competent Army; and having valiantly repulſed the barbarous people, was crowned King of Britain, the firſt of a new race of Kings, which ſwayed the Scepter, with much trouble and continual conflicts, either againſt the Scots or Saxons, till they were finally ſubdued and ſhut up in Wales. Thoſe of moſt obſervation in the courſe of the ſtory, were, 1 Conſtantine the firſt King, and the reſtorer of the Country to Peace and quiet, traiterouſly murdered by a Pict. 2. Vortiger, E. of the Guyſſes, (now Cornwal) Protector of Conſtantius the Son of Conſtantine, taken out of a Monaſtery; after whoſe death, (wherein he was conceived to have had an hand) he got the Kingdom to himſelf; but being unable to defend it againſt the Enemy, and make his title alſo good againſt the other children of Conſtantine, firſt called in the Saxons. 3 Vortimer, eldeſt Son of Vortiger, who overthrew the Saxons in many battels; but in the midſt of his Succeſſes was poyſoned by Rowena a Saxon Lady, ſecond Wife of Vortiger. 4 Arthur, one of the Worlds nine Worthies, of whom the Monkiſh Writers, and other Legendaries, report ſo many idle and impoſſible actions. Doubtleſs he was a Prince of moſt perfect vertue, a great preſerver of his Country from approaching ruine, and worthy the Pen of an able Panegyriſt; by whom his brave atchievements might have come intire unto us, without the intermixture of thoſe feats of Chivalry, affabulated to him and his Knights of the Round Table. For by the overſtraining of ſome Monkiſh Writers, Geofry of Monmouth, and the reſt, they have given too juſt occaſion to poſterity to ſuſpect that vertue, which they intended to advance; and filled us with as much ignorance of the ſtory, as admiration of the perſons. But this hath not been the ill hap of King Arthur, and his Nobles only; Charlemaign, and the Twelve Peers of France, men of great vertue and renown, ſuffering as deeply in the ſame kind by the folly of the French Romances. It is affirmed of this Arthur, (but how true I know not) that he began the cuſtom of celebrating the Nativity of our Lord and Saviour for the twelve days following, with ſuch paſtimes and ſports as are (or have been uſed of late) by the Lords of Miſrule in ſome Gentlemens houſes: an Inſtitution which the Scottiſh Writers of thoſe times much blame. Perhaps not unjuſtly; it being a time more fit for our devotions than ſuch rude diſports. But to proceed, King Arthur dying, left the Crown to the 5 Conſtantine, the Son of Cador Duke of Cornwall, his neareſt kinſman, ſlain by Aurelius Conanus, his own Nephew, who ſucceeded after him: which fraction did ſo weaken the diſtreſſed Britains, that they were forced to withdraw themſelves beyond the Severn: as 6 Careticus, or Caradoc, by the joint Forces of the Saxons, to change the plain Countries beyond the Severn for the ſafer, but more fruitleſs Mountains. Of the reſt, till Cadwallader, there is little left of any certainty, but their names only; which are thus ranked in the ſecond race of

The Kings of Britain after the withdrawing of the Romans.

687	16	Cadwallader, the laſt King of the Britains, who on a ſuperſtitious zeal travelled in a pilgrimage to Rome, there to receive the habit of a Religious Order from the hands of Pope Sergius, where he dyed not long after, Anno 689. After whoſe death, his Succeſſors were no longer called Kings of Britain, but Kings or Princes of Wales. And there we ſhall be ſure to find them.

And ſo the Britains leave the Stage, and the Saxons enter; a great and potent Nation amongſt the Germans, but greater by the aggregation of many people, under their name and ſervice, than in themſelves: the Juites and Angles joining with them, and paſſing in Accompt as the ſame one Nation, Their Countries different as their names until this Conjunction; but neighbouring near enough to unite together: the Angles dwelling at the firſt in that part of the Cimbrian Cherſoneſe, which we now call Sleſwick, where ſtill the Town called Angolen, doth preſerve their memory: the Juites upon the North of them, where there is ſtill a Province called by the name of Juiteland; the Saxons South of both in the Dukedom of Holſtein, ſituate in the very neck of that Cherſoneſe where it joineth with Germany; Joining their powers, they ſpread themſelves with good ſucceſs, to the South & Weſt; of which more hereafter. And growing Maſters of the Seas, infeſted with continual Piracies the Coaſts of Britain; occaſioning herein an Officer of great truſt and power, appointed to defend and ſcour thoſe Seas, in the Notitia, called Comes Littoris Saxonici. Known by this means amongſt the Britains, they were called in by Vortiger, to aid him againſt the Scots and Picts; whom they overcame in a pitched field near Stanford, in the County of Lincoln: for ſo far had the barbarous people marched without any reſiſtance. Rewarded for this Victory with the Iſle of Thanet, and after with the whole County of Kent, they began to quarrel with their Hoſts; whom by degrees they diſpoſſeſſed of all the Country on this ſide of Severn; parcelling it into ſeven Kingdoms, called the Saxons Heptarchie, that is to ſay, 1 Of Kent, 2 Of the South-Saxons, 3 Of the Weſt-Saxons, 4 Of the Eaſt-Saxons, 5 Of the Eaſt-Angles, 6 Of the North-Humbers, and 7 of the Mercians. The beginning, period, and Kings of which ſeveral Kingdoms, and the uniting of them into one Monarchy, we are next to ſhew.

1. The Kingdom of KENT, confined within that County only, was begun by Hengiſt, who with his Brother Horſus had the leading of the Saxon Forces, at their firſt entry into Britain, An. 455. being the ſixth year after their firſt coming in: who reſtoring Paganiſm to this Country, when the reſt of the Iſle was Chriſtian, occaſioned the diſtinction of Kent and Chriſtendom. The Kentiſh afterwards the firſt of the Saxons who received the Goſpel, by the preaching of Auguſtine the Monk, the Apoſtle of the Engliſh Saxons. Principal Cities of this Kingdom, where 1 Canterbury, once the Regal ſeat of the Kings of Kent, till given by Ethelbert, on his converſion to Auguſtine the firſt Archbiſhop thereof and his Succeſſors: afterwards the See of thoſe Archbiſhops, who had here their Palace and Cathedral, the Kings removing to Reculver, Seated in the Eaſt part of the Country, about ſeven or eight miles from the Sea, a little Brook ſerving it thence with ſome commodities. A City of more Antiquity and fame, than beauty; being now ruinous and decayed, and having nothing in it worth obſervation, but the Cathedral Church, firſt founded by Ethelbert before mentioned; but afterwards new built upon his foundations, in the form it now ſtands by Archbiſhop Lankfrank, Will. Carboyle, and ſome other of their Succeſſors in the ſaid See. The Archi-epiſcopal Palace is a goodly building, and the ruines of S. Auguſtines Monaſtery ſhew what once it was. 2. Dover, antiently called Dubris, ſeated on the Sea-ſhore, where the paſſage is ſhorteſt into France; for that cauſe Fortified with a ſtrong and (in thoſe days accounted an) impregnable Caſtle; eſteemed one of the keys of England and the chief of the Cinque Ports; now giving the title of an Earl to the houſe of Hunſdon, chief of the Family of the Caries, nearly allied to Queen Elizabeth of Famous memory. 3 Rocheſter, ſeated on the Medway, not far from Chattham (the ſtation of the Royal Navy) an antient City, but of no greatneſs; in former times called Durobrivis, after that Roffa, thence the name of Roff-cheſter; a Biſhops See, the ſecond for Antiquity in all the Iſland. 4 Maidſtone, upon the Medway alſo near the head thereof, the largeſt and moſt beautiful in all this Country, and moſt commodiouſly ſeated for publick buſineſs.

793	15	Ethelbert III.
797	16	Gutbred.
805	17	Baldred, the laſt King of Kent, who loſt both life and Kingdom to Egbert, King of Weſt-Sex, or the Weſt-Saxons, Anno. 824. The Progeny of Hengiſt having been before extinguiſhed in the perſon of Alricus, overthrown and ſlain by Offa, the great King of the Mercians.

II. The Kingdom of SOUTH-SEX, or of the SOUTH SAXONS, was begun by Ella, a noble Captain of that People, An. 488. It contained only the two Counties of Suſſex and Surrey, which were thence denominated, the firſt ſo called quaſi South Sex, the Country of the South Saxons; the ſecond quaſi South Rey, as lying on the South-ſide of the River Thames, in the ſame ſenſe as S. Maries Church on the other ſide of that River (in reſpect of London) is called S. Mary Over Rey. The Chriſtian Faith ſuppreſſed here, as in other places, was reſtored again in the time of King Edilwalch, by the preaching of S. Wilfride, Archbiſhop of York, living here in Exile. Places of moſt importance in it, were 1 Chicheſter, built by Ciſſa the 2d King hereof, and called Ciſſanceſter, encompaſſed almoſt round with the River Lavant, falling not far off into the Sea: the chief Town of Suſſex, and a Biſhops Sea, removed hither from Sealſy, a Demy-Iſland, in the time of the Norman Conqueror, where it was firſt planted by Archbiſhop Wilfride. 2 Haſtings one of the Cinque-ports, in Suſſex alſo; the landing place of the Normans, & Famous for the overthrow of King Harold in the fields adjoyning. 3 Guileford, upon the River Wey, the chief Town of Surrey, well built, and having in it two Pariſh-Churches. 4 Arundel, in a Dale or Valley on the River Arun, and from thence ſo named: belonging to the Crown in the time of the Saxons, when given by the Teſtament of King Alfride unto Anthelm, his Brothers Son. Of great note for a beautiful and capacious Caſtle; but more for giving the title of Earl to the noble Families of the Albeneys, the Fitz-Alans, and the Howards: this laſt of ſuch a large and diffuſed Nobility, that in the year 1641. there were no fewer than 8 Howards, in the houſe of Peers. 5 Kingſton upon the Thames, ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from Kingſton upon Hull in Yorkſhire; heretofore Famous for the Coronation of the Monarchs of the Engliſh Saxons, whence it had the name of Kingſton, or the Kings Town. This Kingdom had only three Kings, cruſhed in the infancy thereof by more potent neighbours.

The Kings of the South-Saxons.

A. Ch.
488	1	Ella, the firſt King.
514	2	Ciſſa, the Son of Ella, who loſt his life and Kingdom to Cerdic King of the Weſt-Saxons.
590	3	Cheulin, King of Weſt-Sex, called himſelf King of the South-Saxons.
	4	Edelwalch, or Ethelwolf, the firſt Chriſtian King, overcome and ſlain in battel by Ceadwal, King of the Weſt-Saxons, Anno 687.

After whoſe death Berthan and Authum, two Brethren, took on themſelves the Government, with the title of Dukes or Captains: and held it for a little while. But not being able to withſtand the puiſſance of the Weſt-Saxons, this Kingdom was ſubdued by Ina, the Succeſſor of Ceadwal; by whom united to that Crown.

III. The Kingdom of WEST-SEX, or the WEST-SAXONS, the third in order, and that which did in fine prevail over all the reſt; contained the Counties of Cornwall, Devon, Somerſet, Dorſet, Wilts, Southampton, and Berks: begun by Cerdic, a noble Commander of the Saxons, arriving with new Forces out of Germany, Anno 495. who having overcome the Britains of this Weſtern Tract, conducted by Natanland their Chieftain, entituled himſelf King of the Weſt-Saxons, Anno 522. The Chriſtian Faith ſuppreſſed here, as elſewhere, was reſtored again in the time of Kingils, their firſt Chriſtian King; by the preaching of S. Birinus Biſhop of Dorcheſter near Oxford, then a great City, of no fewer than ten Pariſhes, now reduced to one.

Chief Cities of this Kingdom, were 1 Exeter, a fair and goodly City, and a Biſhops See, removed hither from Cridington or Kirton, by Leofricus, An. 1 49. Seated upon the Bank of the River Ex, whence the name of Exceaſter; environed with deep ditches, and very ſtrong Walls, in compaſs about a mile and half beſides the Suburbs, in which are contained in all 15 Pariſh Churches, beſides the Miniſter, a beautiful and ſtately Fabrick. 2 Bath, ſo called from the Baths there being, the chief City of Somerſet, by the Latines called Aquæ Solis; by the Greeks ὕδατα θέρματα, for the ſelf-ſame reaſon. Situate in a low Valley, environed about with Hills very ſteep and high, from whence come many Rivulets and freſh Springs, to the great Commodity of the people. A fine neat Town, and beautified with as neat a Church, heretofore a Monaſtery, partner with Wells, the Biſhop's See, in the ſtile Epiſcopal; and gives the Title of an Earl to the Noble Family of the Bourchiers. 3 Falemouth in Cornwal, ſeated upon a large and capacious Bay, ſo full of Creeks and Roads, capable of the beſt Ships, that it is ſaid, an hundred Sail of Ships may be lodged therein with ſuch convenience, that from the top of the one, the Maſt of another is not to be ſeen; the mouth or entrance of it defended for the greater ſafety with two very ſtrong Caſtles built by Henry the 8th, that of S. Maudits on the Eaſt, and that of Pendinas (commonly called Pendennis) upon the Weſt. 4 Dorcheſter, the chief Town of Dorſetſhire, which is thence denominated by Antoninus, called Durnovaria, the principal at that time of the Durotriges: an Inland Town, and conſequently of no great trading: not ſo much famous for ought elſe as giving the Title of a Marqueſs to Henry Earl of Kingſton, of the noble Family of the Pierrpoints. 5 Wilton, the head Town, in thoſe times of Wiltſhire, and a Biſhops See, honoured with the reſidence of ſeveral Biſhops. But by tranſlating of the See to Sarum (or Sarisbury) as the fitter place, and carrying thither therewithal the thorow fare which before was here; it fell by little and little into decay; and is now hardly worth the reputation of a Market Town. 6 Wincheſter called Venta in the times of Romans, by the Saxons, Vent-ceaſter, ſituate on the banks of a pleaſant River, the ſeat Royal of the Weſt-Saxon Kings, who had here their Palace called Wolves-eye: ſo named from the Kings of the Wolphian Family, and the ſituation of it in the circlings of the foreſaid River, which the old Saxons called an Eye: not from the Wooll-Staple here kept, as ſome; much leſs from Cardinal Wolſey, as others moſt abſurdly think. The houſe given after to the Biſhops, and made their Palace. The Town in compaſs two miles, beſides the Suburbs; commodiouſly ſeated in a low place, between very ſteep Hills, by which it is defended both from cold and wind. Afflicted very much ſince thoſe times both by War and Fire, half of the ground within the Town being Fields and Gardens; but ſtill adorned with a Magnificent Cathedral, and a gallant (but no great) Caſtle, bravely mounted upon an Hill for defence and proſpect, beſides a Colledge, and an Hoſpital added ſince thoſe days. 7 Southampton, conveniently ſeated on an Arm of the Sea, capable of Ships of burden to the very Key; which maketh it one of the richeſt Towns in thoſe parts of England. Well built, of fair large ſtreets, beautified with five Pariſh Churches, and fortified with high Walls, a double Ditch, and a right ſtrong Caſtle: but the Caſtle now decayed and ruined. 8 Reading, on the Banks of the River Kennet, where it falleth into the Thames, by which means it hath the convenience of both Rivers: A Town of great Trade for Clothing, well built, and of three Pariſh Churches; heretofore beautified with a ſtrong Caſtle, and a goodly Monaſtery, but both decayed. 9 Windſor, called Windleſhores in the old Saxon, ſituate near the Banks of the Thames on a riſing ground, which gives it a fair Proſpect over all the Country; adorned in ſucceeding times with a Palace Royal of the Kings of England, and the Seat of the Order of the Garter. 10 Wallingford, the Gallena of the Antients, and then the chief Town of the Attrebatii, as it was afterwards (in the time of the Saxons) of the County of Berks: a mile in compaſs at that time within the Walls, fortified with an impregnable Caſtle, and adorned with twelve Pariſhes. So deſolated by a Plague, An. 1348. that there is now but one Church left, hardly Inhabitants enough to keep that in repair; and nothing of the Walls left (as not much of the Caſtle) but the track and ruines.

IV. The Kingdom of EAST-SEX, or the EAST-SAXONS, was begun about the year 527, by Erchinwin, deſcended from Woden, the common Progenitor of the Saxons; from whom we have the name of Wedneſday, or Wodenſday, as they called it formerly. It contained only the Counties of Middleſex, Eſſex, and ſo much of Hartfordſhire, as is in the Dioceſs of London. The Chriſtian Faith expulſed here as in other places, was reſtored again in the time of Sebert, the Founder of the Abby Church of S. Peter in Weſtminſter, by the Preaching of Mellitus the firſt Biſhop of London after the entrance of the Saxons ſuppreſſed again by Seward, and Sigebert, the Sons of Sebert; but ſetled ſtronger than before by Cedda, the next Biſhop. Principal Cities of this Kingdom, beſides London, ſpoken of already, were 1 Weſtminſter, ſituate in thoſe times a mile from London, now adjoyning to it. The See of the Archbiſhop of London in the time of the Britains: afterwards by the Saxons called Thorn-eye, or the Thorny Iſland; till the new Minſter built by Sebert as before is ſaid, and the Weſtern ſituation of it in regard of St. Pauls, built at the ſame time by Ethelbert the King of Kent; gained it this new name. A City honoured with the Seat of the Kings of Eaſt-Sex, and ſince thoſe times with that of the Kings of England; the names of the Old Palace of the one, and the New-Palace of the other, ſtill remaining there; beautified upon that occaſion with more ſtately and magnificent houſes, belonging to the King, Biſhops, and Nobility, than all the other in the Kingdom, having of late a new Town added to it in the Covent Garden (a place belonging formerly to the Monks of Weſtminſter) for uniformity of building, and handſome ſtreets, inferiour to no City of France or Italy. 2 Colcheſter, the chief Town of Eaſt-ſex, ſituate near the Sea, on the River Coln; a Colony of the Londoners in former times, thence called Colonia Londinenſium, and Colonia only, then a Biſhops See: from which, or from the River, with the Addition of Ceaſter, after the manner of the Saxons, came the name of Colcheſter. A fair and well built Town, and of good reſort, fortified with an old Roman Wall, and having in it to the number of 14 Churches. 3. Ithanceſter in Dengey Hundred, were S. Ceadda the ſecond Biſhop of London, baptized the relapſed Eaſt-Saxon. 4 Hartford, the chief Town of the County ſo called; by Beda named Herudford, and of great note in his time for a Synod there held in the dawning of the day of Chriſtianity amongſt the Saxons; in which S. Auguſtine the Monk, the firſt Apoſtle of that people, had a conference or conſultation with the Britiſh Biſhops: More memorable in the following times, for giving the title of an Earl to the illuſtrious Family, ſirnamed De Clare; the addition of an Honour, and a goodly Patrimony to John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaſter; and at this time, title of Earl, and Marqueſs to the noble Family of the Seymours.

V. The Kingdom of the EAST-ANGLES, ſo called from the Angli or Engliſh, which poſſeſſed theſe parts, and the Eaſtern ſituation of it; begun by Uffa, a great Commander of the Saxons, Anno 575. contained the Counties of Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridgeſhire, and the Iſle of Ely. The Chriſtian Faith firſt planted here in the Reign of Redwall the third King, by the Miniſtry of Felix a Burgundian, the firſt Biſhop of the Eaſt-Angles, the See whereof was afterwards removed to Norwich. Places of moſt importance in it, were 1 Dunwich on the Sea-ſhore, the firſt Biſhops See of the Eaſt-Angles, for the County of Suffolk; then a Town capable of that dignity, now ruinous, decayed, and for the greateſt part worn into the Sea. 2 Ipſwich in the ſame County of Suffolk, and the chief of the Country, a rich, populous, and well traded Empory, conſiſting of no fewer than twelve Pariſh Churches. 3 Norwich, the head City of Norfolk, ſituate on the River Yare, which runs thence to Yarmouth, lying out in length a mile and an half, half as much in breadth, & in that Circuit comprehending about 20 Pariſhes; well walled about with many a Turret, & 12 Gates for entrances; but hath within it much waſte Ground, the City ſuffering great loſs both in wealth and buildings, by Kets Rebellion, in the time of King Edward the ſixth. Recovered of the firſt blow by the Dutch Manufactures, of the laſt ſtill languiſhing: yet ſtill it glorieth in the beauties of a fair Cathedral, the three Palaces of the Biſhops, the Dukes of Norfolk, and the Earls of Surrey, and the ruins of an ancient Caſtle of the Saxons building. 4 North Elmham, the Biſhops See of the Eaſt-Angles, for thoſe parts which we now call Norfolk: both this and that at Dunwich ruinated in the Daniſh Wars, but this reviving at the end of 100 years and here continuing, both Sees united unto one, till removed to 5 Thetford, another Town of this County, ſituated on the confluence of the Thet, and the leſſer Ouſe: a larger Town than either of the other two, from whence at laſt removed to Norwich. 6 Cambridge, the chief Town of that County, by Antonine called Camboritum whence the Modern name: unleſs we rather fetch it from a Bridge over the River Cam or Grant (for ſome call it Grantbridge) as perhaps we may. A Town well built by reaſon of the Univerſity, ſaid to be founded by Segebert, King of the Eaſt-Angles, of whom it is affirmed by Beda, that he founded a School for the education of Children in the ways of good Learning; but he ſpeaketh neither of Univerſity, nor nameth Cambridge for the place. 7 Ely, ſituate in the Iſle ſo named, occaſioned by the divided ſtreams of Nen and Ouſe, with the over-flotes of other Rivers; turning a great part of this tract into Fens and Marſhes, the Inhabitants whereof were called Girvii. A place of no great beauty or reputation, as ſituate in a foggy and unhealthful air; but only for a fair Monaſtery built by S. Ethelreda, Wife of Egfride, King of the Northumbers, by her made a Nunnery; afterwards rebuilt and repleniſhed with Monks by Ethelwold Biſhop of Wincheſter, Anno 970. or thereabouts; finally made a Biſhops See in the time of King Henry the firſt, Anno 1109.

870	15	S. Edmund, deſcended from Anna, the ſeventh King hereof, Martyred by the Danes for his ſtout and conſtant perſeverance in the Faith of CHRIST, from whence the fair Town of

S. Edmundsbury, in the County of Suffolk, took denomination. After whoſe death the Kingdom was poſſeſſed by the Danes, till vanquiſhed by King Edward the Elder, by whom it was united unto the reſt of England.

VI. The Kingdom of NORTHUMBERLAND, ſo called from the ſituation on the North of Humber, contained the Counties of York, Lancaſter, Durham, Weſtmerland, Cumberland, and Northumberland, properly ſo called; and all the Southern parts of Scotland, as far as to the Frythes of Edenburgh and Dumbritton, formerly reckoned of as Members of the Roman Empire. Extorted from the Britains by Occa the ſon, and Ebuſa the brother of Hengiſt, Conductors of new Forces hither, (all of the Nation of the Angli) by the leave of Vortiger; under pretence of guarding theſe Countries from the inroads of the Scots and Picts. By them divided into two Provinces, the one called Deira, extending from the Humber, to the River of Tees, the other called Bernicia, reaching from Tees, to the two Frythes before-mentioned: both governed a long while by Dukes, under the Soveraignty and homage of the Kings of Kent. In the year 547 Duke Ida takes unto himſelf the title of King of Bernicia, and An. 559. Duke Ella, doth the like in Deira. The Towns of moſt notice in this laſt (for the former is now reckoned as a part of Scotland,) beſides York, ſpoken of before, were 1 Loncaſter, the chief Town of that County, ſituate on the River Lon, which with addition of Ceaſter much uſed by the Saxons, made the name thereof; called for the ſame reaſon Longovicus by the Emperour Antonine. The Town not very well peopled, nor much frequented, but of ſufficient fame in our Engliſh Annals for thoſe Noble perſons which have ſucceſſively born the titles of Earls and Dukes of it; the greateſt Princes for Revenue, of any Subjects in Chriſtendom, 2 Kendal, or Candale, ſituate in a dale on the River Can, whence it had the name; the chief Town of Weſtmerland: built in the manner of a Croſs, two long and broad ſtreets thwarting one another. A rich, populous and well traded Town, eſpecially for the making of fine woollen-cloth; but of more fame for giving the title of an Earl to John Duke of Bedford, Regent of France; and to John de Foix, created Earl hereof by Henry the ſixth. 3 Carlile, upon the River Eden, a frontire Town betwixt the Romans and Scots, as now between the Scots and Engliſh: conſumed to aſhes in the time of the Daniſh furies; afterwards rebuilt by William Rufus, made an Epiſcopal See in the raign of K. Henry the firſt, and beautified with a Cathedral founded at the perſwaſion of Athelwolfus, the firſt Biſhop hereof. 4 Monck-cheſter, on the Northern banks of the River Tine, which maketh there a ſafe and capacious Haven. Of no great note till the Norman Conqueſt, when from a Caſtle built by Robert Son of William the Conqueror, it was called New-Caſtle: growing from that time forwards to ſuch wealth and trading, by the neighbourhood of the Cole-mines there, that it is now the goodlieſt Town in all the North; fortified with ſtrong Walls, beautified with five fair Churches, and giving to the L. Will. Cavendiſh, Viſcount Mansfield, the honorary titles of Earl and Marqueſs. 5 Hagulſtade, or Hextold, by the Romans called Axelodunum, by the Normans, Hexam: a Biſhops See in the firſt time of Chriſtianity amongſt theſe Northumbers, ſpecially ſo called, converted to the Faith in the time of Oſwald their tenth King, by the Miniſtry of Aiden the firſt Biſhop of Lindisfarn: Eata the fifth Biſhop, erecting here an Epiſcopal See, for the better propagation of the Goſpel among this people; after a ſucceſſion of ten Biſhops ruinated and ſuppreſſed by the Daniſh furies. 6 Dunholm, now Durham, ſituate on an Hill, as the name importeth, a Biſhops See, tranſlated hither with the body of St. Cutbert, An. 990. or thereabouts, from Lindisfarn, a ſmall Iſland on the Coaſt of Northumberland, where it was firſt erected by S. Aidainus, the firſt Biſhop thereof: planted in Lindiſfarn, becauſe of the ſolitude of the place; tranſlated hither to avoid the fury of the Danes, who then raged extremely in theſe Quarters. And being ſetled here, was fortified with ſuch ample priviledges and poſſeſſions, by the Saxon Kings: that the Biſhops were reputed for County Palatines, at and before the Norman Conqueſt. 7 Halifax, in the Weſt Riding of York-ſhire, of great wealth by making of cloth. 8 Rippon, in the ſame, adorned with a fair Cathedral or Collegiate Church, ſubordined to that of York. 9 Godmanham, (by Beda called Gotmandin Gaham) famous in thoſe days for a Temple of the Saxon-Idols, burnt down and utterly deſtroyed by Coiſe, the chief Prieſt thereof, converted to Chriſtianity by Paulinus the firſt Archbiſhop of York, and the Apoſtle of the Northumbers in theſe parts. The Catalogue of the Kings of which mighty Nation, by reaſon of the diviſion of it into two Kingdoms, as before is ſaid, is very intricate and confuſed; the Kingdoms being ſometimes united, and ſometimes diſ-joyned. But in regard the moſt prevalent King of either, was called King of Northumberland, the other of Bernicia or Deira only, I ſhall accordingly ſubjoyn them in this order following.

The Kings of Northumberland.

A. Ch.
549	1	Ida the firſt King.
560	2	Ella, King of Deira.
589	3	Ethelrick, Son of Ida King of Bernicia.
593	4	Ethelfride.
617	5	Edwin, Son of Ella, the firſt Chriſtian King.
633	6	Oſrick.
634	7	S. Oſwald.
645	8	Oſwy, who having ſubdued and ſlain Oſwin King of Deira, was the firſt abſolute King of all Northumberland, no more divided after that.
671	9	Egfride.
686	10	S Alfride.
705	11	Oſred.
716	12	Kenred.
718	13	Oſrick II.
729	14	Ceolnulph.
738	15	Ogbert.
758	16	Eſwulph.
759	17	Edilwald.
765	18	Alured.
774	19	Ethelred.
778	20	Alſwald.
789	21	Oſred II.
794	22	Ethelred II. After whoſe death, ſlain by his treacherous and rebellious Subjects (as many of his Predeceſſors had been before) the Kingdom became diſtracted into parts and Factions; invaded by the Danes on the one ſide, the Scots and Picts on the other, who during theſe diſtractions had poſſeſſed themſelves of all the Countries on the other ſide of the Twede. At the laſt Anno 827. they yielded themſelves to Egbert, the moſt Potent King of the Weſt-Saxons, ruled by his Deputies for a while, then ſubdued by the Danes, and finally recovered, to the Crown of England, by Athelſtan and Edred, An. 950. or thereabouts. Content ſince that to give the Title of an Earl to ſome eminent perſons both of Engliſh and Norman Races: as it hath done ſince the firſt year of King Richard the ſecond, to the Noble Family of the Percies, deſcended by Joſceline of Brabant, Brother of Adolize the ſecond Wife of King Henry the firſt, from Charles the Great, Emperour, and King of France, and that too in a clearer Line than the Dukes of Lorrain, who ſo much brag of it.

VII. The Kingdom of MERCIA, was begun by Cridda, or Creodda, a great Commander of the Angli, or Engliſh Nation, who ſetling in the heart of Britain, where the people were leaſt uſed to Arms, made themſelves Maſters of the Counties of Glouceſter, Worceſter, Hereford, Salop, Cheſter, Stafford, Derby, Nottingham, Leiceſter, Rutland, Lincoln, Huntingdon, Northampton, Warwick, Oxon, Buckingham, Bedford, and the reſt of Hartfordſhire; which bounded in a manner by all the reſt of the Saxon Kingdoms, had the name of Mercia, from the word Mearc, which ſignifieth a bound or limit. The Chriſtian Faith ſuppreſſed here, as in other Kingdoms of the Saxons, was reſtored again in the Reigns of Penda, Peada, and Wolfhere, by the preaching of St. Chad the firſt Biſhop of Lichfield.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1 Hereford, ſeated on the Banks of the River Wye, in the middle of moſt flouriſhing Meadows, and no leſs plentiful Corn fields; raiſed out of the Ruines of Ariconium here placed by Antonine, the tract of which name it doth ſtill retain. A Biſhops See in the time of the Britains, reſtored to that dignity by the Saxons, An. 680, the honourable title of the Bohuns, once Earls hereof; and afterwards of Henry of Bullingbrook Duke of Hereford. 2 Worceſter, pleaſantly ſeated on the Severn, over which it hath a very fair Bridge with a Tower upon it. A Biſhops See, Anno 679, beautified with a fair Cathedral, and every way conſiderable for ſituation, number of Churches, neat Buildings, the induſtry of the Inhabitants, and giving the Title of an Earl to the Noble Family of the Somerſets, extracted by the Beauforts from John of Gaunt. 3 Lichfield, the firſt Biſhops See amongſt the Mercians, founded there Anno 646, by Oſwy King of the Northumbers, but fixed and ſetled by St. Chad in the Reign of Wolfhere King of the Mercians; endowed in the very Infancy with ſuch fair poſſeſſions, that in the year 793 Adulfus the Biſhop hereof, was made Archbiſhop of the Mercians. But it proved only a perſonal honour, and died with him. 4 Coventry, ſo called from an old Covent or Religious houſe, which gave name unto it; Scituate in Warwickſhire, and now the principal of that County, though eſteemed a County of it ſelf: beautified with a goodly Wall, two fair Pariſh Churches, large Sreets, and very handſom Houſes. A City of great Trade & Riches, though deſtitute of all advantages which a Navigable River might afford it; heretofore of great Fame for a ſtately Monaſtery, to which the See Epiſcopal was for a while removed from Lichfield, now a ruine only. 5 Leiceſter, once a Biſhops See, the Dioceſe taken out of Lichfield, An. 733, removed to Dorcheſter near Oxon, and thence to Lincoln. Beautified in thoſe days with a fair Collegiate Church, a magnificent Abbey, and a ſtrong Caſtle; all decayed and ruined by the iniquity and injury of theſe later times: the Town remaining in as good plight both for Trade and Buildings, as moſt Towns do which want a Navigable River. Of moſt fame for the Earls thereof, Algar and Edwin, noble Saxons, Simon de Montfort the Cataline and great Incendiary of this Kingdom, the Princes of the Houſe of Lancaſter, who bore this Title; with ſome others ſince. 6 Darby, upon the River Derwent, a well-traded Town, and of good reſort; adorned with five Churches, a goodly Stone Bridge, and a large Market-Place; the honorary title of the noble Family of the Stanleys, created Earls hereof by King Henry the Seventh. 7 Nottingham, ſeated on the Trent, but very high upon an Hill, which overlooks it. For Buildings, fair ſtreets, and a ſpacious Market-place, not giving way to many Cities; but of moſt fame for a Royal and magnificent Caſtle, which for ſtrength, ſtatelineſs, and proſpect, may juſtly challenge the precedency of moſt in England. 8 Lincoln, a Town in thoſe days of great ſtrength and note, one of the beſt peopled Cities in all the Heptarchy; and of great Merchandiſe and Traffick both by Sea and Land: inſomuch that Remigius, then Biſhop of Dorcheſter, thought fit to tranſlate hither the Epiſcopal See. Now much decayed, and thence the Proverb, that Lincoln was, London is, &c. The chief fame which now it hath, is for the Minſter, one of the ſtatelieſt Piles in England, and perhaps in Chriſtendom; high ſeated on a Hill, and from thence diſcerned over all the Country. 9 Huntingdon, or the Hunters Town, from the great ſport the Hunters found in the neighbouring Foreſt; commodiouſly ſeated on the Northern bank of the River Ouſe, riſing on the North with a ſoft aſcent, conſiſting of four Pariſh Churches, and ſhews the ruins of a Caſtle built by Edward the Elder, An. 917. 10 Peterburgh, ſeated in a Nook or Angle of Northamptonſhire, where formerly had been a Gulf or Whirpool of exceeding depth: but made firm ground by Wolfere King of the Mercians, when he laid the Foundations of the Monaſtery, Anno 633, dedicated to St. Peter, whence it had this name; before then called Medanſhede. A Town, but for the Church, of no great eſteem, as ſtanding out of the way for Trade; and in no plauſible place for health or pleaſure; yet ſhewing two handſom ſtreets, a large Market-place, and a fair Pariſh Church (beſides the Abbey) made an Epiſcopal See by King Henry the 8th. 11 Northampton, built on the Northern Bank of the River Antona, (now Nen) whence it had the name. A Town which for the beauty and circuit of it need not give way to many Cities; fortified heretofore with a very ſtrong Caſtle, and ſeated in ſo good an Air, that once the Students of Cambridge had a purpoſe to remove their Univerſity hither. The Noble Family of the Comptons are now Earls hereof. 12 Bedford, ſo called from Beds and Lodgings on the Ford, built on both ſides thereof for the uſe of Travellers, growing in time to ſo great bigneſs as to contain in it five Pariſh Churches: famous in former times for the great Battel fought in the adjoining Fields, Anno 572, in which Cuthwolf the Saxon vanquiſh'd the Britains, and became Maſter of the Country: But more famous for giving the title of Duke to John of Lancaſter, Regent of France for King Henry the ſixth, and Jaſper of Hatfield, Uncle to King Henry the 7th. 13 St. Alban, ſo called from a famous Monaſtery, here founded by Offa the great King of the Mercians, in honour of St. Alban, the Proto-Martyr of Britain, a Citizen of Verulamium, near adjoining to it: out of the ruins whereof, decayed by age, and deſtroyed by War; aroſe the preſent greatneſs of St. Albans, the faireſt and beſt traded Town in the County of Hartford. 12 Buckingham, the chief Town of the County ſo called, ſituate on the River Ouſe: fortified by King Edward the Elder againſt the Danes, Anno 915, otherwiſe not much obſervable, but for thoſe many noble perſonages which have had the title of Dukes hereof.

The Kings of Mercia.

659	6	Wulfhere.
675	7	Etheldred.
704	8	Kenred.
709	9	Chelred.

716 10 Ethelbald, overcome by Cuthbert King of the Weſt Saxons, at a Fight near Burford in the County of Oxon, the place ſtill called Battelage Hill.
758 11 Offa the Great.
796 12 Egfride.
797 13 Kenwolf.
819 14 Kenelm.
820 15 Cheolwolf.
821 16 Bernulf.
824 17 Ludecan.
826 18 Withlaf, overcome in fight (as were his two Predeceſſors) by Egber King of Weſt-Sex, became his tributary.
839 19 Berthulf.
852 20 Burdred, a ſubſtituted King of the Weſt-Saxons, and the laſt King of the Mercians (the ſhort Reign of his ſix Predeceſſors portending that fatal period to be near at hand.) After whoſe death, Anno. 886, this Kingdom for ſome few years tyrannized over by the Danes, was united by King Alured to the Engliſh Monarchy.

Such was the Order and Succeſſion of the Saxon Kings, during the Heptarchie, or diviſion of it into ſeven Kingdoms; continuing ſeparate and diſtinct till the prevailing Fortune of the Weſt-Saxons brought them all together into one, by the name of England. But ſo, that they were ſubject for the moſt part unto one alone, who was entituled Rex Gentis Anglorum: thoſe which were ſtronger than the reſt, giving the Law unto them in their ſeveral turns, and are theſe that follow:

The Monarchs of the Engliſh Saxons in the time of the Heptarchie.

A. C.
455 1 Hengiſt, King of Kent, who firſt brought the Saxons into Britain.
481 2 Ella, the firſt King of the South-Saxons.
495 3 Cerdic, the firſt King of the Weſt-Saxons.
534 4 Kenric, King of the Weſt-Saxons.
561 5 Cheuline, or Celingus, King of the Weſt-Saxons.
562 6 Ethelbert, King of Kent, the firſt Chriſtian King of the Saxons.
616 7 Redwald, King of the Eaſt-Angles.
617 8 Edwin, King of Northumberland.
634 9 Oſwald, King of Northumberland.
643 10 Oſwy, King of Northumberland.
659 11 Wulfhere, King of Mercia.
675 12 Etheldred, King of Mercia.
704 13 Kenred, King of Mercia.
709 14 Chelred, King of Mercia.
716 15 Ethelbald, King of Mercia.
758 16 Offa the great King of the Mercians.
794 17 Egfride, King of Mercia.
796 18 Kenwolf, King of Mercia.
800 19 Egbert, the ſon of Alcmond, King of the Weſt-Saxons, who having vanquiſhed all the reſt of the Saxon Kings, and added moſt of their Eſtates unto his own; cauſed the whole united body to be called Engel-lond, or England, in a Parliament or Council held at Wincheſter, Anno 819, being the 19th. year of his Raign over the Weſt-Saxons; and by that name he was then crowned in the preſence of his Nobles, and the reſt of his Subjects, leaving it unto the reſt of his Succeſſors.

But before we come to the recital of their names, we are to take notice of the Danes, the next conſiderable Actors on the Stage of England, who in the time of this Egbert, firſt invaded the Country, and after exerciſed the patience of his poſterity, till in fine they got the Kingdom to themſelves. Of the Original and firſt Succeſſes of this people, we ſhall ſpeak more at large when we come to Denmark. Suffice it here to know, that having taken up the void Rooms of the Inites and Engliſh in the Cimbrick Cherſoneſe, they thought it not amiſs to follow them into Britain alſo; making a diſcovery of ſome part of the Coaſt thereof with three Ships only, An. 787, being the firſt year of Brithic (the Father of Egbert) King of the Weſt-Saxons. Which having done, and prepared themſelves for the undertaking, in the time of Egbert they invaded Northumberland, the Iſle of Shepey in Kent, and the Coaſts of Wales; not without much difficulty driven out by him. In the Raign of the three Kings ſucceeding, having vanquiſhed the Northumbrians, Eaſt-Angles, and a part of the Mercians; they erected many petit Tyrannies: by Alfrid firſt ſtopped in their Career, by Edward the Elder outed of the Eaſt-Angles, and by Athelſtan of Northumberland alſo; the Danes for ſome time after being ſubject to the Engliſh Government, mixing in marriages and alliance, and incorporated with them. By the valour and good Fortune of Swain their King, they recovered their power again in England; and in the perſon of Canutus obtained the Kingdom: who have impolitickly ſent back his Danes into their Country (as if a Kingdom got by force, could be held by favour) opened a way to their excluſion from the Crown; which happened within ſeven years after his deceaſe. Which ſaid, we come to the Succeſſions of

The Kings of England of the Saxon Race.

819 1 Egbert, the laſt King of the Weſt-Saxons, and the firſt of England. 18.
837 2 Ethelwolf, the eldeſt ſon of Egbert. 20.
857 3 Ethelbald, the eldeſt ſon of Ethelwolf. 1.
858 4 Ethelbert, the brother of Ethelbald. 5.
863 5 Ethelfred, the brother of the two former Kings, the third ſon of Ethelwolf, and as much moleſted by the Danes, as his brethren were. 10.
873 6 Alfride, the fourth ſon of Ethelwolf, who totally united the Saxon Heptarchy into one Eſtate, vanquiſhed the Danes, whom he made ſubject to his commands, though he could not expel them. He divided England into Shires, and reſtored the Univerſity of Oxon.
900 7 Edward, ſirnamed the Elder, the ſon of Alfride, who recovered the Eaſt-Angles from the power of the Danes, whom he ſhut up in Northumberland. 24.
924 8 Athelſtan, the ſon of Edward, who ſubdued the Britains of Cumberland and Cornwal, and compelled the Danes to ſubmit themſelves to the Engliſh Government. In his time lived Sir Guy of Warwick, famous for overcoming Colbrand the Daniſh Champion (the great Goliah of that people) near the Walls of Wincheſter. 10.
940 9 Edmund, the brother of Athelſtan, by whom the Danes of Northumberland were brought under obedience, and the Kingdom of the Britains in Cumberland utterly ſubverted.
946 10 Edred, the brother of Edmund and Athelſtan, ſo fortunate againſt the Danes, that he compelled them to be Chriſtened. 9.
955 11 Edwy, the ſon of Edmund.

955 12 Edgar, the brother of Edwy, ſirnamed the Peaceable, the moſt abſolute Monarch of England, ſince the time of the Saxons; by whom the tribute of money impoſed by Athelſtan on the Welch, was exchanged into a tribute of Wolves. 16.

975 13 Edward II. ſon of Edgar, treacherouſly murdered by his Stepdame, to make way for Ethelred her ſon; hence ſirnamed the Martyr. 3.

978 14 Ethelred, the younger ſon of Edgar, and half brother of Edward, enjoyed the Crown unquietly which he got unjuſtly. Oppreſſed and broken by the Danes, he was fain to buy his peace of them at the yearly tribute of 10000 pounds; inhanced to 48000 pounds within ſhort time after; which monies were raiſed upon the Subjects, by the name of Danegelt. Weary of theſe exactions, he plotted warily with his Subjects to kill all the Danes, as they ſlept in their beds; which accordingly was put in execution on St. Brices night, November 12, Anno 1012. To revenge this outrage and diſhonour, Swaine King of Denmark, with a Fleet of 350 Ships came into England; the fear whereof compelled Ethelred, a weak and impuiſſant Prince to flye into Normandy; leaving his poor Subjects to the mercy of the Daniſh Tyrant, who miſerably plagued them till his death. To whom ſucceeded his ſon Cnute (Canutus) a more temperate Prince; who maugre Ethelred now returned, or his ſon Edmund Ironſide, a moſt valiant King, did in the end poſſeſs himſelf of the whole Kingdom.

1016 15 Edmund II. ſirnamed Ironſide, having in vain attempted to recover his Kingdom, at laſt divided it with Canutus: not long after which he was treacherouſly and baſely murdered, by Edward, ſirnamed the Out-Law, his eldeſt Son, he was Grandfather of Edgar Atheling, and of Margaret, Wife of Malcolm the third, King of the Scots.

The Daniſh Kings.

1017 1 Canutus King of Denmark and Norway, after the death of Edmund the ſecond ſole King of England. He married Emma the widow of Ethelred, and daughter of Richard Duke of Normandy. 20.

1037 2 Harald the baſe Son of Canutus, ſirnamed Harfagar. 4.

1040 3 Canutus II. commonly called Hardy Cnute, the lawful ſon of Canutus by Emma the Widow of Ethelred the ſecond, and Mother of Edward, ſirnamed the Confeſſor, the laſt King of the Danes in England. After whoſe death that people having tyrannized in England for the ſpace of 255 years, (of which they had reigned only 26) were utterly expelled the Country, or paſſed in the Accompt of Engliſh; Edward the Confeſſor, the youngeſt Son of Ethelred, being advanced unto the Throne, by the power and practices of his Mother Emma, and the abſence of the Children of Edmund Ironſide his elder Brother, Anno 1042.

Now concerning the Danes abiding here, and going hence as they did, I obſerve three cuſtoms yet in uſe amongſt us. Firſt, each Engliſh houſe maintained one Dane, who living idly like the Drone among the Bees, had the benefit of all their labour, and was by them called Lord Dane; and even now when we ſee an idle fellow, we call him a Lordane. 2 The Danes uſed when the Engliſh drank, to ſtab them or cut their throats: to avoid which villany, the party then drinking, requeſted ſome of the next unto him to be his ſurety or pledge, whilſt he paid nature her due: and hence we have our uſual cuſtom of pledging one another. 3 The old Romans at the expulſion of their Kings, annually ſolemnized the Fugalia: according to which pattern the joyful Engliſh having cleared the Country of the Danes, inſtituted the annual Sports of Hock-tide; the word in their old tongue, the Saxon, importing the time of ſcorning, or triumphing. This ſolemnity conſiſted in the merry meetings of the Neighbours in thoſe days, during which the Feſtival laſted, and was celebrated by the younger ſort of both Sexes, with all manner of exerciſes, and paſtimes in the Streets, even as Shrove-tide yet is. But now time hath ſo corrupted it, that the name excepted, there remaineth no ſign of the firſt inſtitution.

The Saxons re-enthroned.

A. C.

1042 16 Edward III. ſirnamed the Confeſſor, half Brother both to Edmund Ironſide, and Hardy-Cnute the Dane, called out of Normandy, where he lived with the Dukes his Couſins, ſucceeded in the Realm of England. This King collected out of the Daniſh, Saxon, and Mercian Laws, one univerſal and general Law; whence our Common Law is thought to have had its original: which may be true of the written Laws, not of the cuſtomary and unwritten Laws; theſe being certainly more ancient. He was in his life of that holineſs that he received power from above to cure many deſeaſes, amongſt other, the ſwelling of the Throat, called by us the Kings-Evil: a Prerogative that continueth Hereditary to his Succeſſors of England. Finally, after his death, he was Canonized for a Saint; and died, having reigned 24 years.

1066 17 Harald II. Son to Earl Godwin, was choſen King in the non-age of Edgar Atheling, Grandchild to Edmund Ironſide, the true Heir of the Kingdom: to which Harald might pretend ſome title as being born unto Earl Godwin by Thyra the baſe daughter of Canutus the firſt, Siſter by the whole blood to Harald Harfager, and of the half blood to Canutus the ſecond, the laſt Kings of the Danes in England. But William Duke of Normandy, (of which people we have ſpoke already when we were in France and ſhall ſpeak more at large when we come to Denmark, as the laſt Actors on the Theatre or Stage of England. This William (I ſay) pretending a Donation from his Couſin, King Edward the Confeſſor, invaded England, ſlew Harald, and with him 66654 of his Engliſh Souldiers, and poſſeſſed himſelf of the Kingdom; uſing ſuch Policy in his new Conqueſt, that he utterly diſheartned the Engliſh from hopes of better fortune. From him beginneth the new accompt of the Kings of England, thoſe of the former Line being no longer reckoned in the computation of the firſt, ſecond, or third, &c.

The Norman Kings.

A. C.

1067 1 William, ſirnamed the Conqueror, after the vanquiſhment and death of Harold, acknowledged and Crowned King, altered the ancient Laws of England, and eſtabliſhed thoſe of Normandy in the place thereof: governing the people abſolutely by the power of the Sword, and giving a great part of their Lands to his former Followers, and ſuch as were engaged in the Action with him; from whom moſt of our ancient Families do derive themſelves; thoſe Lands to be holden in Knights-Service, which drew along with it the Wardſhip of the Heir in Minority, as a charge laid upon the Land.

1089 2 William II. ſirnamed Rufus, ſecond ſon to the Conqueror, ſucceeded by the appointment of his Father, and was Crowned King; ſlain afterwards in the New Foreſt, by an Arrow levelled at a Deer.

1102 3 Henry, for his Learning ſirnamed Beau-clerk, the third Son of the Conqueror, in the abſence of his Brother Robert (in the Holy-Land Wars) entred on the Kingdom, and afterwards took from him alſo the Dukedom of Normandy, and put out his eyes. Deprived of all his male-iſſue, he left one only Daughter whoſe name was Maud; firſt married to the Emperour Henry the fifth, and after to Geofry Plantagenet Earl of Anjou, Tourein, and Maine. 34.

1136 4 Stephen, ſecond ſon of Stephen Earl of Champagne and Blois, and of Alice Daughter to the Conqueror, ſucceeded; who to purchaſe the peoples love, releaſed the Tribute called Danegelt: he ſpent moſt of his Reign in War againſt Maud the Empreſs. 19.

The Saxon Blood reſtored.

1155 5 Henry II. Son to Maud the Empreſs, Daughter to Henry the firſt, and to Maud Daughter to Malcolm King of Scotland, and Margaret Siſter to Edgar Atheling, reſtored the Saxon blood to the Crown of England. His Father was Geofry Earl of Anjou, Tourein, and Maine; which Provinces he added to the Engliſh Empire, as alſo the Dutchy of Aquitain, and the Earldom of Poicton, by Eleanor his Wife; and a great part of Ireland by Conqueſt. Happy in all things, the unnatural rebellions of his Sons excepted. 34.

1189 6 Richard, the Son of Henry, ſirnamed Cœur de Lyon, warred in the Holy Land, overcame the Turks, whom he had almoſt driven out of Syria, took the Iſle of Cyprus; and after many worthy atchievements returning homewards to defend Normandy, and Aquitain againſt the French, was by Tempeſt caſt upon Dalmatia; and travelling through the Dominions of the Duke of Auſtria, was taken Priſoner, put to a grievous ranſom, and after his return ſlain at the ſiege of Chaluz, in in the Province of Limoſin. 12.

1201 7 John, Brother of Richard, an unhappy Prince, and one that could expect no better, as being an unnatural Son to his Father, and an undutiful Subject to his Brother. Diſtreſſed for a great part of his Reign by Wars with his Barons, outed of all Normandy, Aquitain, and Anjou, by the power of the French; to whom alſo he was likely to have loſt the Realm of England. Finally, after a baſe ſubmiſſion of himſelf and his Kingdom to the Popes Legate, he is ſaid to have been poyſoned at Swinſtede Abbey. 17.

1218 8 Henry III. Son of John, expelled the invading French out of England, and by a compoſition with Lewis the 9th, was reſtored unto the Dukedom of Guyenne, held by his Succeſſors till the Reign of King Henry the 6th. Exhauſted by the Pope, and oppreſſed a long time by his factious and unruly Barons, but at laſt victorious. 56.

1274 9 Edward, the Son of Henry, awed France, ſubdued Wales, brought Scotland into ſubjection, of whoſe King and Nobility he received homage. 34.

1308 10 Edward II. Son of Edward the firſt, a diſſolute Prince, hated of the Nobles, and contemned by the Vulgar, for his immeaſurable love to Pierce Gaveſton, and the Spencers, was twice ſhamefully beaten by the Scots: and being depoſed by a ſtrong faction raiſed againſt him by his Queen, and Roger, Lord Mortimer, was barbarouſly murdered in Berkley Caſtle. 19.

1327 11 Edward III. Son of Edward the ſecond, a moſt Vertuous and Valorous Prince, brought the Scots to obedience, overthrew the French in two great Battels, took the Town of Callice, and many fair poſſeſſions in that Kingdom. 50.

1377 12 Richard II. another of our unfortunate Kings, loſt many of his Peers in France, and at laſt being over-awed by his two great Uncles of Lancaſter and Glouceſter, and taken Priſoner by his Couſin the Duke of Hereford, he was forced to reſign his Crown, and afterwards was murdered at Pomfret Caſtle.

The Lancaſtrian Line.

1399 13 Henry IV. Son to John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter, the fourth Son to Edward the 3d, was by the power of the Sword, but with the conſent of the People, ſetled in the Throne; and ſpent his whole Reign in ſuppreſſing homebred Rebellions. 15.

1414 14 Henry V. the Mirrour of Magnificence, and Pattern of true Vertue, purſued the Title of France, and won it, being ordained Heir apparent to the French Crown, but lived not to poſſeſs the Kingdom. 9.

1423 15 Henry VI. a Pious, but unfortunate Prince, was crowned King of France in Paris, which he held during the life of his Uncle John of Bedford, and Humfrey of Glouceſter; after whoſe deaths, he not only loſt France to the French, but England and his life to the Yorkiſh Faction. 38.

The Yorkiſh Line.

1461 16 Edward IV. Son of Richard Duke of York, the Son of Richard Earl of Cambridge, and Grandſon of Edmund of Langley Duke of York, the fifth Son of King Edward the third, challenged the Crown in right of the Lady Anne his Grandmother, Daughter of Roger Mortimer Earl of March, the Son of Edmund Mortimer Earl of March, and of Philippa his Wife, ſole Daughter of Lionel Duke of Clarence, the third Son of the ſaid King Edward, and Elder Brother of John of Gaunt. The claim firſt ſet on foot by his Father the Duke of York, who loſt his life in purſuance of it in the Battel of Wakefield; with better fortune and ſucceſs, purſued by King Edward himſelf, who finally after nine bloody Battels fought between the Houſes (ſpecially that of Towton, in which were ſlain 36000 Engliſh) was quietly ſeated in the poſſeſſion of England and Ireland. 23.

1484 17 Edward V. his Son, was before his Coronation murdered by his Uncle Richard, in the Tower of London.

1484 18 Richard III. Brother of Edward the 4. a moſt wicked and tyrannical Prince, to make way unto the Diadem, murdered King Henry the Sixth, and 2. Prince Edward his Son. 3. George Duke of Clarence, his Brother. 4. Haſtings a faithful Servant to King Edward. 5. Rivers, Vaughan, and Gray, the Queens Kindred. 6. Edward the 5th, his Soveraign, with his Brother Richard. 7. Henry Duke of Buckingham his dear Friend, and greateſt Coadjutor in theſe his ungodly practices; and his own Wife Anne, ſo to make way to an inceſtuous marriage with his Neece Elizabeth, the eldeſt Daughter of Edward the 4th; but before the ſolemnity, he was ſlain at Boſworth. 3.

The Union of the Families.

1487 19 Henry VII. Earl of Richmond, Heir to the Houſe of Lancaſter, (as Son of Margaret Daughter of John Duke of Somerſet, Son of John Earl of Somerſet, Son of John of Gaunt Duke of Lancaſter) after the overthrow of Richard, married Elizabeth, Daughter and Heir to Edward the 4. uniting by that marriage the divided Families. He was alſo extracted from the Britiſh and French Royal Blood, as being Son to Edmund Tudor Earl of Richmond, Son to Owen Tudor (deſcended from Cadwalladar, the laſt King of the Britains) and Katharine of France, Widow of Henry the 5. His whole Wars was againſt home-bred Rebels, the chief being Lambert, and the Followers and Fautors of Perken Warbeck. 23.

1509 20 Henry VIII. Heir to both Families, between which were fought for the Diadem 17 pitched Fields; in which periſhed 8 Kings and Princes, 40 Dukes, Marqueſſes, and Earls, 200000 of the common people, beſides Barons and Gentlemen. This King baniſhed the uſurped Supremacy of the Popes, and began the Reformation of Religion; though formerly he had writ a Book againſt Luther; for which the Pope gave him the honourable Title of The Defender of the Faith, afterwards made Hereditary by Act of Parliament to his Heirs and Succeſſors. A Prince of great vices, but of greater virtues. 38.

1547 21 Edward VI. the Son of Henry the 8th, by Jane Seymour his third Wife; out of whoſe Womb he is ſaid to be cut, to come into the World, as Cæſar was: but he had neither Cæſar's Fortune nor length of life; dying very young, and his Affairs conducted by divided Councils; though otherwiſe of great hopes, and of a pregnancy of judgment above his years. 6.

1553 22 Mary, the Daughter of King Henry the 8th, by Katharine of Spain, the Widow of his Brother Arthur, reſtored the Popes Supremacy baniſhed by her Father, with the whole maſs of Popery aboliſhed in her Brother's Reign. To which Religion ſo addicted, that in the ſhort time of her Reign there was more blood ſhed, than in the whole 44 years of her Siſter Elizabeth. In the laſt year of her Reign ſhe loſt Calice to the French, which proved the loſs of her life alſo, as it was ſuppoſed. 5.

1558 23 Elizabeth, the Daughter of King Henry the 8th, by the Lady Anne Bullein his ſecond Wife; a moſt gracious Heroick Princeſs, was by the Divine Providence of God preſerved from the practices of her Enemies in her Siſters Reign, to ſway the Scepter of the Kingdom. She purſued the Reformation of Religion, begun in the times of her Father and Brother; refined the corrupt Coin brought in by her Father; furniſhed the Royal Navy with all kind of Warlike Ammunitions; encreaſed the Revenue of the Univerſities, by the Statute of Proviſions; ſuccoured the Scots againſt the French; the French Proteſtants againſt the Papiſts, and both againſt the Spaniard: defended the Netherlands againſt the attempts of Spain; commanded the whole Ocean; entred League with the Muſcovite, and was famous for her Prudence & Government amongſt the Turks, Perſians, and Tartars, yea her very Enemies. Finally ſhe died in the 45. year of her Reign, and the 70. of her life, on the 24. of March, Anno 1602. according to the computation of the Church of England, which beginneth the New Year with the Feaſt of the Annunciation. To whom ſucceeded JAMES the Sixth, King of the Scots, with the joy of all men, as the next undoubted Heir of the Crown. Of whom we ſhall ſay more when we come to ſpeak of the Monarchs of Britain: of which he was the firſt ſince the fall of the Roman Empire, and ſuch more properly than the greateſt of all thoſe Emperours had been before; None of them having all the North parts of Britain it ſelf, or any part of Ireland at all, nor many of the Iſles adjoining, under their Dominion.

In the mean time to look on England as a State diſtinct, we will conſider it and the Kings thereof, with reference to reputation abroad, and power at home; with the Revenues, Arms, and Military Orders of it, as in other places. And firſt for Reputation, when all Chriſtendom in the Council of Conſtance, was divided into Nations, Anglicana Natio was one of the Principal, and not Subaltern; and had its voice of equal balance with the Nations of France or Italy, in all affairs concerning the doctrine, diſcipline and peace of the Church, which were there debated. And for the place due to the Kings hereof in thoſe

General Councils, and the rank they held among other Chriſtian Princes; I find that the Emperour of Germany was accounted Major filius Eccleſiæ; the King of France, Minor Filius, and the King of England, Filius tertius & adoptivus. The King of France in General Councils, had place next the Emperour, on his right hand; the King of England on his left hand, and the King of Scotland next before Caſtile. Now indeed the King of Spain being ſo much improved, is the dearly beloved Son of the Church; and arrogateth to himſelf the place above all other Princes: but in time of Pope Julius, the Controverſie ariſing between the Ambaſſadors of the two Princes for precedency; the Pope adjudged it to belong of right unto England. And Pope Pius the Fourth, upon the like Controverſie ariſing between the Ambaſſadours of France and Spain, adjudged the Precedency to the French.

Touching the Souldiery of Engl. and their moſt notable atchievements, both by Sea and Land, ſufficient hath been ſaid already. What Forces the Kings hereof have been able to raiſe, and may command for preſent ſervice, will beſt be ſeen by the action of King Henry the 8th. at Bulloign, the Armies of Queen Elizabeth in 88. and the numbers of the Trained Bands of the ſeveral Counties. Firſt, for the Action of King Henry the 8th, he had in his Avant guard 12000 Foot, and 500 Light Horſe in blew Jackets with red Guards; in the Rere-ward a like number both of Horſe and Foot; and in the main Battel 20000 Foot; and 2000 Horſe, all in Red Jacquets and yellow Guards: the whole number 44000 Foot, and 3000 Horſe. They drew after them 100 great Pieces, beſides ſmall ones, and for conveyance of their Ordnance, Baggage, and other neceſſaries, no fewer than 25000 Draught-horſes, beſides other carriages. In the next place for 88. the Queen diſperſed in ſeveral places on the Southern Coaſts of the Kingdom, to hinder the landing of the Enemy, 25000 Souldiers of both ſorts; at Tilbury, for the defence of the City of London, under the Command of the Earl of Leiceſter, 22000 Foot, and 1000 Horſe: and for the Guard of her own perſon, under the Lord Hunſdon, 34000 Foot, and 2000 Horſe: in all the number of 84000 men: beſides thoſe goodly Troops which the Nobility and Gentry did preſent her with, at their own proper charges. And as for the Trained Bands, the number of both ſorts diſciplined and muſtered to be ready upon all occaſions: in the eighth year of King James, (for I have ſince ſeen no Muſter-Roll of them) amounted to 296130 able men, 141315 armed men, 935 Demilances, 6777 Light-Horſe, 19345 Pioneers; beſides what was required of Peers and Prelates, ſuppoſed to amount to 20000 armed men, and 4000 Light Horſe. And for their ſtrength at Sea, beſides the Navy Royal, conſiſting of about 30 gallant Ships, (beſides the leſſer Veſſels;) the beſt and braveſt that any Prince in Chriſtendom can boaſt of, as his own propriety: there are ſuch ſtore of Colliar and Merchants Ships, fit for any ſervice, that in the year 88 aforeſaid, the Queen had 100 Sail of good Ships to oppoſe the Spaniard; and 20 more to wait upon the motions of the Duke of Parma. And in the year 1597, ſhe ſet out for the Iſland Voyage, no fewer than 120 Sail of all ſorts, of which 60 were men of War.

As for the Revenues of this Kingdom, Boterus reckoned them in the time of King Henry the 7th, to be no more than 400000 Crowns per annum; but grants, that afterward they were improved to a million more, by King Henry the 8th, the diſſolution of Monaſteries, and the benefit redounding from the Court of Wards, making that improvement. And to ſay truth, the Univerſal diſſolution of Religious Houſes of all ſorts, did for the time ſo mightily increaſe his annual Income, that he was fain to erect two new Courts (the Court of Augmentation, and the Court of Surveyors) for the better managing of the ſame. But theſe Additions being waſted by his own exorbitant expences, and the ſeveral Alienations made by King Edward the ſixth; thoſe Courts of new Erection were diſſolved again; and the Revenue fell ſo ſhort of its former height, that in the 12. year of Queen Elizabeth, the profits of the Crown (beſides the Court of Wards, and the Dutchie of Lancaſter) came to no more than to 188197 l. 4 s. Of which 110612 l. 13 s. went that year out upon the Navy, the charge of Houſhold, and other neceſſary aſſignments. Since which time the great increaſe of trading, both at home and abroad, and the great glut of money in all parts of the World, hath added very much to the Intrado. The certainty whereof as I do not know, ſo neither will I aim at it by uncertain Hearſay.

The Principal Orders of Knighthood are, and were, 1. of the Round Table, inſtituted by Arthur King of the Britains, and one of the Worlds Nine Worthies. It conſiſted of 150 Knights whoſe names are recorded in the Hiſtory of King Arthur, there where Sir Vre, a wounded Knight came to be cured of his hurts: it being his fate that only the beſt Knight of the Order ſhould be his Chirurgeon: The Arms of moſt of theſe, with their ſeveral Blazons (I know not on how good authority) we find in Bara, the French Herald. The principal of them were Sir Lancelot, Sir Triſtam, Sir Lamorock, Sir Gawin, &c. all placed at one Round Table, to avoid quarrels about priority and place. The Round Table hanging in the great Hall at Wincheſter, is falſly called Arthurs Round Table, it being not of ſufficient Antiquity and containing but 24 Seats. Of theſe Knights there are reported many fabulous Stories. They ended with their Founder, and are feigned by that Lucian of France, Rablaies, to be the Ferry-men of Hell; and that their pay is a piece of mouldy bread, and a phillop on the noſe.
